CHAPTER III.

A CRUEL, UNJUST PUNISHMENT.
It might have been wrong in me, but whether it was or not, I grew to hate my stepmother; and I'm afraid that at times I was wicked enough to wish for some dire calamity to befall her.

gazed upon my pleading, upturned face, his features all aflame with anger, then he raised his hand, and the next instant the cruel rod descended, cutting my quivering flesh and bringing from me a cry of pain.

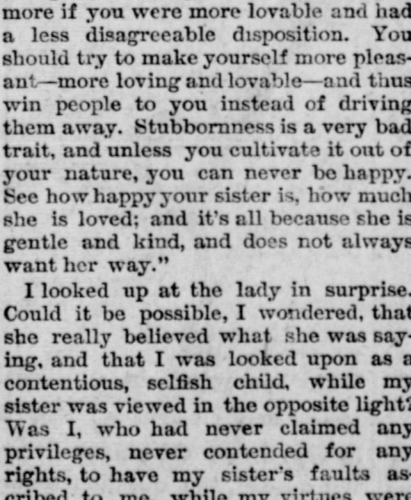

Had I not loved my father so dearly I should have experienced a feeling of resentment rather than one of sorrow. As it was, I was grieved deeply—hurt beyond recovery, I thought, not more by his cruel blows than by the knowledge that he had no feeling of pity for one so helpless who should be so near and dear to him.

I longed for a word, or even a look of sympathy, for with that my affliction would have been easier borne. I glanced into my father's face. There was no show of pity there. It was hard, set and stern. I glanced up to my stepmother. A cold smile, in which I saw a feeling of triumph, repulsed me.

recalling all the long list of wrongs I had suffered during my short life, I gave my sorrow full sway and wept until I was sick.

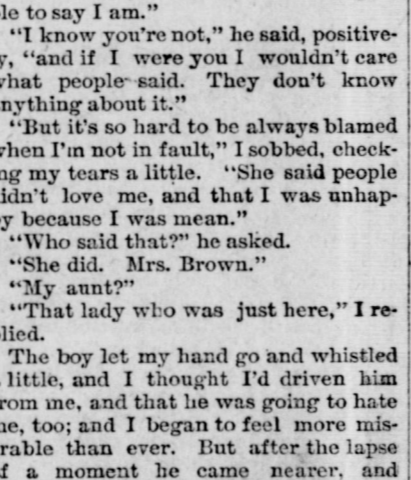

How long I should have remained there nursing my grief in solitude I do not know. I had been there an hour, probably, when, hearing footsteps near, I looked up and saw a lady with flowers approaching by a footpath that ran through the orchard.

nothing I could say would set me right with her, and when she went away, my grief broke forth afresh.
"Why, oh why," I thought, "must everybody misjudge me?"

"I do try to be good," I cried. "I try to do everything I can to please people, but it doesn't do any good. They won't love me, they won't believe me, I never try to have my way, but I give up to my sister all the time, and yet people say I'm stubborn. Oh, I wish I could die, and then I'd be out of the way and nobody would blame me and misjudge me. I'm not stubborn, I'm just not, and I don't like for people to say I am."

"I know you're not," he said, positively, "and if I were you I wouldn't care what people said. They don't know anything about it."

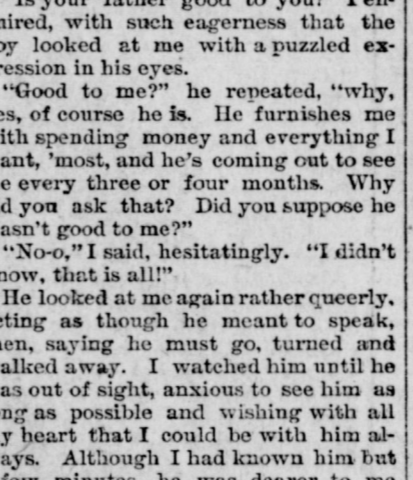

"But it's so hard to be always blamed when I'm not in fault," I sobbed, checking my tears a little. "She said people didn't love me, and that I was unhappy because I was mean."

"What are you crying about, child?" she asked, when she came up to me. "Because I'm so miserable," I answered, wiping my tears away on my cotton apron.

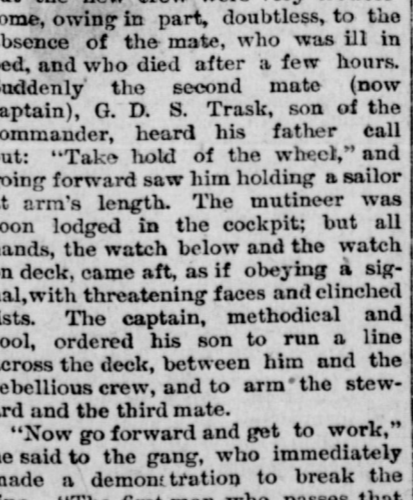

things like girls are, because boys don't care much for looks. I reckon if I was a girl, though, I'd feel like you do, and I guess I wouldn't like it very well. Still it don't hurt, and if I were you I wouldn't worry any. Your hairs' real pretty, I think, and I know it ain't 'wisps.' I know a girl who has hair just like yours, and everyone says it is beautiful, and they call it golden.

"My sister has hair like mine," I remarked, "and they all speak of it as auburn. 'Auburn locks' is lots nicer than 'red wisps,' isn't it?"

"I think the greatest happiness I had ever known I experienced right there. At last I had found some one who did not think me wicked and homely, but who saw goodness in my character and beauty in my features."

"No, I said, hesitatingly. 'I didn't know, that is all!'"

"What are you crying about, child?" she asked, when she came up to me. "Because I'm so miserable," I answered, wiping my tears away on my cotton apron.

MYER TAKES FIFTEEN ROUNDS.

Then He Takes a Glass of Wine from the Hands of His Conqueror—Preliminaries in the Ring—The Weight of the Gloves, Etc.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 6.—The first of the series of prize fights took place in the amphitheater of the Olympic club club last night in this city and was won by McAuliffe in fifteen rounds.

McAuliffe, to law—full five ounces—nodded his assent to the press representatives that the gloves would do.

Jack McAuliffe was the first to enter the ring, which he did at 9:15. Myer came a moment later. Both men received great ovations. Knowledge of the fact that a pugilistic grudge of long standing was about to be settled awakened tremendous applause.

The men jumped to the center of the ring, McAuliffe looking pale and Myer rosy. Mac led for the stomach, slipped and fell. When he regained his feet Myer landed a light left and Jack smiled.

Round 2—McAuliffe landed a heavy right hander and Myer clinched, delivering a heavy right himself. There was warm work in the center of the ring, with Myer on the defensive.

Round 3—McAuliffe landed his right and Myer clinched around the hip. Myer received a heavy left hand swing on the head, and came near falling. McAuliffe next landed a heavy left on Myer's nose, and in a clinch Myer bit his opponent several times.

Round 4—This round began with a hug. Myer appeared to want to be the aggressor for he landed a heavy punch on the head and repeated the blow with his right. A great deal of clinch work was done in this round. First blood was claimed and allowed for McAuliffe, the ruby coming from Myer's right eye.

Round 5—The opening of this round was characterized by several awkward attempts on the part of both men, and the audience cheered when Myer was knocked down with a heavy right. McAuliffe knocked him down again as he got up. This time he lay helpless on the ropes until he was counted out. It was a heavy right hand swing that did the trick, and McAuliffe was borne triumphantly on his second's shoulders to his corner. The Williamsburg was made the recipient of hearty applause, notwithstanding the fact that New Orleans was known as a Myer city. The Williamsburg's seconds opened champagne in his corner, while Myer was offered a glass of the wine by his conqueror, which was accepted, and a hearty handshake wound up the greatest battle recorded in the lightweight class since the days of Billy Edwards, Barney Aaron and Sam Colyer.

CONFLICT OF AUTHORITY.

The Health Officer of New York Declares That He Will Not Be Governed By the President's Quarantine Circular—The Powers of the General Government Secondary to the Local Government in Sanitary Regulations.

New York, Sept. 3.—Health Officer Jenkins declares that he shall continue to quarantine vessels and to release them from quarantine according to his view of the requirements of the special cases, without regard to President Harrison's proclamation.

In the absence of Attorney-General Rosemeade Deputy Attorney-General John W. Hogan, in response to a request from Dr. Jenkins asking him to define his powers in connection with the circular approved by President Harrison, ordering a quarantine detention of twenty days on all vessels destined for United States ports, wrote an opinion in which he particularly holds that the health officer of the port of New York may use his discretion as to how long a vessel shall be detained at quarantine independent of any proclamation of the president.

Mr. Hogan in the course of his opinion says: "I have read the opinion of the attorney-general of the United States as published in the public view of this date and agree with that opinion of his opinion wherein he holds that the act of congress of April 20, 1903, may be considered in full force and effect at the present time."

The act of 1878 referred to provides for the entry of any vessel from any port or country where contagious or infectious diseases may exist, through which said vessel might be introduced, in any manner and as in the manner to be prescribed by regulations to be prescribed by the health officer of the port of destination, and in the States. The consul of each port is required to make weekly reports to the health officer of the sanitary condition of the ports where they are stationed.

The surgeon-general of the hospital service under the direction of the secretary of the treasury is charged by the act with the execution of the provisions of the act and of framing rules and regulations for that purpose which rules are to be subject to approval by the president. The most important provisions of the same should be considered in determining how far this act of congress is applicable to the port of the city of New York. The rules and regulations to be prescribed are, by the act itself, limited by the provisions:

First—But such rules and regulations shall not conflict with, or impair any sanitary, or quarantine laws, or regulations of any state or municipal authorities now existing, or which may hereafter be enacted.

Second—Provided that there shall be no interference in any manner with any quarantine laws or regulations as now exist, or may hereafter be adopted, under state laws.

The act of congress, as will be seen, therefore, recognizes the right of the states to enact quarantine laws and rules and regulations, and when such laws, rules and regulations shall have been enacted, the act of congress, or any rules or regulations established thereunder in conflict with, or that may in any manner impair, or interfere with such quarantine laws, or regulations exist in the states, must give way to the laws and regulations adopted in the various states.

The act of congress, therefore, has adopted the laws and regulations in reference to quarantine, and the supervising surgeon-general of the United States any authority to issue any rules or proclamation that would impair or infringe any law of New York, or any rule or regulation of the quarantine commission, or any officer of this state.
