On The Farm In Palmer County

By R. MACK HEALD
County Agent

The Texas Animal Health Commission recently announced a quarantine order that re-imposes restrictions on swine movements in Texas placed in effect March 29, to control hog cholera.

The new order became effective May 28, and it will remain in effect until further notice.

All previous restrictions on swine movements contained in the previous order will remain the same, with the exception of one additional restriction.

The new restriction order will require holding all purchased swine for 30 days at the premise of the purchaser, and no movement will be allowed except for slaughter during the quarantine.

If swine are apparently healthy, this premise quarantine will automatically expire after the 30th day without any inspection.

It is strongly felt that extending the quarantine control will bring Texas closer to the complete eradication of the hog cholera virus by the December 1972 target date. Although 22 cases of hog cholera have been confirmed since March 29, none of these cases have been connected with swine movements after that date.

Five counties -- Denton, Freestone, Wise, Parker, and Palo Pinto -- have been completely released from federal quarantine. Originally, all or portions of 33 Texas counties were under federal quarantine.

All swine can be moved, provided that proper inspections and permits are acquired.

Swine moving to slaughter can be transported to packing houses or public markets without inspection or written permits. Once at the market, they can't be legally sold as feeders.

Swine can be moved for exhibition purposes on permit from the Executive Director of the Texas Animal Health Commission. Hogs going to shows must be inspected on the farm, earmarked or tagged, and accompanied by the permit.

Special breeder or feeder sales must be cleared with authorities in the animal health commission. Written permission can be granted with certain requirements, including on the farm inspection.

Swine may be moved one time with no diversion enroute from one farm to another if they are inspected on the farm and moved under permit.

CORN IRRIGATION GUIDES AIRED

Timely irrigation on corn can mean extra bushels at harvest and often more production per acre-inch of water.

"Corn irrigations should be

Thrifty Club Meets With Mrs. Bradshaw

Thrifty Club met Monday afternoon in the home of Mrs. H. D. Bradshaw with nine members present and one visitor, Miss Regina Jones of Amarillo.

Those present covered coat hangers for the hostess.

Snacks, cake and ice tea were served to Mrs. O. H. Jones, Mrs. G. A. Bandy, Mrs. P. O. Dixon, Mrs. George Douglas, Mrs. Owen Patton, Mrs. Howard Kelso, Mrs. Laverne Stevens, Mrs. Myrtle Perry, Miss Jones and the hostess, Mrs. Bradshaw.

applied with the plant's seasonal water use pattern in mind." "Irrigations during high water use stages of growth contribute heavily to high corn yields while only slight increase in yields is obtained during growth stages requiring less water."

Generally, irrigation should begin at the six-to-eight leaf growth stage. The water requirement is normally about one-inch every ten days by this stage and increases rapidly as growth continues. Irrigation prior to six-leaves often produce rapid vegetative growth that results in a large, more lush plant early in the season. Such plants may require more water later in the season for grain production. Larger plants can increase the demands for irrigation water that is already limited on many farms.

"Corn has a high water requirement from just prior to tasseling through the dough stage of grain development."

"Adequate moisture is especially vital to the corn plant during this period. Water can be four-to-five inches during tasseling and selling, especially when temperatures are high. Irrigations should be keyed to this growth period."

Corn irrigation studies were conducted last year on the Aubrey Heathington farm that supports this information. There was no yield increase from an irrigation applied at the six-leaf stage when the last of five additional alternate furrow irrigations was applied during the early dough stage about August 1. However, the application of six additional irrigations so that the last irrigation occurred during the dough stage on August 15 brought a 15 bushel per acre yield increase.

"Slight yield increases can be obtained if the first irrigation is at the six-leaf stage and optimum soil moisture conditions are maintained through grain development." "Such an irrigation program may be profitable where the irrigating capacity is sufficient to irrigate frequently enough to maintain these moisture levels throughout the later stages of plant development." "The big yield boost comes from irrigations at tassell, milk and grain filling."

The cantaloupe is named after Italy's melon center, Cantaluppi.

WHAT IS THE SOURCE OF LIFE

Everyone must admit that something has always existed; and that this something was self-existent, and uncaused. This self-existent is the cause of the world and of life. There has always been something, for something now exists. If at one time there was not anything there would not be anything now. Out of nothing comes nothing. If there were nothing to begin with, there would be nothing to end with. And thus it is that the atheist grants sooner or later that something has always existed and that something was self-existent, uncaused. He affirms that it was matter, not spirit; but on the point that all must believe in something as having eternally existed, the atheist can have no argument with the theist. The only issue concerns the nature of the original cause. It boils down to this: Either in the beginning God, the eternal one, created the heavens and the earth; or in the beginning Matter, the eternal thing, created all the forms of matter that we see, including life. The atheist agrees life did not always exist; but life is here. They must believe that life on earth had an origin.

The question is, what is the source of life? Is it a who or a thing? When you see a house, our power lines and poles, our water system, who built them? Are you satisfied with the answer: One stormy night the wind blew them all together out of matter that already existed. We would not be satisfied with the answer that these things designed themselves, or that some thing designed them; but we are satisfied when we get back to a person. Just so, God is the source of all life. He is the eternal personality that has created this universe as it is today.

WHEAT GROWERS REPORT -- Jim Russell, right, manager of Bovina Wheat Growers, Inc., presented the financial report for last year to the approximately 125 persons attending the annual meeting of the organization Thursday night of last week in Bovina Schools cafeteria. Webb Gober, secretary of board of directors, left, read the minutes of last year's meeting in the business session of the program.

ONE JOB LEADS TO ANOTHER

IT'S IN THE BAG. It's safe and sound. It's two expensive camera lenses in very inexpensive protective foam cups. This novel use for foam cups was discovered by a professional photographer on assignment to get pictures of foam cups and containers in their many day-to-day uses for hot and cold beverages and foods. Pittsburgh photographer Bud Harris says it works, besides saving valuable time in switching lenses. He'll use them from now on to protect his working "tools", which is fine with the Foam Cup Manufacturers Division of the Society of the Plastics Industry. Meanwhile, foam cups continue to be used by the billions for the usual reasons since they maintain the temperature of the foods they are used for at least 30 minutes longer than any other disposable container.

For St. Ann's -- Council Meets, Discusses Plans

Committees were named and various plans were made in conjunction with the construction of the new sanctuary of St. Ann's Catholic Church at Parish Council meeting Thursday of last week in Parish Hall. Thirteen members and Rev. Norman Boyd were present at the meeting.

Council members appointed Gene Brito, Ben Rejino, Leon Schilling and Larry Jesko, all members of the building committee, to serve on the furniture committee. Appointed to the landscaping committee were Stanley Klimek and Dan Koelzer.

Dedication ceremonies, slated soon after completion of construction, were discussed with Mrs. Ben Rejino named as chairman of the committee.

Catechism classes, which were held last week and this at St. Ann's, were reported to have about 75 children enrolled. Five nuns from Broken Arrow, Okla., were here to teach the classes.

Larry Jesko, representative of Knights of Columbus, reported a new slate of officers of that organization to the council. They include Gene Brito, Grand Knight; Joe Schilling, deputy Grand Knight; Jim Ball, treasurer; Lee Dennis Jesko, reporter; Stan Klimek, trustee; William Pankratz, warden; Mike Duran, advocate; Ben Messman, chancellor; and Jesko, council representative.

Knights of Columbus will provide missiles for use at church services each week.
