AUSTIN-Governor Allan Shivers gave his blessing to a program now used in 16 other states when he said this week he liked the idea of a presidential primary for Texas.

He said he thought the idea was sound, and revealed to his ress conference he was "seriousy thinking" of proposing such a system for consideration by the ext legislature.

However, even if the governor's proposal should be adopted, the situation won't be changed for 1952. Texas voters interested in having a hand in selecting the next president of the United States will start by attending their party precinct convention May 3rd.
