THE PRESIDENT'S DEATH.

The Last Moments of the Statesman- Mrs. Garfield Overcome.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., 11:20 P. M. -Attor ney-Gen. MacVeach just came to the Elberon Hotel from Francklyn Cottage, and made the following statement; I sent my dispatch to Mr. Lowell at 10 p. M. Shortly before that Dr. Bliss had seen the president and found his pulse at 105 beats per minute, and all conditions were then promising a quiet night. The doctor asked the president if he was feeling uncomfortable in any way. The president answered: Not at all, and shortly afterward fell asleep, and Dr. Bliss returned to his room across the hall from that occupied by the president. Col. Swaim and Rockwell remained with the president. About fifteen minutes after 10 the president awakened and remarked to Col. Swaim that he was suffering great pain, and placed his hand over his heart. Dr. Bliss was summoned, and when he entered the room he found the president substantially without pulse and the action of the heart was indistinguishable, He said at once the president was dying and directed Mrs. Garfield to be called, also the doctor. The president remained in a dying condition until 10:35 P. M., when the news of the president's death Gen. he was pronounced dead. New York, Sept. 19.-The Telegram's extra says: At the president's bedside holding his poor emaciated hands in her own and watching with anguish unutterable the fast vanishing sands of life, sat his faithful and devoted wife during the closing hours of the president's career. Around him were other weeping friends and physicians, lamenting their powerlessness in the presence of the dark angel of death. Toward the last, the mind of the sufferer wandered. He was once more back in Mentor amid those scenes where the happiest hours of his life were spent. He sat in the dear old homestead again with loved ones around him, his aged mother, so proud of her big boy, his faithful wife and his beloved children. The Closing Scene.

Long Branch, Sept. 20-1 A. M. -Previous to his death the only words spoken by the president were that he had a severe pain in his head. It is supposed by the surgeons that death was occasioned by a clot of blood forming in the heart. The western skies were all aglow
With clouds o' red an' gray,
The crickets in the grassy fields
Where chripin' merrily,
When up the lane an' o'er the hill
I saw a maiden roam,
Who went her way at close o' day
To call the cattle home,
Co-boss-co-boss!
Co-boss-co-boss!
Co-boss-co-boss!

The echo o' her charmin' voice
Resounded thro' the vale;
It lingered on the evenin' air,
It floated on the gale;
'Twas borne along the mountain side,
It drifted thro' the glen,
It died away among the hills,
Far from the haunts of men:
Co-boss-co-boss!
Go-boss-co-boss!
Come home-come home! Her face was flushed with bues o'health,

Her face was flushed with buck o'healt
Her arms an feet were bare;
She had a lithe an' active form.
A wealth o'elon hair;
Beyond the hill she passed from sight,
As sinks a failen star,
Until her voice was faintly heard
still callin' from afar;
Co-boss—co-boss!
Co-boss—co boss!
Come home—come home!

Come nome—come nome!

Soon o'er the distant knoll appeared
The cattle, red an' brown.
An' from the pastur' to the lane
Came gaily trottin' down.

With sparklin' eyes an' cheeks ag ow,
Returned the maiden gay,
Who waved her arms and shouted low:
Whay-boss—whay-boss—O-whay!
Whay-boss—whay-boss!
Whay-boss—whay-boss!

Although salt is sold in any quantity by manufacturers of fertilizers it is not very extensively used as a fertilizer This is owing to its peculiar action on soils, its power seeming so changeable and irregular. To read of a wonderful growth of wheat from the use of salt does not insure a large yield by its use in another locality. Salt acts almost en-tirely in a chemical manner, and its effects are different according to the soils. It is a compound of chlorine and sodium, and while both chlorine and sodium (with the addition of oxygen become, soda) enter into the composition of potash and lime. Now, the substance chorine cannot exist uncombined. If set free by any process it immediately seeks and forms a new combination. It is capable of forming compounds alone or as a part of acids, and possessing such quality of forming compounds alone, it performs a greater part in the soil than is accredited to it. It is not always driven away from the sodium—heat and sulphuric acid being necessary—and thence com-mon salt is easily changed.

many plants, it is, however not in very large quanties-that is to compare with

In the manure heap there is no doubt that it can take the place of lime in a certain particular, without doing damage to the heap, as lime does. Lime, we all know, causes decomposition in the heap, breaks up and decomposes it, but at the cost of the ammonia, which escapes. If, instead of using lime, we substitute salt, the supposition is that salt will preserve the heap and prevent or retard decay. And so it will for a little while, but eventually decay will begin and heat is generated. As soon as the heap is well-heated new compounds are formed over and over again, and so violent is this action at times that the heap is destroyed. When the heat is strong the salt is more or less decomposed by the reaction that takes place between it and the sulphates and nitrates, and as soon as chlorine is set free from the salt it forms its principal compound with ammonia. It has peculiar partiality for ammonia, and no escape of that substance can take place as long as chlorine is being released in the manure heap. The union of these two gases-chlorine and ammonia-results in the formation of a solid which will not escape, The sodium immediately oxydizes, and in turn unites with some of the acids. This union also sets the heap in commotion, as every compound that is formed creates a vacancy that must be filled, and continues to act and react along with all the other substances, until the whole mass is completely changed. Soda is necessary to many plants, and it can be added to the manure heap in the shape of salt, glauber salts or washing soda.

As such action in the manure heap creates Leat, we must conclude that heat is the motion of the atoms, which is the fact, and in the soil, though slower, the action is the same, caused by the heat of the sun, roots of plants and water. In the soil chlorine, when liberated from salt, attacks and demolishes much that is inert, insoluble and useless till changed in composition. It operates much better on fertile soils than on those that are thin, and when it is reported by our farmer friends that salt is a fertilizer for wheat, such benefit is derived through its chemical action than through any extra fertilizing properties possessed by it as a substance. It is no doubt a fertilizer, but it is a much better re-agent.

Every heap or manure that is made should have a sprinkling from time to time of salt. A mixture of salt and plaster is even still better, for they will very materially assist each other during the course of decompositiom. To hasten the decomposition of the manure heap a very small quantity of lime might safely be used, but it should be used carefully Lime is excellent on soils, but it is a terrible robber if used in the manure heap.

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEHOLD.

The Special Power of the Domestic Tyrant to Create Misery. [East and West.]

No person more completely possesses the power of creating misery, in his house, than the domestic tyrant, embit-tering as he does the lives of his nearest relatives by his selfishness and exigeant temper. The great essentials for hap-piness in social life are freedom and trust; but these important elements are banished out of the little home-world autocrats. He makes it a rule to ex-hibit the most profound disregard for the feelings of others, and by an indulgence in covert sneers, harsh and in-sulting words, the self control of his victims is sorely tried. Consciousness of power is no doubt the cause of his un-bearing ways. The domestic tyrant al-ways has the highest appreciation of himself. His opinion admits of no question; being his opinion, it must be right, and in no arbitrary manner he expects his family to acquiesce, or to feign acquiescence, with him on all points. He looks upon himself in every. sense as a superior being, far above his surroundings. In his own estimation he is too highly breed and too refined to support the inconveniences of daily oc-currences, which are endured by otners. His organization is too sensitive and finely strung to tolerate small domestic troubles. He, if anything, is only too generous and virtuous; he feels compassion for himself alone, regretting that the grandeur of his character is not sufficiently appreciated. His most trifling acts are magnified by him into examples of stupendous liberality. In his complete self-satisfaction, he announces he is only too good in sacrificing himself, and he laments that he does not receive the admiration he considers his due.

He possesses in the highest degree the power of wounding the feelings of others, and by his persistent efforts to mortify their sensibilities, he appears to treat that power as an accomplishment which he never neglects to display at every opportunity. The inmates of many an apparently happy home, if questioned as to the background, would bear testimony as to wrung hearts caused by the domestic tyrant. No wonder, with such a man for the head of the house, there is a general sense of relief when the front door shuts behind him, and a feeling of suppressed joy when he is away. Besides the misery caused by him to his household, the domestic tyrant must really experience a considerable amount of mental discomfort himself. He cannot fail to perceive the sort of change that comes over the cheerful family party when he appears, or the kind of chill that his presence brings. Instinct tells how carefully topics of conversation are chosen for the family meals, how much constraint prevails, and what a strict avoidance of any subject there is that may lead to wrathful questionings. Curiously enough, out of his home he is generally the genial, jovial sort of man, and very likely is looked upon as a rather good-hearted sort of tellow for it is only to his feetly sort of tellow, for it is only to his family that he shows his teeth. Temper.

Happy is he who can command his temper even under trying circumstances! The evils wrought by unbridled tempers are beyond calculation. The violent temper of a fretful and irascible man gives his friends much concern. His conduct, when under its influence, renders him very unamiable and, of course, greatly diminishes their regard for him. And this is not all. If he has any real sensibility, the emotions he feels are as painful as those he causes in the breasts of others. When the calm of retirement succeeds to the bustle of company, his solitary moments are embittered by very mortifying re-flections; for it has been well remarked, "that anger begins with folly and ends with repentence." a few bitter words spoken in anger may rankle for a lifetime. Self command, besides preventing their utterance, enables us to maintain the dignity of our nature as intelligent beings, by establishing the empire of reason over passions. It renders a person the master of himself under all the various circumstances of life; in prosperity, cheerful without insolence; and in adversity, resigned and calm without dejection. It gives an effectual check to all the vicious propensities of envy, malice and anger; and in the same proportion as it restrains them, it encourages the growth of virtue, prevents them from running into extremes. and fixes their due bounds.

Monday afternoon the remains of our much lamented Paesident, James A. Garfield, were borne from the pavilion in Cleveland and laid in a vault at Lake View Cemetary the ceremony being concluded about 3,o'clock. It has been estimated that two hundred and fifty thousand persons were in attendance at the solemn ceremonies, the procession being eight or ten miles long. At the hour of burial memorial services were held throughout America and in many foreign countries, thus showing the estimation in which the illustrious dead was held both at home and abroad.

BIOGRAPHY OF J. C. WHITTIER

BY MISS MINNIE ELLIS.

On reading Whittier's life we are

His biographies inariably commence, "John Greeneaf Whittier was born at Havernill, Mass., December 17th, 1807, and pass from thence to his 21st year, the supposed beginning of his iterary life; whereas the influences surrounding his childhood were the key to his after life. Thus his boy good and youth are left a blank, as ar as the biographers are concerned. Perhaps, in this respect, we are fortunate, thereby being spared tedious accounts of miraculous progress in Latin and Greek, and of the cute sayings with which the lives of great men are interlard ed; but we are not entirely de ed; but we are not entirely de place of J. There is a vague story extant in Haverhill to this effect: His first poetical ef forts were composed in a hay mow and written upon blank leaves torn from books; these, with great seerecy, were slipped under the door of the village printing office, and were duly published. His identity with them was not discovered for some time, as fact not fancy was in favor with the Pilgrim Fathers. DORA DEANE. She was 32, and the prefix which was still wanting in her name. Yet form the threshold! she looked a woman to love and be loved. She was not beautiful, but people had always called her a pretty girl. They called her so still (so youthful, was the graceful figure and mobile face), unand found the term "woman" was more appropriate. There was about her, too, a certain distinctive charm-a something which made strangers turn again as she passed them by for a second glance. She was neither belle nor beauty. She could have married many times, but—perhaps because she felt that love was one of the essentials lacking, perhaps because the ideal was not attained-she remained Dora Deane still. Thus gossip reasoned. Pry as they would, they could discover no early disappointment, no hidden romance, in all the years she had lived among them. lived among them. Yet peeping over her shoulder, as is our privilege, noting the delicate flush upon her cheek, the light in her eye, the trembling of the little hand which holds a letter written in firm, bold characters, they might have seized upon a clue we are too generous to fasten or follow. The words she had perused were these:

"The fever has broken out quite hotly with us, and I am anxious Cara should breathe the pure air. May I drive her out to-morrow and leave her for a fortnight? My messenger will wait for, your answer. "Ronald Ray."

"Of course she might come," thought

Dear little Cara! Dr. Ray was her guardian. She had been left to his care not see? when a little child of three years. She must be 18 now. For six years she had been at school. Now she had returned to her guardian's home, to remain until some one stole heraway to grace another.

But she was still a child. That was but a remote possibility for the distant future.

Ronald Ray was a physician in the great city in one of whose suburbs was Miss Deane's beautiful home. How many years she had known him! He had even come to her first, in that longago time, to tell her the story of the child confided to his care. six years her senior. They had been friends always, but lately she had seen more of him than his usual wont. He had talked with her of Cara's homecoming—of the plans he had matured for her amusement—of the pleasure his mother would experience in baving her bright young presence constantly near her; and she had listened, as she always listened when Ronald Ray talked, listened with a beating heart and fleeting col-or. But it had never betrayed her secret even to him. She had scarce acknowledged it to herself. She only knew that other men might come and go, but passionate protestations of devotion, to waken that called forth by his simplest word.

But lately he had been different. There had been a light in his eyes like that within her own-a suppressed excitement in his manner totally at variance with his usual calm. And now from among his legion of friends he had chosen her home where his ward might be a guest.

Her thoughts were very busy as she made her preparations to receive her visitors. With her own hand she gathered and arranged the flowers that were to welcome her in the pretty room she had assigned her, adjoining her own.

In the dusk of the evening the sound

"Dear Miss Dora!" exclaimed a sweet, girlish voice, as some one sprang from the carriage, ere the doctor could alight to assist her. "It is all nonsense, Ronald's sending me away from home! But so long as he insisted on it I am so glad it is here! We shall have such nice times together—that is, if you have not forgotten me."

And she impulsively threw her arms about the elder woman's neck.

There was a charm-a winsomness-about her impossible to resist. Dora arms.

Not until they had all gone in together into the lighted drawing-room did she discover how fully the child's promise of rare beauty had redeemed itself. But the light was less merciless elsewhere. It showed the physician's face pale and careworn, and bearing traces of overwork and lack of sleep. Dora found a moment during Cara's gay prattle to lay her hand upon his sleeve. "Take care of yourself," she half whispered. "I fear you forget that in your care for others. You are not looking well." "Nonsense!" he laughed. "The idea of a doctor rot being able to take care of himself! It is like the cook allowing herself to starve. You would almost persuade my patients, Miss Dora, to lose faith in me, which reminds me that I am losing precious time, and must be off. A thousand thanks for receiving this child! I shall see you as often as possible, and shall have a double inducement in coming."

Was it all fancy that his voice was However that might be. Dora's heart felt strangly light as she listened to the echo of the retreating wheels of Dr. Ray's carriage. Cara had been ber guest a fortnight, during which time the doctor had fulfilled his promise of devoting to them all

The three were standing together when she thus spoke, but as she finished, Ronald Ray leaned over and in a low tone said, so that only her ear caught thus before. Was it that Cara's bright presence had renewed her own youth, until in his eyes she had recovered it? Surely she might dwell a moment on would indicate her a married woman the sweet hope of which his wish must there were no lines of disappointment. The next day she awaited bim in her about Dora Deane's mouth; no troubled own little morning room. She had expression in her clear grey eyes. Yet should be admitted there. Cara she had The few sent for a drive.

Her beart beat fast to suffocation as at length she teard his step. He crossed the room with his firm tread to where she stood, and took both her hands in

"Dora," he began, "I have come to on to confine to you the secret of my life. I know that you are frank and true. Tell me then, and tell me honestly-am I too old to love and to be loved?" Be still, glad heart—be still! How long had her secret been unacknowledged even to herself? It broke its bonds now, and burst upon her in a glad, rap-turous vision, which showed the past gray and sombre, the future in a brilliance which blinded her.

"Too old!" she said, in tones that trembled spite of her efforts to control them. "No-a thousand times no!"

He raised her hands to his lips and kissed them. It was the first time his kiss had touched them.

"My friend," he whispered, low, "you have guessed my secret, have you not? You have seen it? How could I hope to hide it except from her? She suspects nothing. Tell me how I shall approach her that I may not startle her? She is yet but a child. You are a woman, Dora.

Help me!".

Was she still standing upright? About her were the crushed ruins of her castle, which scarce sixty seconds before towered to the clouds. The noise of the falling fragments had stunned her. Had he not heard? The dust which had arisen therefrom blinded her. Could he

"You are a woman, Dora. Help me!" These were the words ringing in her ear. Oh, God! had she no greater need for help?

"You love Cara!" How calm and quiet her voice sound-ed, even to herself. "Love her Ah, Dora, you who have never loved can little guess how much!"

"She laughed then. Something in the words amused her; something that show-ed her how well she had kept her secret ago time, to tell her the story of the child confided to his care.

She had been but 17 herself then, he six years her senior. They had been that for which I long."

Tiends always but lately she had seen that for which I long."

"Nay, speak to her yourself," she au-swered. "She scarcely can deny you, pleading your own cause."

"You think so? Then I will come to-morrow. Good-by. God bless you!"

At last she was alone. The knowledge came with a long sign of relief, as some hours later the "Good nights" had been said and Dora could face the misery the morning had brought her. How long-how very long ago it seemed! She drew a chair beside the open window, and sank into it heavily.

At that moment a faint tap sounded

"Please let me come in, dear Miss Dora?" said a young voice. "I can't sleep and I want too talk with you." Then without waiting further permission, a litttle white robed figure glided in and sank on the stool at her The moonlight showed the fair upfurned face, and it was only the shadow resting on her own soul which made the older woman fancy that a graver expression was upon it than its wont? She "I-1 have something to tell you, Miss Dora," the girl went on, after a little pause. I love you so much that I would like that you should hear it first. But. tell me first-am I still a child? And do you not think that children, as Ronald calls me, can love?"

"You love, then?" Almost breathlessly she put the question. Her own pain was swallowed up in the joy that at least to Ronald his love would not be return to nim as biter Dead Sea fruit.

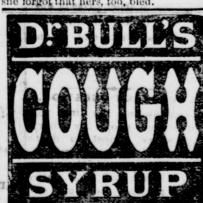

"Yes, love," said Clara. "It was such a funny accident, our meeting. It was two years ago. His regiment was sta-tioned at the same town where I was at Deane felt her heart go out toward her anew, as it had done when, a tiny golden-haired child, she had climbed hoon her knee and fallen asleep cradled in her for him?

Then Miss Deane recovered her breath.
"A lieutenan! Who is this man? Of whom are you talking?"
His name is Harry Linden. He will be here next week. He is coming down to ask my guardian's formal permission to marry me. Ob, Miss Dora! do you think he will refuse or be angry? He is so old, perhaps he has forgotten that he, too, once was young.

Bitterest mockery of fate! So old, she said, and not yet had forty years crowned his brow.

Once again she met Ronald Ray alone, as he came next day to plead his cause. He listened with a white, drawn face, while she told him of that other secret with which she had been entrusted, meanwhile sparing him, in the telling, all

In her tender pitying for his wound she forgot that hers, too, bled.

He turned; but, as he gained the threshold, he tottered, strove to recover himself, but failed, and fell forward on

The fever was upon him. Aiready in his veins, the shock had brought the hidden enemy to light. Tossing in de-lirium for many weeks, Dora learned how wholly the man's heart had fastened itself upon the one hope which so cruelly had failed him. For a time it seemed as though it had sapped the foundation of his life; but it proved not

There came a day when, opening his eyes, he recognized the murse whose gentle touch had soothed all his fever-fancy hours. Slowly he regained his strength; but it seemed as though returning health brought with it a new Cara's acknowledged lover was with them now. They who had welcomed him for her sake soon did so for his own. Seeing them together, none could wonder that each had chosen the other, but how the sight must pain the other

With all her ingenuity Dora strove to keep it from him, until he said to her one day:
"My wound has been cauterized; it hurts no longer." He was brave and hid it, she told herself. Did she not know that such wounds never healed?

Thus the weeks rolled on until it came the time for Cara's wedding. She had returned to her guardian's home, which she was now to leave forever.

It was the evening before her marriage, when Dora, sitting alone, heard the step she had learned to know so well. As he had done once before, entering the room where she sat, he came straight toward her, taking both her hands in

"Dora," he said, "do you remember that you once told me that, pleading my cause, I could not be denied? Will you make good your words? Must I be punished because for long years I have been blind? I love you, dear! I want you for my own—my wife! Will you forgive the infatuation which misled me from the real cry of my heart, and now answer it? It is very empty. Will you fill it?"

She looked up into his face. Was it pity that she read there-pity which prompted the words for which her hungry heart had thirsted all these years. No, no! It was the light of love, and it burned for her. She knew it even as she knew that it should light her foot-steps down into the valley and shadow of eternity; and, so knowing, she gave him the promise that he asked.
