The sand is then watered until it becomes in the condition of mud and placed on the shelf of the greathers or in the violens sill of the greenhouse or in the window-sill of the sitting-room, fully exposed to the sun and never shaded. But one condition is essential to success: Until the cuttings become rooted the sand must be kept continually saturated. If once permitted to dry up, exposed to the sun as they are, the cuttings will quickly wilt and the whole operation will be defeat-ed. When the cuttings are rooted they

The Preservation of Vineyards From Grape

[Indianapo'is Sentinel.] The grape rot has caused such serious damage to vineyards all over the country within the last ten years that many fruit growers are contemplating the abandonment of grape culture altogether as unprefitable. It is still a mystery to all—the cause and cure; but no doubt will, in the course of a few more years, be overcome by proper methods. So far, the safest plan of preservation has been to inclose the branches in paper bags, but this is a very laborious and tedious operation. What we desire, however, is to know the cause of the rot and the preventative. If we closely watch our the preventative. If we closely watch our vines during the growth of the fruit, it will be noticed that it is principally during a period of damp, cloudy weather that the process of decay takes place. First a little speck on the grape, which rapidly enlarges, until finally the fruit falls to the ground.

It is nothing new, for thirty years ago

It is nothing new, for thirty years ago our white grapes rotted annually, and often not a single bunch was gathered from a large field of them. This process of rotting, as it is caalled, takes place about the time of the formation of the seed; and it certainly is not attributable to any disease of the roots, or attacks of parasites, as may be supposed, for if so, our vineyards would by this time be completely destroyed. On the contrary, we had a better crop last year than during several years previous, which destroys such theory. We must, therefore, consider the subject from another point.

The following experiments were tried last season, which are well worth the consideration of all who are interested in this subject: A row of vines were left standing without being fertilized. Another had an application of common Another had an application of common barnyard manure. The third was treated with barnyard manure which had previously been subjected to a sprinkling of diluted sulphuric acid (oil of vitriol), and the fourth row was supplied with an equal mixture of dissolved bones, muriate of potash, plaster and guano. While we admit that the rot was not very serious on any of the rows, the two that had been treated with the acidulated manure and mineral fertilizer acidulated manure and mineral fertilizer were freer than the others, while the bunches were much larger and finer. We deduct from these experiments, therefore, that the fertilizers must be soluble and ready to be at once absorbed by the vines and the fruit, which was the case with the third and fourth rows, and that the fruit during the process o and the whole operation will be defeated. When the cuttings are rooted they should be potted in small pots and treated carefully by shading and watering.

Snow Flake Cake.—Two cups pulverized strar, one cup butter, one cup sweet milk, one cup corn starch, two cups, flour, two heaping teaspoonfuls baking powder, extract of lemon.

"You should call the folks," said the fauther folks," said the fauther formation needs a ready prepared food (phosphoric acid chiefly), the growth from infancy being very rapid and the change from starch to sugar being very quick. During the exact period of ripening potash plays a principal part in assisting in the formation of sugar, and yet, strange to say, there is no potash at all to be found in sugar. This is the case with all fruits twice, as much as to say, "Do look at twice," and that the fruit during the process of seed formation needs a ready prepared food (phosphoric acid chiefly), the growth from infancy being very rapid and the change from starch to sugar being very quick. During the exact period of ripening potash plays a principal part in assisting in the formation of sugar, and yet, strange to say, there is no potash at all to be found in sugar. This is the case with all fruits and that the fruit during the part of the cat. more especially is it the case with the grape. The ecid principle is tartaric acid, and this particular acid seems always associated with potash in the shape of tartrate of potash.

The row which was fertilized with raw manure fared worse than the others. Whether it was caused by fermentation at the roots or lack of some particular ingredient is unknown, but the unmanured row evidedtly needed ready soluble neurishment. It is not safe to express an opinion as to the reason of this difference, as the subject is still open to discussion. One thing has been gained by the ex-periment, however, which is that we are taught that vines fertilized with chemicals are freer from the evils than those not so managed; and it is also clear that by saturating our stable manure with diluted sulphuric acid we at once put it in proper condition for plant food. It is to be noticed also that we had a better grape season than usual last year. Let us experiment this year and note the result, for the nemedy may at last be found to be very simple.

Ants as Fruit-Growers' Friends.

(Prairie Farmer.) Many of the leading orchard proprietors in Northern Italy and Southern Germany are cultivators of the common black ant, which insect they hold in high esteem as the fruit-growers' best friend. They establish ant hills in their orchards and leave the police service of their fruit trees entirely to the tiny colonists which pass all their time in climbing up the stems of the fruit trees, cleansing their boughs and leaves of malefactors, mature as well as embryotic, and descending laden with spoils to the ground, where they comfortably consume or pru-dently store away their booty. They never meddle with sound fruit, but only invade such apples, pears and plums as have already been penetrated by the canker, which they remorselessly pur-sue to its fastnesses within the very heart of the fruit. Nowhere are apple and pear trees so free from blight and, destructive insects as in the immediate neighborhood of a large ant hill five or six years old. The favorite food of ants would appear to be the larvæ and pupæ of those creatures which would spend the whole of their brief existence in devouring the tender shoots and juvenile leaves of fruit trees.

To the Editor of the Courant: Chich bugs-in the corn.

Some fellow went up Diamond creek, last week, who must be in a bad fix about the head, or have snakes in his boots. Mr. Editor, did you ever take notice of the old man in the St Jacob's Oil advertisement? and if you notice he has a bottle in his left hand. It looks to me like the Governor of South Carolina sitting on the bank of the Missouri, and saying to the Governor of Kansas that "it's a long time be. ween drinks."

FLORA'S FORTUNE.

"Narrow blue velvet ribbon ma'am? Yes, ma'am, in half a minute. Velvet ribbons, Miss Darcy, and look sharp about it!"

Flora Darcy dropped the elaborate strip of scarlet worsted upon which she was at work, and hurried forward to her place behind the counter-for Screw & Pinch made it a rule never to allow any time to be wasted in their establishment. When she saw the face of her customers she was to serve, she dropped the box of velvet ribbons, and exclaimed-

"Aunt Juliet?—and Clara!"
The words broke almost unconsciously from her lips; the next minute she checked herself abashed. "Dear me, Clara," faltered the elder lady, half angry, half confused, "this is very embarrassing to—"

"Do hush, mamma! What a fool you said Miss Clara Darcy, in a not heaped-up counter which was her special charge. A pastboard box cover lay on the floor, partly under the counter, and as Flora stooped to pick it up, something glittered beneath it-a gilt-clasped portmonnaie!

Some lady has left her portmonnaie on the counter, and it has got brushed off with the trimmings," was the girl's first thought as she opened it. "And it's full of bank notes, too! I never saw so much money at one time in all my life

At the same instant a perfumed card dropped from the inner compartment—a card engraved in fashionable "old English" characters:

"MRS. DEVEREUX DARCY."

The blood instinctively rushed into Flora's pale and wearied cheek.
"It is Aunt Juliet's purse—and the money is hers—no, ours. Did not her husband meanly deprive my mother of her poor little fortune? Does he not live in luxury while we are starving? But it is not mine. I will take it to Aunt Darcy at once."

She turned resolutely toward the aristocratic part of the city in which dwelt Mrs. Devereux Darcy. It was a long walk, but Flora scarcely heeded it, so eager was she to rid herself of the tiny burden that was momentarialy growing heavier in her heart and hand.

Mrs. Darcy was at dinner; "she could be no one," was the answer that Flora see no one," was the answer that Flora received when she requested a brief interview with her aunt-nor was she blind to the footman's insolent and supercilious stare as he delivered his Flora; "I hope mamma is not alarmed at my unusal delay." Alas! poor Flora! how little did she anticipate how many long days and weeks would elapse before she would be at home again!

Miss Clara Darcy had sat a whole hour in full dress, white kid gloves, silver bouquet holder and all, and was beginning to wax exceedingly impatient when at length "Dr. Philipson" was announced-a frank and handsome young man, with thoughtful gray eyes and port erect as that of Hyperion.

"You must excuse my delay, Miss Darcy; we professional men are not always masters of our own time, and I was detained by a street accident—a broken arm.'

"Ah, indeed?" "Yes—a pretty little sewing girl, I should judge—sent to the hospital. And, by the way, it's a curious coincidence—the city. Papa-ahem-has no relatives living."

The intense glow of the August sun-shine quivered fifully on the floor of the "Convalescent Ward," as Dr. Phil-ipson's steps rung strong, nervous and inspiring upon its threshold. There was many a heart leaped up at the familiar sound, but most of all the heart of poor Flora Darcy, who was sitting up for the first time since the long, weari-some fever that had followed on the pain and inflammation of her broken

She had told him much of her history and the rest had been unconsciously revealed in the incoherent ravings of ever. Had Clara Darcy known this, she could, perhaps, have understood the sudden and unaccountable cessation of Dr. Philipson's visits and attentions. "We shall discharge you in a day or two-what am I to understand by your sober little face?"
"I have lost my situation; my mother has spent ker little all; I am not yet strong enough to work-and-and-I cannot beg."

"You have relations—the Devereux Darcys. Why not go to them?" "I would die first, sir," she said with energy. Dr. Philipson smiled as he stroked down Flora's short, curly hair. "Flora," he said gently, in a voice so low that it was audible to her ears only who do you suppose he has married? My cousin Flora!" "Your cousin Flora?" echoed the matron, in dismay.

"This comes of hospitals and those horrid infectious places," went on Clara, hysterically. "I wouldn't marry a doctor—no, not if there wasn't another man in the world!"

And rather irrelevantly she burst into tears—tears that would have been bitterer yet if she could have known how quietly happy Dr. Philipson and his young wife were.

A MEXICAN BULL-FIGHT.

Men in Ribbons and Spangles Making Beast Mad to Kill Him. Cor. Boston Transcript.

The bull-fight is still an institution of Mexico, performances being given nearly every Sunday and holiday. It is a relic of barbarism inherited from Spain. I will endeavor to give the main features of one of these shows which I observed a few weeks since in Cuantitlan, a town reached by a ride of an hour and three very filial strain. "Of course we aren't obliged to recognize any relationship with this—this young woman. Let us go;" and they went.

Flora Darcy had a hard day of it at Screw & Pinch's; and it was not until they were closing up for the night that she had an opportunity to clear the heaped-up counter which was hor asserting the course of the "Plaza de Toros." so-called which is a circular arena of about seventy-five feet diameter, surrounded by a board fence six feet high, which is striped with the national colors, red, white and green. Outside of this are the seats for the spectators made of rough boards and arranged in five tiers, each about two feet above that below. At the top is a space roofed over and divided into sections, which are provided with chairs. The main portion of the arena is entirely exposed to sun or rain. A band of about twelve pieces occupies a stand at one side and furnishes music continuously through the whole performance. Cries of "Toros! Toros!" began to exhibit the impatience of the audience at the delay in commencing. At length doors to the east are thrown open and the performers enter. These consist of two three men mounted on poor jaded, blind-folded horses and a number of men with red clothes to exasperate the bull. The men are dressed in suits of green or red spangled with silver tinsel, with short knee breeches and white stockings, and they wear the hair knotted in a queue down the back. The riders are provided with long poles armed at the end with iron points to ward off the attacks of the bull. A door to the west is now opened and the animal enters, walking first to the center of the circle and gazing around with an astonished look at the scene presented. A red cloth is now flaunted before him and with his head lowered he dashes toward the one who has dared to offend him. The men easily jump to one side or, if hard pressed, take refuge behind a guard consisting of boards placed at a distance of two feet from the enclosing fence. The bull often rushes at the horses, and, in spite of a thrust from the lance of the rider, succeeds in goring them, often in throwing both to the ground. Sometimes the bull himself is thrown. Nearly every bull kilis one or more of the poor horses, but the men are seldom hurt. When this has continued for some time the horsemen retire and one of the men, holding a pointed stick adorned with variously colored papers and ribbons in each hand, approaches the animal and throws them into his neck. They penetrate deep enough to draw blood and the slight pain exasperates him. Finally the mat tader appears with a sword in the right hand and a red cloth in the left. Con-now fastened to his horns and some horses drag out the carcass. The earth is shoveled over a little and the arena is ready for another combat. Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Febut her name is Darcy."

"Darcy?' echoed Clara.
"Yes—Flora Darcy."
"How strange! I thought," added Clara, with the glib readiness of the habitnal falsehood-monger, "that we bowels. Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills are peculi-

Fell Against a Sharp Edge. Rockford (Ill.) Register.

This is furnished by Mr. Wm, Will, 1613 Frankford Ave., Philadelphia, Pa; Some transford Ave., Philadelphia, Pa; Some time since I received a severe injury to my back by falling against the sharp edge of a marble sten, the stone penetrating it at least a half inch, and leaving a very painful wound. After suffering for a time, I concluded to apply St. Jacobs Oil, and am pleased to say that the results exceeded my expectations. It speedily alleved all pain expectations. It speedily allayed all pain and swelling, and by continued use made a perfect cure. I really think it is the most efficacious liniment I ever used.
