ROAD BUILDING.
The question of National road building, or rather federal aid in building public roads, has received considerable attention from congress at this session.

The consideration was brought about by a bill introduced by Senator Latimer of South Carolina, who has made the question of public roads a study and is, therefore, enabled to speak advisedly and logically upon the importance of public roads.

He gives some interesting information in a speech delivered on the subject in the United States senate. Among other things he says: About one-third of our people, at the present time, bear the total responsibility and cost of the construction and improvement of the common roads.

They are the people who live in the country districts. The construction and improvement of the common roads of the country, over which the necessities of life and raw material must pass to sustain the life and promote the health, comfort, and prosperity of the whole people, is a burden which has rested solely on the people of the rural districts.

The history of road building demonstrates that a complete system of public roads has never been constructed in any country except by the aid of the general government. The revenues of the government are raised largely upon articles consumed by all the people, thereby distributing taxation equally, and as all the people should contribute to the construction and improvement of the roads, it is only by Federal aid that this can be accomplished.

A surplus of about $200,000,000 is lying idle in the treasury, which belongs to the people and should be expended for their benefit in a manner which will accomplish the greatest good to the largest number.

The question of transportation is so intimately connected with the existence and well-being of every class of our people as to make it the most important factor of our national and individual life. All the people are, to a large extent, absolutely dependent for life upon means of transportation. Those who produce the necessities of life are less dependent upon them than any other class, because they have the means of existence at hand.

But it is not so with the millions who live in cities and towns, or who are engaged in mechanics, trades, or the professions. It may be suggested that the railroads have done the need for improved country roads. But when you consider that the cost of transporting the products of the farm, mine and forest over the dirt roads to the shipping point in the year 1899 cost $1,000,000,000, while only $700,000,000 was received by all the railroads from every source, it is readily seen that our railroad system does not supply all the needs of the people.

It may be said that to undertake to pay one-half of the cost of improving the roads of the country will bankrupt the Government. But that is so, how can the states or people be expected to pay all the cost? Does not the argument bring us to the conclusion, if it be true, that the roads must forever remain in their present condition? It has been estimated by the Office of Public Road Inquiries that one billion dollars would put all the main roads of the country in good condition. And it has also been estimated that it will require at least ten years to effect the improvement of the roads.

Does any one think that to raise $1,000,000,000 during ten years will bankrupt the Government? Since the Spanish war the Government of the United States has expended about 700 million dollars in the Philippines, a period of about five years. Has that bankrupted the Government? We have also spent ten years for the improvement of the roads of the United States.

Does that bankrupt the Government? We have also spent ten years for the improvement of the roads of the United States.

News comes from Washington from well authenticated sources that it is expected to develop an entirely new canal deal, whereby the United States government is to buy outright from Columbia and Panama the whole canal strip, obtaining a quit claim deed therefor in consideration of a sum of money sufficient to satisfy both the South American republics now laying claim to the isthmus.

While this deal has not yet matured, it has progressed far enough to convince several southern senators that it will ultimately be carried through and prove a settlement of the great question now agitating this country. It is understood General Rafael Rivas, the Colombian representative, who has been in Washington for the past two months to arrange a satisfactory settlement for his country, made a proposition to the president and Secretary Hay, the effect of which was Columbia's willingness to relinquish all claims on the isthmus on condition of a payment of $10,000,000 by the United States. It is said our government replied with a counter proposition, offering Columbia $5,000,000 in settlement of her claims.
