MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. - That ldermanic paunch" isn't always given to bodily exercise and dissign of blissful contentment. Take it from Drs. William J. Cerr and John B. Lagen, of the Iniversity of California, an "extending stomach, especially as one grows older," not only may make breathing difficult, but also may affect the nerves.

These physicians, in an issue of Modern Medicine, described a conlition called "the postural synfrome," which arises from obesity and leads to effects on the lungs heart and spine.

They pointed out that when patient has developed a paunch his great "counterweight of fat' changes his posture materially and puts an extra curve and strain on his back-bone. The strain, they said, causes a deormity of the spine and irritates the spinal nerves.

The weight of fat also interferes with breathing, making it hard for the diaphragm to move upward. Hence, it is difficult for the person to get enough air into

Offer of Power From Boulder Dam May Be Refused

By DYKE WILLIAMS United Press Staff Correspondent

PHOENIX, Ariz. -- An offer to Arizona of 118,000 horsepower of electrical energy at cost of pro-duction at Boulder Dam may go begging as a result of opposition to terms of the gift, it was foreseen here.

While 5,000 Arizonans reported ly have enrolled in a drive to bring the power to central and southern state markets, others have de-nounced the plan as impractical, and have urged that the state re-

Revival of the long-smouldering dispute with sister states of the Colorado River basin, and with the U.S. department of reclamation, seemed to be behind much of the opposition to the power plans.

Additionally, the Salt River Valley water users, largest producers of power in the state, declared that markets did not justify construc tion of the long transmission lines from the dam. Their opposition apparently was based on fear that power markets would be demoralized, and central Arizona irrigation projects' financial stability endangered.

Others saw the power proposal linked with the Santa Fe compact through the Boulder Canyon project act, and fought it as a threat to long-range river development
