UMC trust establishes endowed chairs

by Kristi Rieken/UD

University Medical Center officials announced Monday the creation of a $10 million trust fund to establish 10 endowed faculty positions for the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center.

The trust fund not only will help the TTUHSC, but also will benefit UMC, said James P. Courtney, UMC president and chief executive officer.

"This will solidify our strength and further our partnership with the Health Sciences Center," Courtney said. "We are partners, and we

Smith

Oct. 15, the eve of the TTUHSC President David Smith's first day on the job, Tech Chancellor John T. Montford told the TTUHSC Student Senate one of his goals was to establish 20 endowed faculty positions by Jan. 1.

Monday's announcement places the share common goals. Instead of 'burying this money in the backyard,' so to speak, we are making an investment in the school, which is an investment in our future."

TTUHSC at the halfway mark toward Montford's goal.

"We are very serious about our medical school," Montford said. "The importance of our academic initiatives cannot be overstated. This is the first of many endeavors dealing with academic investments."

Smith, who came to Tech after leaving his job as commissioner of health for the Texas Department of Human Services in Austin, said this is a step in the right direction for the TTUHSC.

"This sends a clear academic message,"

Smith said. "So many universities are hunkering down, but this will help us to be on the offensive and define our own destiny rather than waiting around for things to happen. With this we can compete with anyone in the world."

Montford said endowments such as this one are important for continuing to recruit quality faculty, while improving retention of faculty already in place at the TTUHSC.

Montford said this initiative is a component of his plan to eventually bring more endowed scholarships and fellowships to TTUHSC.

Monday's announcement was just the beginning of a long process in which a committee, whose members have not been named, will nominate and review faculty members to fill the endowed position.

The committee then will give their findings to Smith and Courtney who will have the final say in decisions regarding who will be named to these chairs.

"This is a process that will take approximately eight to 10 months," Montford said. "One initial chair is forthcoming, and we hope to have that person in place in December."

Dole focuses on affirmative action

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Bob Dole, determined to win California supporters by seizing on a hotly debated ballot issue, criticized affirmative action programs Monday as "a blind alley in the search for equal justice."

In renewing his support for a state proposition opposing race- and sex-based preferences, Dole offered a broad indictment of affirmative action programs overall.

"We cannot fight the evil of discrimination with more discrimination," Dole said in his most lengthy explanation yet of his switch on the subject. Until the presidential campaign, Dole had supported affirmative action programs.

"I changed my position. You have the right to do that," Dole said, adding: "Not every day, as the White House does."

Dole has been on record in support of Proposition 209, which would end racial and sexual preferences in state hiring and education, but he has not spoken out forcefully on it until recently.

Trailing Clinton by double-digit margins in polls in most regions of the county, Dole is struggling to boost his candidacy in the final week of the campaign.

His latest effort came as House Republicans released a new 30-second TV ad telling voters that electing a Democratic Congress would amount to a "blank check" for Clinton — a tacit admission that Dole is likely to lose.

In a conference call with reporters, Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour sought to play down that aspect of the ads, saying the TV spots "remind people of why they are against Clinton. ... They talk about what Clinton was like when he had a Democratic Congress."

Many prominent Republicans have been talking as if a Dole loss were inevitable. For his part, Dole told reporters, "I haven't heard any of them."

"We're going to be working every day," said Dole. He added that the Dole campaign's internal poll numbers show Clinton's lead in California down to single digits.

Bribery along border sparks federal inquiry

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Widespread bribery by drug smugglers of federal immigration and customs inspectors and border agents all along the Mexican border has triggered a federal investigation, a top prosecutor said Monday.

"We are concerned about corruption at the ports of entry in Arizona, including Douglas," said Daniel Knauss, the assistant U.S. attorney in charge of the Tucson office. "We have a serious problem with INS inspectors, customs inspectors and Border Patrol agents there."

Knauss said the situation is as bad in Nogales, "and from what I'm told, it's the same thing at El Paso, San Diego and Mexicali. "This is an endemic problem. There's a lot of cocaine down there in Douglas because of smuggling routes."

He declined to say how many federal employees were the subject of the current investigation, but said no grand jury indictments have been returned and no one has been arrested. In the last four years, at least four former INS or customs employees have been convicted of drug trafficking and sent to prison.

The Arizona Republic cited about 80 border-crossing guards in the INS and U.S. Customs offices in Douglas as being under scrutiny currently, but Knauss said that figure was inaccurate.

"I don't know where that came from," he said, adding that he doubts there are even 80 inspectors between the two agencies in Douglas.

In Phoenix, U.S. Attorney Janet Napolitano said her office has learned "that corruption is part and parcel" of large-scale drug-trafficking operations.

Knauss said it is hard to pinpoint the extent of corruption.

"I wouldn't call it disastrous. I think more are honest than dishonest down there, but it doesn't take too many dishonest ones to get an awful lot of dope through."

Dozens missing in Egyptian building rubble

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Using cranes, shovels and their bare hands, rescue workers pulled 15 survivors Monday from the ruins of a collapsed 12-story apartment building in a Cairo suburb, but dozens more were still missing.

By nightfall, a total of 15 bodies had been found in the rubble of the concrete-block and plaster building, which collapsed Sunday in Heliopolis, an upper middle-class residential and commercial suburb on the east side of Cairo. Police said more than 60 others were still unaccounted for. Six people were rescued Sunday.

Scores of anxious relatives stood in the street Monday, many weeping and others too stunned to talk.

Anaheed Abdel-Messih, a woman in her 20s, said her parents were in an x-ray clinic in the building when it collapsed.

"I don't know if they are still alive," she cried. "It needs a miracle." Dr. Adel el-Sharouni, Cairo's chief of emergency aid, said he had to amputate the arm of one victim and the leg of another to free them from the debris.

Police detained a building contractor and an engineering consultant for questioning Monday, saying they may have been responsible for weakening the 30-year-old building's structure by ordering the removal of walls during the renovation of an apartment.

The building's owner also was arrested, police said. Many buildings in Cairo are poorly constructed. Building owners often add floors beyond the number allowed on their permits, contractors cheat on materials and there is little government enforcement of zoning or construction codes.

Gen. Mukbil Shafiq, commander of the army's engineer corps who was supervising the rescue work, told Egypt's Middle East News Agency he believed changes had been made to the columns supporting the front of the building, causing the collapse.

Middle East talks turn to threats of violence

JERUSALEM (AP) — With a month-long U.S. effort to revive the Middle East peace process in danger of collapse, Israel and the Palestinians traded accusations Monday and braced for the possibility of fresh violence.

Negotiations on Israel's seven-month overdue troop pullout from Hebron were set to go on, however, despite the impending departure of President Clinton's special envoy, Dennis Ross. The two sides had hoped to reach a deal before Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat left Monday for a five-day European trip.

Ross said negotiations would continue after his departure and the United States would play an active role.

"The progress we have made clearly demonstrates that an agreement on Hebron redeployment is possible in the very near future," he said in a statement.

Israel radio said talks would resume Tuesday.

Israel's previous government had signed a redeployment agreement with the Palestinians, but Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu insisted on improving the security arrangements for the 450 Jewish settlers who live in Hebron amid 94,000 Palestinians.

Netanyahu blamed Arafat for holding up the withdrawal from Hebron, the last West Bank city under Israeli occupation.

"It was possible to close this agreement last night, I have no doubt of this," he told a news conference Monday.

Zakariya Agha, a member of the PLO Executive Committee, said the Israelis were "insisting on changing the agreement and on imposing conditions on us under pretexts of security. They want to divide the city."

The U.S.-brokered talks between Israel and the Palestinians — the first since Netanyahu took office in June — began after riots and clashes between Israeli troops and Palestinian police in the West Bank killed 79 people in September.

A Hebron pullout would be the first tangible step by Netanyahu's hard-line government toward implementing the existing Israeli-Palestinian peace agreements, and so has taken on added significance as a litmus test of his commitment to the process.

Their View

Students should align themselves with own party

Cameron Graham/guest columnist

Well, here I go again. With the elections fast approaching I can't pass up one more opportunity to impart some thoughts to you before you step into the booth and make your mark. Now I am not going to talk to the Republicans and Democrats out there. Rather, I am going to talk to those of you, and you know who you are, who sit there and say with a kind of smug confidence, "Well, I vote for the candidate, not the party."

Friends, no matter what political philosophy you believe in, you have to make your mind up when it comes to representation. You can't support one person and not another, because if you follow that line of thinking, you could wind up voting for two people who will work against each other. Then your vote will be canceled out, and what have you gained?

I have always been irritated by people who say that they just don't want to admit that they might be for a certain party. They feel that if they say "I am Republican or Democrat" then whoever they say it to will be offended. That's what they worry about the most, offending people. Go figure.

But I would like those of you who fall this category to pay close attention here. I would like to tell you a little story about why you should pick a side. This story is about spring cleaning, Great Aunt Phoebe and Gregory Peck.

Now, I don't mean the famous Academy Award winning actor, but Great Aunt Phoebe's pet parakeet. You see, every Saturday night, Great Aunt Phoebe would clean her house from top to bottom. It didn't matter how dirty it might have been. Every Saturday it got the same thorough going over.

When it came time for Gregory Peck's cage to be cleaned out, Great Aunt Phoebe would, without fail, leave the cage door open while she emptied the little tray that collected the bird stuff; and, without fail, Gregory Peck would fly out of his cage. Now as it so happens, his cage was in the front parlor where there a huge picture window flanked by two smaller windows that Grand Aunt Phoebe would let in the fresh air.

Seeing what to him was a great means of escape, Gregory Peck would fly to the window only to be stopped by the clear glass. Not to be daunted, he would continue to fly back and try again and again, each time crashing into the glass. But what he could never figure out was that if he went just a little bit to the left or a little bit to the right then he would have made it.

Eventually he would return to his cage there to live his life to his fullest parakeet potential. I am happy to say that Great Aunt Phoebe dearly loved Gregory Peck, and the bird lived to be very old.

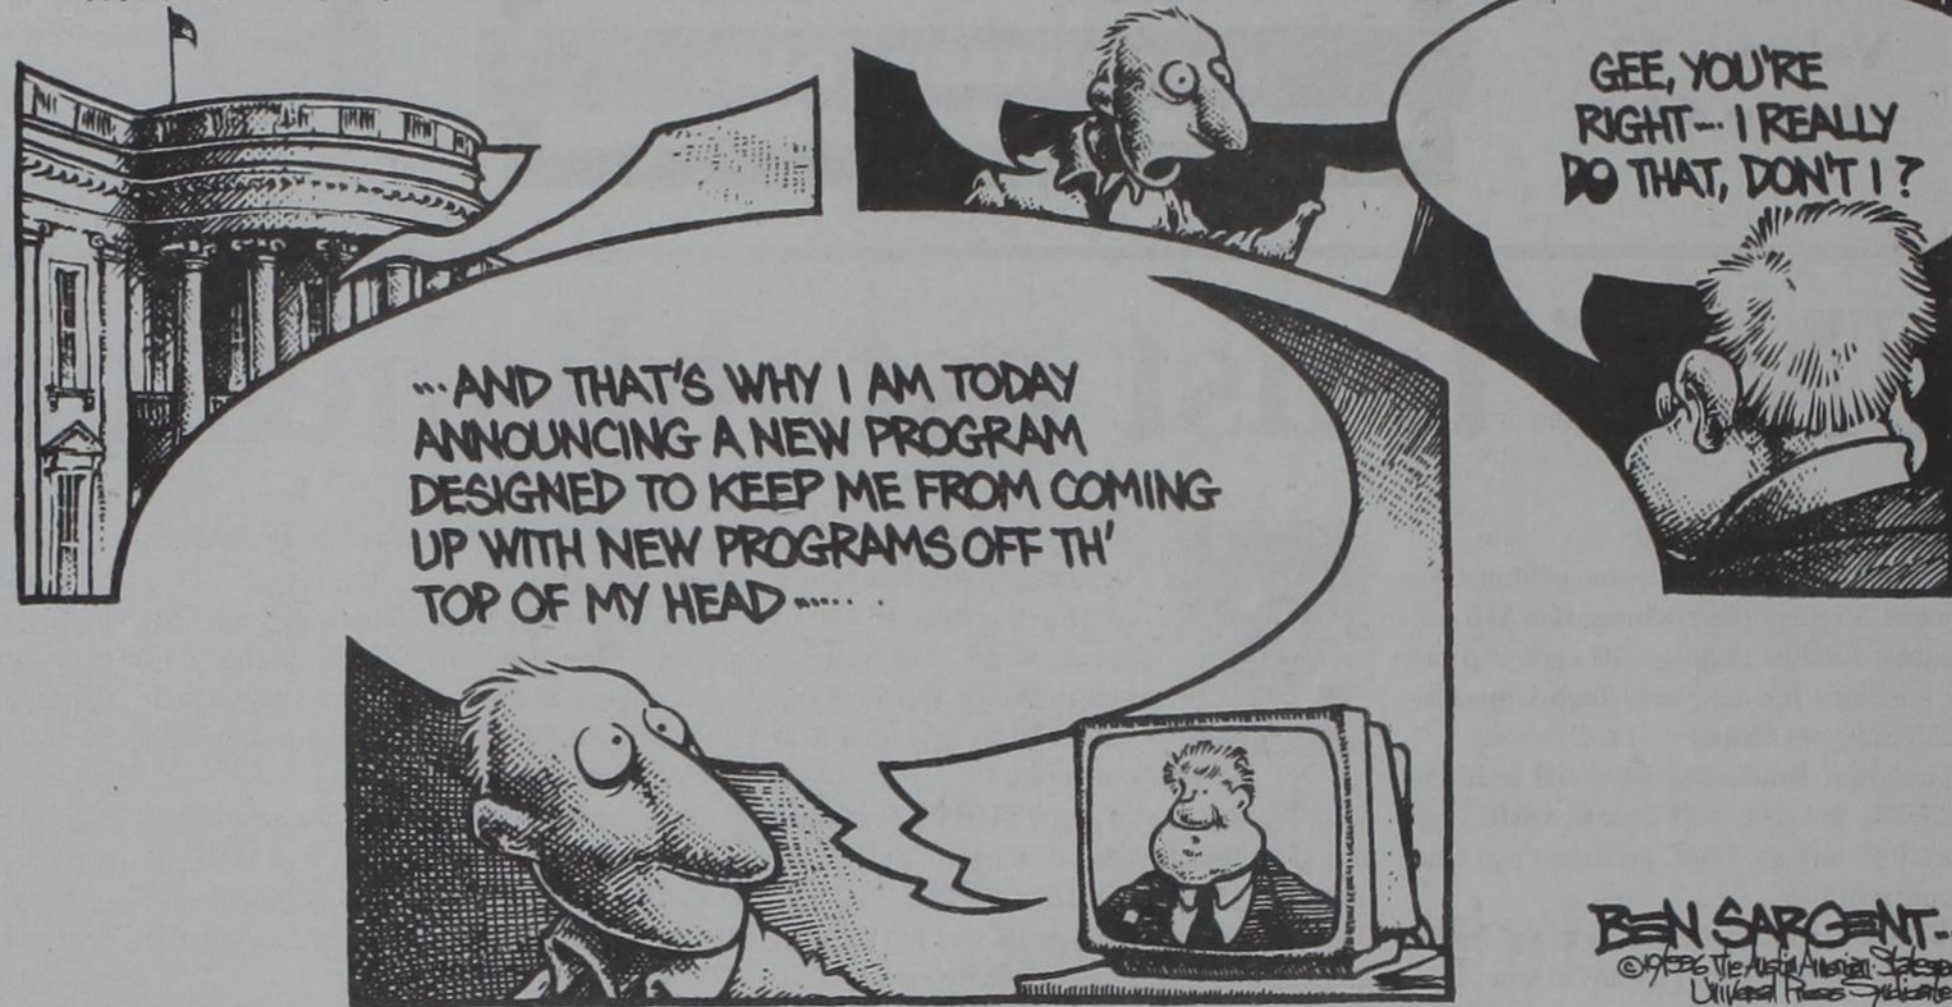

So, here is what I am saying, friends. If you don't take a side then you might wind up like Gregory Peck, stuck in a cage in someone's front parlor. You Twilight Zone fans might appreciate that thought. Voting is something that you should do anyway. It is also essential that you sound off on your principals and convictions when there is not an election going on.

So please, vote. And please, make a choice and don't be afraid to let everyone know how you stand. Gregory Peck will thank you for it.

'No Perot plan' could win Dole more votes

Brooks Boyett/columnist

There is only one week left until this nation of ours decides who its next president will be. And unfortunately for Bob Dole, it looks as if it won't be him. Bob Dole is 10, 15, maybe even 80 percentage points behind Bill Clinton, depending on which poll you look at. The president's lead appears to be insurmountable this late in the campaign, but I still think Dole has a chance. But only if Dole follows my suggestions. Only then will he have a shot at the presidency.

First off, Dole needs to push for one more presidential debate. Throughout this debate, instead of offering his standard rebuttals of Clinton's answers, Dole will simply moon Clinton each and every time. That's right, Dole will drop his pants. Not only will this distract Clinton greatly, but it will win over the young voters. They will realize that, heck, Dole is a wild and crazy guy, and it would be stupid not to vote for someone so brave, so funny, that he would actually moon the president of the United States.

Secondly, Dole needs to drop his 15 percent across the board tax cut idea. I have a better plan that will win over the voters. Dole needs to announce that he will cut taxes 100 percent and balance the budget at the same time. That's right, Americans won't owe the government a dime. How will the government pull this off without more than quadrupling its national debt? It's quite easy, actually. And that's what makes my plan so sweet.

You see, when Bob Dole is elected president, he will somehow use his power to kidnap Ross Perot. For Perot to ever get his freedom and life back, he will have to give Dole every single cent that he owns. This vast fortune will easily fund the government's expenditures for the next four years. And more importantly Perot will be penniless. That means he will never run for president ever again. We Americans will never have to hear that voice of his ever again.

If Dole can voice this wonderful plan to the American voters, he will win in a landslide. Nothing Clinton can say or do will top the "No taxes, no Perot plan."

Another thing Dole needs to do is try to win over the so-called "soccer moms." Winning over these women is where Dole's real chances stand. In case you don't pay attention to the news, soccer moms are the group of female suburbanites who, after dropping their kids off at school, rush to the park and begin playing soccer, neglecting their household in hopes of achieving fame, fortune and great soccer skills.

OK. That was just a stupid, little joke. I was trying to be funny so you would like me better. Any way, in reality soccer moms are really the busy suburban mothers whose votes are vital to who wins the presidency. Unfortunately, I really have no ideas as to how Dole can win over this group of women. They seem to hate the man. And there's not much poor Bob can do about it. The only idea I have is bribery. But this happens to be illegal. Hopefully, the "No taxes, no Perot" plan should appeal to these voters. If not, Dole is doomed.

I encourage you all to pay close attention to the presidential race this week. You just might see Bob Dole take advantage of my plans. Thus you'll have the opportunity to witness the greatest comeback in the history of comebacks.

Hazing at Tech should be taken seriously

To the editor: After reading and listening to the many editorials and television broadcasts in Lubbock recently regarding the support or condemnation of the Greek system here at Texas Tech, I think most people are side-stepping the real issue: Hazing and its prevalence among fraternities on this campus. Incidents such as the one involving Sigma Phi Epsilon bring forth anger and distrust among students, faculty and residents of Lubbock and Texas Tech, but to what end? Anger dies down, and the Greek system goes on, business as usual. My concern is all the incidents that go unheard of, the incidents where some poor kid loses his self-respect in order to become, in his mind, a member of the elite, a brother. There are many stories that do go unheard of, I know personally of several, not to mention my own experience as a pledge to one of Texas Tech's larger fraternities in the spring of 1993. As a freshman, I believed that Tech social life revolved around the Greek system. To become and praise the fraternity system and its benefits to young men. I was unaware that a human being could be such a hypocrite. The Greek system, as many fraternity members will tell you, has a no-hazing policy. It is too bad that so few stick to these guidelines. There are fraternities that do not haze, but I believe that they are the exception to the rule. It is a sad testament to college fraternities that they are willing to give up their very existence, as Sigma Phi Epsilon did, to demean other human beings.

Yes, it's such a joy to read The UD and be regularly appraised of how everyone is out of step except Mark Harmon and the Democratic Party. I thought The UD was a student newspaper. Although many (if not most) of his guest columns' comments reflect more childish petulance than a Tech student is capable of, I was not aware the author qualified as a student as well. At least make him take a night course before you give him another third of a page for a totally commercial message. Or charge him advertising rates and label it as such.

If you feel that strongly about the message, why not ask a student to write the thing? Most of the students I've met since coming to Tech generally don't shirk from having an opinion.

Come on, UD readers: I call upon you to flood the editor with your own guest columns. They may not be invited, but they sure will reflect the Tech student body more than the painfully biased comments of nothing more than a political party boss. The UD is your paper — don't let it be used as a Democratic muckracking tool.

Keith F. Johnson, assistant professor School of Mass Communications

Editor's note: Since the beginning of the semester, The UD has asked for and welcomed all letters to the editor and guest columns from students, faculty and staff. The UD has published several columns from a Republican viewpoint, including the one printed today by Tech College Republicans President Cameron Graham (Graham has been a guest columnist for The UD since January). The UD serves the Tech campus, primarily students, but does not exclude opinions of administration, faculty or staff. To do so would eliminate a good portion of the campus readership. The UD staff does not single out one particular party or viewpoint to ram down readers' throats. Everyone on campus has the opportunity to share their opinions on this page. The UD staff does not seek them out.

Harmon should do more than repeat mantra

To the editor: I would like to add a few comments regarding professor Mark Harmon's guest column in The University Daily (Their View 10/28/96). 1) The United States is not a democracy, it is a republic. The direct democracy Harmon advocates is not in the Constitution of the United States. This sort of change in our government would require a constitutional convention. 2) Harmon is obviously an intelligent and thoughtful man, so why can he only cite extremism in response to most conservative proposals. I think Harmon could be a little more creative than repeat the Democratic mantra of extremism handed down from Bill Clinton, in an attempt to scare voters. What are the ideas of the Democratic Party, sir? Readers interested in learning more about conservative ideas should read Milton Friedman's "Free to Choose."

Coca-Cola continues monopoly on campus

To the editor: OK, OK. So I didn't know Coca-Cola had bought out Dr Pepper! So I was naive in thinking it was nice of the vendor to allow Dr Pepper to appear in Coke machines! So the big Coca-Cola already had a monopoly on campus.

That only increases my dilemma. (And I know some of you will remind me Pepsi ain't no little corp.) I refuse to buy from a company that has a monopoly on drinks for profit on campus, what's a poor young thing like me to do?

Oh, yeah. Thanks Coca-Cola for donating to the United Spirit Arena. How about donating a few thou to replace some of the broken-down and/or outdated computers around campus?

Academics could use your generosity also.

Tech professor receives Fulbright grant to teach, research in former Soviet Union republic

by Ginger Pope/UD

Texas Tech communications soon will spread overseas with the departure of Tech communications studies professor Kurt Bruder in January.

Bruder received a Fulbright Grant in May to lecture and conduct research at the University of Tartu in Tartu, Estonia, a former republic of the Soviet Union.

Bruder will focus on the communication process of Estonians and how it affects their culture.

"My interest in the grant was driven more by the scholarly reasons, not the interest of the country," Bruder said. "They want me to teach two intercultural communications and social interaction courses."

These courses include the examination of daily conversation and how people use language to accomplish their goals in everyday life.

"I think the understanding of the principle and skills are there," he said.

"And I'm interested in seeing if there is systematic communication among the Estonians."

Bruder, who has studied the culture and behavior of monastery life, said the Estonians act in a withdrawn manner similar to monks.

"I want to find out why their culture is that way," he said. "I have an interest in comparing their ways of communicating to ours."

Bruder will be teaching undergraduate and graduate students at the University of Tartu.

He will teach his courses in English, but he said he wants to learn the Estonian language and culture.

Even though University of Tartu officials do not expect Bruder to do in-depth research, he said he will initiate research of his own.

"I'll be video taping and audio taping the people," Bruder said. "It's a pioneering research in some sense — I'll learn about them and myself. I'm likely to gain a perspective I don't already possess."

G.H. "Bud" Morris, Tech associate professor of communication studies, said Bruder has a superb education and has taught courses in intercultural communications, interviewing and presented several lectures stressing diversity.

Bruder is a good researcher, and this grant will give him a chance to further his work, Morris said. He is dedicated to the development of communications.

"It is not just a matter of filling his classes that is important, but his interest in the subjects he teaches," Morris said. "He is very adaptable and has a variety of life experiences to offer those in Estonia."

“It's a pioneering research in some sense — I'll learn about them and myself.”

Kurt Bruder, Tech professor teaching abroad

The J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board was established in 1946 by former Arkansas Senator J. William Fulbright to increase understanding between the people of the United States and other countries.

The program is administered by the U.S. Information Agency under policy guidelines established by the presidentially appointed J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board.

Forty-one foreign governments share in the exchange of instructors.

Barry Ballew with the chief academic exchanges division of the USIA said the Fulbright program seeks serious-minded people to participate.

"Their proposal for the courses or programs they plan to implement has to seem viable," Ballew said. "There also needs to be evidence of leadership qualities."

The Fulbright program sponsors scholars and exists with funding from Congress, private companies and other sources, he said.

The beginning of the application process for the grant requires a contracted administration for the International Exchange of Scholars to preview and select the best proposal sent in by a candidate, he said.

Candidates for the grant have to submit a proposal for the curriculum they would use in their teachings if selected, he said.

The application is then sent to the U.S. Embassy in Estonia for a final approval, he said.

"The grant is a very prestigious award, and scholars involved with the program gain firsthand exposure to new cultures," Ballew said.

Jane Winer, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said she always is pleased when a faculty member receives offers such as the Fulbright Grant.

"The Fulbright is designed to give people the opportunity to go to other countries and meet others," Winer said. "And like any grant to do research, competition to receive it is very high. It's an honor."

Bruder has contributed a lot to the university, and he will return from Estonia with more knowledge about another culture, Winer said.

Bruder will begin his appointment in late January and will continue for five months but will return in time for the second summer school session in July.

While at Tech Bruder teaches international communication, theories of interpersonal communication and the language of social interaction.

Court finds Republic of Texas in contempt

AUSTIN (AP) — A state district judge found the Republic of Texas group and its top leaders in contempt of court Monday for trying to take over state bank accounts.

Judge Joseph Hart ordered the group to rescind letters mailed to about 175 banks, directing them to transfer all accounts held by the state, its agencies and political subdivisions to the organization.

Hart gave the group one week to comply with the order before facing $10,000-a-day fines that will double each day until the letters are recanted.

Hart told officials from Attorney General Dan Morales' office they could seek higher penalties or arrest the group's leaders if the Republic does not comply with his order.

Richard McLaren, ambassador of the so-called Republic, said Hart has no authority to order the group to do anything. He contends that the people of Texas will take action if the state tries to enforce the fines.

"If they start seizing assets, you won't believe what will happen," McLaren said. "If they start it, they won't be able to turn it off."

"People are upset. If you start going around stealing assets, people are going to react. If he really pulls it off, God help him."

The Republic group, which would not reveal its membership, claims the annexation of Texas in 1845 was illegal. It has set up various institutions, including its own courts and treasury.

Peter Haskel, an assistant attorney general, said he was unaware of any bank turning over accounts to the group. But he said the letters have caused some confusion and have wasted people's time.

Hart earlier this year approved a temporary injunction against the group, ordering it to stop filing liens against property held by government entities and private people. He also ordered the group to stop filing supposedly legal government documents like the bank notices.

Haskel said the group also has notified other businesses in Texas that the state no longer exists. He said the notices direct any business wanting to work in Texas to deal with the organization.

He added that the Attorney General's office hopes to avoid any violence and would rather see the so-called Republic obey the law. But Haskel said the legal governments in Texas can't be held hostage.

"State and local government must be allowed to function, to do their jobs, to perform their duties and not have to answer to a nongovernmental, small self-appointed group of extremists to do that," he said.

Haskel also said the state's civil lawsuit against the group could be expanded soon. He declined to elaborate, but said Morales is working closely with other law enforcement officials.

Congressional internship applications due Friday

Friday marks the deadline to work with Congressman Larry Combest, R-Lubbock, inside the U.S. Capitol this spring.

The 19th Congressional District Public Policy Internship Program is available to Tech students who have completed their freshman year and have at least a 3.0 grade point average. The internship is awarded to one student every semester.

The internship gives the student the chance to spend a semester studying public policy firsthand in a congressional office, gaining real life and practical experience.

"It's like taking the classroom to Washington," said Combest's Press Secretary Keith Williams.

The internship position is open to all majors. Students can pick up applications from their college deans and must return them by Friday to be eligible. Each intern receives a $1,000 monthly allowance. Chad Jones, a senior agribusiness major from New Deal, is the fall 1996 intern.

"I highly recommend the internship," Jones said. "I've done everything from attending meetings, to listening to floor debates."

Baldness in men caused by estrogen

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Researchers using mice to examine a pesticide's effects on skin cancer also developed data they say indicate baldness may be linked to the presence of a female hormone, not the absence of a male one.

Dr. Robert Smart and graduate assistant Hye-Sun Oh were studying the pesticide's impact when they found that the shaved skin of mice grew hair when treated with an estrogen blocker.

"Estrogen was playing some fundamental role in skin biology," Smart said.

The discovery by the North Carolina State University researchers was published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Buddhist monks spread Eastern philosophy

by Darcy Rosie/UD

Throughout history, ancient societies have performed traditional ritual song and dance to communicate with higher powers and bring about environmental, social and personal healing.

For the first time, Tibetan monks of the Drepung Loseling Monastery are at Texas Tech performing sacred music and dance for precisely this kind of healing, said Stacey Monk, University Center activities specialist for cultural events.

The monks, known as lamas, are currently on their fifth world tour and will be at Tech until Saturday.

Monday was the first day of the weeklong event. The monks began working on a sand mandala painting in the UC Courtyard and presented lectures.

All events take place at the UC, and events include a photo exhibit, lectures on meditation techniques and Tibetan philosophy and history, butter sculpting and introductory workshops in Tibetan song and dance.

The events are free except for the Sacred Music, Sacred Dance for World Healing performance at 8 p.m. Friday at the UC Allen Theatre. Tickets cost $8 for current Tech students and $16 for general public.

It is important to take advantage of an opportunity as special as this, Monk said.

There is not much exposure to Eastern religion in West Texas, and this is a great way to learn about the Tibetan way of life, she said.

"We could be the last generation to see Tibetan culture in its original form," she said. "I would think that anyone at this university should see them. This gives people a glimpse of something they will never get the opportunity to see again."

So far, Tech student response has been positive for the traveling lamas, and organizers are surprised with the turnout.

"I was impressed by the number of people that came out today," Monk said.

"There are a lot of Buddhists coming out of the woodworks. We have had more people wanting to help with this program than any other I have worked on."

The sand mandala that the nine lamas started working on Monday is a sacred object used as an object of contemplation, said Tokden Rinpoche, through his interpreter Tsering Wangchuk. Rinpoche is a title which means "precious one," and Buddhists believe this means he was a holy man in a previous life.

It depicts the pure nature of the world, as well as how people can live most effectively, Tokden Rinpoche said.

The ultimate stage of Buddhism is enlightenment, and creating the mandala is one way of reaching this level, he said.

"The mandala explains each and every path to reach enlightenment," Tokden Rinpoche said.

"We make the same mandala every time, because we need to visualize the same path in order to reach brotherhood (enlightenment)."

Wangchuk believes they have a special reason for coming to Texas.

"We hope it brings a blessing to Lubbock and more specifically this university," Wangchuk said.

Volleyball team reflects on Nebraska victory

by Christy Apple/UD

The No. 20 Texas Tech volleyball team is the first Big 12 Conference team to win its 20th game. But more importantly for the Red Raiders, the win came against defending national champion Nebraska.

Tech's only losses this season have come to Texas, Texas A&M and Friday against Colorado. Tech coach Jeff Nelson said he was satisfied with the way the weekend played out.

"I told the team after the Saturday night match I'd gladly give up that Friday night match for what we got Saturday night," Nelson said.

"It was a real exciting time for everyone."

Nelson said the win was important, because it showed the team their hard work does indeed make a difference.

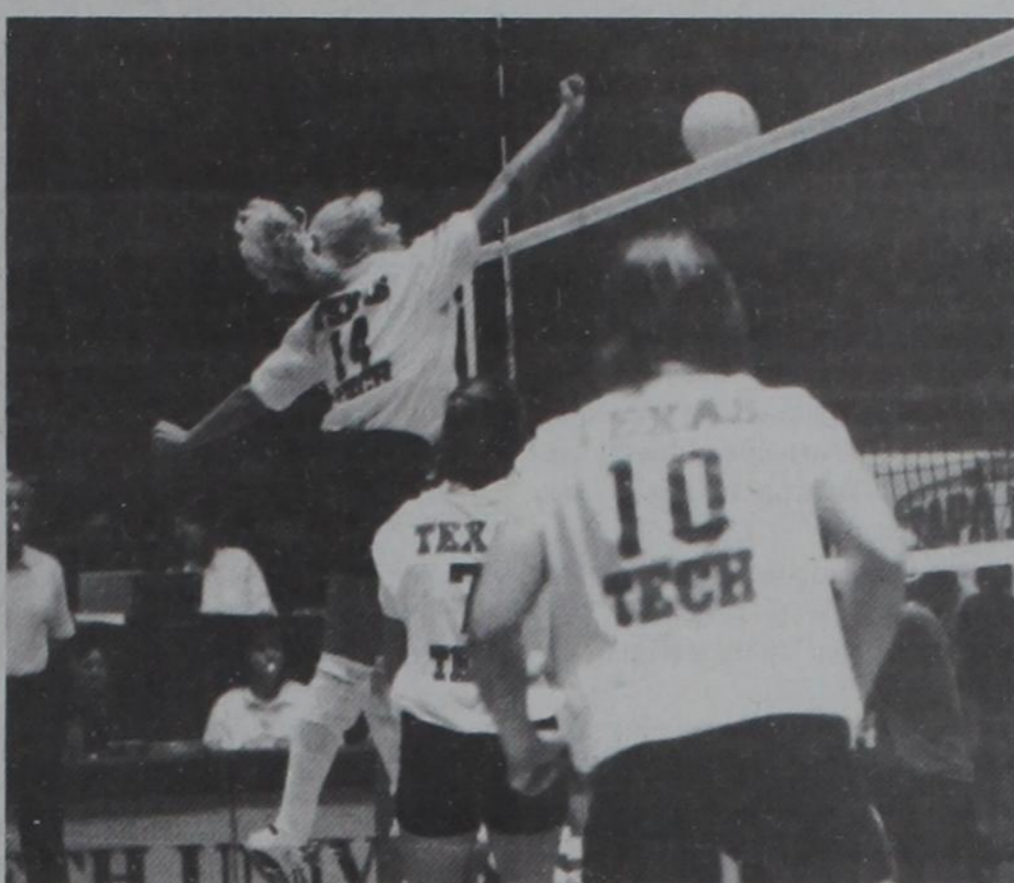

"We have been preaching to these kids that hard work pays off," Nelson said.

"We have kicked their butts for two years, and I think that is why it was so important for them."

Sophomore setter Lisa Hilgers said the loss to Colorado was just a lack of focus. Nelson agreed and said his players felt as though they did not play as aggressively as they know how.

"Everything was in slow motion," Nelson said. "Colorado took our home bench, which they are allowed to do, but there was not emotional charge out of this group."

Nelson said he was upset about the loss to Colorado and told his squad it was not going to leave until it figured out what went wrong.

"We talked about responsibilities and changes," Nelson said. "We needed other people to be ready to go in."

Junior middle blocker Brande Brown and senior middle blocker Jill Burness did not play up to their potential, Nelson said.

"We were not blocking balls," Nelson said. "If it's not going then they're not doing their job. If we did our job blocking, then we should have won."

Colorado's team average of blocked balls in the Tech game was 13.5, while Tech could only average seven against the Buffs.

Martin said the Red Raiders lacked communication on the court against Colorado in Friday's game.

"They weren't pounding the ball," Martin said. "There was just no communication, and we looked defeated."

After the loss to Colorado, Tech did not discuss Nebraska but simply came to the game ready to play Saturday. Nelson said he discussed a lineup change to give Tech a bigger presence against Nebraska.

Sophomore outside hitter Angela Cooper had not started in a match all year but got a chance to start against the Cornhuskers.

"The person that really came on for us was Angela Cooper," Nelson said. "She went in and put up some really big things for us. We felt we needed a bigger lineup."

Tech's win against No. 5 Nebraska puts the Red Raiders in a good position for a bid to the NCAA Tournament, he said.

"A win like this does so much for us looking at the program," Nelson said. "For the NCAA, you have to win against a top-10 team. We stuck to that goal from the start."

Tech now must face Texas and Texas A&M again.

Hilgers said the team has the confidence it needs to defeat the teams that handed the Red Raiders their first two losses of the season.

"This gives us the confidence we need going into A&M and Texas," Hilgers said. "The team has gained a lot of confidence."

Longhorns search for answers to fourth-quarter shortcomings

AUSTIN (AP) — Three times this season Texas has had leads in the fourth quarter and let victory get away.

The latest setback came Saturday in a stunning 28-24 defeat at Colorado in which turnovers and penalties allowed the Buffaloes to come back.

Texas (3-4, 2-2 Big 12) turned the ball over three times inside the Colorado 25, including a fumble inside the 5 that led to the Buffaloes' winning touchdown and an interception at the 27 with 1:35 left.

Texas coach John Mackovic said Monday he doesn't want to overanalyze the team's fourth-quarter problems, which include a last-second loss to Notre Dame and overtime loss against Oklahoma after leading both games.

Mackovic's teams have traditionally protected leads late in a game, but this season the Longhorns are questioning their killer instinct.

"We haven't given up the lead at all until this season," said Mackovic, who's in his fifth year.

"Sometimes we can search too much. I don't want to play sports psychologist with them and focus on a negative situation."

Players say the team is giving maximum effort, maybe too much effort. None said that they now go into a fourth quarter expecting something bad to happen.

"Maybe we're pressing a little," said receiver Mike Adams.

"It makes you sick when you know you had those games won in the fourth quarter and we couldn't finish it off.

Texas tight end Pat Fitzgerald says he doesn't think the team can practice any harder. He said the team knows it has to win the rest of its games this season, beginning against Baylor on Saturday, to have a chance at winning the Big 12 South Division.

Texas Tech leads the standings at 4-2 and is considered the favorite because it's playing the best right now.

"Everyone is working their tails off," Fitzgerald said. "We know we don't have any margin for error. We've had our close losses, and now it's time to start winning. It's crunch time."

Texas quarterback James Brown said he thinks the Longhorns will be focused and hungry against Baylor.

"I think we're going to have a good game Saturday," Brown said. "The remaining games are about who wants to give up and who wants to get better."

Baylor (4-3, 1-3) will present problems for a defense that still hasn't proven it can stop the run. The Bears' Jerod Douglas and Elijah Burkins each ran for more than 100 yards in a 49-21 victory over Iowa State on Saturday.

Baylor coach Chuck Reedy said Monday that Texas is a little like a wounded animal.

"They've struggled, but they've played some great teams and outplayed them," Reedy said.

A&M win puts Tech in driver's seat

by Heath Robinson/UD

Texas Tech football coach Spike Dykes reflected Monday on what may go down as the Red Raiders' most important victory of the season, a 13-10 win against the Texas A&M Aggies Saturday.

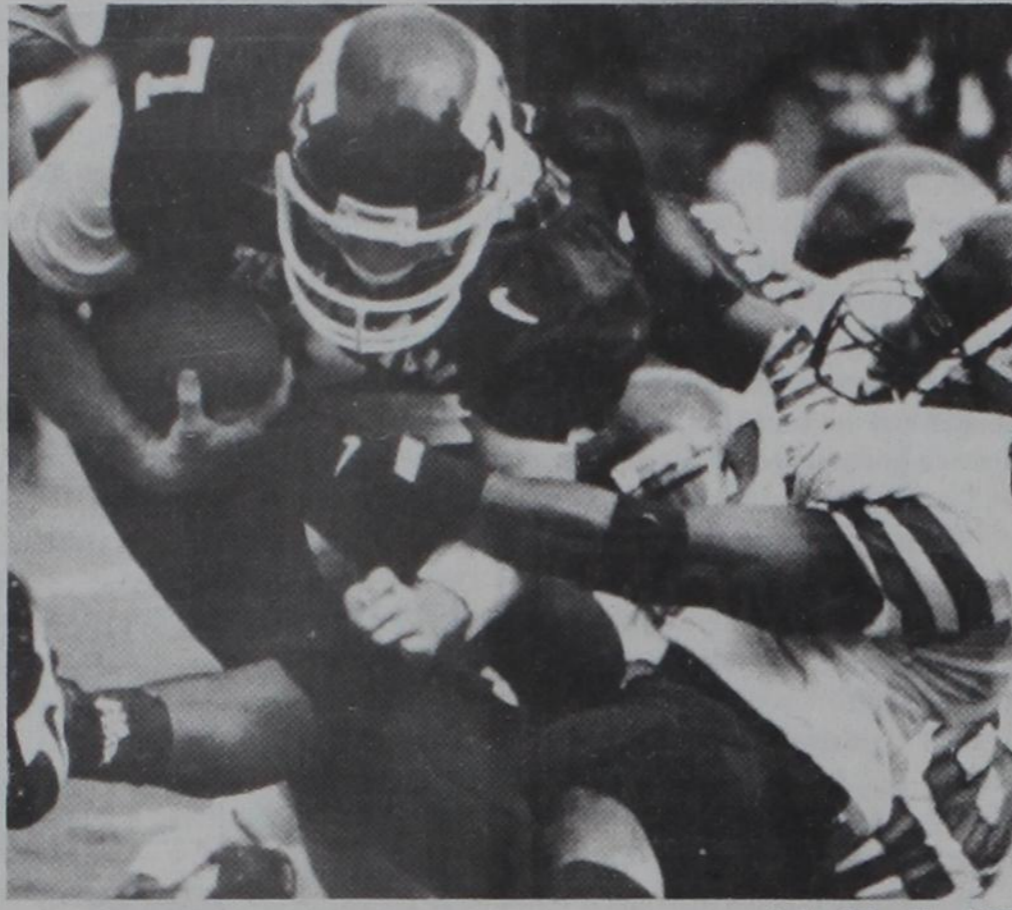

Tech (5-3 overall, 4-2 Big 12 Conference) won at Kyle Field in College Station for the first time since 1984 and have beaten the Aggies in back-to-back years for the first time since winning three straight contests against Texas A&M from 1982 to 1984.

"We did what we had to do to win the game Saturday," Dykes said. "It's a hard place to play. We had about 3,000 fans there, and we were greatly outnumbered. But our fans were really vocal, and we greatly appreciate the fans that made the trip."

The win puts the Red Raiders in position to win the Big 12's South Division, setting up a potential rematch with the Nebraska Cornhuskers Dec. 7 in St. Louis in the Big 12 championship game. Tech dropped a 24-10 decision to Nebraska Oct. 19 in Lubbock, and Red Raider lineman Chris Whitney said a rematch with Nebraska is great motivation.

"That is definitely on our minds," Whitney said. "I think we can win the rest of our games and give the nation a great game to watch against Nebraska. We owe Nebraska our best shot, and I don't think we gave them that last time."

Tech's biggest hurdle may come in two weeks against the Texas Longhorns (3-4 overall, 2-2 Big 12). Texas was the consensus favorite to win the South Division, but the Longhorns have dropped four of their last five games, and the Red Raiders will get a week off before the game.

John Woolke/UD

Nowhere to go: Tech linebacker Robert Johnson sacks Texas A&M quarterback Brannon Stewart Saturday. Johnson had four tackles in the game.

The game will likely go a long way in determining who represents the South in St. Louis, because Texas and Tech both have two conference losses along with Oklahoma. The Sooners still must play Nebraska, Tech and Texas A&M. Texas plays Baylor in Austin Saturday before preparing for its trip to Lubbock.

Dykes said he is thankful the off week is at this point in the season.

"The off week is great," Dykes said. "We are coming off of two straight very physical football games, and our players need the rest. The open date gives you a chance to regroup a little bit and then get ready to go on."

Tech had had one off week already this season. The Red Raiders were idle the Saturday after defeating Oklahoma State 31-3 in Irving. Tech traveled to Georgia two weeks later and dropped a 15-12 decision to the Bulldogs.

Last year's game against Texas left a bitter taste in the mouths of several Red Raiders. At the time Tech traveled to Austin, the Longhorns led the Southwest Conference race by one game over Tech, and the game was being televised by ESPN. Tech fell apart in the game, and left Austin embarrassed by a 48-7 defeat.

Tech linebacker Eric Butler remembers the effort.

"We went down there and got totally dismantled," Butler said. "It was one of the worst games I have ever been around. Texas played as well as they could, and we played as badly as we could. But we're not laying down this season, that's for sure."

While many Red Raiders may be out for revenge, Dykes refuses to believe his players have centered the whole season around this game.

"I'm sure that whenever you lose a game, you have a tendency to wish you could do it all over again, and it would all be different," Dykes said.

"But I would think that the reason we have had success is we have taken every game as it comes, and we haven't looked ahead. Our guys understand that Texas is the next game on our schedule, and we need to play well. And I think we will."

Baseball playoffs show need for instant replay

Brent Dirks/sports reporter

Why can't America's pastime have the newest form of technology?

Anyone who watched Game 6 of the World Series with the Atlanta Braves and the New York Yankees should have asked themselves that question after the fifth inning.

For those of you who do not know, the lack of instant replay gave another baseball playoff game to the wrong team.

Brave centerfielder Marquis Grissom was stealing second in the top of the fifth inning when the throw to Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter caused the ensuing tag to look late, but Grissom was called out. Replays showed later Grissom was safe.

Atlanta manager Bobby Cox came out of the dugout to argue the correct call but was thrown out of the game. The Braves eventually lost the game and the series to the Yankees without the leadership of the seasoned manager Cox.

If instant replay would have been in use, Grissom would have been called safe. And with no outs in the fifth, the Braves might have had a chance to win the game and force a Game 7.

This was the second time in the 1996 playoffs baseball needed instant replay.

If instant replay had been present in the American League Championship Series between the Yankees and the Baltimore Orioles, it would have been plain as day to anyone seeing the replay that a fan caught a ball that was in play. But instead it was ruled a home run, and Orioles manager Davey Johnson was thrown out of the game for arguing the correct call.

That catch cost the Orioles the first game of the series and eventually the American League pennant.

When you look to other sports, most specifically football, and the failure the instant replay sometimes has been, you can see why baseball is reluctant to use instant replay.

In the time that the NFL used instant replay, it was no doubt a bust. So much so that it was voted out of use but made a comeback this pre-season to many people's delight. Other sports like hockey and basketball have used replay well in certain situations, and maybe baseball could take a lesson from them.

No, instant replay is probably too time consuming to use in regular season games, but it should be a staple in playoff games.

Each manager should be given two chances each game to ask for the instant replay to be used. The home plate umpire should make the final judgement after looking at the replay from a television set on the field.

Maybe if baseball used instant replay like that, the players, not the umpires, would decide the playoff games.

Women's lacrosse team one of few between coasts

by Sebastian Kitchen/UD

Women's lacrosse is quite different from the men; they even add a touch of class the men are lacking.

Women's lacrosse, in its third year of existence at Texas Tech, combines a lot of the same skills as the men, but without any contact or pads like the men do, team member Roberta Jimenez said.

"Lacrosse is a classy sport," Jimenez said. "We wear kilts and rugby-style shirts."

Jimenez is one of several original team members who are still on the team, along with Kim Kehoe, who started the team and is the team's first president. The team is coming off a 10-3 record last season.

The Red Raiders' season stretches through the spring semester with their schedule of opponents including Trinity, Texas, Texas A&M and Texas Christian. The team averages 10 games a season and a couple of tournaments. Tech is scheduled to participate in an out-of-season tournament this weekend in Richardson.

The squad continues to improve every season but will have a rough time against Texas, Jimenez said. The Longhorns have not lost a game in Texas in six years.

"Last year we played them pretty close," Jimenez said. "But our first year in the tournament at UT, we did not even know what the field would look like."

Texas will travel to Lubbock for the first time to play the Tech squad this upcoming spring season.

"I think we are going to beat UT and win the tournament there (at Texas) if we have good officiating," said team secretary Kara Reeves.

Reeves said she chose lacrosse because it was different from ordinary sports that most people play.

"If you love sports, you are going to love lacrosse," Reeves said.

The team practices three times a week and some players practice individually by using a wall to throw and catch the ball.

"It is a hard game to pick up," said team newcomer Suzanne Kunkel.

"But it was not quite as hard as I thought it would be."

Kunkel learned about the team through one of her classes. Her teacher is the adviser for the team.

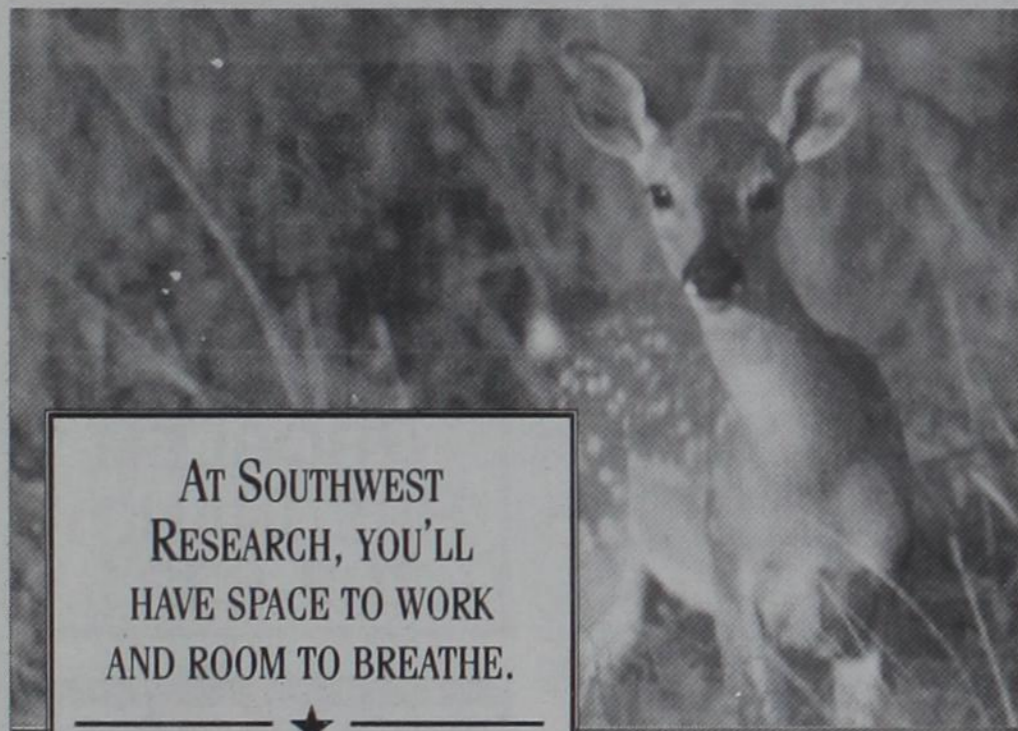

Tech information systems and quantitative sciences professor Frank Delgado helps to bring in the majority of the team's rookies through his large computer classes, Jimenez said. The team has about 10 new players, their largest number yet.

The team wants to continue to get better and sets a goal for itself every year, she said. The team's goal is to compete in a tournament in Santa Barbara, Calif.

"The best of the best play there," Jimenez said.

The trend seems to be changing as more schools are starting teams, including Southern Methodist.

"Lacrosse is big on the East Coast and the West Coast," said current team captain Cory Barton. "It is just starting to get big in between the two."

At Southwest Research, you'll have space to work and room to breathe.

Assembled on 1,200 rustic acres teeming with white tail deer on the outskirts of San Antonio, Southwest Research Institute shares something important with the original pioneers. A special appreciation for the power of the individual. ★ As a leading independent applied engineering and physical science research and development organization, we offer our 2,600 employees the chance to work at the cutting edge of scientific investigation in the rolling hills of Texas. ★ In 1.7 million square feet of laboratories, workshops and offices as big as Texas, they work on over 1,400 research projects annually, ranging from automation to lubrication; bioengineering to virtual simulation; environmental protection to space science. And every one pushes the envelope of human understanding.

THE NEW PIONEERS

If you're seeking space to grow and room to breathe, consider the uniquely satisfying work environment that is Southwest Research Institute. Our representatives will be on your campus meeting with 1997 candidates for BS, MS or PhD degrees in:
