WASHINGTON COLUMN

Congress Stalls Many Bills As They Wait Till Next Year

BY PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—If recent developments in Congress give any clues, politicians are counting heavily on an entirely different kind of administration in Washington for the next four years. This new trend in government is really the old, old trend. It comes from the ultra-conservative Republican majority. But it gets plenty of support from the ultra-conservative Democrats.

In general, the drift is to let things drift. Don't do anything this year that can be put off until next. For after inauguration day, there may be a new President. The cocky Republican old guard thinks he will be a safe member of the GOP. And right-wing Democrats from the south say now that it isn't going to be Harry Truman. So things like these are noticeable.

There's a move on to extend appointments of the five-man Atomic Energy Commission under David Lilienthal for one or at the most two years. The law calls for instituting a five-year stagger system in the appointments. By approving short-term appointments, the Republicans hope to replace Lilienthal and maybe some others with men of their own choosing.

INSTEAD of trying to write a new long-range farm program, as the Republicans promised in 1946 and '47, the House Agriculture Committee under Cliff Hope of Kansas has ditched the idea. It merely wants to extend the present law for another year.

Instead of coming to grips with the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act renewal, the majority in Congress apparently wants to procrastinate. The act expires June 12. President Truman has asked for the usual three-year extension, previously granted four times.

Tennessee Valley Authority—perhaps the greatest single accomplishment of the Roosevelt years—is under attack in both houses of Congress. In the lower House, appropriations to build a new steam-electric generating plant near Memphis are opposed by the private power lobby and may be denied. In the Senate, Nevada's George Malone has taken up the fight long led by Tennessee's McKellar to restrict TVA operations. Fear of a presidential veto is probably all that delays these crippling amendments.

Though President Truman has repeatedly urged the need for stand-by anti-inflationary controls, the Republican leadership has shown no interest. Chairman Robert A. Taft of the Joint Congressional Committee on Economic Reports has been too busy campaigning in Ohio to consider the draft of a report drawn up by his staff on these important matters. If there is any congressional interest in these things, it, too, is being put away until next year.

THE Senate has passed Senator Taft's long-range housing bill and a bill providing federal aids to education. But the still more conservative leadership in the House is stalling on both measures. Extension of social security coverage and increase in minimum wage rates are off to a late start and may get nowhere.

Tax reduction was passed over the President's veto. But long-needed general reform of the entire tax system has been postponed until next year, when Republicans hope they can tailor to their own fit.

What all these things add up to is an indication that the prevailing sentiment in Congress is "way over to the right on domestic issues. But it is open to question whether this is the prevailing sentiment of the voters.

Practically all recent public opinion polls have shown that the combined vote for what might be called the more liberal candidates—Truman, Stassen and Wallace—is greater than the combined vote for the conservatives—Taft, Dewey, Martin and MacArthur. This would indicate that the prevailing sentiment of the country is still progressive and left wing, rather than reactionary and right.

The Innocent Impostor

By Renee Shann

COPYRIGHT BY RENEE SHANN; DISTRIBUTED BY NEA SERVICE, INC.

THE STORY: When Patience, after apparently refusing to recognize Paul, greets Roger warmly, Paul leaves the party in a huff. He doesn't know that he has mistaken Charlotte for Patience. Patience discovers what has happened but by then Paul is gone. Charlotte makes a fuss over Dwight Breeden, the movie producer, Roger is particularly attentive to Patience.

XXI
THEY were dancing together now and he was holding her tightly.
"Patience?"
"Well?"
"Next time I want to meet you you won't run away, will you?"
"I—I don't know."
"Please—we could have such fun together."
"But there's Charlotte."
"She's all right. Look at her if you doubt it."
They were passing her at that moment. She was with Dwight Breeden sitting in a corner talking to him animatedly. Patience felt Roger's arm tighten round her.
"Do you go to your dressmaking academy tomorrow?"
"Yes."
"I'll be around when you leave..."

The evening slipped by with the party becoming more and more hilarious. There were turns now from some of the company. Songs that Patience didn't understand and felt she wouldn't like if she were able to. Charlotte danced again with Carl Brunner, a dance that was even more abandoned than the gypsy dance they had done in the show. Patience sat on the floor, in front of the crowd, with Roger beside her. With Roger's hand holding her beneath the billowing folds of her dress. With Roger murmuring to her as it was over: "Can't we slip away? Can't I see you home?"
She turned her head and looked at him and something she saw in his dark eyes frightened her.

"No. I'd rather wait for Charlotte."
And now Charlotte, her dance finished, was coming towards them, Dwight Breeden with her.
"I was wondering where you two had hidden yourselves."
"We've been here, darling, watching you," said Roger.
Charlotte slipped an arm around Patience. She yawned and said she was tired. She'd an idea it was about time they were all going home.

THEY went back to Charlotte's flat together. The two men went in for drinks with them. They sat in Charlotte's comfortable luxurious sitting-room talking show business, going over the events of the evening, discussing past successes and past failures, discussing the talent or otherwise of this and that actor or actress. Some it seemed had got to the top of the ladder through sheer hard work and merit. Others—Charlotte had an odd little laugh. It came now when Dwight Breeden mentioned Marion Lane who was starring in a new musical comedy.

"Of course everyone knows how she got the part," said Charlotte.
"You mean you think she's Barney Roberts' girl-friend?"
"Why, yes. Surely you knew?"
Dwight looked at Charlotte.
"That's the way to get on, Charlotte."
Charlotte tossed her head.
"I'm getting on under my own steam, thank you."
Roger's brows were drawn together. His face suddenly, Patience thought, looked oddly menacing. And then it cleared and he turned to her.
"Thank heaven, darling, you don't know what those two wicked sinners are talking about." He drained his glass, rose to his feet and said he was going.

Dwight got up from his chair reluctantly. He kissed Patience's hand and said he hoped he'd see her again very shortly. Then he kissed Charlotte. Roger kissed Charlotte too. And then he turned to Patience. For a moment he looked at her uncertainly. Then he touched her cheek with his fingers with a little caressing gesture.
"I'll be seeing you," he said. "Good night and be a good girl. You see, it suits you."

CHARLOTTE went to the door and saw them off. She returned to the sitting-room, unfastening the pearls at her throat as she came.
"I must say I feel utterly exhausted. You must be dead to the world."
"I'm not, really."
"Come along and undress in my room."

Patience fetched her night-dress—neat pink nunsvelling with a little round neck and elbow-length sleeves—and her dressing-gown of subdued blue flannel. Charlotte in the flimsiest chiffon house-coat sat at her mirror cleaning her face with cold cream.

"I say," she said suddenly, remembering, "tell me more about that young man who took me for you."
Patience remembered, too. And marveled that just for so blessed a space of time she'd forgotten him. Now it all came rushing back to her. The way he'd looked when she'd seen him at the theater. Hard and cold and as if he hated the sight of her. Patience told her sister the whole story.

Charlotte swung round on the gilt stool when it was finished.
"Honestly, Patience, you're a ninny. Letting those old girls take all the fun out of life for you. My goodness, do you think I'd have let that young man go if I'd really been about him? No, indeed! I'd have done something about it."

"But what can I do?" Patience inquired desperately.
"Write to him. Waylay him next time you see him on the train. . . . My dear, there are a hundred ways!"

Airport News

"What's wrong with aviation." has been persistently asked since 1903, and a lot of what has been wrong has been intelligently faced and corrected. Ask the same question today, and a lot of people will tell you the thing wrong with aviation is the people in it—or the people flying 'em.

The big difficulty the operator has in keeping his field and community free of accidents doesn't lie alone in sparing no effort toward developing good flying habits in the students. He has out-of-town pilots to contend with, who aren't always considerate of their own lives and the lives of others.

When CAA investigates private flying accidents, the investigation does not necessarily stop with the pilot involved; often it is carried on back to the instructor who trained the pilot.

Does all this legality take the utility and enjoyment out of flying? Not by a long way. The average pilot enjoys more freedom in the air than the man on the highway ever thought of. He gets himself into trouble only when he disregards safety minimums at altitude and operational limits of his plane—and his own limitations.

SALT LAKE CITY (UP) - Carl Swenson, cab driver, sat patiently, while his three feminine passengers "divvied" up the 35-cent fare for the short ride they just had had.

Much computing went into the negotiations. The fare couldn't be split three ways exactly.

But the women nearly made it. Swenson accepted 33 cents - three dimes and three pennies - and two cents worth of Utah state one-mill tax tokens, seven from each of the women and six from the third.

Sweden's export of iron ore in 1947 amounted to 8,500,000 tons, but it is estimated that this year the figure can be increased to 10,000,000 tons.

Britain Builds Homes With Use Of A Spray Gun

LONDON, England (UP)—House-building with a spray gun is Britain's newest short-cut to a target of 750,000 post-war homes by the end of 1948.

The trick is a new building material called pyrok. It looks like ordinary plaster, can be sprayed over wire mesh to an eight-inch coat, and sets within 50 minutes.

The main shell of a spray-gun house can be completed at a fraction of the cost of normal methods. It works equally well over steel, iron, asbestos - cement sheeting, galvanized sheeting, brickwork, concrete timber, clay blocks, wood or cork.
