County road question headed for litigation?

by Wes Burnett

Is it a county road or is not a county road?

That question, under contention for the past two years, came up again at Monday's Garza County Commissioners' Court when both sides of the issue made presentations to the court regarding road improvements on the south side of Lake Alan Henry.

Land developers Lawayne Feagin and Jody Ashley presented a detailed report urging the court to make necessary improvements to County Road 378, also known as the "Fuller Road."

Feagin showed a series of charts emphasizing the increased taxable value to property along the lake. "Within the next two years we estimate an additional 40 lots will be sold in Oak Canyon Estates at an average cost of $55,000 for a total of $2,200,000. Also within those two years, we estimate construction of approximately 20 homes with a total value of $3,000,000."

Feagin added that using those estimates, "Garza County Appraisal District will annually collect approximately $105,029 in additional revenues within Precinct 4."

Feagin also cited statutory law and court cases upholding the claim that the "Fuller Road" has been and is considered a county road.

An opposing view of the status of the roadway was presented by Sweetwater attorney Alan Carmichael, representing rancher Will Senn, who claims the "Fuller Road," which cuts across his ranch, is a private road.

Carmichael recommended an alternate route for the roadway, repeating the offer made by Senn last year to donate 60 feet of right-of-way around the west and north side of his ranch.

The court voted to continue considering the matter, but took no action, waiting for information from engineer Rich Oller as to costs for constructing the new roadway or improving the existing roadway. County attorney Les Acker said that he believes the county does own a roadway, but that it has never been developed along the stated meets and bounds according to the original 1935 deed.

Commissioner Mason McClellan reminded the court that in June 2004 a unanimous vote approved the agreement worked out between Acker and Carmichael. That vote was recorded in the minutes of the June 28, 2004 commissioners' court meeting. A special meeting has been set for Tuesday, June 21 to consider the matter.

The Post Dispatch learned Tuesday afternoon that developers plan to file a challenge against Senn in 106th Judicial District Court in the near future to clarify the legal status of the roadway.

In other matters, the court approved the recommendation of Post Volunteer Fire Department chief Darrell Reece to reject a general county-wide fire ban and fireworks restrictions at this time. Reece said that recent rains and general wet weather make it unnecessary at this time to implement those restrictions.

A consolidation of voting places, recommended by County Clerk Jim Plummer was approved (see related story this issue). A zoning ordinance change for a one acre tract near Lake Alan Henry was approved from agriculture to commercial. The plotted development is to house a hotel and apartments.

Commissioners approve reduction of county voting boxes

In a move designed for voter convenience and taxpayer savings, Garza County officials trimmed the number of polling places during Monday's regular Commissioners Court meeting.

The action, which rescinded a similar order dated May 23, provides that future elections in Garza County will be conducted at the following locations:

- Boxes 1 and 5 - Presbyterian Church, 910 W. 10th St., Post
- Box 2 - Southland School, Route 2, box 103, Southland
- Boxes 3 and 9 - Citizens Bank, 210 N. Broadway, Post
- Box 4 - Precinct 4 Emergency Bldg., FM 3519 and CR 355, Justiceburg
- Boxes 6 and 8 - Post Community Center, 113 W. Main, Post
- Box 7 - Wells Fargo Bank, 216 W. Main, Post.

"Due to the costs and inconvenience associated with conducting elections at numerous election precincts at different polling place locations within the county, the Commissioners Court of Garza County... determines that it would be more convenient to voters and financially prudent to the taxpayers to conduct elections by combining election boxes and relocating them to the new locations recited above," the new order reads. "Making these changes will be more cost effective to the county and allow more convenience to the registered voters."

According to the order, polling locations with more than one election box will be separated within each building and clearly marked by precinct number and box number.

On God's Word

by Timothy W. Burnett

Continuing with Jesus Christ's prayer to his Father, John 17:15-26.

Jesus Christ continued to pray, "I pray not that you should take them out of the world, but that you should keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through your truth. Your word is truth. As you have sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth" (John 17:15-19).

A very important lesson is learned from the above prayer. Jesus told his Father that he was not praying that He should take them out of the world, but that He should keep or guard them from the evil of the world. He prayed according to the truth. If it were necessary to take them out of the world, then he would have prayed as such. Instead he specifically clarified to God that he was not praying to take them out. To be taken out of the world very likely referred to death. If, as is popularly believed, death directly people to heaven, then Jesus would have no doubt prayed for them to die. Even during the days that Jesus Christ lived on earth there were very powerful religious systems that believed death was the direct passage to a better or worse life. In John 11:24 Martha told Jesus, "I know that he [Lazarus] shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Pertaining to the born again children of God who have died, we have 1 Corinthians 15:51-54 and 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18 both of which teach about the dead being made alive again. According to Hebrews 2:14, death is from the devil. Jesus Christ understood the truth of God's word concerning death, and knew not to pray for this.

Another thing to learn is that Jesus was sending them into the world just as God sent him. To be sent basically meant to be called into a service. See 1 Peter 1:20, "Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you." This verse is talking about Jesus Christ. Now go to Romans 8:29, "For whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren." This is talking about God's born-again children during the age of the grace of God. The truth that God had foreknowledge of His people does not mean that they were walking around in heaven with God in the beginning. It just means that He knew of their future existence from the beginning.

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word. That they all may be one, as you, Father are in me, and I in you, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that you have sent me. And the glory which you gave me I have given them, that they may be one, and that the world may know that you have sent me, and have loved them, as you have loved me" (John 17:20-23). Jesus Christ, the first born son of God, prayed for us while he was still walking on the earth. That's fantastic! Also, please note that to be one with another means to be one in purpose. In this case it meant to be one according to God's purpose.

Jesus' prayer ended with John 17:24-26, "Father, I will that they also, whom you have given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory, which you have given me. For you loved me before the foundation of the world. O righteous Father, the world has not known you. But I have known you, and these have known that you have sent me. And I have declared unto them your name, and will declare it, that the love wherewith you have loved me may be in them, and I in them." His prayer came to pass in that it is now available for people to become born again children of God.

IT'S NICE, WITH NOTES OF OAK AND CHERRY... BUT WHY CAN'T OHIO WORKERS COMP JUST SEND A CHECK LIKE NORMAL STATES?

Click it or ticket

by Walter E. Williams

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA), an office within the U.S. Department of Transportation, just finished its annual campaign to get us to wear our seatbelts under a program called "Click It or Ticket." States receive federal subsidies to ticket drivers if they or their passengers are not buckled up.

Some states, such as Maryland, are so eager that they've equipped their officers with night vision goggles, similar to those used by our servicemen in Iraq. Maryland state troopers bagged 44 drivers traveling unbuckled under the cover of darkness. The NHTSA's "Click It or Ticket" program is another step toward making Americans serfs of the state.

Let's look at it. I personally believe that wearing seatbelts is a good idea, and I buckle up and remind my passengers to do so as well. Because seatbelt usage saves lives, mandating such is an abomination in a free society. There are many other legislative actions that are offensive to liberty and can have saving as their justification, a matter I'll turn to later. But let's talk about the immorality of mandated seatbelt usage.

Let's start with the question: Who owns Walter E. Williams? Is it President Bush, the U.S. Congress, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, or do I own myself? I'm guessing that any reasonable person would agree that I own Walter E. Williams. The fact that I own myself means that I have the right to take risks with my own life but not others'. That's why it's consistent with morality to mandate that my car have working brakes. If my car doesn't have working brakes, then I risk the lives of others, and I have no right to do so. If I choose not to wear a seatbelt, then I risk my own life, which I have every right to do.

Of course, if it's stipulated that President Bush, the Congress or the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania owns me, I have no such right; I'd be risking their property. Some might rejoin by saying, "Williams, if you're not wearing a seatbelt, and don't do us the favor of dying in an accident and become an incapacitated vegetable, society will have to bear the expense of taking care of you." That's not a problem of liberty and self-ownership. It's a problem of socialism.

There's no moral case for forcing anyone to care for me for any reason. When we buy into socialism, we buy into paternalistic government. It reminds me of what my mother used to say during my rebellious adolescent years: "Boy, as long as you're living in my house and I'm paying the bills, you're going to do what I say!" Paternalism is OK for children, but is it suitable for adults? For those who agree with "Click It or Ticket" because it saves lives, would they agree with other possible lifesaving mandates?

Each year, obesity claims the lives of 300,000 Americans and adds over $100 billion to health care costs. Should government enforce a 2,000-calorie intake limit per day? There's absolutely no dietary reason to add salt to our meals. Salt can lead to hypertension-induced heart attacks that kill thousands. Should government outlaw salt consumption? Sedentary lifestyles have been shown to lead to shorter and less healthy lives. Should there be government-mandated exercise programs?

The justifications used for "Click It or Ticket" can easily provide the template for government control of our diets and other lifestyle features. Maybe I'm a bit out of touch with today's Americans. With the silence in the face of attacks on Burger King and McDonald's, alleging they cause obesity, maybe Americans are pining for more government control over their lives — and "Click It or Ticket" is just softening up the rest of us for what lies ahead in the future.

Fear not China

by Sheldon Richman

China. Why has that word for so long struck fear in the hearts of Americans? During the Cold War people harbored terrible fantasies about hordes of Chinese swarming over them and imposing a virulent Oriental communism. Now the Cold War is over, and although China still has a communist-inspired authoritarian government, this is not your father's Red nemesis. Much has changed in the world's most populous country.

Yet we remain in fear. But now it is an economic fear: China will buy up all the beef. China will buy up all the wheat. China will make all the textiles and clothing and take our jobs. China's trade surplus with the United States will put us hopelessly in debt.

Nonsense. It's about time we kept our heads and applied some basic economics to what's going on.

Economically, the Chinese are freer than they used to be. Chinese entrepreneurs can raise capital, and foreigners can invest their money, to create productive enterprises. Chinese workers have far more choices than they used to have. The result has been stunning economic growth and an export boom fueled by low-priced high-quality products.

Predictably, this worries some people, specifically, Americans and other nationals who make what the Chinese are now selling so successfully. This isn't worrying American consumers, who find that, because their dollars stretch further, they have more to invest or spend on additional things.

But some people just can't take good news. They have to look for the gray lining in every silver cloud. The success of the Chinese sellers and their American customers, we're told, is really not good news. Why not? Because Americans are losing their jobs. Because the Chinese aren't buying enough American goods and the resulting trade deficit puts us more and more in their debt. Because the Chinese government is artificially holding down the value of its currency in order to make exports more attractive (as if politicians know what the exchange rate should be). Because ... because ... because. But the what about the great deals at the stores? Their Marxist (Groucho, that is) response, in essence, is: who are you going to believe, me or your eyes?

I say believe your eyes. None of the objections is valid. A highly advanced economy always is "and always should be" losing some jobs. They are replaced by technology in some cases, by cheaper lower-skilled foreign labor in others. This is progress, because new and higher-paying jobs take their place. In 1905 lots more people were growing food than are today. Were we better off then? The Chinese inroads into the American market have made things more difficult for workers in Bangladesh than for workers here. We demanding consumers deserted other third-world producers as soon as we saw what the Chinese were willing to provide.

Let's hear no more trade-deficit-equals-debt buncombe. First, there is no reason to expect bilateral merchandise accounts to balance. None. Second, that deficit is perfectly offset by the capital-account surplus with China: what they don't spend here they invest here. Period. Anyone who is concerned about China's being a creditor should direct his wrath at the U.S. government. It's the one engaging in deficit spending and selling Treasury bills to the Chinese.

If none were sold, none could be bought.

The new anti-Chinese hysteria makes less sense than the old did. When will we get it through our heads that it is good for others to get rich? It makes us even richer.

Sharing the wealth

by Bill O'Reilly

Riddle me this: What do Madonna, Bono, President Bush and Prime Minister Blair all have in common? They want to help poor Africans, that's what. But how to do that is the rub.

Madonna has signed up for the latest Bob Geldof concert series to heighten "awareness" of the dire African situation. She will join Paul McCartney and other pop stars in a series of shows next month.

This is a nice if somewhat fuzzy idea. The last time Geldof swam into these waters, in 1985, his "Live Aid" project raised as much as $245 million for Ethiopian famine victims. The project got great press and was a huge financial success. Then reality intruded.

According to the watchdog group Charity Navigator, the Ethiopian dictator Mengistu stole much of the donated money and used it to pay his thuggish army to continue to oppress starving people in the countryside. That part of "Live Aid" was mostly ignored by the press because it would have been politically incorrect to point it out. The truth is that in the chaos that is Africa, whoever has the most guns controls any aid that flows into their area. Madonna can sing her heart out, but that's the fact.

Enter Bono, the U2 superstar who wants a coordinated effort by the industrial world to deliver help to the poorest people on the planet. Bono, a smart and good man, understands corruption and apathy. But while Bono has the power to persuade, he does not have the ability to coordinate a massive relief effort.

So who does?

The United Nations could do it but will not because that agency is almost as chaotic and corrupt as Africa. While U.N. diplomats dine in splendor in midtown Manhattan, thousands of destitute human beings waste away all over the world. Secretary-General Kofi Annan is ineffective, and until there is a crusader for justice at the helm of the United Nations, little will be accomplished there.

So that leaves Bush and Blair. Both men recognize the tragedy of a continent that cannot feed itself and can't even deliver basic medical care to its people. But with an intense war on terror going on, both leaders are a bit distracted, and resources, especially in the U.S., are stretched very thin. However, if the president and prime minister would team up with private agencies like Catholic Charities and Doctors Without Borders, which are already on the ground in Africa, then at least a good beginning could be made.

The money, food and medicine are available. This is a delivery and accountability situation. Africa needs a disciplined "Marshall Plan" that would provide the continent with medicine, food and an educational infrastructure. Unfortunately, few African nations have demonstrated the competence to implement such a plan, so the Western powers must take the whole thing over.

Remember, post World War II Europe and Japan were rebuilt mostly by American administrators. It was literally "our way or no highways." And if African nations don't buy into that, then they should be on their own.

So it is good that the "Material Girl" wants to ship material over to Africa. I am with Bono when he sings, "We have to carry each other." The world's wealthy nations do have a responsibility to combat suffering along with terrorism. But no longer can we allow chaotic nations to call the shots on how aid programs are run. If we really want to help the poor — we have to get up close and personal.

"We wanted to find a way to thank our customers for their business, and we thought a small token of our appreciation during the spring season would show area residents how much we value their business. Plus, we wanted to showcase the variety of merchandise we have available in our store and thought the sweepstakes was an excellent avenue to do just that."

Reiter can use her winnings on any of the more than 1,000 items featured in the store's spring catalog.

Crow's Feet Chronicles

A bazaar can be bizarre

Surely those weren't my words that offered to bake a layer cake for my younger son's Cub Scout bake sale! Why would I? I've probably baked two layer cakes in my life, and both were flops... literally. Hmmm. I must have been in a mama fog. Now that I think about it, I remember arriving at the Cub Scout Capital Gains meeting late and hearing, "We have plenty of Bundt cakes and sheet cakes—We need layer cakes."

The early-marriage memories must have failed me. I was cheerfully shopping for the ingredients to an Italian Cream Cake one minute and the next minute I was wrestling the massive craters that formed the instant I loosened the finished layers from their birthing pans. Yikes!

With only 20 minutes to spare before the 9:00 a.m. delivery time for the 10:00 a.m. bake sale, I knew I didn't have enough icing to fill the craters AND frost the top and sides of both layers. That's when my mom-in-a-pinch mode took over.

As a Baby Boomer, I had my own private collection of LPs. Grabbing a Beach Boys record, I quickly slapped it atop the two pitiful layers of Italian Mafia-gone-bad layers. While humming the words to "Little Deuce Coupe", I grudgingly frosted over the label and grooves, vowing to clean it immediately once I had purchased it from the Cub Scouts. I grabbed my purse and car keys but stopped to briefly admire the finished product. I thought to myself with a smirk, "An Italian Cream Cake has never looked so uniform." With a few minutes to spare, I delivered the masterpiece to the bank.

When I arrived back home and walked in the back door, the phone was ringing. My next-door neighbor was babysitting her twin grandbabies and needed assistance with the projectile vomiting. Quickly, I gave my oldest son some money and strict instructions to be at the bake sale the minute it opened and to buy my cake and bring it home.

I'll probably never know what happened between the time of my directive to my older son and his arrival to the bake sale. In any event, my cake was already sold by the time he arrived.

Not only had someone bought a veneer fraud, but I no longer had my vintage copy of The Beach Boys hits, "409" or "Surfin' Safari."

I was asked to fill in at a bridge club the next day. After we played two hands of bridge, we adjourned for a delightful lunch of summer salads and assorted sandwiches.

As I glaced in the kitchen and saw the hostess place the dessert on the countertop, my heart stopped. IT WAS THE CAKE I HAD BAKED WITH THE RECORD ON TOP! I jumped from my chair to run to the kitchen to tell the hostess what had happened, but another guest quickly chirped, "What a beautiful cake!"

The hostess immediately responded with, "Thank you. I baked it myself." cindybaker@cableone.net
