

Council candidate wants campus vote

If elected, Tech grad David Nelson would represent six campus resident halls

by Tomi Rodgers/UD

Texas Tech students living in south campus residence halls will be affected by decisions made in the Jan. 18, 1997, Lubbock City Council special election.

With city councilwoman Windy Sitton resigning last week to run for mayor, a new candidate has stepped forward to run for the position.

Lubbock native David Nelson announced his plans Tuesday and will officially file today to run for councilman of District 3, which includes Weymouth, Chitwood, Hulen, Clement, Wall and Gates residence halls. Nelson currently is running unopposed and has encouraged students to register and vote, noting that students can register to vote until 30 days prior to the election.

Nelson earned a bachelor of business administration degree from Tech in 1973 and graduated from Tech's law school in 1976.

"I always want to make sure the city has good relations with the university," Nelson said.

"Tech's a very significant force within Lubbock with major employment opportunities and pride for West Texas."

Nelson

Nelson expressed an interest in the safety of not only neighborhoods, but the safety of Tech students as well.

"I see a constant concern about the safety of the students with that many people in such a confined area," he said. "The neighborhoods surrounding can add to the safety problem or detract from it."

Nelson was concerned about heavy traffic in and around the campus.

"We want to make sure we have easy access to the campus with a safe roadway system," he said. "We also want to make sure it's adequate to accommodate large amounts of students."

After graduating from Tech, Nelson served as an associate with Splawn Law Offices in Lubbock, then moved on to become an assistant criminal district attorney with the Lubbock County Criminal District Attorney's Office. Nelson has been an attorney in civil litigation for the past 15 years with the three-man firm of Nelson & Nelson, and served from 1991 to 1993 as the chairman for the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

As chairman, Nelson worked with nine other members to improve conditions in the prison system, helping to bring in more than 40,000 beds, thus decreasing overcrowded living conditions.

"(Being chairman) was a good experience," Nelson said. "It taught me to work with a diverse group of people and set aside small differences and different agendas to accomplish the overall objectives of the board."

As city councilwoman, Sitton said the biggest student-related issues she dealt with concerned student housing and campus parking problems, but that she enjoyed representing the community and working with Tech.

"I always encouraged people to support Tech," she said. "It is vital to the economy of Texas."

“Tech’s a very significant force within Lubbock...”

David Nelson, City Council candidate

Kristin Ketcham, internal vice president of Tech's Student Association and a senior elementary education major from Andrews, said it would help to have a city council member representing the needs of Tech students living in the area.

Ketcham emphasized the importance of candidates focusing on campaigning on the Tech campus.

"A lot of officials running for positions often overlook Tech," Ketcham said. "We (Tech students) do a lot for the community, and it would be nice to see more relations between the city government and student relations."

Montford

was the next stop for the "student." Montford said he learned how to better access the library's system in the class.

"For some reason, I was the only one that asked any questions — everyone else was just ready to get out of there," Montford said. "It was surprising that a section that large didn't ask any more questions."

It is important for students to ask questions in their classes to better learn the material, Montford said.

"We only rotate through this life once, and we only go to college once, so if you don't ask the questions, you're going to miss something," he said.

During class, Montford also pointed out a misspelled word on the transparency to the instructor.

"I just didn't want students to get the impression that that is really how the word was spelled," he said.

Montford said a major difference between now and the days he was in college 27 years ago, is that back then he fit more easily into the desks.

Now, he said, his "tummy kept hitting the edge of the desk."

To conclude his day as a student, Montford attended a 10 a.m. press conference as a "student representative," during which the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity donated $1,000 to the United Spirit Arena.

"It was great to be a student at one of the greatest universities in the United States," Montford said.

"It certainly is one of the most exciting universities."

Montford could only attend one class for Crawford as a result of pressing activities that could not be canceled, including a lunch meeting with a senator and a meeting with members of the Faculty Senate, he said.

Students stamp out cigarette habit

by Sara Kattawar/UD

No butts about it, hundreds of Texas Tech students will be kicking their tobacco habits today, in light of the nationally declared Great American Smoke Out Day.

In recognition of the day, there will be campus-wide events throughout the day for students to participate in, said Michelle Pettus, a health educator for Student Health Services.

"At the University Center and the Student Recreation Center, there will be information tables for students," Pettus said. "There will also be places that students can throw away their smoking paraphernalia and enter a drawing for a survival pack, to help them quit smoking."

Pettus said one of the biggest events will occur at 6:30 p.m. in the Rec Center.

"Coach Dickey and Pete Christie will play a basketball game of Horse, to 'shoot-out tobacco,' which will be broadcast live on the news," she said.

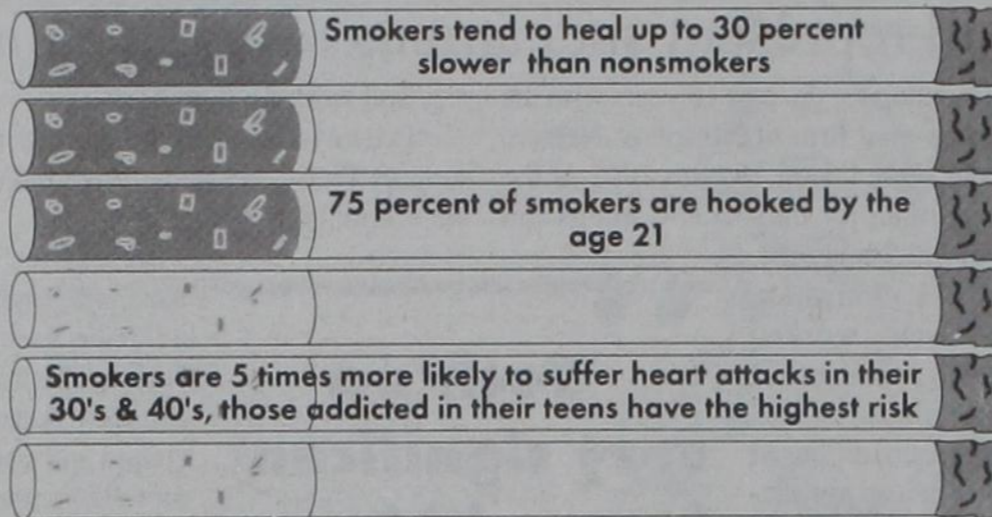

Pettus said the events are a way for students to beat the habit.

"Every day, 3,000 adolescents start smoking," she said. "As a result, one-third of them will die from their addiction."

Starting to smoke at such a young age will increase the risks of developing a smoke-related illness, Pettus said. Those diseases include heart disease and lung cancer.

"Every year, 430,000 people die in the United States from tobacco-related illnesses," she said. "That is 17 times the number of students that attend Texas Tech."

Statistics released from the Lubbock Health Department indicate that smoking rates among adults have decreased since 1965, but are increasing among adolescents. The statistics also indicate that by age 17, 50 percent of all teens smokers will have tried to quit smoking but failed.

Kyle Davis, a freshman telecommunications major from Childress, said he started smoking when he was 17 years old, and he regrets his decision.

"I started smoking to keep myself awake when I was tired, like when I was studying or something," Davis said. "But now, I think it is a horrible habit and consider quitting."

Davis said he does not like the way smoking makes him feel.

"Smoking makes you smell bad and makes your mouth taste bad, not to mention all of the negative side effects," he said. "I constantly feel run-down, out of shape, and I get sick a lot easier."

It would be wise not to start smoking, he said.

"The Great American Smoke Out is a good idea," Davis said.

"I plan to participate in it just to try to see if I can make the day without a cigarette — and if I can, I know I can quit for good."

Liebman leaves Lubbock laughing nonstop at UC

by Sara Kattawar/UD

Wendy Liebman, "Queen of the throw-away line," kept the audience roaring with laughter at the University Center Allen Theatre Wednesday night as she threw out some of her comedy lines.

The show, which was scheduled to start at 8 p.m., began a little later with Sam Washington, Tech's own amateur comedian, opening up for Liebman. Washington, who had participated in the MasterCard talent show, amused the audience with his funny lines. The audience never stopped laughing from the moment Washington took the stage until Liebman left the stage.

Washington's jokes were standard, starting with a question and usually ending with a punch line. His funniest one, which somehow related sexual activity to the video game "Mortal Combat," kept the audience laughing hysterically. It seemed as though the men in the audience could relate to his connections between sex and the game.

His humor was excellent. Washington executed his jokes well and did not leave a dull spot in the performance.

He was a good choice as the opening act for Liebman. He definitely will have a successful career in comedy.

After his 15-minute performance, Liebman came on stage wearing jeans and a velvet top. Her attire was smart for the performance because it instantly created a relaxed atmosphere.

Like most comics, Liebman opened her performance by announcing how happy she was to be in Lubbock and how Texas was one of her favorite places.

This seemed ironic because almost everyone who visits Lubbock rarely says they like it.

Anyway, she then began insulting herself and her small body parts. She mentioned the "Miracle Bra," breast implants and the need for plastic surgery. One of her jokes included a parody of the "Geraldo" show in which would be featured "women with breast implants growing out of their necks, and the men who love them."

Liebman did an excellent job keeping the audience entertained. She managed to keep her jokes simple so that everyone could understand.

The topics were down to earth and could easily be understood by a college-aged audience. It is always important for a comedian to use material to which people can relate.

Overall, the performances were excellent. Both comedians have bright futures ahead of them and will make it in the tough world of comedy.

Tech was fortunate to have such talented comedians perform.

"It's a real challenge, and you have to make a lot of decisions," Smith said.

"I think the chancellor-for-the-day looks very impressive," Lucio said. "He's getting down to business and he's accessible — who knows, he may be looking at a future chancellor."

Freshman makes surprising run toward national championship

by Heath Robinson/UD

Of the 184 participants in Monday's NCAA Women's National Cross Country Championships, Texas Tech freshman Leigh Daniel may be the one least expected to be there.

After battling a cold and finishing eighth in last Saturday's NCAA District VI meet in Denton, Daniel earned one of six at-large invitations to the field, becoming the first Red Raider since Maria Medina in 1984 to compete in the national meet. The meet will take place Monday in Tucson, Ariz.

When Daniel inked her half-scholarship to Tech last spring, the last place she expected to end up was in the national championships her freshman year.

"I have only been competing in cross country for a year," Daniel said.

"I didn't expect to be as good as half of the other girls on the team, much less get to this position."

Until Tech coach Kirk Elias caught sight of her abilities, Daniel had planned on being a student at either Texas A&M or Baylor.

Elias contacted the Monterey High School coach and Daniel's parents, and less than three weeks later, her plans for college had taken a turn.

"I had not even planned on going to Tech," Daniel said. "So it obviously changed a lot right there. I had always thought I would be in a sorority, and have a great time socially as well as the school part. But that all changed dramatically when I decided to run for Tech."

Daniel and the other members of the Tech women's cross country teams are forced to rise from bed at 6:30 a.m.

in order to complete their workout by 8:30 a.m. Daniel said Wednesday morning is the only day she is free from the workouts.

"Tuesday night is pretty much the only time we can do something socially because we normally don't run on Wednesday mornings," she said. "I basically have no social life. But I really have more interest in competing right now. It is just more important to me. You really can't be a big partier anyway, because you're exhausted by the time you get home."

Elias said the fact that Daniel has already made it to nationals says good things about her work ethic.

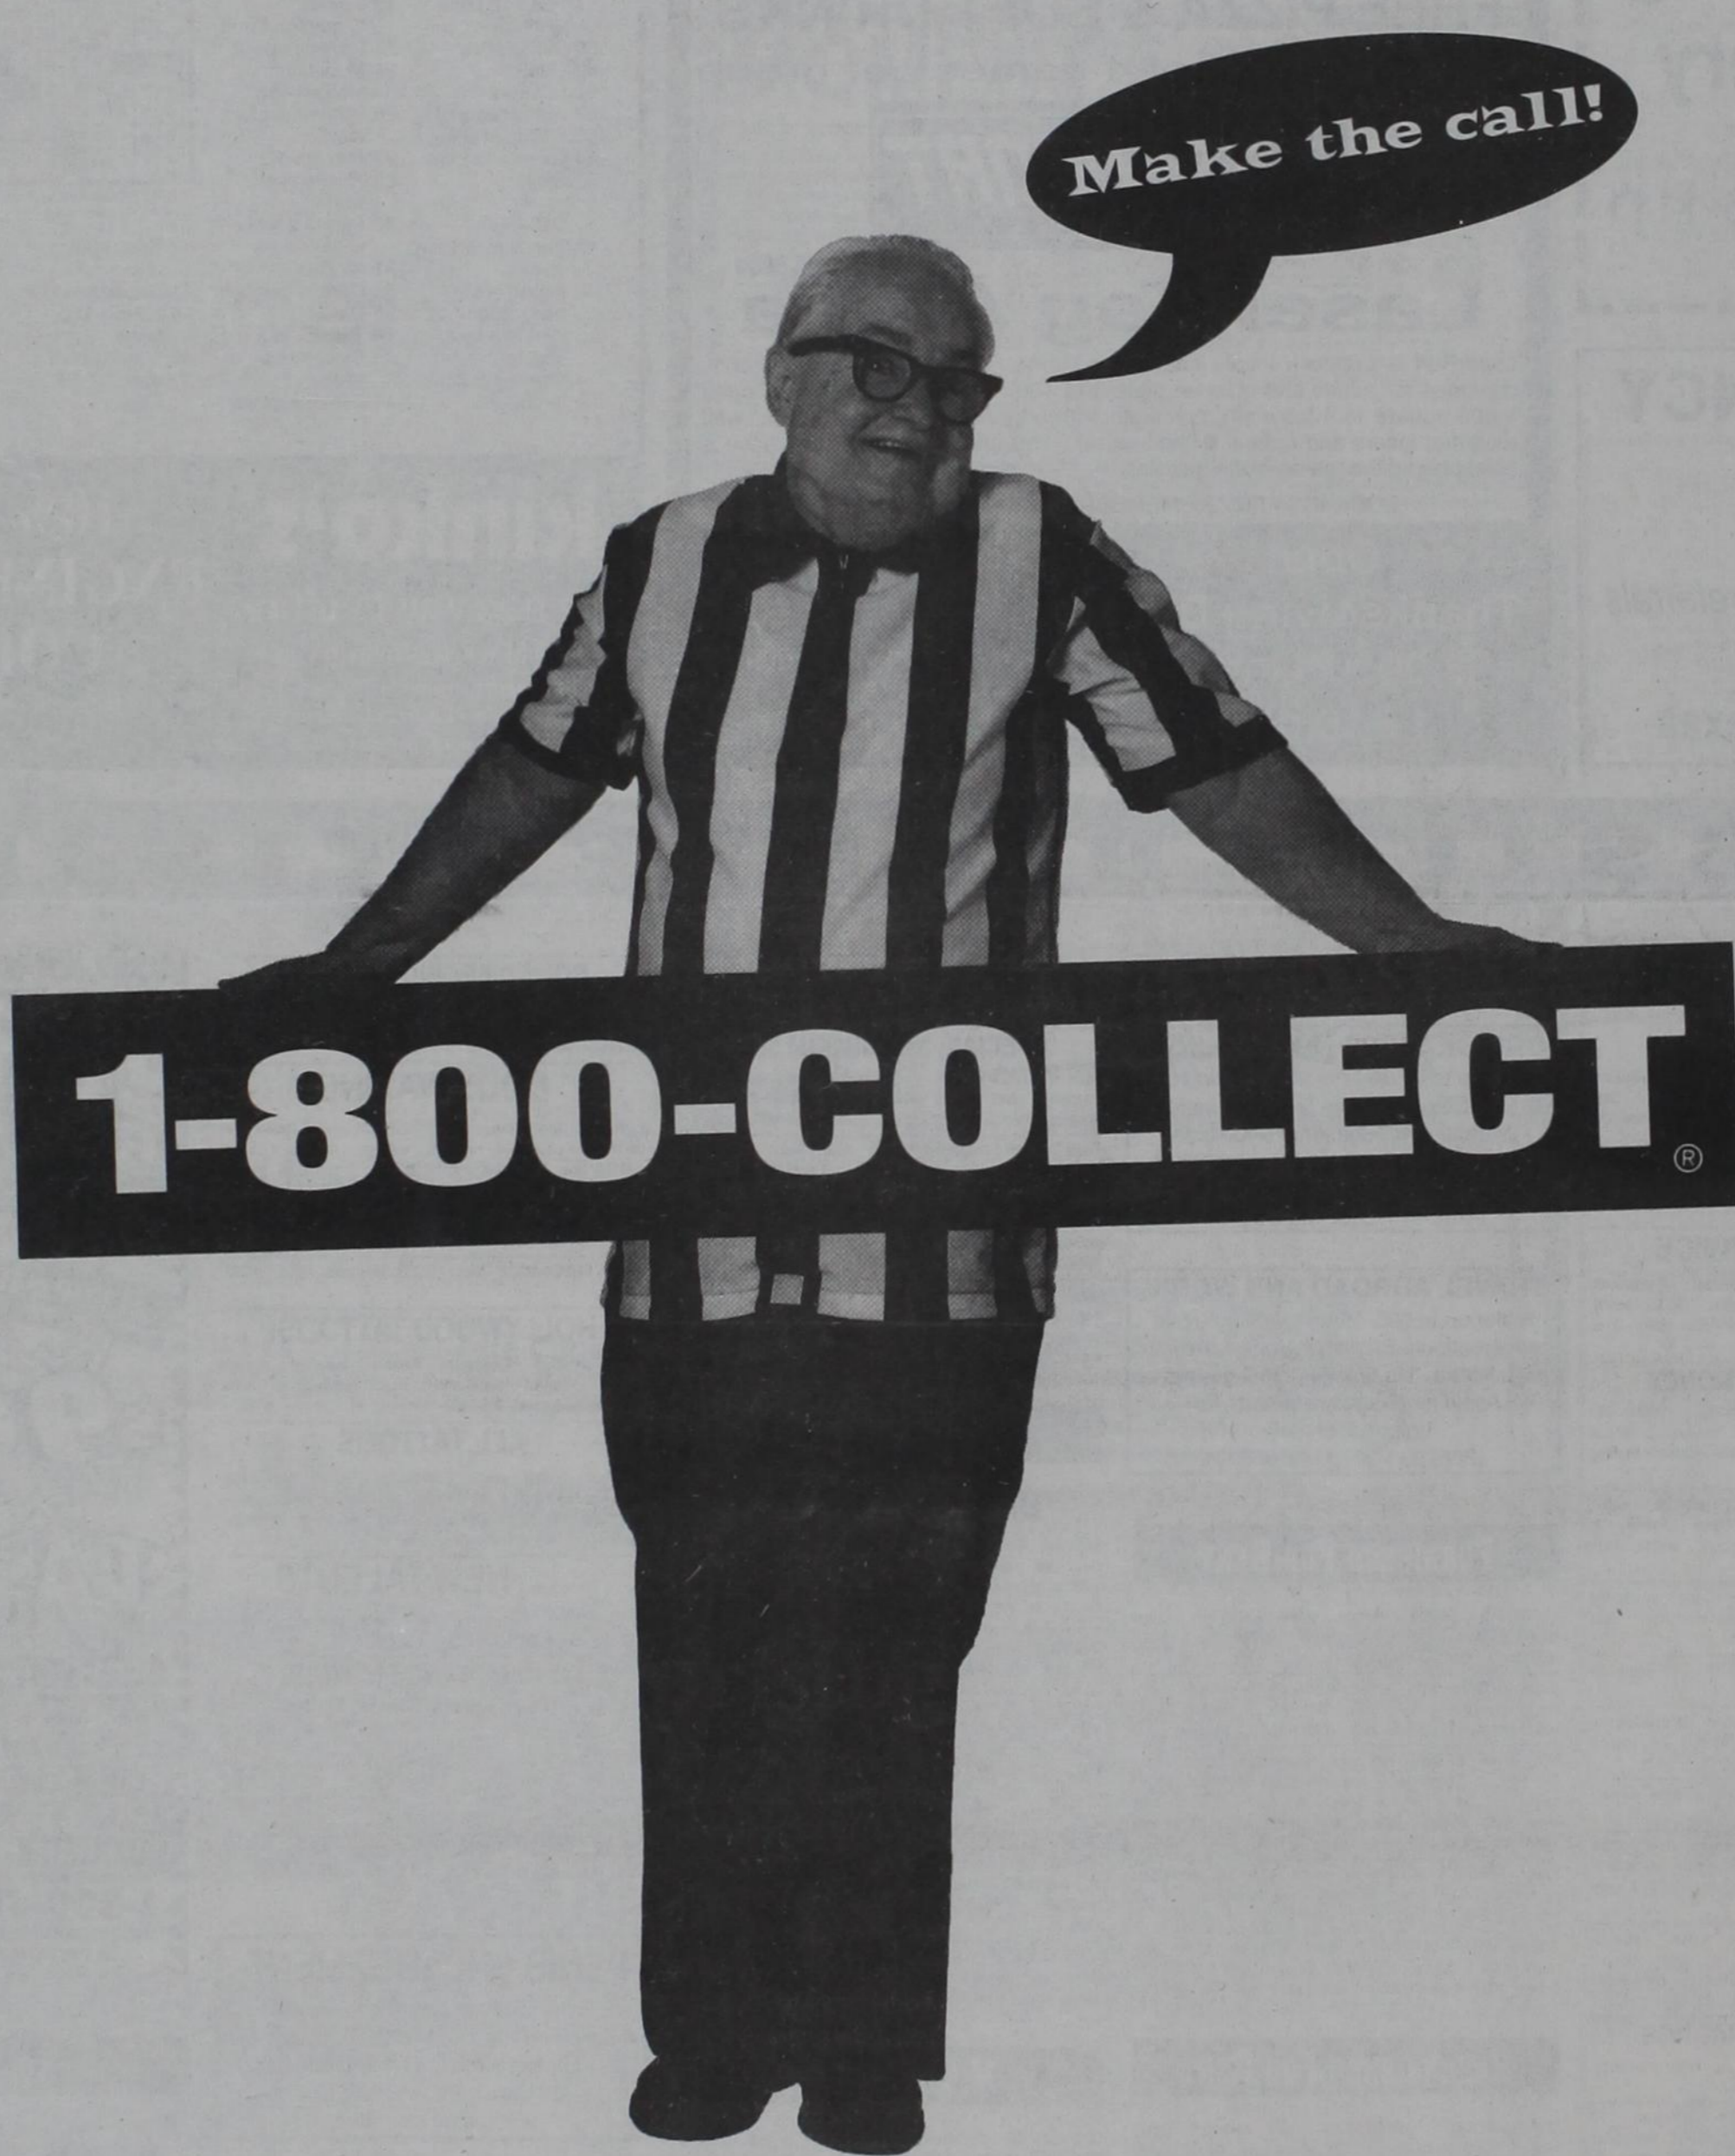

"It really says a few things about her and the type of person she is," Elias said. "She is talented without a doubt, and she is very determined as well. She is also a very savvy runner on the course. Leigh has gotten better with each event. She constantly learns from the mistakes she has made."

Tech, traditionally poor in women's cross country, has received a boost from Daniel and the rest of the freshmen-dominated team. Elias believes that this will be a big event for his program.

"This is a big event for us," he said. "All the kids on our team can see it and be motivated by it. I think it opens the door for a lot of people. It also changes expectations as well as the attitude."

Daniel is seeded 75th of 184 runners. Elias and Daniel said the first goal is to finish 75th or better. The next two goals are to finish in the top-50 and gain All-American status.

"The top-25 American runners are named All-American," Elias said. "A lot of foreign runners will be competing, so if she is on and doing well, there is a chance she could finish somewhere around 45th and be named an All-American."
