New arena wins support by landslide

by Kristi Rieken/UD

After more than a month of debate and waiting, Texas Tech officials announced Wednesday that Tech's student voters were overwhelmingly in favor of using part of the general use fee to aid in construction of the proposed United Spirit Arena.

The referendum passed by a margin of 83 percent to 12.5 percent, said Dan Burns, advisor to the Texas Tech Election Commission and assistant director of University Center operations.

Of the 4,102 total votes cast in Tuesday's election, 3,407 of those were affirmative votes. More than 500 students cast dissenting votes.

As for how this will impact the building of the $35- to $40-million United Spirit Arena, Interim Athletic Director Gerald Myers said having student support of the arena should help their efforts tremendously.

"It will really help us when we present this to the coordinating board," Myers said. "I think even a close vote would have helped us when we went to the board, but an overwhelming vote like this will definitely have a really positive effect on the board's decision to support the arena."

Throughout the push for student support, Myers and other members of the administration promised students 3,600 prime seats in the arena.

Although many students skeptical of the arena thought this promise was a ploy to snag more votes, Myers vowed the athletic depart-

- 3,407 Texas Tech students voted for the United Spirit Arena
- More than 500 students voted against the arena

ment will stand by its promise.

"We have made a commitment to the students that they would get those courtside seats," he said. "We want those students to be in those seats close to the court to impact the games because this arena would not have been possible without the students vote, and it won't be forgotten."

The Student Association, led by President Geoff Wayne, a senior accounting major from Lubbock, was one of the most vocal in pushing for the passage of the student vote.

"I think our efforts paid off because more students were informed — basically anybody I talked to on campus yesterday had heard about the arena, either through The UD, through the radio or through information from us," Wayne said.

The arena's proposed site is the corner of 18th Street and Indiana Avenue in what is now the Student Recreation Center parking lot. Officials are hoping to complete construction by November 1998.

"The student body at Texas Tech has made a decision to leave a great legacy to a lot of kids that follow and a lot of students who are gonna enjoy this facility for a long time," said Tech basketball coach Marsha Sharp. "Obviously you have made me, and I think I can probably say on behalf of James Dickey too, two of the happiest people in Lubbock right now."

About 4.5 percent of students who voted in Tuesday's election, or about 180 students, voted in the Homecoming queen election but abstained from voting on the arena.

Tuesday's election represented the largest voter turnout ever for the Homecoming election, Burns said.

Tuesday's voter turnout more than doubled that of the largest turnout before this one.

Tech law group forgoes appeal

by Ginger Pope/UD

The Texas Tech Student Bar Association withdrew its request for a review of the United Spirit Arena voting procedures shortly before 3 p.m. Wednesday.

The SBA filed a restraining order with the Tech Election Commission at about 5 p.m. Tuesday to delay the release of arena election results because of election procedures that were perceived to be improper. The arena referendum was on Tuesday's Homecoming queen ballot.

After the SBA withdrew its request, the election commission voted to lift the restraining order, releasing the arena vote results.

"The events of the last two days have allowed the law school's concerns to be addressed," said SBA President David Owens, a third year law student from Lubbock. "There is nothing further to be gained by continuing the appeal."

The SBA filed the appeal because the Texas Tech School of Law was not an election site during Tuesday's election, Owens said. Some law students believed they were deprived of their right to vote.

"Based on the election code as well as assurances from the SA president, the law school community believed a ballot box would be placed in the law school," Owens said.

Adam Reed, a student senator for the law school and a third year law student from Mesquite, said he was under the impression from the Student Senate that a ballot box would be located in the law school.

According to the election code, which was approved by student senators Sept. 26, Homecoming elections require five ballot locations, and referendum elections require 13 ballot boxes at 10 locations, Reed said.

The SBA believed the arena vote should have been treated as a special election, requiring 13 ballot boxes, he said.

"Our main concern was that the voices of law students have not been heard," Reed said. "Without a ballot

There is nothing further to be gained by continuing the appeal.

David Owens, Student Bar Association president

box, the opportunity for students to vote was reduced."

SA President Geoff Wayne, a senior accounting major from Lubbock, said the SA followed correct election procedures.

Because the SA never decided the arena vote would be a special election, the SBA should not have assumed the law school would be a voting site.

Contested Cuisine Salsa contest heats up Tech

by Ginger Pope/UD

Texas Tech students got a spicy taste of Hispanic culture Wednesday.

The Hispanic Student Society and University Center Programs sponsored a Salsa Contest at noon Wednesday in the UC Courtyard, in which 26 students and faculty members entered their favorite salsa recipes.

The contest, one of several activities planned to promote Hispanic Heritage Month, was judged by representatives from three local Mexican food restaurants and one member of The University Daily editorial board.

Winners of the contest were Ari Youngblood, an interdisciplinary studies graduate student from San Marcos; Janet Koss, a faculty associate with the department of pharmacology; and Stacey Monk, activities specialist with UC cultural events, won third.

Winners received free dinner coupons and gift certificates as prizes.

Jobi Martinez, president of the Hispanic Student Society and a junior public relations major from Muleshoe, said the contest was something fun and different.

"A lot of people like salsas, and this was another activity celebrating the Hispanic Heritage," Martinez said.

Sara Solloway, UC activities adviser, said the month-long celebration and awareness of the Hispanic culture may have contributed to the increase in salsa entries this year.

Besides getting a taste of another culture, participants also were given information about the Hispanic heritage and the origin of salsa.

"The contest celebrated the Hispanic culture, but it also had an educational component to it," Solloway said.

Jennifer Schmidtly, a purchasing assistant for Abuelos Mexican Food Embassy, said this was her second year to judge the contest.

Judges tasted a variety of salsas, ranging from fruit to Italian to traditional flavors, Schmidtly said.

"It's really great because it teaches about the Hispanic heritage and about cooking," Schmidtly said.

"The Hispanic society has had a tremendous impact on foods — especially in Texas."

Andrea Ayala, a senior elementary education major from DeSoto, said the Salsa Contest was a great idea to show students the Hispanic culture.

"The Hispanic Student Society incorporated events well throughout the Hispanic Heritage Month," Ayala said.

"They go along with the need for everyone to be aware of all cultures and to become better informed."

Shane Riley, a senior fashion design major from Rock Springs, Wyo., said Tech's Hispanic culture seemed festive.

"It is very interesting to see other cultures," Riley said.

"We are a diverse university and not a society with just white or black. There is more to it."

Wes Underwood/UD

Hot, hot, hot: Hispanic Student Society President-elect Sofia Rodriguez, a senior elementary education major from Wichita Falls, refills a bowl of chips for the salsa contest in the University Center Wednesday. UC Programs and the Hispanic Student Society sponsored the event.

Jones makes final appeal to NCAA

by April Castro/UD

Texas Tech athletic officials say offensive tackle Casey Jones has a slim chance of winning his final appeal for eligibility this season.

Jones, a health major from Shepard, was declared ineligible for not making satisfactory progress toward his degree.

The NCAA declared Jones ineligible for the 1996-97 football season — a decision Jones is appealing with the NCAA Council.

According to NCAA guidelines, athletes must have 75 percent of their majors completed before beginning their senior year.

After changing his major

from general business to health after earning an insufficient GPA, Jones had 60 percent of the required courses completed, falling short of the 75 percent rule.

Jones will attempt his final appeal Tuesday or Wednesday in Kansas City, but his chances do not look good, said Robert Sweazy, Tech chairperson of the Division I group of the NCAA Council.

"We are hoping for the best, but realistically, chances are not that good," Sweazy said. "This is the final step in the appeals process, and seldom are appeals overturned, so we are not real optimistic about it."

The difference between this appeal and previous attempts is that Sweazy, a Tech official, will be present to plead Jones' case.

Committees from NCAA Divisions II and III will probably abstain from the appeal, leaving only the Division I committee to make the decision, he said.

Tech officials argue that Jones' progress toward his major was close enough for him to be deemed eligible, he said.

"Casey did not meet 75 percent of his requirements, but we believe he was close enough that a waiver should be given," Sweazy said.

Jones could not play in the first football game of the season because of an injury and has been held out of every game since then because of the NCAA eligibility questions, Sweazy said.

The football team has accepted Jones' absence and continues to practice without dwelling on the loss, said Ted Umbehagen, offensive line coach for the Red Raiders.

"We've adjusted to him not being here," Umbehagen said.

"It's not that we don't miss him — the kids miss him and would like to see him out there. But he's not going to be here — this is how it's going to be and we've got to go on."

Tech students arrested for arson

AMARILLO (AP) — A tip that kept an arson case alive for nearly two years has led to this week's arrests of two Texas Tech students.

"The incident happened at Lakeview Christmas in 1994," said Leo Hickman, a Texas Ranger from Childress, working on the case.

"The two students are still in jail on $100,000 bond."

Juan Galvan, 21, and Jeremy Vorheis, 22, are charged with arson in the December 1994 fire that destroyed the 58-year-old Lakeview High School, 75 miles southeast of Amarillo, Hickman said.

Fire officials said in 1994 they were nearly certain the fire was accidental.

But Hickman said criminal investigators discovered an early clue that kept the case open.

"(The suspects) talked about it before the Christmas holidays in 1994 and then after it," Hickman said.

Damages to the high school were in excess of $1 million, he said.

Galvan was arrested Monday night; Vorheis was arrested Tuesday morning.

Galvan was jailed Wednesday on $100,000 bond in Childress County Jail. Vorheis was in Hale County Jail on $100,000 bond, authorities said.

Both were students at the school that burned, although Galvan transferred to nearby Memphis High School and graduated as salutatorian in 1993, Lakeview schools Superintendent Phil Lemons said.

The Lakeview district built a new high school that was completed in March, Lemons said. About 40 students attend the Lakeview high school this year.

"I think the monetary loss is substantial," he said.

Their View

Tech law group makes worthless appeal to votes

Kimberly Ott/guest columnist

On Tuesday, the Student Association sponsored elections for the 1996 Homecoming queen and for the United Spirit Arena. The question about the arena was simple — did students agree to a $3 per credit hour fee for the new arena?

At first, I was a little unsure how I felt about all this. Three dollars per credit hour, times 15 hours was more than I cared to spend. But then I learned that the fee was not an increase, and that I would not even see a change in future tuition bills because of this.

The arena was going up with or without student support. However, if students did decide to support the arena, we would have rights and privileges with it.

I was excited to be able to help determine where my funds would go, and it seemed clear to me what the choice was. I decided to vote "yes."

I expected to hear the results of the election Tuesday night, but as many of you know, the results were not released because of a restraining order filed by the Texas Tech Student Bar Association. The SBA claimed they had a problem with voting procedures.

What could be the problem, I wondered?

Maybe they feel that voting was not as private as it should have been.

Maybe they were concerned that somehow a student could vote more than once.

Or maybe they feel that the student body has been misled, and that there are underlying motives and small-print deception involved that I don't know about.

All of these might have been valid concerns, but I was surprised to say in the least that the students were complaining about the location of the polls.

First of all, there were five places available for voting: the University Center, the Student Recreational Center, Holden Hall, the business administration rotunda and the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center.

The Rec Center is not far from the law school. If these students really wanted to vote, they could have taken a short walk across the parking lot to the poll. But instead, these students choose to make a big deal out of such a trivial thing.

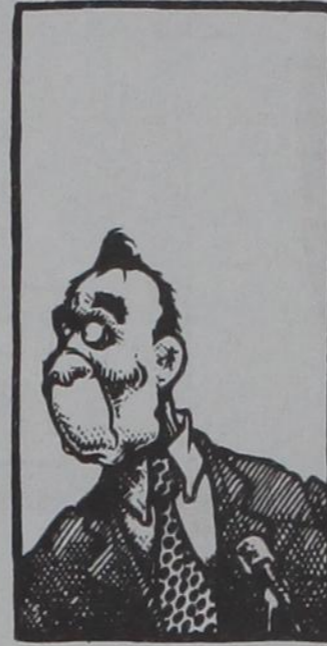

It's hard for me to believe that law students don't have better things to do than come up with something to file a complaint about. It makes me wonder if these law students just want to make a name for themselves, or are just really anxious to see the law at work.

My main problem with this complaint is that if it really were a big deal that a poll was not in the law building, students should have notified the SA before the election. After all, the places where students could vote were printed in The University Daily. In addition, the Student Senate voted to approve the SA election code. Students who were upset had plenty of time to voice their opinions.

I hope in the future students seek to resolve their problems with the way things are run before it turns into a major conflict.

Law students show poor timing with appeal

To the editor: So it seems our distinguished Student Bar Association leaders have taken upon themselves the task of saving the poor law students the virtually impossible task of taking a four-minute walk from the law school to the Student Rec Center (or less for those not as out of shape as I am). Apparently, they are trying to sell us on the notion that there are procedural violations. Translation: A short walk is too high a price to pay for the exercise of one's right to vote. Maybe they plain just don't know where the Rec Center is. It's not as if anyone with an IQ below that of a rotting mushroom could not find it from the law school. I will give them a hint or two to help these confused colleagues of mine. Go to the front door of the law school. Walk straight in a northeasterly direction. When you come to a building with a big track around it, this is your first clue. You are now getting warmer. As you approach the front door, there will be people coming in and out, some of whom will be wearing aerobic suits, weight lifting belts, etc. Others may be carrying a basketball, a racquetball racquet or other athletic type equipment. This is your second clue. As you make it through one door, and then another, you should see a large railing on the right. If there are several basketball and volleyball courts there, then congratulate yourself; you are not totally brain dead after all. This is what we call the Rec Center. This is where we were to vote. This is where I did vote. So see, it's not impossible after all.

Maybe these poor SBA souls were not fortunate enough to have heard about this arena business or the election beforehand. It has only been in the news for over a year now. Pick up a copy of The University Daily (it's delivered to the law school every weekday, Owens and Exley, so there are hopefully no procedural violations there), the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal, or turn on a television or radio every once in a while. You cannot claim to not have known about this. In fact, just a few days ago, Student Association President Geoff Wayne met with law students (at the law school, no less) to discuss the arena election and parking, etc. Nothing was withheld from law students or our self-righteous, grand-standing, publicity-seeking SBA gods.

Maybe I am wrong and these SBA folks are not seeking publicity. Maybe they do know where the Rec Center is. I guess then their reason for contesting this is that they were just too darn lazy to walk over there. I have a feeling that being allowed to vote at the law school would not be good enough for them. To satisfy them I suppose the University should send a ballot directly to these SBA officers place of abode and also a person to help them bubble in the little dot on the ballot. Perhaps the University should also send them coffee and doughnuts to make their voting experience a little less harsh. Also a thank you note and a hug from Chancellor Montford might be just enough to make the voting experience a little more palatable for our esteemed SBA leaders.

Scott Lilley, third year law student

Clark uses editorials as weekly bully pulpit

To the editor: Megan Clark in her editorial (column) against the United Spirit Arena purports to lay out the "facts," and then proceeds to explain to readers, in her words, "why it's all hooley." One question, Megan: How can "facts" be "hooley"? Either something is fact or it isn't.

Next she proceeds to raise issues and questions revolving around student seating and the proposed student advisory board.

The subtext of the questions is that all students should assume that supporters of this project are dealing in bad faith, and eventually will renege on any promises made during the initial period. To that, I say it's good to be aware of the issues (and I think the SA president is), but if you go into a negotiation with the negative mind set that you're going to be had, well, you're probably right.

Getting back to the "facts" used as a foundation for the argument: "If students vote no, according to Student Association President Geoff Wayne (in Sunday's Lubbock Avalanche-Journal), all the aforementioned benefits would be taken away." Maybe if The UD editor would invest a little bit of time in researching the facts firsthand, instead of reading about them in a source that's only slightly ahead of The UD in terms of credibility, she'd know what the SA president's position, instead of speculating on it by juxtapositioning apparently conflicting statements by Wayne and Chancellor Montford. It's not as if Wayne is or has been inaccessible on the issue. I've read enough and heard enough from him in the last month on the topic of the arena to last a lifetime, and I've never heard him say that if there's a "no" vote students will lose all the proposed benefits.

On the contrary, what I've understood him to be saying is that with a "yes" vote, students will be endorsing the plan, and will guarantee themselves a voice in the process.

Another major misstatement of the "facts": That students are voting on whether the portion of the General Use Fee in question will go toward the arena. The truth is, the regents can allocate any part of our fees they want for the arena.

This is merely a vote for or against endorsing the proposed use. So before you start making plans for where all that General Use Fee money is going after you cancel the arena project, better get yourself elected to the Board of Regents first.

Clark also objects to the unfairness of expecting students to fund something they "may not even see or have control of in the future." If that's how you feel, then you shouldn't vote at all on this referendum, nor should you vote in Student Association elections this spring or any other elections that involve future projects or events, since as a (I presume) graduating senior you may not see or have control of them in the future.

Finally, the worst thing of all about the editorial is its timing. It's a transparent attempt by the editor to use her position as a bully pulpit, to have the "last word" before the referendum vote takes place.

If there was a genuine interest in having these issues openly discussed in the pages of The UD, it could have been done weeks ago. None of these issues in question is a new one. This kind of tactic is cheap and offensive to your readers. What does it say, though, about Clark's (and by extension, The UD's) journalistic ethics? It's all hooley.

Regents squander Tech money, chancellor spot

To the editor: Texas Tech has long had the potential to become a first-rate university, but will never do so.

An essential factor is lacking, and that is consistently inspired, long-term leadership.

Tech made significant advances under (former President) Robert Lawless, but unfortunately Tech's greatest enemy is its own Board of Regents.

Because of tight state funding the University of Houston, which has a true multi-campus, eliminated its chancellor. Tech Regents had no justification for creating one, except to make themselves feel important.

And for chancellor they selected John Montford, a man without academic credentials and whose greatest legislative achievement, revision of workers' compensation, is generally regarded as a failure.

Montford's first task has been to busy himself in subversion of the democratic process. Lubbock voters said they did not want a new arena, but are getting one anyway. And it is being paid for by turning Texas Tech into an advertising vehicle for United Supermarkets.

The money being squandered on Montford's salary and the new arena should be used to upgrade faculty salaries or obtain membership in the Association of Research Libraries, which were two of Lawless's goals.

Instead we have Montford's vision of the university: to serve, and be subservient to, commercial culture.

The United Spirit Arena will be an obscenity that will endure for many decades. It will be a symbol of academic mediocrity.

Peruvian jetliner crashes, Americans among dead

ANCON, Peru (AP)—A Peruvian plane slammed into the frigid Pacific Ocean on Wednesday after its navigation system failed, leaving the pilot lost amid the dense early-morning mist. All 70 passengers and crew were believed killed.

Rescue workers searched for possible survivors of Aeroperu Flight 603, which crashed shortly after its takeoff from Lima, the Peruvian capital, to Santiago, the Chilean capital. But fog covered the rough seas throughout the day, hampering rescue operations.

The plane was carrying 61 passengers, including four Americans, and nine crew members, the airline said. Airport officials said the jetliner was only four years old.

Searchers found parts of the Boeing 757's fuselage about 40 miles off shore, west of Ancon, said Adm. Jaime Monge, head of navy rescue operations. Ancon is 30 miles north of Lima.

Seven bodies were recovered by mid-afternoon, but there was no sign of survivors in the wreckage.

The Americans aboard were Galen Canutsen, Samsina Niis Lindeen, Dennis Trial and Kenneth Vaisman

“The pilot’s calmness, his serenity was incredible.”

Elsa Carrera, Peru’s Transportation Minister

Lichtman, the airline said. No hometowns were given.

Five minutes after the 12:42 a.m. takeoff, the pilot reported equipment problems. Erick Schreiber reported that the plane’s navigational equipment was not responding and that he had no idea where he was.

“I don’t have any instruments,” he said, according to Transportation Minister Elsa Carrera, who heard a tape of his conversation with the control tower in Lima.

“What’s happening? What altitude am I at? Why is my ground crash alarm on? Am I over land or sea?”

“You’re over sea,” the tower reported.

Schreiber calmly asked for a plane to guide him back to the airport. Just before 1:10 a.m., Schreiber advised the tower to prepare for a rescue. Then the tower lost contact with the aircraft.

Carrera said Schreiber never lost his composure during his 28-minute conversation with the tower.

“The pilot’s calmness, his serenity was incredible,” she said.

A reporter with Lima’s Radioprogramas radio station flying in an air force search plane described seeing pieces of seats and other debris from the jet floating on the fuel-slicked ocean surface.

As rescuers searched through the thick fog, anxious family members and friends awaited word.

“We’re just hoping they’re still alive. We’re praying they’re still alive,” said a man who said he had relatives on the plane before police led him away from reporters.

Fire up

Bonfire lights up in Southwest Conference Circle

For the second consecutive homecoming, Texas Tech's traditional Saddle Tramps bonfire will be at 9:15 at the Southwest Conference Circle.

The bonfire Friday will be a special event, said Jeff Marshall, the organization's president and senior accounting major from Sugar Land.

"It's kind of small compared to when it was in the fields, but it's still going to be good," Marshall said.

Prior to building the fire at the SWC Circle, the event was staged in the fields next to the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center, he said.

There, the bonfire measured 50 feet in the air with the final piece of the blaze being an outhouse with slogans roasting the opposition's school.

This year's version will be 8 feet high, and the outhouse is built into the heart of the fire.

With only a few exceptions, the Tramps have organized the Homecoming bonfire every year since their inception in 1936, Marshall said. The Tramps got involved with the event to make it safer and less destructive.

Last year's fire was moved to commemorate the final year of the SWC.

Jason Herhold, bonfire chair and a junior mechanical engineering major from Lubbock, said the fire will be at the circle again this year because the event was so successful last year.

"Everybody liked it, so we're doing it at the circle again," Herhold said.

"It was special last year because it was the final year for the Southwest Conference."

The glimmer of the fire has not dimmed with the move into the Big 12 Conference.

"It gets everything kicked off," he said.

"It's something to get everyone fired up for the weekend. It's for everybody to come out and have some fun."

While preparation time for past bonfires meant starting construction two weeks prior to homecoming, this year's bonfire requires minimal preparation time.

"We'll do some work Thursday, but most of the work will be done on Friday," he said. "It should only take a few hours."

Nearly all of the materials needed for the fire are donated by people and local businesses, he said.

The Saddle Tramps construct the bonfire.

The event begins at Raider Alley, and the Saddle Tramps carry torches in a procession toward the circle, Herhold said. Once there, the Saddle Tramps do a bell circle and the cheerleaders do a few cheers before lighting the bonfire.

"Tradition has it that Raider Red, the bonfire chair and two others who worked the most hours get to light it," Herhold said.

Cheryl Rowland, a sophomore business major from Amarillo, is looking forward to her second Homecoming bonfire.

"I can't wait for it," Rowland said. "My first year to go was last year and it really got me into the spirit of things."

Before and after. . .

Past Homecoming Queens reminisce, new candidates await

Vicky Bawcom did not get to keep her crown, but that's OK. She knew she was the 1967 Homecoming Queen long before any of this year's candidates will.

In 1967, the Homecoming Queen was announced on Friday night so the winner could ride as queen in the parade.

"The only thing I got to keep was a dozen roses," she said. "I was presented with a beautiful crown and scepter during a coronation service, but I had to give that back."

Bawcom, a Lubbock resident, was from Levelland and, like most Homecoming queens, was more than surprised when her name was announced. She was nominated by Kappa Kappa Psi and was a feature twirler in the band.

"I was very honored, but I was shocked," she said.

"I mean, who would have thought."

Before Texas Tech and Baylor take the field to play this year's Homecoming game, another Tech student will be crowned the 1996 Tech Homecoming queen.

After meeting several requirements and an application due date of Sept. 19, the candidates were voted on by the student body.

The 10 candidates will complete an interview and then the list will be narrowed down to five candidates.

"The student must have at least a 2.5 GPA, be a full time student at Tech, have completed 60 credit hours and have a sponsor," said Jenny Passow, activities specialist for Student Organization Services.

The interviews were conducted by a panel of judges representing different organizations on campus, such as faculty and student groups, Passow said.

"There were 16 candidates which were narrowed down to 10, then five, and that will be the Homecoming Court," she said.

All Tech students were allowed to vote for queen at various locations around campus Tuesday, she said.

"The court announcements will be made on Friday at the annual bonfire," Passow said.

Throughout Homecoming week, the candidates participated in various Homecoming activities.

The candidates participated in a style show sponsored by several local businesses Monday.

"The style show was a good way to get the businesses involved and it was also a lot of fun," said Yanci Yarborough, a senior Pi Beta Phi representative and a Homecoming finalist.

Candidates will also participate in the bonfire, parade and pep-rally.

"We are doing homecoming with the Pikes, so we are building the float," Yarborough said. "I will ride on our float as the other candidates will ride on theirs."

The activities are a great way to show the alumni what is going on at Tech and show school spirit.

When students voted for the court Tuesday, they had their own ideas of what a Homecoming queen should represent.

"She should be well-respected, ambitious, have a good personality, and be willing to do her best to represent Tech," said Lisa Vasquez, a freshman pre-nursing major from Fort Stockton. "Any of the candidates would make a good queen because they all fit the high standards Tech students have when searching for someone to represent them."

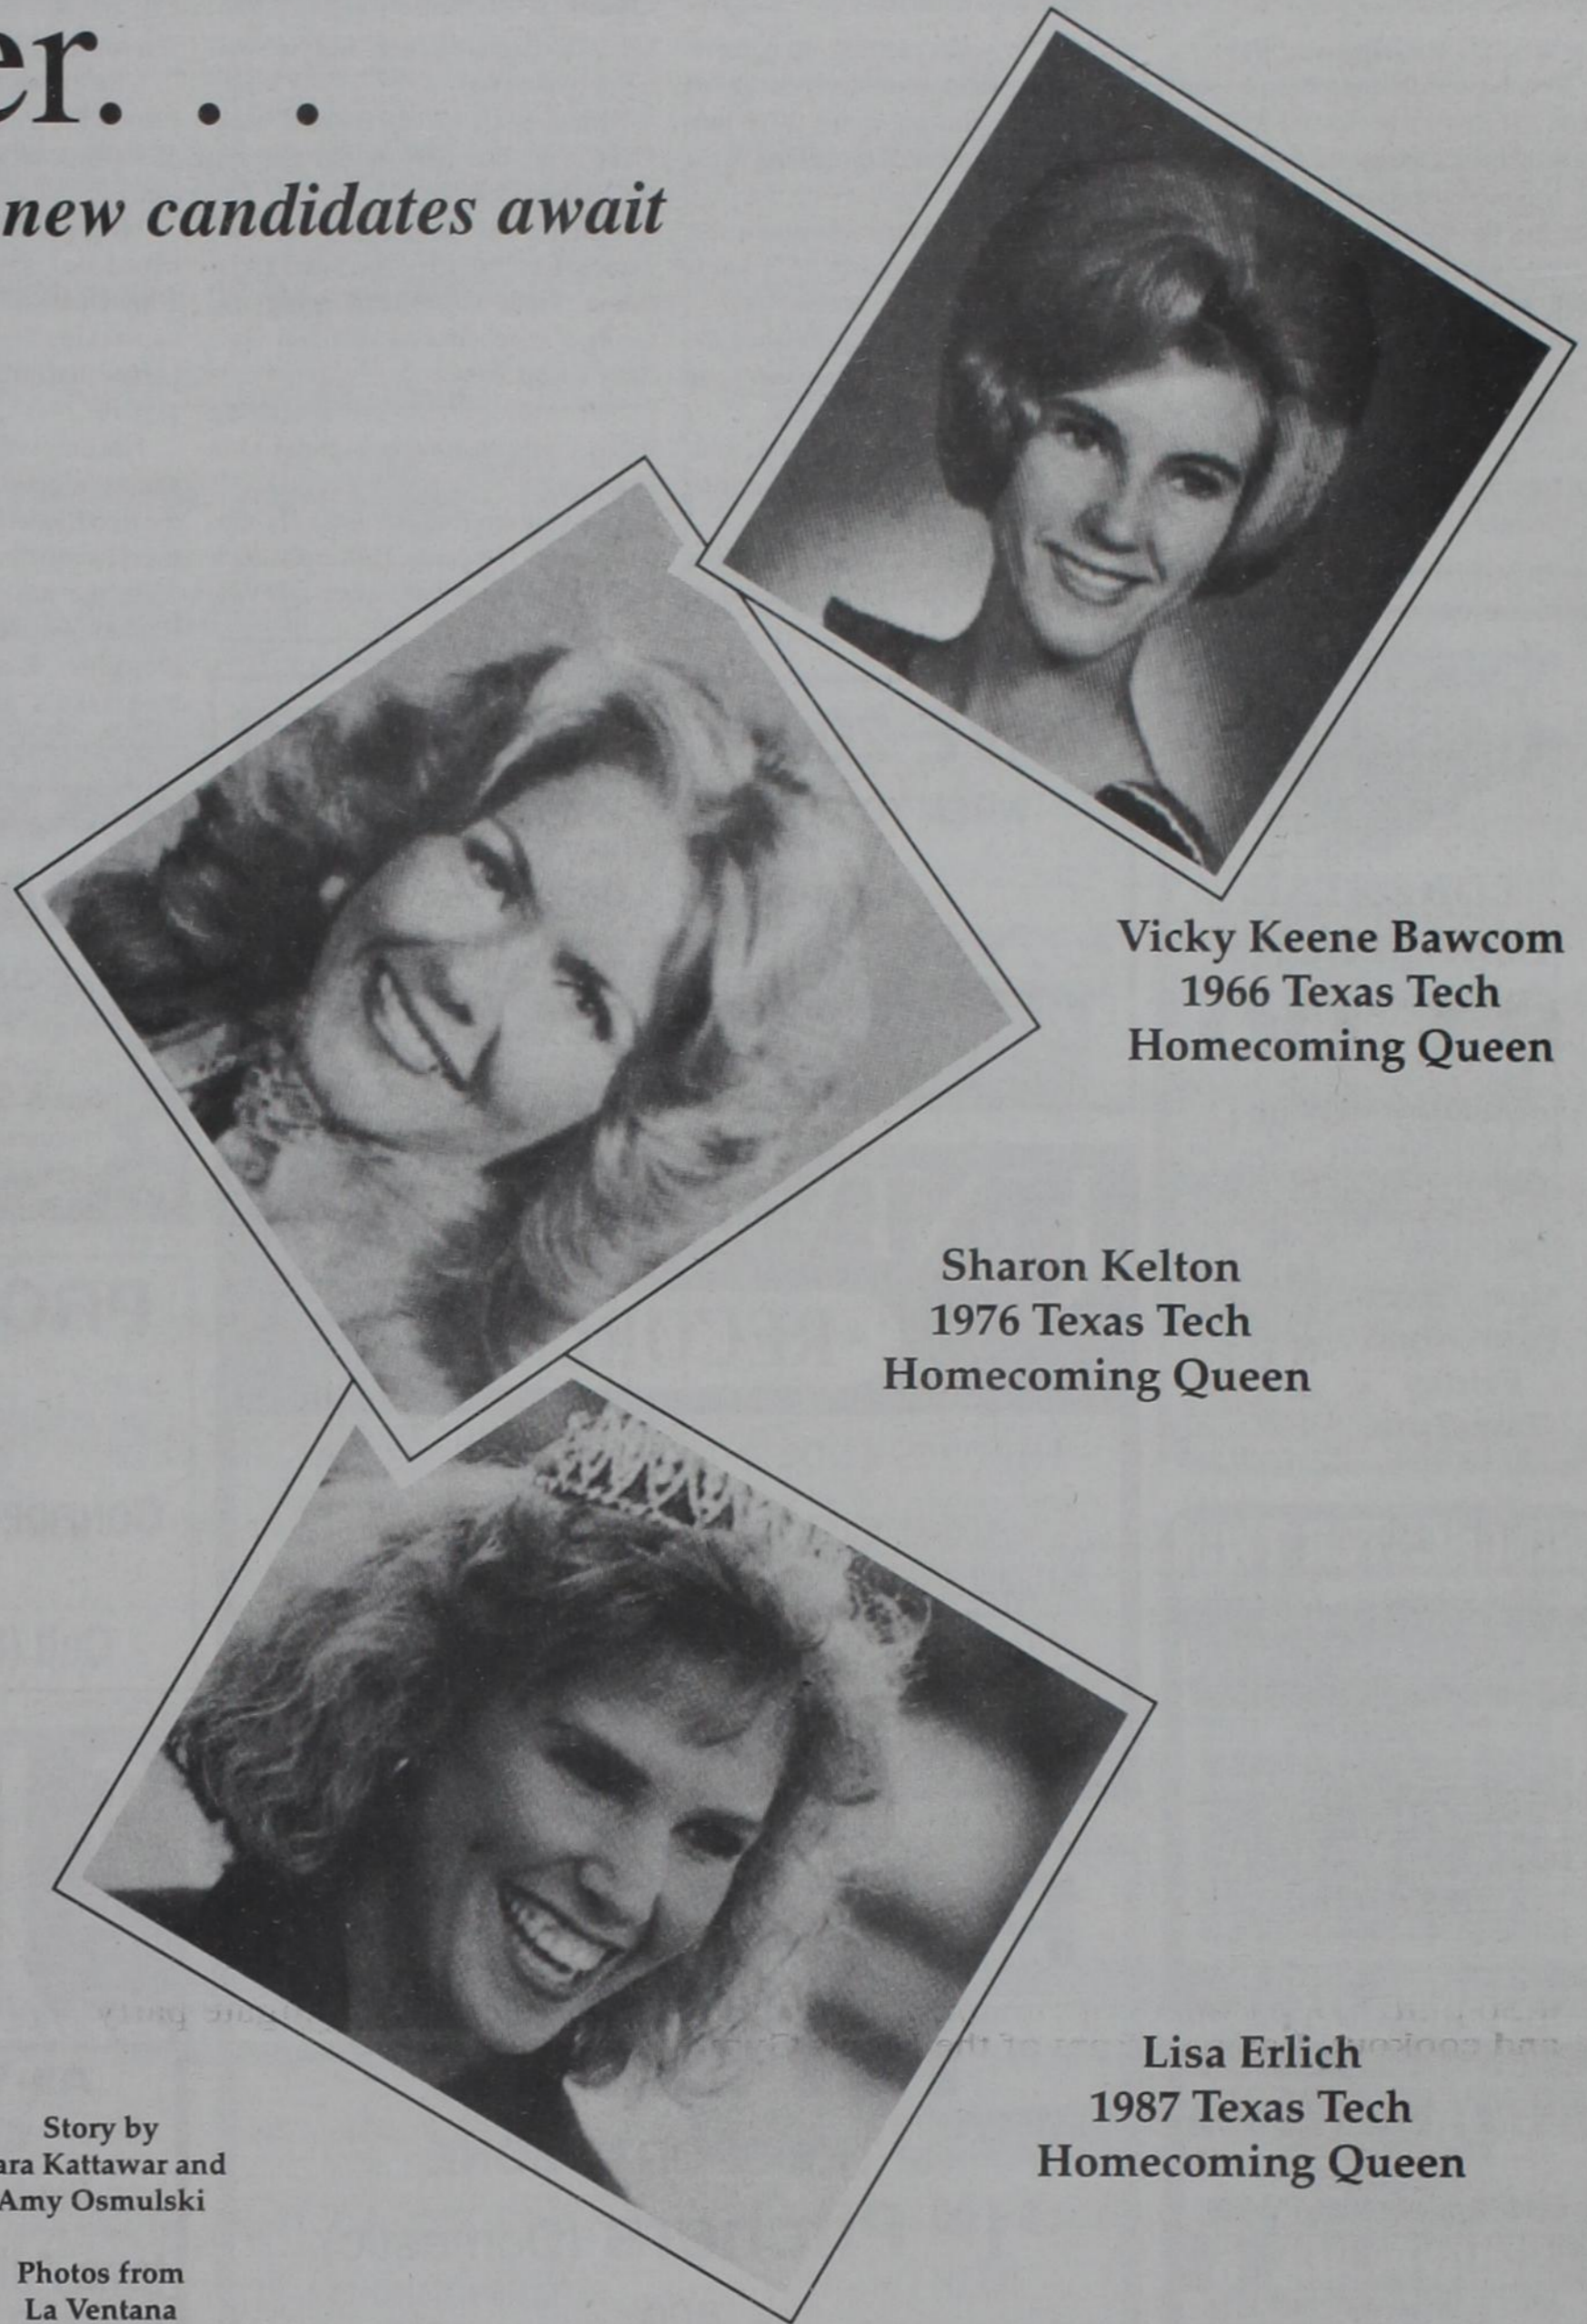

This year the queen will be crowned during a pregame show, which begins 30 minutes before the actual football game, Passow said.

Michigan resident Lisa Erlich had to wait for half-time in 1987 — when her name was announced as Homecoming queen.

Nominated by Kappa Alpha Theta and Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Erlich was elected under the popular vote system.

"Oh yeah, I was surprised," she said. "It was so sudden and I was like, 'Oh, I won.' Most of my friends now pull down my old yearbooks and can't believe I was Homecoming queen."

Erlich was able to represent Tech at the Cotton Bowl, a number of fund-raisers and at fashion shows.

Tech Homecoming parade floats away Saturday

Guns going up: Members of the Delta Delta Delta sorority and Sigma Nu fraternity show their Texas Tech spirit during the 1994 Homecoming parade.

Texas Tech's students around campus have been working on a few secrets.

The secrets will be out at 10 a.m. Saturday when the 1996 Homecoming parade begins.

The route will start at the Lubbock Civic Center, 1501 Sixth St., follow Broadway Avenue and end at the University Seal on the Tech Campus.

Tech Chancellor John T. Montford will be the Grand Marshall of the parade.

"There are 65 organizations including student organizations, local businesses, fraternities and sororities," said Caroline Stewart, Homecoming parade chairwoman and a sophomore social work major from Grapevine.

To go along with Tech's acceptance into the newly formed Big 12 Conference, the theme of this year's parade is "Raiding the Big 12." To keep the competitive spirit alive, trophies for floats will be given out in five divisions including residence halls, community organizations, campus organizations and the Greek sector.

The Tech High Riders will help out in the parade with a pickup truck procession.

"As High Riders, our main purpose is to support Tech athletes and generate Tech spirit while getting the community involved," said Amy Harden of the High Riders and a senior business major from Lubbock.

"We're going to decorate the trucks with posters and banners and throw candy to the kids along the way."

Target Stores will take part in the parade with their 'Shopping Cart Brigade,' consisting of 12 carts marching in formation and performing different maneuvers.

"Four years ago we were invited to the Homecoming Parade, and we've done it ever since," said George Sanford, a Target representative.

"We try to be a part of the community and get involved with what is going on."

This year the American Heart Association will be joining in the parade as part of their annual fund raiser "Healthy Choice American Heart Walk."

"Instead of having the event in a park like we have done in the past, we thought we should make part of the homecoming parade," said Lisa Gilbert of the AHA in Lubbock.

Gilbert said the walk-a-thon is expected to have more than 300 walkers participating in the event.

Stewart said she expecting the parade to run smoothly.

"I think it will go off well, but it is my first year doing it so I'm not sure," Stewart said.

Tech to face off against star Baylor running back

by Heath Robinson/UD

For the fourth consecutive game, Texas Tech will be forced to stop a running back considered to be among the nation's elite. Baylor's Jerod Douglas has been an All-Southwest Conference performer at both running back and kickoff returner and will flash his skills Saturday at Jones Stadium.

In last season's 9-7 loss at Baylor, Tech could not contain Douglas as he ran for 157 yards on 25 carries.

Douglas also took the opening kickoff 76 yards, setting up a Jarvis Van Dyke field goal. Tech never led in the game, drawing within two points with just five seconds remaining in the game.

Douglas' statistics are down this season: he is averaging 86.3 yards rushing.

Last season, Douglas finished the season with 1,114 rushing yards, an average of 111.4 yards a game.

But Tech coach Spike Dykes realizes Douglas still poses a serious threat.

"Jerod Douglas is a great running back, no doubt about it," Dykes said.

"He's a special runner, and he's extremely elusive."

Douglas is a special running back, Dykes said. But that is nothing new to the Red Raiders.

During the past three football games, Tech's defense has faced Oklahoma State's David Thompson, Georgia's Robert Edwards and Utah State's Abu Wilson.

All three players are averaging more yards rushing per game than Douglas.

Against the Red Raiders, Thompson gained 110 yards, Edwards struck for 47 yards on seven carries, and Wilson rushed 23 times for 104 yards.

The three running backs have rushed for a combined 257 yards on 55 carries, an average of 4.7 yards a run.

"Big games like this, they get me hyped up," said Tech defensive end Tony Daniels. "It keeps you focused on working hard every day at practice. I know that on Saturday we'll be ready to play."

Not only will Tech be forced to play against a good runner this week, but the Red Raiders face strong opponents every week through November.

In the next five games, the Red Raiders will be forced to slow down Douglas, Kansas' June Henley, Nebraska's Ahman Green, Texas

A&M's Sirr Parker and Texas' Ricky Williams. Henley averages 201.3 yards per game, and Parker ranks as the least effective at 84 yards per game.

While Dykes may not like the prospect of playing the nation's best runners every week, he realizes it is all part of life in the Big 12.

"Just like A&M and Texas, Baylor is a physical football team," Dykes said.

"We knew that tough football is what this conference would be all about. It's just going to get increasingly tough as the season goes on."

Despite facing the likes of Thomas and Edwards so far this season, the Red Raiders can find solace in the fact their running game can stand up to anyone else's in the country.

Junior tailback Byron Hanspard is averaging 206.3 yards a game. In the last three contests, Hanspard outgained Thompson, Edwards and Wilson 710 yards to 257.

Hanspard also has scored seven touchdowns compared with one for that trio.

Tech quarterback Zebbie Lethridge knows Hanspard simply outshines his competitors on the field.

"Byron is a special athlete, and a special running back," Lethridge said. "All he ever needs is just a little bit of space, and he's gone."

Hanspard chooses instead to give his offensive line the credit for his success.

"Everyone should know that I don't ever do anything," Hanspard said.

"When the offensive line is giving you holes that big, man you can't help but run through them."

Palmer fails Rangers at plate, in field

NEW YORK (AP) — Dean Palmer, who left the bases loaded in the top of the 12th, threw wildly past first base in the bottom of the inning Wednesday night, giving the New York Yankees a 5-4 win over the Texas Rangers to even their AL playoff series at 1-1.

Derek Jeter opened the 12th with a single off loser Mike Stanton, who then walked Tim Lincecum on a full count.

Mike Henneman relieved, and Charlie Hayes bunted the first pitch toward Palmer at third base.

Palmer fielded the ball cleanly, but skipped his throw to first past second baseman Mark McLemore, covering on the play. Jeter paused briefly at third before sprinting home when he saw the ball bounce away.

"It was one of those games where the first team to make a mistake was going to lose," Jeter said.

Juan Gonzalez, who hit a three-run homer in the playoff opener, hit another three-run homer and a solo shot, giving Texas an early 4-1 lead. Cecil Fielder helped rally the Yankees with a home run and a tying single in the eighth.

The best-of-5 series shifts to Texas. Jimmy Key will start Game 3 for the Yankees against Darren Oliver on Friday night.

"If we had lost, we'd have had to go to Texas and win three in a row, and that's too tough," Jeter said. "It's still going to be a struggle, but we like our chances."

The odds are in the Rangers' favor with the remainder of the series to be played at The Ballpark in Arlington. Texas has owned New York at home, winning 13 of the last 16 games there, including five of six this season.

The win snapped a four-game post-season losing streak for the Yankees, whose last playoff victory was a thrilling, 7-5 win in 15 innings over Seattle last October.

Texas led the majors in fielding this season and started the series well.

In the playoff opener Tuesday night, Palmer made a diving, backhanded stop that helped prevent New York from breaking loose in the first inning.

Palmer had his chance to put the Rangers ahead in the 12th.

Kenny Rogers, scheduled to start Game 4 for the Yankees, made his first relief appearance in three years and walked Will Clark, loading the bases with two outs. After Brian Boehringer relieved, Palmer fled out to right.

Boehringer wound up the winning pitcher. Trailing 4-3, the Yankees tied it in the eighth off Jeff Russell.

Bernie Williams singled and hustled into second when Tino Martinez fled out to deep left. Fielder, whose homer had brought the Yankees within 4-2 in the fourth, lined a single to right and, as Williams slid home with the tying run, many of the Yankees bolted from their dugout to greet him.

Texas starter Ken Hill allowed five hits in six-plus innings before giving way to Dennis Cook with two runners on in the seventh.

Cook gave up a sacrifice fly to Hayes, pinch-hitting for Wade Boggs, that made it 4-3.

For the second straight night, it was Gonzalez who led the Rangers. He hit a solo homer in the second off Andy Pettitte and added a three-run shot in the third to put Texas ahead 4-1.

Gonzalez, who hit 47 homers during the regular season, has seven RBIs in the series against New York.

Pettitte, who won 13 of his 21 regular-season games following Yankees losses, gave up only four hits in 6 1-3 innings but was stung by six walks.

Mariano Rivera pitched 2 2-3 innings of hitless relief for the Yankees, combining with Pettitte to retire 13 straight Rangers from the fifth inning through the ninth innings.

Pettitte, the likely AL Cy Young winner, was tagged for 10 runs and 10 hits in 2 2-3 innings in his last start against Texas, on July 30. He fared much better this time out, except for two at-bats against Gonzalez.

The Rangers and the Yankees are scheduled to play game three of the American League Divisional series at 7 p.m. Friday on NBC.
