

WILMINGTON, Del. (UP) — The duPont Co., has developed a long-sought dry seed disinfectant which is almost odorless. It is "Ceresan" M, recommended for use against many seed-borne and soil-borne crop diseases, including seed-borne anthracnose, angular leafspot, seed decay, and seedling damping-off of cotton.

NEW YORK (UP) — Edward Sweeney, 48, awakened in his rooming house to find his bed on fire. He ran to the door, opened it, went through and slammed it behind him—only to find he was in a clothes closet and could not get out. Other tenants smelled the smoke and summoned firemen, who liberated Sweeney.

Henry Pullman of the Pullman Store, as Hotpoint representative in this area, is co-operating with them in their efforts to do something about the prevailing high prices in their line with the view of helping to halt inflation.

Idaho Mining Town Finds Way To End Troubles

By John Corlett
United Press Staff Correspondent
STIBNITE, Ida. (UP) — Deep in the mountains of central Idaho lies this model mining village. It lies 80 miles over two mountain passes from a railroad and a highway.

The Bradley Mining Co. has one of its major operations here and though it has employed hundreds of men in its tungsten, antimony and gold mines the last decade never once has there been even a murmur of labor trouble. There is no union here—except one between employees and management. The relationship between employee and employer is unique. Idaho is dotted with ghost towns, the result of old mining booms. When the towns were booming the people lived in halfway primitive style. The houses were mere shacks without conveniences.

Not so here. Houses are modern. So are conveniences. Life was busy in the old-time mining towns. At Stibnite it is peaceful. There are no bars. But there is a recreation hall and sports of all kind from bowling to skiing.

Employees have had a voice in operation of the mines ever since the Bradley Co. took over the vast tungsten and antimony operations. The tungsten was mined out during the war. But antimony and gold are still produced.

All work is supervised by the employees representative committee. Representatives of employees and management sit on that committee and they review, suggest and decide on just about every detail of mine operation and community life. The committee meets every two weeks. The town paper, the Stibnite Miner, records faithfully every detail of the meeting.

Recently it was announced at a meeting that the internal revenue bureau had approved a management plan to set up a profit-sharing plan and that only approval by the wage and hour division was needed before the plan could be put into operation. It calls for setting up a trust fund for employees out of profits.

The committee evaluates and awards money prizes for suggestions put into use at the mine and mill. It checks on every little detail that may lead to friction and grievances.

Death of Recluse Recalls Revenge For Social Snub

By JAMES MAHONY
United Press Staff Correspondent
NEWPORT, R. I. (UP)—The bizarre story of a strange revenge ended with the death of Mrs. Harriet Gardiner Lynch Coogan in a New York hotel suite. She had shut herself up there for 37 years.

The 84-year-old widow of a Tammany leader was bitter to the end over a social humiliation suffered in 1910. At that time, she had been trying for seven years to be accepted by New York and Newport society.

Her humiliation and revenge, both centered in Newport.

Mrs. Coogan, in her efforts to scale the top rung of the social ladder, moved into a $200,000 mansion, Whitehall, built by her husband. At a fitting climax, she planned the evening-out party of her daughter Jessie.

It was to be the crowning point of their lives. The mansion was decorated lavishly, lights gleamed from every window of the huge house. Mrs. Coogan and her daughter waited expectantly for the guests to arrive.

Everyone of importance had been invited.

No one arrived.

They waited for an hour. Still no one came.

Mrs. Coogan had enough. She took her daughter away, and the strange revenge of Mrs. Coogan began.

She moved into a New York hotel, where she lived as a recluse and left the Newport mansion to rot.

The weather and prowlers took their toll and the house fell to ruins. Windows were smashed, tramps wandered in and out and parkers spent the night on the deserted estate.

Whitehall was an eyesore. Owners of fashionable houses complained. Real estate operators complained. Even the mayor wrote asking that Mrs. Coogan do something—anything to rid the city of the crumbling ruins.

Mrs. Coogan ignored them all, just as she had been ignored. Every year she mailed a $1,000 tax payment to keep the mansion in her name and in the condition she wanted.

Fire burned part of the house, adding to the wreckage and disgust of Newport, but it wasn't until 1945 that the building finally was razed.

Even then, Mrs. Coogan remained in seclusion in her hotel suite. Employees delivered her meals, but never saw her. One of the few men to enter her presence and talk with her on business matters was interviewed in a dark room.

"I never saw her face," he said.

Walks in Vain
BEDFORD, Ind. (UP)—Gordon R. Henderson, Democratic candidate for mayor of Bedford, listed $3 for shoe repair among items shown in his campaign report filed with the county clerk.

The young Democratic lawyer said he "wore a big hole in one shoe" while canvassing the voters for support.

Henderson lost his race.

First Woman to Reach Peak of Mt. McKinley!

Mrs. Bradford Washburn, wife of the director of the Boston Museum of Science and the first woman ever to climb Mt. McKinley in Alaska, shown with Lt. William D. Hackett, Army Ground Forces, and G. Robert Lange, University of New Hampshire, ascending the north peak of North America's tallest mountain. Mrs. Washburn (inset) is her furnished parka for protection against the icy blasts.

Bradford Washburn, leader of the expedition, prepares a warm, nourishing meal of Birds Eye frosted foods which were flown to the group by the Army Air Forces and dropped free-fall at several points along the climb.

Grant Pearson, Chief Ranger of Mt. McKinley National Park, with another member of the party, tests snow bridge over yawning crevasse with an ice axe. Snow was often more than 60 feet deep. The expedition, consisting of 12 men and Mrs. Washburn, spent 92 days on Mt. McKinley. Temperature often dropped to 30 below zero.

Washburn is the wife of the internationally known director of the Boston Museum of Science. "Morale is of prime importance," stated Mrs. Washburn. "We have learned from practical experience that good food can be one of the greatest morale-builders on any expedition. Our food, consisting largely of Birds Eye products flown to us by Northwest Airlines and the Army Air Forces' Tenth Squadron, not only was nutritional but also was tempting and tasty. Eating fresh vegetables and fruits—including strawberries—was a real pleasure 18,000 feet above the sea. In fact, we were the first expedition of its kind to use fresh food and several of us actually gained weight despite 92 days on the ice."

Led by Bradford Washburn, making his second successful climb of Mt. McKinley, the expedition was known as "Operation White Tower." Photography was under the supervision of RKO-Radio Pictures.

R. T. Jaynes made a business trip to Brownwood Monday.

Dr. Leonard S. Fosdick, in a paper presented to the American Association for the Advancement of Science, said that may explain why persons suffering from pellagra are immune to dental decay.

It also explains, he said, why natives of post-war Italy have little tooth decay. Surveys have indicated a general vitamin B deficiency among Italians.

Fosdick said no lactic acid forms in the mouth if there is no niacin present. Niacin is a member of the vitamin B complex family.

Other important factors in tooth decay, Fosdick said, are fermentable sugar in the diet and the amount of saliva flow of the individual.

In about 90 per cent of all cases, he said, fermentable sugars are necessary for acid production in the mouth.

"If we assume all other variables are constant, then the mere fact that the Eskimo, the inhabitants of war-torn Europe, and the starving people of India have little or no fermentable sugar in the diet would explain their apparent resistance to caries," Fosdick said.

"It would also explain why, when caries-free Eskimos assume the white man's diet, they may develop rampant caries, and why the caries activity of members of our armed forces who spent time in Japanese prison camps decreased materially."

Fosdick said persons with a copious flow of stimulated saliva are less susceptible to dental decay, while those with no saliva invariably have poor teeth.

"In this regard, it is interesting to speculate on the effect of prolonged nervous tension or emotion at disturbance on the flow of saliva," he said. "It is known that a stimulation of the sympathetic nervous system will cause a cessation of saliva flow. It has been suggested that, during times of stress, caries activity increases."

Health Hints

Have you ever stopped to consider what keeps you living—moving about in your daily work, making a living? Have you ever wondered why you or some member are sick, when the others with whom they live and associate are not affected?

When the body resistance is lowered one is more subject to disease regardless of the name it may be given. Lowering of the body resistance is due to a part or parts of organs and glands of the body not functioning properly. To have proper function you must have adequate nerve supply, proper supply of oxygen and a proper amount of nutrition, which is carried by the blood stream. A hindrance or blockage of either may cause disease. Very often the cause is found to be a defect in the nerve supply. Pressure upon nerves interfere with the flow of vital nerve energy. Very often chiropractors are able to assist you in regaining health.

Who Are We, Anyway?

Subject came up at Bill Webster's, the other day, as we were chatting over beer and pretzels. Just who are the folks who make up our town? Where'd they come from?

Well, Doc Hollister's Scotch-English ancestry; Will Dudley's folks were mining stock from Pennsylvania; Skip Powell's family were brewers back in Holland.

Guess our bloodstream's got a bit of every country of the globe—and every section of America. We've still got differences in taste and background—whether they apply to music, history, or beer. Only those differences don't matter—because we're self-respecting people, in a free, united land.

And from where I sit, that's what makes our towns and cities—our America—so strong, progressive, tolerant. Our championship of individual liberties has brought us people from all faiths, all lands—to prove that respect for one another's rights is the greatest bond humanity can know!
