Republican Testimony.

Hon. John F. Dezendorf, a prominent Republican, has testified with such truth and force before the Sherman Investigating Committee as to confound Sherman and Lapham, and to lay still more discomfiture upon the already heavily-laden shoulders of the surviving wavers of the red-flannel shirt.

Washington Post.

Mr. Dezendorf told the story of outrages in Virginia, as have been perpetrated by Coalitionists, in a way that used for the basest purposes, and how the party candidate, is a case of General Wickham had also described, the persecution of the colored people who dared to vote against Mahone and his gang and their sufferings in behalf of what they believed to be right. It was a well-known fact throughout Virginia long before election day that these white renegades had preyed upon the fears and prejudices of the colored people so greatly as to induce colored preachers to warn their flocks against voting for anybody but a Mahoneile: that they had caused resolutions to be passed in the colored people's churches providing for the expulsion of any mem-ber who would not follow the corrupt and unscrupulous Boss; that they had gone so far as to send their party workers into the home of every colored man who was suspected, and to persuade his wife that if her husband did not vote for Mahone's candidate she and her children would be made slaves again, and that if her husband refused to heed these threats she must turn him out of doors and separate from him forever. such depths of degradation did these base, cowardly, false-tongued renegades spoil the people.

Does the country know now what is the "Situation in Virginia?" Radical place-seekers want to know more of it? Let any man hear the swords, or were dissected piecemeal by testimony that is given day by day beto ask. How many ambitious Republicans who have been living on sectionand rewards of a literary life, hankered perch in the United States Senate. But sectionalism is stale. There is not, and there should not be in it any substance longer. There are brighter and better subjects of interest for the people than war-hate, which should, and must, be forgotten. The Danville luvestigation has shown to all unprejudiced men how hollow are the pretences of the bitter, unpatriotic seekers of place, both Radical and Mahoneite.

The testimony of Mr. Dezendorf is another link in the chain that will fetter Sherman and his fellow South-haters to the rocks that they have sought for refuge, but that they will soop find are far out in wilds where politicians are

The Demand of the Country.

The present Democratic lower house of Congress was elected on the distinct and emphatic promise of the Democratic party that if the people entrusted it with power all unnecessary taxes should be abolished. The Keifer-Robeson Republican Congress had demonstrated by its lavish and wasteful appropriations that the people were greatly over-taxed merely that the unnecessary revenues wrung from them might be recklessly squandered or applied to corrupt uses. In order that an end might be put to all this, the people the control of it to the Democrats. Thus far the appropriations have been carefully guarded and it is quite evident that the public moneys will not be wasted by the present Congress. But a hundred millions of dollars lie idle in the Treasury and the tax-gatherers are daily collecting revenues which at the John Alexander, daily collecting revenues which at the end of the next fiscal year will swell the surplus to double the present sum. The moneys they gather, whether through the custom-house or the internal revenue, are taken from the aggregate wealth of the country. The Federal taxes, in whatever guise they are levied, are paid by the general mass of the people. The industry and wealth-producing energies of the people therefore priations are cut down when the taxes He's the bulwark of the Stalwarts, he's the darling of his State.

As they hear the roar and rattle of his cylower House must fulfill its pledge. What is demanded is a reduction or repeal of the taxes which bear most severely on the great working class-the farmer, the mechanic, the laboring man, the producer of wealth, whatever his calling. And this demand must be respected by Congress if the Democratic party is to have a living show at the approaching Presidential election. A reduction of the revenues to a sum which will satisfy the actual requirements of the Government economically administered, is an inexorable necessity aden shoulders of the surviving wavers of the red-flannel shirt.

A Case of Cruelty.

Considering that Mr. Blaine is poswas at once concise and direct. He itively not a candidate, the success of showed how the aliiance of Arthur with his friends in getting a promise from Mahone had caused the influence of the him that, in case he is not nominated Administration at Washington to be at Chicago, he will cordially support the name of the President of the United cruelty. It drags him from his literary States had been bartered to win voters retirement to make promises which, if and secure spoils. He described, as he is not a candidate, are absolutely meaningless. Another wrong that is being done him is ransacking the country for mi-nute details of his early life, his religious training and ecclesiastical connections. What have all these things to do with a man who is not a candidate? They have actually raked up an old lady who remembers him as the boy "Jim." He was so shy that he would not enter a parlor if any one were there. His passion was reading and he never was without a book. When she first saw him he was so overcome with bashfulness that he walked backward stumbling against a flight of steps, fell over and scattered his armful of books in every direction. She does not want to say that he was homely, slovenly, simple, gawky, awkward, careless of his appearance. So she says he was "just at the age when boys can not be made to look nice." Later on he was "as well dressed as any of the young men, To developing into the fine-looking gentleman he is now."

-Rib and potatoes: After peeling and washing your potatoes, take a sharp knife and cut them in long strips, like an apple paring. Fry them in very hot lard; let them drain in a collender, salt them and serve very hot, with sprigs and parsley .- Exchange.

-To make a delicious apple custard pie: For two small-sized pies, use for the filling one pint of sweet milk, one pint of smooth apple sauce well sweetened, and three beaten eggs; flavor with lemon or cinnamon, and bake with only an under crust .- The Household.

-Fatten stock in the stall. Turn them out for exercise, but never feed in the yard. There is also an enormous waste of food when given in this manner. -Philadelphia Record.

-Sashes covered with unbleached cotton which has been treated with oil are recommended as being better than sashes filled with glass for the covering of hot-beds. They keep out the frost, admit sufficient light and heat, and the plants grown under them are not only "stockier," but bear transplanting better than those raised under glass.

—A very pretty cane and umbrella stand may be made out of the frame of an old umbrella. Remove every vestige of the cover and open the umbrella a little, making it fast by a few tacks. Bind the edges with braid or a bordering of fancy paper, and ornamant the top and bottom of the stick with a bow of ribbon. -N. Y. Post.

-The rations for horses on the farm are not varied enough. How often is it the case that a farmer will instruct his hired help or his boys to feed the horses ten ears of corn a piece, three times a day, and then allow this order to be carried out during the entire season, or perhapsa year. It is not much wonder that horses stomachs give out, that they be-come weak and debilitated, and that their general condition is bad, even if they are fed what is supposed to be plenty.—Prairie Farmer.

Currant Bushes from Cuttings.

Few plants grow so readily from cuttings as current bushes, providing the work be properly done. To attempt, as many do, to make cuttings root by cutting them from the bushes in the spring such highways, the condition of even after the buds have started, will very the streets of the villages, the country often result in a failure; but if the cuttings be cut in the autumn and buried in a sand bank until spring, success will be much more certain. Before the cuttings are placed in the sand they should be cut in such lengths as are desired for planting out. From six to ten inches may be considered proper lengths. When cuttings are left until spring to be cut up, the top cuttings will not do so well, because while in the sand numerous roots are thrown out at the lower end of each cutting, thus giving it the advantage of a newly cut cutting; but if cut in proper lengths in the autumn all will have roots when taken from the sand. The cuttings should be set in good, rich land that has no tendency to dry up during the hot weather; if a portion of shade can be afforded so much the better, but if not they will do very well in the sun.

In setting the cuttings they should never be set perpendicular, but on an angle of forty-five degress, and set low enough so that only one or two buds shall be above the surface. In cultivation the greatest care should be taken not to start the cuttings, for unless they are well rooted it requires but very little to move one enough to kill it, or at least to prevent rapid growth. Cuttings properly set and well cared for will rarely fail to grow, and if the soil be rich and thoroughly prepared, will make a growth the first year from six to eighteen inches. To get good strong roots they should be permitted to grow two years before transplanted, when they will be from two to three feet high. if they have been well manured and well

Careful watch must be kept for the current worm, and as soon as he makes his appearance hellebore should be freely dusted over the bushes; a neglect to do this for a single week will be fatal to the life of the cutting, at least during the first year, and a great injury the second year. In fact, whatever be the age of the currant bush, the worms must be kept off to insure success .- Massachusetts Ploughman.

-The origin of attar of roses is said to have been this: To please a volup-tous monarch his favorite sultana caused his bath in the palace garden to be filled to the brim with rose water. The action of the sun soon concentrated the oily particles floating on the surface, and the attendant, supposing the water to have become corrupt, began to skim it for the purpose of taking off the oil. The globules burst under the process, and emitted such a delightful odor that the idea of preparing this beautiful perfume was at once suggested.—N. Y. Herald.

The Losses Resulting from Bad Roads.

It would be very difficult to make even a reasonably correct estimate of the losses yearly brought upon the people of this country by the absence of highways having a firm foundation and an even, hard and lasting surface. This loss shows most plainly in the waste of ness in eggs is more frequently caused by a lack of green food than anything else. time incident to the transportation of property, especially the crops of the farm, over country roads in wet seasons. -Absorbent material, though of itself | It also appears very plainly in the wear possessing but little value, becomes val- and tear of harness and vehicles, as all who have ever lived in the country will realize without illustration or examples. The enormous waste of energy of horses involved, and the loss which comes from injuries to those animals, through attempts to haul loads over or through muddy roads, may be less apparent, perhaps, but the losses are nevertheless there, as part of the penalty paid for neglecting to provide suitable passageways throughout the country.

Owing to naturally slow drainage the road-making problem has been one of considerable difficulty in the rich, level, prairie States; and it has there been, and is now, a problem of the greatest economic importance, for upon its sucessful solving depends in a large measure the prosperity of the farmer, the comfort and health of his beasts of burlen, and, in some degree at least, the well-being of townspeople. It is well known that for weeks at a time the roads of parts of the prairie States are literally impassable for teams with loads, and almost impassable to those without. At such times work upon the farm is to a great extent suspended, because the unctuous soil of the fields is, like that of the highways, so saturated with water that wheels and hoofs would sink deep into the sod, and deeper into plowed ground. Fence-building, wood-hauling, and the dozen of odd jobs of the farm which should be done when the fields are dry and firm, cannot be done when the roads are soft and miry; but if the roads were so made as to give at all times a firm, even surface, all the surplus products of the farm could be marketed at times when work in the fields would be practically impossible. As matters now are prices in local markets are usually higher at such times than when roads are dry and firm, and those farmers who are so fortunate as to be able to take their products to market when others are compelled to stay at home get a higher price for their labor than they could otherwise secure.

Briefly, then, the advantages coming to the farmer from permanent and thorough improvement of the country highways are a great saving in the time required for the transportation of crops, a very material lessening of the wear of harness, wagons, and teams, the gain of much time for work upon the farm in comparatively dry periods, and higher prices for farm products. To these material gains should be added the no less pleasant advantage of being able to keep up at all times social intercourse with neighbors and with the towns. To the people in towns good roads, affording easy access at all season; to the country, bring many benefits which have led some and should induce all towns to do a large share of the work of improving the country high-

Yet many and great as are the advantages arising from the possession of roads at all times hard and smooth, and largely as the towns are benefited by towns, and even the cities and their immediate neighborhoods is a disgrace to civilization. Connection between different localities is far more difficult now, after the white man's labor has been spent for years in so-called roadmaking, than it was when the pioneer's prairie-schooner first crossed these States. Even Chicago itself has but few well paved roads affording free access to the farms and gardens of the districts near her; but she needs such roads less than do other towns which receive less of their daily supplies by rail from distant farms. The usage now followed in a large part of the country, in so-called road-making, is a relic of those pioneer days pure water, and the foul water contamand necessities when time was cheap and money hard to get. It was much easier for our brawny forefathers to spend a day or two with team and shovel patching up the highway so that, it passes through the blood of the cow in the usual careless, makeshift, American style, it "would do" than it would have been for them to pay their roadtax in cash; moreover, their need for as great care be taken to preserve his facilities for transportation were few, health as that of the cow? and their sturdy habits of overcoming and considering lightly obstacles inci-dent to pioneer life, made good roads comparatively less important than they are now. But people keep on in the careless, shiftless, old way, with a conservatism utterly unworthy of the progressive American people, and without sidered more healthy when placed upon the slightest apparent regard for the changed conditions of the case. A few the swine house be placed high enough townships in the North have taken short to have all foul matters run from it, in and rather timid steps in the direction of improvement, with results that are

Eggs.

There is nothing more strengthening and nourishing than eggs as an article of diet, and farmers ought to indulge in the luxury of eating them. Not in-frequently the eggs are saved up and sold when not as much nutriment can be purchased with the money they are sold for. Four eggs contain more nu-triment than a pound of beefsteak, and will give more strength, and a person will not tire of egg diet as quickly as he will of fresh meat. They never dis-tress the partaker, and if properly cooked can be eaten with perfect safe-ty. For an invalid there is nothing more wholesome than a raw egg beaten up with a little sugar and stirred into a glass of milk, and taken before breakfast gives strength and health. Boiled eggs are more wholesome than fried ones, and egg sandwiches are a splen-did dish, taken either hot or cold, and especially suited for lunch or picnics.

Omelets, poached eggs, or boiled eggs

Although the most beneficial results om lime are derived when its applicaion is made in the fall, it will also be found a valuable agent in the spring when used on newly plowed sod land intented for corn. Where old pastures and grass plots have stood in grass for several years lime is the best substance that can be applied. The tendency of lime is to pass downwards into the which fact, so well known, prompts the farmer to broadcast it on the surface in order that the most immediate results may be obtained, but its effects are constant, not only by reason of the direct influence exerted by the lime in its chemical action upon the vegetable matter, but through the chemical combinations that naturally occur among all vegetable substances during the proess of decomposition.

It is due to the hastening of chemical action on the part of lime that its benefits to the farmer are so permanent. Lime itself is not complete plant food but it is a necessary element in the composition of all crops. Its great affinity for carbonic acid causes constant effect upon the soil, as it combines with the neid by direct appropriation from the atmosphere and by liberating it from atmosphere and by liberating it from other combinations. It seizes it, as it Three-quarters of it is a "lie" and half of seems, from every source within its of it is an "if." Put this on "file" if you power, and to this action is attributed would as "lief."—Exchange. power, and to this action is attributed the disintegration of inert substances that are rendered soluble and available. The advantage of an application of lime, therefore, consists not only of its availability as an element of plant food, but also as a disintegrating agent by which insoluble substances are changed in form and composition, thereby becoming valuable assistants in connection with the lime.

The two principal forms in which lime is most frequently used are the sulphate and carbonate. The sulphate ordinary land plaster) is slightly soluble in water. It is not applied on soils in large quantities, two bushels per acre being considered a liberal application. It is a special fertilizer for clover and other leguminous crops, and when used in connection with kainit (sulphate of potash) it is sometimes a complete fertilizer for grass crops on many soils. As both substances are cheap in comparison with the benefits derived from their use, they should not be overlooked on farms where hav is made a specialty.

Ordinary stone or shell lime, when freshly burned, is caustic, but it slowly appropriates moisture and becomes hydrated, but derives carbonic acid from the atmosphere and finally becomes corbonate of lime, which is insolbut owing to its fine chemical condition performs service as mentioned. If freshly burned lime (quick lime) is applied to the soil, the results will be greater than when it is applied as a carbonate. The usual practice of broadeasting large quantities of lime over the field is not as economical a method as that of applying it more frequently and in less amounts at a single application. anything. Forty bushels of lime to an acre .at one in contact with accumulating matter and newer substances that should receive its influences.

In using lime it may be claimed, therefore, that it should always be kept ling. near the surface, owing to its downward tendency. It should be applied in small proportions at intervals, and in a freshly prepared condition. It is best used on grass in the shape of plaster, except when the soil is sandy, and in any form that it may be applied it is one of the easiest procurable and cheapest fertilizers that farmers can use in proportion to the benefits derived from its application. - Farm, Field and Fire-pigs would use clean water in pasture in warm weather, to cool themselves and keep off flies. We constructed a shall low vat, ten inches deep, and sunk i six inches in the earth, so that the pig could easily walk into it. This wa filled half full of clean, clear, water. The pige would go into this vat and lie down with the appearance of grea comfort. This water was drawn of every two days and fresh water sup-plied. The pigs not only used this water-vat, but abandoned a water hole some fifteen yards from it, clearly showing their preference for clear water. This yat was used for severa seasons, and always successfully. And it would be entirely feasible to use such vats for large herds.—National Live-Stock Journal.

ROCKAWAY BEACH, N. Y., Jan. 16, 1884. I am a carpenter. A year ago I was laid up with rheumatism in my arms which drove sleep from my pillow, and rendered life a burden. After having tried for three months in vain all kinds of remedies of physicians, I was induced by Michael Holland, our Postmaster, to try BRANDRETH'S PILLS. He said they cured him after a year of suffering. I took six pills every night for three nights; then I took two pills every night for ten days. At the end of fifteen days I was entirely well. Occasionally I have a slight twinge after being exposed to dampness or wet, but two pills taken every night for four days drives it away. JAMES HENRY.
