SA provides water to area firefighters

In recent weeks, the Salvation Army of Lubbock has dispersed 60 pallets of drinking water to volunteer fire departments in 18 area counties, according to a recent press release.

The Post Fire Department was one of the many departments that received water through the distribution.

The water, packaged in 13-ounce bottles, was distributed after the Salvation Army received water from its state disaster headquarters in Dallas.

"We saw this need based on the number of area fires that have already occurred and in anticipation of additional fires depleting volunteer fire departments of drinking water supplies and met that need," said Major Ernest Branscum, commanding officer of the Lubbock Corps.

During the recent water outage in Crosbyton, the Lubbock Corps also delivered pallets of water to that community's nursing homes, medical facilities and fire department.

In addition to the water distributed in area communities, the Salvation Army also dispersed 10 pallets of Gatorade provided by the South Plains Food Bank.

Cotter, Gallagher set April 12 ceremony

Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Cotter have announced the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter, Tasha Cotter, to William Gallagher, son of Thomas and Diana Gallagher of Lubbock.

The couple plans to wed April 12, 2008, in Post.

Sheriff Laws: No action yet on complaint to AG

As of late Wednesday, Garza County Sheriff Cliff Laws said he has been unable to reach the state attorney general's office concerning a Post Dispatch complaint that has been shuttled between local and area law enforcement agencies during recent weeks.

Laws said he received District Attorney Ricky Smith's Feb. 26 recommendation that the complaint, which stemmed from a November incident at the Garza County Courthouse, be turned over to the state attorney general's office; however, the sheriff said he has not been able to get through to the state agency.

"I have been trying to get in touch with them," Laws said, noting that the AG's office stays busy.

Dispatch publisher Wesley W. Burnett said he doesn't understand why the sheriff is relying on the telephone to get documentation to the AG's office.

"Most people would use the mail to send something like this to the attorney general's office," Burnett said. "What's wrong with sending it in the mail?"

The complaint, which Burnett originally filed in January with the Garza County Sheriff's Department, contends that several media representatives, including a Dispatch photographer, were denied "their Texas Constitutional and U.S. Constitutional First Amendment rights of free speech and press" when they were prevented by law enforcement officials from entering the courthouse with cameras during the final hours of the Nov. 8 Pablo Soto murder trial in 106th District Court.

When the original complaint was filed, documentation also was provided to the Texas Rangers; however, they declined to open an investigation unless and until they were asked to do so by the district attorney's office.

Last month, Burnett forwarded his complaint to 106th District Attorney Ricky Smith's office. Smith responded with a letter to Burnett suggesting that "everyone connected with the Pablo Soto case... would be potential witnesses on one issue or another regarding this case. I have, therefore, recommended that Sheriff Laws refer your complaint to the Attorney General's Office."

In and Around Close City

by Traci Freeman

• This west Texas weather is crazy, that's for sure. Monday it snowed all day long, and boy was it cold! Tuesday was warmer and of course the wind was hauling. The weekend is suppose to be beautiful... we'll see.

• All of us here in Ragtown want to send a big thank-you to the fire department for the wonderful job they did putting out the grass fire Tuesday. Also to Charles Morris for running the maintainer and to Danny Gonzales and Rob Freeman for running the tractors. Being across from the gin and close to a residence it could have really gotten out of hand. Thank you all very much.

• Lois Childs had a wonderful surprise on Valentine's Day. Her grandson, Skipper, came in from Iraq for two weeks. He and his wife, Connie, got to spend some time in Ragtown before he went back. I'm told he will be home for good at the end of April.

• We want to welcome some new members to Close City: Chris and JoAnn Wright have moved into the house where his grandparents, R.B. and Pauline Wilke lived. Chris is the son of Jerry and Lilly (Wilke) Wright of Lovington, N.M., and the nephew of G.B. Wilke and Robbie Wilke, both of Close City. We welcome them to the community.

• Vernon McNabb called me last week, telling me how much he enjoyed reading "In and Around Close City." He used to live just north of here. He now lives in Harlingen. He asked me to send him a few Ragtown caps so he could show everyone where he was from. Everyone at Ragtown sends a big hello to Vernon and his family.

• Congratulations to David and Dena Watson on the marriage of their daughter, Brandi Gunn, to Matt Pleasant. Brandi and Matt were married March 1 at the Methodist Church, and a reception followed in the Post Community Center. Matt and Brandi will make their home in Slaton. Brandi's brother, Kyle, came in from Las Vegas for the big event.

• Our sympathies go out to Laveta Norman and her family on the loss of her sister, Katherine Welcher. Her funeral was held in Brownfield with Gerald, Laveta; Rynn Norman; Kim, Rhonda & Steffi Norman; Andy and Jodi Williams, all of Post attending.

• Visitors this past week: W.O. Fluitt, a.k.a., Uncle Dub and Charlie Williams came out to visit and buy a few caps. Lexi Gonzalez came to say hi on Friday. Troy Nelson called to visit a little; he says he and Joyce are doing well. Noel White stopped in for a Coke on Monday.

Get Wells

Fannie Ballentine, a.k.a. Nana, is in the hospital and as of Tuesday was feeling better. As always remember our folks in the nursing homes, remember your loved ones and keep them close and pray for moisture and that our troops come safely home.

Birthdays

• March 9 - Cody Nowlain

• March 10 - Patty Lopez

Be sure to call and let me know about any happenings going on, birthdays, anniversaries or anyone that may be sick. You can call me at the gin or e-mail me at close.city.coop@pcca.com.

by Bill O'Reilly
So Ralph Nader is running for president again, and there is no truth to the rumor that the nominating convention will be held in his garage. Too spacious.

With a few exceptions, the leftwing press were openly hostile to Nader's announcement this week, taking it very personally: "He remains as obstinate, prickly and egotistical as ever," said the New Jersey Star-Ledger.

"Nader: Unsafe at Any Age," headlined the Louisville Courier-Journal. And The Boston Globe, while saying Nader has a "right" to run, wrote: "Nader has come to believe in his own indispensability."

The left-leaning media are mad because they believe Nader cost Al Gore the election in 2000 by siphoning votes away from him in Florida. You may remember that old Ralph received 97,488 votes in the Sunshine State, and that President Bush defeated Vice President Gore by fewer than 1,000 ballots. Doing the math makes many liberals cry.

So Ralphie boy, as Ed Norton might put it, is not in real solid with the Democratic establishment these days.

Not that he cares. I've known Nader for decades, and he is a hard-core socialist, a man who fervently believes the government must control evil corporations, regulate wages and even set prices for what consumers buy. Nader has far more in common with Raul Castro than Howard Dean. He thinks the Dems are almost as bad as the Republicans when it comes to exploiting folks.

That's why Nader's presidential announcement was a one-day story. No New York Times profile for him, not this year. No NBC News feature story. Ralph Nader is going to be mighty lonely on the campaign trail because the far-left has abandoned him.

Feeling sorry for the guy, I called him a few days ago and asked him to appear on my syndicated radio program, heard on more than 400 stations. At first, Nader's "person" was excited. Free media! But a short time later she told us Ralph was "unavailable." Perhaps a conference call with Raul?

The reason, I believe, that Nader passed on the Radio Factor was that he knew I would poke a bit of fun at him. Let's face it, Jane Fonda has a better chance of winning the presidency than Ralph. But unlike the lefty media, I have no problem with Nader running. He entertains me. I never know what he's going to say or whom he's going to hammer. Give him points for that.

Next November, Ralph Nader will get less than 1 percent of the vote and won't even appear on most state ballots. Sadly for him, the Ralphster will not be a factor this time around. His time has passed, and his socialistic struggle is completely irrelevant.

But I still like Ralph Nader. Even if he is unavailable. Veteran TV news anchor Bill O'Reilly is host of the Fox News show "The O'Reilly Factor" and author of the book "Who's Looking Out For You?" ## Common sense and the drug problem

by Hank Sames
"Largest Pot Bust on Record" ... "State to Fund New Jail Construction" ... "City Police and County Sheriffs Lobby for More Federal Funds to Fight Drugs" ... "Federal Courthouse Overwhelmed with Drug Cases"

The headlines are disturbing and are never-ending. The "war on drugs" has gone on since the Nixon administration in the 1970s and continues today. The "war on terror" is an infant compared with the war on drugs. The drug war is the longest war the United States has ever fought and for sure the most expensive.

The irony is that the war is unwinnable and the side effects make it certain that the problem will continue to grow, with law enforcement making very little progress against it.

The time has come to consider an alternative. We need to consider the legalization of drugs as the only solution to the problem. This conclusion is not based on whether illicit drugs are harmful or not. It comes from the realization that the approach being taken to the problem is not working and is in fact creating some very serious adverse side effects. We are at a point where the "cure" is now worse than the disease.

There is general disregard for the drug laws in this country. Threat of criminal prosecution has done little to reduce drug use, as the law is generally seen as unreasonable and is ignored. There are doctors, lawyers, and other professionals who smoke pot as casually as drinking a cocktail.

This disregard for the law from otherwise law-abiding citizens is not good for society. Legislating personal behavior that does not inflict violence on others encroaches on personal freedom, and when citizens do not perceive harm to themselves, the law becomes unsustainable in a free society.

One of the great harms that come with making drugs illegal is the criminal activity that goes along with it. The organized-crime gangs that are involved in the illegal drug trade have become both rich and violent.

The money they receive from drugs allows them to corrupt local law enforcement and politicians. Mexico is trying hard to combat a problem not of its making. Not only are they having little success but there is loss of life, loss of tranquility, and loss of legitimate businesses, such as tourism.

There are other sinister side effects to these efforts. Personal freedom and human rights are diminished as law enforcement uses extreme measures in the fight. The press is terrorized by the drug gangs and free speech is compromised. The drug gangs use their power and money to finance new ventures, such as extortion, kidnapping, and political assassination.

All of these factors create a climate of fear in Mexico and a reduction in opportunity for those who want a legitimate job. The rich either leave the country or build fortresses to live in and surround themselves with bodyguards.

The poor oftentimes become part of the criminal element because of the money to be made in the illegal-drug trade. For every drug criminal Mexico captures or kills, there is a new one eager and ready to replace him.

Mexico is in danger of collapsing under this cancer.

At the same time, there are serious problems in the United States. Law enforcement continues to grow to combat the problem, requiring ever-increasing expenditures of local and federal tax dollars. The courts are clogged with drug cases, and the jails and prisons continue to grow.

The cost of housing prisoners is escalating. An interesting sidelight: prisoners say that drugs are readily available in most jails and there is some evidence that some prisoners actually get addicted to hard drugs while there.

The first thing they do when they get out is look for a fix. Law enforcement and incarceration costs are escalating. Our law-enforcement system is overwhelmed because of the drug war. The more time that law enforcement spends on drug cases, the less time it spends on crimes of violence.

What would legalization of drugs do? First off, it would relegate drug use and abuse to the private sector, where it rightly belongs. It would also shrink the prison population and relieve the courts of those cases. That would create huge cost savings. Legalization would relieve citizens of the tremendous tax burden to fund the drug war.

A country that is educated about drug use and abuse and has personal freedom as its core value is a much healthier society. It is time for Americans to face the drug war — and its failures — head on and put a stop to this decades-long, failed, and destructive policy.

Hope for the Economy

by Congressman Ron Paul

It is becoming harder and harder for Washington and the mainstream media to ignore the ripple effect the collapse of the housing bubble is having on the economy. Inflation is up, cost of food is up, oil and gold are up, foreclosures are up, unemployment is up, government spending is at record highs, it seems that the only thing down is the value of the dollar. The middle and lower classes are getting squeezed as prices jump and wages stay flat.

Though it is good that Washington is acknowledging the problem instead of sweeping it under the rug, I always get nervous at their ideas of solutions. A proper solution requires an honest, in-depth look at the root of the problem.

What the government needs to stop doing is taxing Americans literally out of house and home in the wake of the housing debacle.

We should not take money from taxpayers to bail out bad businesses. At the same time, we need to make sure that America can get back to work by easing taxes and regulations on good businesses and allow them to function and prosper.

Also there a lot of tax cuts and tax reforms we could be making to ease the burden on the American people.

I have many bills in Congress that address the high taxes Americans pay, but one in particular — my Tax-Free Tips Act — should be a no-brainer at a time like this. This legislation would exempt gratuities earned by service sector workers from income tax liability.

A tip is a small gift and there is no contractual requirement to give it, yet if someone leaves a restaurant without tipping, the IRS will still estimate how much they should have been tipped and tax the waiter based on that, should they perform an audit. This is patently wrong.

People working these jobs are the backbone of our economy, and they often support a family or put themselves through school on this money. They are already taxed on their base wages through withholding. They should not be taxed on tips. We do not need to put this kind of pressure on our service workers.

To really fix the economy and get it back on track, though, a sea change, not a quick-fix attempt, is needed.

I was very pleased and encouraged that the Wall Street Journal published my letter to the editor addressing some of our economic problems. The message is getting out because people are demanding answers.

The American people are strong, resourceful, hard working and determined. Because of this we can get through these tough economic times, but our leaders need to understand how we got here in the first place.

Continuing the same flawed policies that got us here will only prolong the agony.

State ag agencies change names, renew missions

Two state agricultural agencies that have served Texans for a combined 224 years are beginning 2008 with new names and renewed missions.

Texas AgriLife Research is the new name for the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, which annually conducts more than $150 million in agriculture and life sciences research in such areas as improving food and fiber production, enhancing human and animal health and conserving water, soils, wildlife and other natural resources.

The Texas AgriLife Extension Service is the new name of Texas Cooperative Extension, which provides Texans in all 254 counties with non-biased, research-based education programs and services in agriculture and natural resources, 4-H and youth development, family and consumer sciences and community economic development.

"We are making these changes to better communicate the life-sustaining and life-changing impacts that both AgriLife Research and AgriLife Extension deliver to the people of Texas and beyond," said Dr. Mark Hussey, director of AgriLife Research.

Both agencies remain members of

The Texas A&M University System, with the same commitment to their partners, clients and mission.

"But we also want to tell our story to a larger audience and a changing state population, attract new resources and build new partnerships, while strengthening our existing ones," Hussey said. "In this way, we hope to better serve the people of this great state."

The name changes are part of a rebranding initiative launching this year after two years of study and planning. These efforts were led by former vice chancellor Dr. Elsa Murano, who was named president of Texas A&M University on Jan. 3.

"The re-branding efforts are centered on one foundational message: 'Agriculture is Life!'"

Posey receives award for 24 years of service

Betty Posey, who spent more than 24 years serving as an EMT with the Post City/Garza County EMS, was recognized Feb. 23 at the annual South Plains Emergency Services conference.

Posey received the Scott Murray Lifetime Achievement Award at the event, which was conducted at the McInturf Conference Center at University Medical Center, Lubbock. The award is given by Dr. Ed and Joan Murray on behalf of the late Scott Murray.

Posey worked under the supervision of Scott Murray for many years as he served as the local services SPEMS peer reviewer.

Hussey said. "The central idea is that life itself is the core value that our agencies seek to sustain and enhance."

"People usually don't realize how much we all depend on agriculture and the life sciences. Discoveries and innovations in these fields directly impact the quality of the food we eat, the clothes we wear, the air we breathe, the water we drink, the homes we live in, and, more and more, even the fuels we pump into our vehicles."

"This is more than a name change, or even a new logo design," said Dr. Ed Smith, director of AgriLife Extension. "These new brands will impact not only our marketing materials and signage, but also the way we position and prioritize our programs and work with our federal, state and county partners to serve the state of Texas. It is vitally important to tell our story and that people connect our agencies to the tremendous impacts they have on the state."

One of the drivers of the re-branding initiative was a market study that showed that the work of the research and extension agencies was not widely known across the state of Texas.

"We hope to help people better understand the vital role that agriculture and life sciences still play in improving the prosperity of their lives," said Smith. "We believe that if they come to know us better, they will see that connection more clearly, even within a state population that is now 85 percent urbanized."

AgriLife Research, established in 1887, employs a team of 425 scientists on the campus of Texas A&M University and at 13 centers across the state. Research has made many innovative advances over the years, including development of the Texas 1015 onion and the TAM Mild Jalapeno pepper, which revolutionized the U.S. salsa industry.

Current major research includes the efficient use and conservation of water resources, the development of fruits and vegetables with higher levels of disease-fighting compounds and the adaptation of crops and other agricultural products for making biofuels.

AgriLife Extension, established in 1915, provides Texans with continuing education programs and services. More than 900 professional educators team with some 90,000 volunteers to serve families, youth, communities and businesses throughout the state. Some 600,000 children annually participate in Extension's 4-H and youth development programs.

Programs conducted by the Texas AgriLife Extension Service serve people of all ages regardless of socioeconomic level, race, color, sex, religion, handicap or national origin.

Supports fight against muscular dystrophy

Our 9-year-old daughter, Abbey, has a form of Charcot-Marie-Tooth disease, a muscle disease that causes weakness and poor coordination and balance. Abbey, who is the 2008 MDA National Goodwill Ambassador, walks with the aid of leg braces.

Our family deeply appreciates the services offered by the Muscular Dystrophy Association, such as medical care, summer camp and assistance obtaining needed equipment. We're also extremely hopeful about the amazing research progress being made in the search for treatments and cures.

One way MDA funds these vitally important programs is through its Shamrocks Against Dystrophy campaign. In the weeks before St. Patrick's Day, patrons of supermarkets, convenience stores, restaurants and other retailers purchase and sign $1 and $5 Shamrocks mobiles. Retailers then display the Shamrocks, often covering their walls and windows with layers of green and gold.

Please help support MDA's fight against muscular dystrophy by purchasing a colorful green or gold Shamrock at your local retailer. By doing so, you're buying hope for children and families coping with muscle diseases. From the bottom of our hearts, thank you for caring.

On God's Word

by Timothy W. Burnett

www.geocities.com/christinyou7/love.html

Christ in you...

Throughout the ages most societies have included a custom designed to keep certain authorities and possessions in families. It was often based on the father and son relationship, where the authority and possessions of the father was passed down to the first-born son.

Although many societies in today's world have flexibly altered this custom to include the parent-child relationship in general, the principle of inheritance is still understood and practiced within families.

Looking at the Old Testament times, the father typically had full authority and power over all the decisions made in the family. He would also have control over all the possessions. A good example of this can be seen in Genesis where it describes the different fathers such as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, etc.

When the time comes, the father will transfer authority to his first-born son. It could be said the father's authority was in the son. The son could make decisions as if he was the father. If the father was still alive, the son would most likely act according to the will of his father.

Understanding this principle goes a long way toward understanding the words found in Colossians 1:27, "To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory."

As God's first-born son, Jesus was given full authority from God. This is even more significant considering that God is counted as the ranking King. In other words, Jesus was given a royal inheritance from his Father in heaven.

This is really exciting when considering 1Corinthians 5:18, "That God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." During his ministry while walking on earth, the son of God was anointed with holy spirit when John baptized him. God was truly in his son in that He was his Father with full authority, and his spirit was in him.

God was in his son all the way until his death. Although God's spirit left Jesus' dead body, God did not forsake him in that He raised him from the dead and made him to sit at His right hand of authority in heaven. The result of this was it became available for people to be filled with holy spirit and get born-again. The first record of this is found in Acts 2:4.

Once people are born-again they become children of God. According to Romans 8:29, they are counted as the brothers and sisters of Jesus Christ. It says, "that he might be the first-born among many brethren."

God's born-again children obtain a royal inheritance in the name of Jesus Christ. This might be better understood as a legal inheritance that is obtained because of the true name of God's son who we call Jesus.

More light on this is seen in Ephesians 3:6, "That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of His promise in Christ by the gospel." This is a great mystery which was hid from all the prophets during the Old Testament times, but which was made known to the apostles and prophets starting with Paul.

It became available for both Jews and Gentiles to obtain an inheritance with God's first-born son. When people get born-again, they have the fullness of the inheritance of Christ in them, which is their hope of glory. Just as God glorified His son Jesus by raising him from the dead unto everlasting life, so also do His born-again children have this same hope of glory (see 1Thessalonians 3:13-18).

Sacagawea's story begins with a tragedy. child, the raided her Sacagawea and taken

Indian Guide

When she was a Hidatsa Indians Shoshone tribe. was kidnapped 500 miles from her homeland. Her captives sold her as a slave to the Sioux Indians. Her Sioux guardian, Red Arrow, forced her to work in the fields until an old French Canadian fur trapper, named Toussaint Charbonneau, won her in a game of chance and made her his wife. When interpreters were needed for the "Corp of Discovery" (The Lewis & Clark Expedition), Charbonneau was hired to join. Sacagawea was just a young teenage girl when she accompanied her husband on the expedition to map the unexplored territory beyond the Mississippi River. This journey will take her to new lands and into the history books.

Soon after the journey began, Sacagawea gave birth to her first born, a son named Jean Baptiste (nicknamed Pomp).

With her papoose strapped on her back, the young Indian girl would be respected for her cool head in times of danger and her skill of finding roots, berries and other food to sustain the men.

In 1998, a New Mexico college student/Shoshone Indian, posed for the likeness of Sacagawea on the newest US coin, the gold dollar. In 2000, this coin replaced the Susan B. Anthony dollar, making Sacagawea the only woman currently on US currency.

Sacagawea died of "putrid fever: at the age of 24. After her death Clark raised an educated her children as his own. A Shoshone Indian woman, who lived to be 90- also claimed to the famous explorer. Her Wyoming gravesite is still honored today.

For her contribution to the exploration of the West, Sacagawea was awarded nothing. As the years passed and the journals of Lewis and Clark were published, her intelligence, bravery and key role in the exploration became evident. Today mountains, creeks, parks, monuments, lakes and even an airplane have been named in her honor.

<http://www.brain-iacs.com>

One day while out berry picking, Sacagawea sees men on horses. She begins to dance with joy as she recognized these men are her people; the Shoshone tribe she had been taken from 5 years ago. Lewis & Clark are delighted because they feel this connection will only increase their chances to trade for the horses they desperately need to ride over the mountains. That evening the chief and other tribal elders meet with Lewis and Clark. Sacagawea is brought into the tepee to act as an interpreter. As she approaches the Chief her eyes fill with joy. Chief Cameahwait is her long lost brother! He, and an infant nephew is all that is left of her family.

Local, state fire resources remain on alert

When Texas Forest Service and the National Weather Service began forecasting extreme fire weather danger last week, TFS wasted no time activating preparedness measures and pre-positioning firefighting personnel and equipment to areas of the state predicted to be at highest risk.

As it turns out, this preparation paid off.

The highest fire danger this year occurred on Feb. 25, and fire behavior was extreme. All available Texas Forest Service resources were committed to the fire fighting effort, including resources from east Texas and all available aircraft from the Texas Air National Guard.

At the height of the fight, 1,000 gallon water drops from helitankers did little to slow advancing flame fronts. Tactics switched from offensive suppression efforts to the direct protection of homes and other assets on that day.

Garza Theatre cast members entertaining the Post area with Peter Palame's hilarious comedy "On the Air" are (left to right) Karen Dolter, Ronnie Miller, Micki Klafka, Rose Frugé and John Davis. Under the direction of Mitchell Britton, the production will run this Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. with its final performance on Sunday at 2 p.m. For tickets and information call the ticket office at 806-495-4005 or visit online at www.garzatheatre.com. #### Childhood obesity – do genes play larger role than lifestyle?

The ever-growing childhood obesity crisis has been linked to bad eating habits and a lack of exercise among many children today.

A group of British researchers looked at 5,000-plus pairs of twins, ages 8 to 11. The collection of twins included both identical and non-identical twins. They discovered that:

- 77 percent of the differences appeared to be due to the effects of genes
- 23 percent were probably the result of the twins' home environment.

So, what does that mean? To sum it all up, the researchers say their results "highlight the fact that excessive weight gain in a child is unlikely to be the fault of the parents and is more likely to be due to the child's genetic susceptibility "to a modern environment that actually encourages obesity."

According to the researchers, efforts to curb excessive weight gain in children should begin in the home during the early years. But, because genetic effects on children's weight seem to increase as they grow, they say much broader societal changes are probably needed to encourage and maintain healthy lifestyles over the long haul, especially for children who are at risk of becoming overweight.

What This Means to You
Whatever the main cause behind the astounding number of youngsters carrying around too much weight, the problem is only getting worse. Being overweight or obese can significantly affect a child's daily way of life, potentially causing serious physical and psychological problems today and in the future. Children and teens carrying around excess pounds are often:

- Prone to low self-esteem, depression and suicidal thoughts
- Teased, bullied or rejected by peers
- More likely to develop unhealthy dieting habits and eating disorders, such as anorexia nervosa and bulimia
- At risk for serious health conditions once thought only to affect adults like type 2 diabetes, high blood pressure and high cholesterol.

What You Can Do

- Encourage children to be physically active every day and to try a variety of sports and activities.
  - Restrict TV, computer and video game time to no more than two hours of quality content each day (and none for children under the age of two).
  - Serve a variety of healthy foods and eat meals together as often as possible.
  - Don't use food as a reward for good behavior or try to stop bad behavior with treats.
  - Ditch the clean-plate club. When children say they're full, let them stop eating, even if there's food left on the plate. This reinforces the idea of eating only when hungry.
- If you're worried your child may be overweight, the sooner you can make an appointment with your doctor, the better. Preventing or treating obesity in children may reduce their risk of developing medical and emotional issues now, as well as serious conditions (like heart disease and stroke) down the road.

Dolberry sisters serve as pages for Indiana state senator

Alyssa and Cailee Dolberry of Indianapolis, Ind., granddaughters of Wes and Pat Burnett of Post, recently completed service as pages for Sen. Patricia Miller, a member of the Indiana State Senate.

Alyssa Dolberry, 15, is a sophomore at Franklin Central High School.

Cailee Dolberry, 14, is an eighth grade student at Franklin Township Middle School.

They are the daughters of Kim and Allen Dolberry and grandchildren of Pat and Wes Burnett of Post.

Pages spend a day at the State House, assisting senators and staff members with a variety of legislative duties and learning about the structure of the state government.

The sisters spent Feb. 19 working with the state senator. According to Miller, visiting the State Capitol and serving as a page for the General Assembly provides middle school and high school students with the opportunity to observe and participate in the legislative process.
