ACTS TO HELP HOUSEWIVES GET UNIFORM COFFEE

WASHINGTON (UP)—The National Bureau of Standards, which has done research on projects ranging from square milk bottles to atom energy, is helping now to drip coffee drip. Soon, the bureau hopes the housewife of the Bronx or of Petaluma, Cal., will get the grind of coffee she asks for no matter what her brand. The National Coffee Association asked the bureau's commodity standards division to set up commercial standards for coffee grinds. Edward Aborn, of New York, chairman of the association's brewing committee, explained in his request that such standardization would "add meaning to brewing instructions and assure uniformly better results in the cup."

FARMERS ASKED TO PRODUCE MORE GRAIN

WASHINGTON —The government called on the nation's farmers today to produce about 9,600,000 more acres of grain crops next year than were harvested this year. Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson announced the national production goal of 356,000,000 acres for 1948. The goal included 296,000,000 acres of cultivated crops and 60,000,000 acres of hay. Anderson said the suggested goal would require a "heavy drain on our already strained soil resources." But that is inevitable, he said, "if this nation is to provide a good share of the food needed so desperately by hungry nations abroad."

Russia Says Britain Against Palestine Deal

By United Press
LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y.—Russia accused Great Britain today of "working against" a solution of the Palestine problem by the United Nations General Assembly. In the closing phase of debate on the Holy Land's future in the 57-nation UN Palestine committee, Soviet Delegate Semyon Tsarapkin said Britain's "categorical refusal to bear any responsibility" in the transformation of the territory from mandate to Arab and Jewish states, "leaves no doubt" of her decision "to work against a settlement."

BRIDGES SAYS SUCH ACTION WOULD ROB LAWMAKERS

By United Press
WASHINGTON — Chairman Styles Bridges of the Senate appropriations committee today charged that President Truman "fringed on congressional powers by asking for rationing and pricing authority along with a "blank check" for stop-gap European aid. The New Hampshire Republican made the charge as his committee began compiling an inventory on the United States grain supplies and crop prospects. The objective of the inventory was to prevent "short-changing" of Americans through aiding needy peoples of other countries. Bridges' charge was made as Senate President Arthur H. Vandenberg went before the Senate to make one of his rare floor speeches and ask for approval of the administration's $597,000,000 foreign aid bill to help France, Italy and Austria.

Union Services Wednesday 7:00 P. M. For Thanksgiving

Thanksgiving, a day set apart for a public celebration of divine goodness; and also, a day set apart for religious services, specially to acknowledge the goodness of God, either in any remarkable deliverance from calamities or danger in the ordinary dispensation of his bounties. This day of Thanksgiving first originated in 1621; when Governor William Bradford, a leader of the "Pilgrim Fathers," set apart a day in America at Plymouth. It was a Thanksgiving for the mercies of the year.

Marshall Against Separate Peace With Germany

LONDON—Secretary of State George C. Marshall is flatly opposed to all suggestions for a separate peace with Germany even if the Big Four council of foreign ministers fails again to reach agreement, it was learned today. Proposals that the western powers go ahead with the German peace treaty without Russia are "fantastic," officials close to Marshall said. "Such suggestions are unrealistic and wholly inconsistent with the basic objective of American policy—to restore eventually all of Europe as a community of nations."

"One-Woman" Publisher Puts Out Newspaper

DAWSONVILLE, Ga. (UP)—Mrs. B. H. Howard, "one-woman" publisher of the Dawson County Advertiser, believes she may be the only female publisher of a country weekly in the nation, who still sets all her type by hand. She is publisher, editor, writer, typesetter, printer, advertising manager of the paper, which has just celebrated its 60th anniversary.

Thirty-Two Attend Youth Fellowship Meeting Sunday

Thirty-two were at the Youth Fellowship meeting at the Baptist Church Sunday night. This group has been steadily building in enthusiasm, interest and numbers. The emphasis of the fellowship movement is: He is the happiest in life who places service above self and who loses himself in a great cause.

Buckaroos Defeat The Mountaineers At Mineral Wells

The Breckenridge Buckaroos squeezed a 2-0 victory over the Mineral Wells Mountaineers Friday night to virtually sew up the district 9 AA title. There was an estimated 3000 fans, sat in a slow drizzle to see one of the best games that many had ever witnessed. It is evident by the score that they were as evenly matched two teams that have met in this district.

Take Your Choice, He Isn't In

LONDON — A correspondent called the Soviet embassy today to check a report a woman answered the telephone. "He isn't here," she said. "Who isn't there" asked the correspondent. "Whom did you want to talk to" asked the woman. The first real automobile show was held in 1900.

CONGRESS ASKED FOR POWER TO BUY CROPS

WASHINGTON—The government today asked Congress for emergency powers to buy up entire farm crops when bad crops threaten domestic economy or the export program. The request was made by Carl C. Farrington, assistant administrator of the joint Senate-House economic committee. He said that even this broad authority may not be enough to curb inflation and insure foreign aid and repeated President Truman's request for authority to impose rationing and price ceilings.

JEFFERSON CITY—Nine former St. Louis policemen today filed a motion for rehearing of a case in which the Missouri Supreme Court ruled that policemen, as public employees, do not have the right to join labor unions. Someone Must Be Expecting A Wicked Genie To Pop Out

This Is Happy

By PEGGY DERN

XX

WHEN they came out into the sunlight and approached the parked station wagon, Drusilla was waiting in her own car, a long, low, expensive-looking convertible. Two of her friends were crowded into the front seat beside her; the others were in the rumble. They looked, Happy told herself, like an automobile advertisement in some smart fashion magazine—carefree, sun-tanned, carelessly smart, possessors of the world's good things.

Drusilla said gaily, "We'll follow, Georgie-Porgie. You know the way—you should." And she gave Happy a slant-eyed, mocking glance.

George swore under his breath as he got into the station wagon and turned to drive back to the highway. Happy could not restrain a small chuckle at Drusilla's behavior.

"What that what you call the direct approach?" she said irrepressibly. "I think you said you didn't like coy young women; Drusilla should be exactly your dish!"

"She's made a career of being the roudest, most ill-bred brat on the island," said George savagely. "She feels quite sure that she has only to express a wish to have that wish granted. She can't abide the thought that there could possibly be any man in the world who wouldn't play dead at her command. She's not in love with me, but the fact that I am not in love with her annoys her to fury!"

"I rather think she is in love with you," said Happy quietly.

George scoffed, but Happy insisted. "One woman can usually tell about another woman."

George looked down at her, and for a moment his smile flashed white in his sun-tanned face.

"You look about nine years old," he told her, and his voice was warm and tender. "Yet you sound like a woman of 40—so deeply experienced, so worldly wise."

"I'm not experienced or worldly wise. It's just that no girl who wasn't really in love would behave as Drusilla does. She'd have too much pride—too much self-respect—"

ALL of which proves that you don't know Dru in the least," he interrupted. "Dru has too much pride to let a man escape her. If I started pursuing her tomorrow, she'd laugh in my face and forget I existed."

"Why don't you try it?" There was a hint of amusement in Happy's eyes, though her voice was demure.

"Too dangerous," confessed George. "I don't trust her; she adores being unpredictable—and she's not the woman for Sundown."

Happy set her teeth on an angry retort. It was all she could do to keep from snapping at him that she was thoroughly sick of Sundown and all that it meant; that she wanted to go back home to New York—and her job. And the thought of her job seemed to bring Steve so close that for a startled moment she almost heard his voice, could almost see his face—and her hands clenched tightly in her lap.

They had crossed the causeway now and had passed the big white hotel and its "cottages" in their jewel-like setting of emerald lawns and blossoming shrubbery. A mile beyond the last "cottage," George turned the station wagon down a wide oyster-shell drive and brought it to a halt in front of an impressive white villa with a vast sweep of green lawn.

As the station wagon halted, the convertible sped through the gates and slid to a violent stop, with a spattering of gravel and a slithering of tires that made George wince in annoyance.

Drusilla and the others piled out of the convertible, and they all surged through the door, held open by a middle-aged expressionless English butler.

"Drinks, Henderson—on the terrace," ordered Drusilla as she brushed past him.

THE house was big and wide and low. A hall ran clear through from the front to the back, which overlooked the ocean. Here doors stood wide open, and Drusilla led the way to a wide flagged terrace. White-painted iron furniture with brilliantly colored cushions was scattered about.

"Light some place, chillens," said Drusilla gaily and dropped into a chair, her hands going automatically to the artful disarray of her shining blue-black hair.

George sat beside Happy on a white iron bench that was cushioned in brilliantly striped canvas.

"I believe there was some mention of tennis," he said mildly. Drusilla gave him a lovely smile. "Don't be so energetic, darling," she purred sweetly. "None of us are dressed for tennis, and it's too much bother to change, and anyway, I thought we'd lounge a bit and then go over to the hotel for the tea-dancing; the dancing isn't bad, the floor's good, the music divine—"

George nodded. "Just as I thought," he said gently. "No tennis—it's a frame-up."

The butler came out with a tray of drinks, and the party became more animated. It was a typical lazy spring afternoon. But later, after an hour at the hotel, where she had danced with each of the other men and once or twice with George, Happy was heartily glad when they could escape.

"I could write her pretty neatly for spoiling our day together," said George angrily, as he sent the station wagon swiftly over the road toward Sundown.

His hand went out, covered hers, took it back and held it beneath his own on the wheel. And Happy told herself, with a feeling of complete surprise, that she didn't mind his holding her hand. She didn't mind a bit! And yet all afternoon she had been feeling that she didn't like him very well and that she'd like to manage an excuse to go back to New York in a day or two!

WASHINGTON COLUMN

BY PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NEA)—For about a year at the start of the war, one Mrs. Elizabeth P. MacDonald worked in the NEA Service office here in Washington. Among other things, she wrote a feature called "Homefront Forefront." This was a folksy, paragrahy, woman's page thing. It was intended to tell the good American housewife what wartime shortages to expect in sugar, salt pork, silk stockings and such stuff.

One day she came in and announced that she was quitting us cold—and for less money, too—so she could become a spy and wear flowers in her teeth and a long black dress.

So she joined Col. Wild Bill Donovan's cloak and dagger-type OSS—the hush-hush Office of Strategic Services. After flunking all the courses in the crazy cops and robbers finishing schools, which OSS operated in these parts, she was sent out to China and India for the duration. When it was all over she came home and wrote herself a book, which has just been published under the intriguing title of "Undercover Girl."

"UNDERCOVER GIRL" is the story of OSS from the woman's angle, and it shows what happens in this business of waging war when they let women mess around in it. Also, it is a revelation of what we didn't know about Elizabeth. Oh, the skulduggery that sweet little girl was capable of! Oh, the shame of it!

They assigned her to Moral Operations, the OSS department that dealt in black propaganda. Having spent all her innocent girlhood in Hawaii, Elizabeth knew some Japanese. And wherever she went, she was always running into four Hawaiians who knew more Japanese than she did. Together they conspired to fake letters, forge documents, print newspapers full of false information and arrange phony radio broadcasts for Japanese consumption.

The idea was to have all this stuff look like it was made in Japan. It was intended to create confusion and so persuade the Jap soldiers and the Jap homefront that they were fighting a lost cause.

For instance, when she first got to India, Mrs. MacD. came across a pack of captured Jap postcards in an intelligence office. They had been written in pencil and were addressed to the folks at home. Mrs. MacD. got the idea of erasing the messages and substituting things like, "Where are the boys in the jungle? We starve in the jungles." Or, "Don't ever tell our son I die for a lost cause."

Another of her forgeries was a fake order from the Japanese high command to all Jap troops, rescinding the old no-surrender policy and authorizing the men to give themselves up when they were outnumbered, too ill to fight, or out of ammunition.

NOT everything worked that slick, of course. One carefully thought-up OSS stunt was to print a lot of Jap railroad passes with a circular telling city people to go to the country because of the danger of U. S. bombs. The only trouble was that the circulars had been printed in Washington on American bond paper.

Then there was a Mr. Erp who knew that all Japs were afraid of foxes. He proposed that U. S. B-29 bombers release phosphorescent foxes in Jap waters. He said the animals would swim ashore and panic the populace. This experiment was tried in Long Island sound. The foxes promptly headed for sea and were never seen again.

"Undercover Girl" isn't all about Mrs. MacDonald. Much of it is a tribute to the heroines and the heroes of OSS who operated underground all over the world. With becoming modesty, Elizabeth says she was never cut out to be a "femme fatale" because she never learned to keep her cover, how to keep a secret, how to tell a lie with a straight face and stick to it under torture.

Just the same, they taught her how to shoot a Tommy gun, how to put knockout drops in a man's beer, how to use an OSS developed perfume called "Who, Me?" It smelled worse than skunk and the idea was to get it splashed on some enemy big shot so he'd have to go home and stay there two weeks until it wore off.

The question all this raises is whether women who know these things should now be allowed at large.

The needle-nosed craft, resembling a flying swordfish, is a Douglas-built plane, called the D-558-2. It has swept-back wings and tail, and is expected to perform at speeds between 650 and 750 miles per hour. This is an official U. S. Navy artist's sketch.

CROSSWORD

SPORTS

BY HARRY GRAYSON
NEA Sports Editor

NEW YORK—(NEA)—The deal sending shortstop Vernon Stephens and pitcher Jack Kramer from the Browns to the Red Sox for something like $200,000 and seven Joe Blows again makes the St. Louis club the American League's poor relation.

It also makes the Boston the A. L. club to beat in 1948. Junior Stephens, a smacking right-hand hitter, will have field days with Fenway Park's friendly leftfield wall.

Kramer is a class right-hander, presents the enemy with one more tough cookie to beat.

And Joe McCarthy will make no mistakes.

THE Browns assumed some stature during the war, seemed definitely out of the woods when wealthy Richard C. Muckerman purchased the franchise lock, stock and barrel.

Muckerman poured a lot of money into Sportsman's Park and into his outfit's minor league subsidiaries. Before the club went to Miami to train last spring, he called in all hands, asked them what they believed they were worth, gave it to them. For that the club sank deeper and deeper into the cellar.

So Muckerman fired the manager and sold the Browns' two best players.

And swapping quality for quantity is the surest way known to remain in the basement.

Dick Muckerman obviously has become as fed up with the Browns as the rest of the people in St. Louis.

Once more the Browns are a serious problem to the American League.

Pop Warner hits the unlimited tions of the United Nations are Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Russian delegate Aderi Gromyko.

Daniel J. Walsh, a hurried, energetic man who is UN admissions officer, finds that Mrs. Roosevelt and Gromyko are the personalities whom the 3,200 persons who seek tickets to UN sessions of the full General Assembly at Flushing Meadow, Walsh said, and about 250 tickets for committee meetings and 130 for Security Council sessions.

"People want to see meetings where there are important men and big issues," he said. "Right now they want to attend a session on the Palestine problem. When Mr. Marshall, Russian Foreign Secretary V. M. Molotov and British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin speak at General Assembly meetings, the biggest demand is to see them.

Silver-haired Edward Stettinius, former U. S. secretary of state, was the most popular figure with visitors when he used to attend UN sessions. Now Gromyko is the biggest day-to-day male attraction, and Mrs. Roosevelt the biggest female attraction.

Walsh said his biggest problem was knowing when meetings of the Assembly, committees and Security Council would be held in time to pass out tickets. When he knows far enough in advance, he tries to arrange for out-of-town high school and college groups to attend the session. On short notice he tries to get nearby schools to send delegations.

Since the present session of the Assembly opened early in September, about 40,000 persons have attended its sessions, committee meetings, and Security Council meetings.

Walsh's office has 12 girls at Flushing Meadow all the time the Assembly is in session just to answer the calls requesting tickets. During the morning, they answer about 800 calls an hour.

"People are interested in the UN," Walsh said. "They want to know what's going on, but we just haven't got tickets enough for all of them to see for themselves. The only thing I can tell them is 'first come, first served.'"

Here's How To Keep 'Em Down On Old Farm

MADISON, Wis. (UP)—Young people may be "persuaded" to stay on the farm, three University of Wisconsin teachers believe. They advocate remodeling the farm house so it can compete with more comfortable and convenient housing in cities. In a booklet, "When You Remodel Your Farm House," they suggest replacing the old-fashioned kitchen with a modern one. Other rebuilding would include a bathroom, garage and storage space — to make it more truly a home. The co-authors are Max Larock of the department of agricultural engineering and Margaret McGordic and Louise Young, home management experts.

The Minnesota Historical Society has a display of 80,000 songs dated between 1840 and 1900.

OAK RIDGE 'GRAVES' MOSTLY FOR ATOMIC STUFF

Editor's note: The atomic age gave the United States a new city—Oak Ridge, Tenn. Much of the material for the atomic bomb was prepared there. Oak Ridge still is a full-fledged city, working now to apply atomic energy to peacetime purposes. Here is the first of several dispatches by a United Press Correspondent who visited this atomic energy laboratory city.

Five years ago the well-hidden city in the Cumberland mountains was just a "rabbit run." It grew to 75,000 war-time population. Last Oct. 1, the population was 35,000.
 Because of security, a certain amount of regimentation must apply to the lives of Oak Ridge. But City Manager Doan says nobody complains. Families that moved out want to return.

Doan, handsome white-haired, sun-tanned Minnesotan, is a government appointee. The people elect his advisory council of ten for one-year terms.
 Doan outlined a master plan of civic improvements to be put into effect beginning next spring. It includes construction of 1,500 permanent-type houses within 8 years. Apartments and dormitories still sprawl in the valleys and on the hillsides of Oak Ridge.
 In the spring of 1943, employees were asked for names for the community then under construction. Oak Ridge was chosen for one reason, because its rural sound kept outside curiosity to a minimum.
 That curiosity was satisfied, finally, when the first atom bomb was dropped on Japan. Only then did the thousands of workers know they were helping to manufacture mass death.

Change of Pace
 IRONTON, O. (UP)—Sherman Rightell has quit the automobile body and fender repair business to become a hair stylist in a beauty shop operated by his wife at London, O.

The people of peace-time Oak Ridge seem happy, content. City Manager L. Z. Doan says they are. Perhaps one factor is the accent being placed on atomic research for peacetime uses, for medicine, Occasionally, a red truck manned by specially protected workmen wails through the city hauling some 'hot' equipment to the graveyard. Everybody gives the truck a wide berth.

 One whole building as big as a short city block is being dismantled now for burial. The men taking it apart are allowed to work only brief periods at a time. Checkers and Geiger counters—magic tubes that "bark" when radiation is present—test the workers frequently.

Heartsease

I Go To The Dentist
Oh, Lord! Why don't I stop the car? There's his office right there I'll just drive around the block again...

The doctor bows and waves me to the Chair. His voice is soothing: "Open wide, please."
Very quietly, I spit chewing gum into his face. He smiles in a pained, grotesque sort of way...

The nurse speaks from somewhere behind me.
I lunge . . . out into the open air . . . halfway fall, sprinting down the steps. I jerk the car door open and try to start the engine...

What's a little trip to the dentist?

This Is Happy

By PEGGY DERN

THOUGH Happy was seething with anger, she had to hold her tongue for the time being. For they had come out in a little grassy clearing on a bluff above the dark river and there before them was a wide-spreading, pleasant-looking white farmhouse.

George helped her out of the car and they crossed the oyster-shell drive to the double doors that stood open on this mild spring day.

A middle-aged woman, neat and trim in a black frock, greeted them cordially and showed them to a table on a widscreened porch built out over the river.

There was no discussion over a menu or ordering; obviously George had made arrangements in advance.

"Nice view," he said, answering the greeting of two couples who were just coming in.

a bit if we did," he suggested, without enthusiasm. Drusilla had commandeered a chair from another table.

GEORGE performed the introductions, and Happy realized that, of the group of four or five accompanying Drusilla, none seemed to be at ease.

When, a moment later, a harassed-looking waiter announced that Miss Drusilla's table was ready, she stood up somewhat reluctantly.

"We're all playing tennis at Rose-Hedge after lunch, Georgie Forgie; I'll expect you," she drawled, a command in her tone.

"Oh, but I really think you'd better, George, because, you know, my plans aren't so fixed but what I could trail you and Miss What's-her-Name around all afternoon and evening, I'm not sure, after all, that that might not be more fun than tennis, now that I think it over," drawled Drusilla sweetly.

"I happen to know that you are quite capable of doing just that!" "Of course I am, sweetie; how nice that you realize it," she cooed and walked away, her small retinue behind her, without a backward glance or a word for Happy.
