Mayor announces resignation

Harp said after Tuesday's

Council OKs city manager contract, budget/tax rate

By Wayne Hodgin The Post Dispatch

Post Mayor Thressa Harp announced her pending resignation after the regular City Council on Tuesday evening.

Harp, whose second twoyear term was set to expire in May, said her official resignation would come "soon."

"As soon as the (White River Municipal Water District) contract is signed, I will tender my resignation in the form of a letter to the council,"

The water contract, which has been in negotiations for a number of years, was approved by the City Council in its August meeting. However, for the contract to be in full force, it also must be approved by

Harp said it would be up to Stanton with her new husthe City Council on what to do about her replacement.

"I've been in contact with the Secretary of State's office, and the next procedure, after my official resignation, will be for the council to either appoint a replacement or call for a special election," she said. "I would think they would chose with White River MWD, in- to appoint someone, because Harp said she would reserve cluding Crosbyton, Ralls and the cost to hold a special election is just not worth it."

Until that appointment is made, Harp said, Councilwoman Anita Morris, who is serving as mayor pro tempore, will serve in the interim however long that may be.

City manager contract

After a special called meeting two weeks ago during which City Manager Arbie Taylor's evaluation was conducted in open session and no action was taken on his contract renewal and raise proposal, the council Wednesday unanimously agreed to extend the contract with a 2.5 percent raise Taylor initially asked for.

Blaze damages historic hotel

The Post Dispatch

Post volunteer firefighters were called to the historic Garza Hotel in downtown Post on Tuesday evening on a report of a fire.

When first-responders arrived at the scene a few minutes after 7 p.m., they were directed to the hotel's kitchen in the back of the building where a grease fire had gotten out of control, Fire Chief Les Looney said.

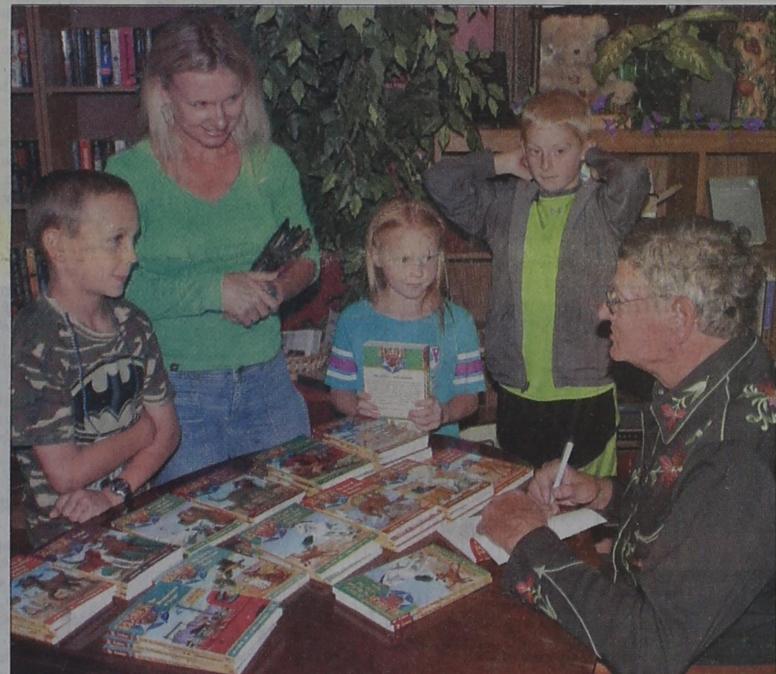

Fire crews were on the scene about an hour. Looney said the fire was put out pretty quickly and was contained to the kitchen. He said the area did receive some smoke and water damage.

Hotel owner Ruth Torrens said the damage was minimal and fully expected the kitchen to be functional by the week-

"All it needs is some cleaning up and a fresh coat of paint," she said.

No guests were displaced by the incident, and no injuries were reported.

LUBBOCK — The O.S. Ranch and the local ranching family of Giles Dalby were honored with the Ranching Award at the American Cowboy Culture dinner and awards program during the National Cowboy Symposium and Celebration last Thursday evening.

prior to the opening day of the symposium, which this year celebrated its 24th year.

The event is spearheaded by Post native Alvin Davis.

Since its beginning in 1989, the organization has honored more than 250 individuals, events and organizations from 155 cities in 26 states, the District of Columbia, Canada and Germany.

Last year, the Garza Museum and its director Linda Puckett were honored with the Western Museum Award.

Davis said the O.S. Ranch was nominated because of its history in the founding of Garza County and its long-standing reputation as the center of ranching heritage and

"The O.S. played a good part in the development of Garza County as the meeting The program is held each year on the night that was held to form the county was staged at the ranch's headquarters," Davis said. "The ranch, of course, is still in operation to this day and was the site of popular roping events and art shows for years and years."

Davis said that in and of itself goes to the very heart of what the American Cowboy Culture Awards are all about, which is, he said, "celebrating the preservation of our Western heritage."

Nancy's Notions

Give parsley a little elbow room

T t's good for your breath. Tastes great sprinkled on L eggs. Makes a killer garnish.

What is it? Why parsley, of course! No herb garden should be caught without this frilly green plant gracing its borders.

Not only is parsley a worthy ingredient in the kitchen, but it is also full of good-foryou nutrients. Being a part of the carrot family, it has high levels of beta carotene. Parsley is a great source for vitamin B12, chlorophyll, calcium, more vitamin C than citrus fruits, and just about all other known nutrients. Parsley is a hardy biennial that is usually treated as an annual. It is popular because of its much-divided, sometimes curly leaves, which have a characteristic flavor and smell. Parsley will teach you exactly how it should be grown. In your garden, there will appear here and there a stray or rogue parsley plant away from the original location. No matter how regularly the hoeing and weeding may be done, a stray parsley plant will occasionally appear alone, perhaps in the or onions. When these strays escape destruction they become superb plants, and the experienced gardener sometimes leaves them to enjoy the conditions they have selected, and in which they midst of lettuces, or cauliflowers, evidently prosper.

The lesson for the cultivator is that parsley should have plenty of room from the very first especially for young gardeners as they are apt to sow parsley far more thickly than is wise and are cautiously slow and timid in thinning the crop when the plants are crowding one another.

Cut parsley when the leaves are of suitable size. Pinch off parsley sprigs as needed or cut the entire plant back to dry or freeze a larger quantity of foliage. You can munch on it plain for a vitamin-rich snack and breath freshener.

Make parsley butter or parsley mayonnaise; use it in almost any dish for mild flavor and rich green color. I've found a hearty soup recipe packed with nutrients. Enjoy.

Combine turkey carcass, water, 1 cup celery, 2 carrots, onion, 2 teaspoons salt, thyme, bouillon, and bay leaf in large 4 quart stockpot. Bring to boiling. Lower heat, and cover. Simmer for 1 1/2 hours. Strain stock, and discard solids. Skim off fat using ladle or fat separator. Pick meat off bones when cooled.

Reserve meat.

Combine 6 tablespoons flour and 1/2 cup milk in a jar with a tight fitting lid. Shake to combine. Pour stock into pot. Bring to simmering. Strain flour mixture through sieve into stock, stirring.

Slice remaining 3 carrots. Add rutabaga, ground pepper, remaining 1/2 cup celery, and sliced carrots.

Simmer 20 minutes, or until vegetables are tender.

While the soup is simmering, prepare the dumplings. Combine parsley and bread in processor; whirl until medium size crumbs. Add 1 1/4 cups flour, baking powder, and salt; process just until combined. Add 1/2 cup milk and butter; process using on-off pulses just until blended.

Drop mounded tablespoons of dumpling mixture into simmering soup. Place cover on pot. Cook for 12 minutes, or until dumplings are dry in center. Add turkey meat; cook 3 minutes, or until heated through.

Constant Conversation

Pray without ceasing.

- 1 Thessalonians 5:17 (KJV)

After many years of doubt and denial, I was determined to redis- dishes or driving — simple conversations about what happened to cover my faith. But getting back into the habit of praying was the hardest part. Then I noticed that in quiet moments during the day, the verse "Pray without ceasing" would pop into my head. I felt confused and guilty. If I can't even remember to pray before I eat, I thought, how can I remember to pray all the time?

One day while out picking blueberries, I realized that I was "talking" to God - not a formal prayer, but more talking to a friend about how thankful I was for the sweet berries. I caught myself doing the same thing at other times such as when I was washing be on my mind.

I am also taking more time to listen. In these "conversations," God's "voice" comes through as feelings moving in my heart, or thoughts flowing through my mind. Sometimes I hear God speak to me through words from a friend. When this happens God is working through both of us and both benefit from God's wisdom.

I still struggle, but the relationship I am developing with God by learning how to "pray without ceasing" sustains me.

The 501 The next big thing: cow-powered headlights nergy is everywhere. How can we make the best of it? In "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," an outdoor domestic scene features a dog on a treadmill. That's how I remember it. Maybe it was a different movie. Regardless, canine power is running either an ice cream churn or a primitive washing machine. Maybe both. As I recall, the dog looks happy enough and so does the woman in charge, since she's benefiting nicely from the power the animal is cranking out.

HANABA MUNN WELCH

Today most treadmills are designed to keep people moving. Dog treadmills are trendy, but it's mostly humans sweating in fancy exercise rooms, keeping a nice steady pace on machines designed to suck away their energy. Where does that energy go? Does it vanish into the steamy air? Contribute to global warming?

If I ran a fitness gym, I'd want all the people-powered equipment to generate electricity to sell back to the grid. It could happen.

very well." My fascination with humanpowered machines comes partly from a once-upon-a-time German restaurant in New Orleans where a system of belt-driven ceiling fans circulated the air rather nicely. Up high near one wall, a smiling almost life-sized jointed figure in lederhosen, Ludwig, gripped one shaft. As he bobbed and cranked, it looked like he was making all the fans work.

Although Ludwig didn't sweat, he represented a concept — the notion that a few gears can turn human power into what it takes to turn fans over the heads of a dining room full of people. It would have been too difficult for anyone but bionic Ludwig to make all those fans spin, but the manpower concept stands.

INTERNET RESEARCH PAUSE.

Somebody beat me to it. Gyms already exist with bicycles equipped to produce usable electricity. Apparently it takes a Lance Armstrong to pedal a bicycle fast enough to run just one ceiling fan (making Ludwig sound like Lance on steroids). But electricity-generating bicycles also contribute to the marketability of gym memberships to the energy-conscious, green-market segment. That's worth something.

It's too bad all such power produced in cushy countries like America, where people anyone. We don't have to. Instead, we are exercise in gyms, can't be shared with other countries where a little electricity goes a long way and exercise just happens. Alas, neither can we ship dinner table leftovers to starving children in Africa.

Closing thought: All told, in the realm of living dynamos, man versus beast, humans don't score very well. Consider cows, for instance. For hours at a time, they move their heads as they graze. Such stamina. Consider also those flashlights that shine when you shake them because a magnet moves through a coil and produces electricity. (I looked that up.) Attach such lights to cow horns, and you've invented cow-powered headlights.

Crazy? Sure. But who's to say just such a project might not win a science fair ribbon or boost some budding inventor on to greater accomplishments?

Or maybe I'll just add it to my resume. I've already been cheated out of one invention.

The Paperboy GOP snoozin' while Dems are losin'

re Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan

I think they're pretty smart men, but their campaign is terrible. It's awful

Despite President Obama's horrendous record with the economy and despite Obama letting nuts run the Democrat Party, Romney/Ryan have let the Obama campaign steamroll them on the economy.

Where's the talk about energy? Where's the talk about trade? Where's the talk about leadership? Here's what I'm telling the American people if I'm Romney:

"We are going to lease federal lands so we can go after natural resources and stimulate the economy like never before!

"We are not going to raise taxes on going to grow jobs through our robust energy policy, which includes oil, natural gas, coal, wind, etc. We are going to tell these companies the only way to keep their tax breaks is by hiring Americans and through the development of this major energy overhaul!

"We are going to take 5 percent of the GDP of both Iraq and Afghanistan until we are reimbursed for war.

"We are going to change our trade policy so we make a profit. There is simply no reason to have the trade deficits we do.

"We are going to grow our tax base considerably by making trade education more affordable for Americans so they can earn a higher wage.

"We are going to relax federal regulations that are hurting state, county and city governments by creating unfunded mandates that take money out of communities and gives it to the federal government.

"We are going to fight for term limits because Washington, D.C., is the most corrupt town in the U.S. and new blood may actually give a damn and stop patronizing special interest groups."

"We are going to adopt the things that work regardless of party affiliation!

"Most importantly, we are going to lead. We are going to extend a hand across the isle and network our way to prosperity."

The one thing a president is asked to do is lead. A leader is not just someone who can lead one specific group, it's someone who can lead everyone.

A leader tries to find common ground and work to resolve the major issues.

We're sitting here in 2012 and we're arguing. Why?

Do any of you really think you're witnessing leadership from either party? Sorry, but we're not.

This country is a sleeping giant, and we're headed for a coma!

It is time to free our markets and lead the world in the things that make money. Once that happens, we become solvent.

The Democrats have done a lousy job since taking power.

The Republicans did a lousy job before

Are we so proud we can't admit the obvious? Are we so proud we refuse to acknowledge if we work together, there is nothing we can't accomplish?

I don't know if it was Bush v. Gore, 9/11, Iraq, Dick Cheney, Michael Moore, Obamacare, flyover country, Nancy Pelosi or Harry Reid, but the hate has built to destructive levels.

At this point, I couldn't really care less what the root cause for hurt feelings is. Let the hate go and let's roll!

We need leadership and communication and we aren't getting that. And frankly, I'm not seeing where it's going to come from, and it's frustrating.

Both sides talk and belch rhetoric about helping the poor and middle class, but they're not. And honestly, I don't think

And why should they? The poor and middle class sit on out here in the real world believing in politicians. It's like believing in the tooth fairy. What's under your pillow? At the rate we're going, that will be dirt soon.

My prayer for this country is that those who are lost in Washington will see the light. We are that light!

Either leaders rise in this country who are willing and able to work together, or it's over. Both sides agree that the status quo will not work. That's a great starting point isn't it? The first step in fixing any problem is admitting there is one.

We've taken that step.

Gas prices expected to continue downward trend

Special to the Dispatch

Drivers in the state of Texas last week were paying an average of about $3.66 for a gallon of regular unleaded fuel, which is down one cent from the prior week, according to the AAA Texas.

Motorists in Texarkana were paying the most on average at $3.72, and drivers in El Paso are paying the least at $3.44. Drivers in the Lone Star State are paying about 16 cents less than the national average of $3.82, which also decreased a penny from the week before.

National gas prices saw a spike two weeks ago as the Gulf Coast braced for Hurricane Isaac. Refineries totaling more than 1million barrels per day of production capacity had announced closures in preparation for the storm and wholesale gasoline prices in regions supplied by these facilities surged higher. But those prices weakened once the market determined the storm would have a limited impact on long-term production.

AAA analysts expect prices at the pump will decline heading toward the end of the year as demand decreases with the end of the summer driving season, refineries switch to less expensive winter-blend gasoline, and the hurricane season ends in November.

"We're hopeful even more relief is on the way soon," said AAA Texas/New Mex-"Right now Texans are paying about $52 to fill up a typical 14-gallon size tank of gas. We encourage people to continue Special to the Dispatch to maintain their vehicles according to manufacturer's recommendations to maximize their fuel efficiency."

High Plains growers preparing for harvest

By Mary Jane Buerkle Special to the Dispatch

Growers across the High Plains are beginning to put the finishing touches on this year's crop, and some area gins reportedly will be in operation in the next week to ten days.

Although overall, the 2012 growing season has been more kind to producers than 2011, high temperatures have seared the area over the past few months. So far, Lubbock has recorded 24 days at or over the 100-degree mark.

In addition to the high temperatures, rain gauges in a significant portion of the High Plains area have recorded only 50 percent or less of average rainfall for the year to date. Currently, the West Texas Mesonet site located three miles 18 inches per year.

The condition of the crop remains mixed. Caitlin Jackson, Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Agent for Crosby County, said cotton there is beginning to open up and is fairly good. Some areas of the county have benefited from rainfall over the summer, and the Mesonet station at White River Lake has recorded more than 16 inches of rain so far this year.

"There are going to be some fields with decent yields, and some of our dryland fields are not too bad,' she said. "We're pretty optimistic."

Dawson County is split, said Gary Roschetzky, Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Agent for that county. Cotton is beginwest-northwest of Lubbock ning to open on the north side side of the county is suffering and a lot of the dryland acreage "never really came around," he

Other parts of the High Plains continue to experience a struggle as well. With subsoil moisture lacking in much of the area, irrigation is simply nursing the crop along. Many growers are terminating irrigation in preparation for harvest.

Integrated pest management agents report that they are monitoring the presence of Kurtomathrips on the High Plains. These are highly destructive pests that can quickly defoliate cotton plants, causing damage similar to that of spider mites and possibly compromising boll size and yield.

Recaptured school district list reaches all-time high

Robin Hood strikes 23 ico spokesman Doug Shupe. new school districts, 374 Texas districts

AUSTIN - New data from the Texas Education Agency shows a record number of school districts are now considered property wealthy under Chapter 41 of the Texas Education Code.

A total of 374 school districts are subject to the recapture provisions of the law during the 2012-2013 school year, and 23 appear on the list for the first time.

Post and Southland school districts in Garza County have been on the list for a number of years.

"The fact that more districts qualify for this status than ever before reinforces the fact that our method of funding public education is broken. Texas has just over 1000 school districts and having close to 400 of has recorded 7.14 inches for of the county and looks better them considered property wealthy shows 2012. Average rainfall is about than expected, but the south that there is not enough money in the system overall," said Christy Rome, executive director of the Texas School Coalition.

The Robin Hood system of school finance began in 1993 and applied to 35 school districts. It took 14 years to reach 164 revenue-contributing districts, but only five years to add the next 210 dis-

"Over half of the students in revenuecontributing districts throughout the state are economically disadvantaged," Rome said, "and now their taxpayers will be asked to send money into Austin. It will come as a shock to many in these communities, but somehow the myth continues that these districts are primarily made up of wealthy students and parents."

The Texas Legislature failed for the first time in 60 years to fund enrollment growth by cutting $5.4 billion from public education for the current two-year budget

"Rather than continuing to add recapture districts, the obvious solution is for the Legislature to adequately fund education," Rome said.

Eagles fall to Silverton

The Post Dispatch

Despite its defensive try, the Southland Eagles were no match for the Silverton Owls last Friday.

"We came out and played really well defensively in the second half, but we just could not get anything going offensively," Eagles head coach Craig Hamilton said.

Silverton would go on to win the game, 48-0. "They did not 45 us until about 2:30 left in the fourth," Hamilton said.

Cale Fogerson led the Eagles with 96 yards rushing on 22 carries.

Zaron Garza completed two of nine passes for Jason Collazo had four carries for 17 yards before leaving the game early in the first quarter with a broken arm.

Danny Martinez has one carry for nine yards and one reception for eight yards, and Fogerson had one carry for four yards.

The Eagles will travel to Lazbuddie at 7:30 p.m. tonight.

Leaf wax may be key to drought and heat tolerance in wheat

By Kay Ledbetter Special to the Dispatch

COLLEGE STATION — Wax build-up is not always a bad thing, according to a Texas A&M University soil and crop scientist.

Dr. Dirk Hays, associate professor of cereal grain developmental genetics, has been researching leaf wax, it's variability in different genetic wheat lines and what difference the wax can make in heat and drought tolerance of the crop.

Hays recently returned from seven months of traveling on a Fulbright Regional Research Scholarship to India and Bangladesh.

"They have a similar problem to ours with terminal heat stress in wheat," Hays said. "Their problem is chronic, steady increases in heat, which impairs wheat development and decreases yield and quality.

"Our problem is sporadic, where the stress occurs with spiked temperatures. Under both cases, wheat, as in most crops, is extremely have grown wheat for more sensitive to flower and early than 1,000 years. seed abortion due to high temperature stress."

"What I have been looking at is a wheat mapping population, trying to find genes that are regulating heat and drought tolerance," he said. "The main goal was to define the genes that regulate leaf and glume wax, and how increased wax content improves heat and drought tolerance."

Hays said his research has found big genetic variations in the amount of leaf wax on leaves and glumes between different genetic wheat lines. This variation can be as high as 10- to 20-fold in the amount of leaf wax between cultivars.

"But you can't visually score that; you have to chemically quantify it," he said. "We've found if leaf wax is quantified and mapped, it can result in up to a 25 percent increase in yield. The higher wax keeps the plant cooler and reduces the amount of water the plant uses to keep itself cool."

Hays said during his seven months overseas, he was working with the local scientists to convey how to measure the wax content in different lines and then how to use that as an improved selection tool for droughttolerant wheat.

"While I have done extensive work on leaf wax here, this was another environment where I could verify these characteristics make a difference in improving heat and drought tolerance." Bangladesh and India are potential hot spots for global warming, he said, and both

In India, the farmers grow primarily a spring wheat crop under both dryland and irrigated conditions. But they are facing dropping water tables and more sporadic monsoon seasons, Hays said. Crop yield trends have shown a plateau, indicative of the negative impact of global warming.

"It's imperative that we stay ahead of global climate change and improve the adaptation of wheat and other crops to increased high temperature stress, especially during the vulnerable reproductive stages (flowering and early seed development)," Hays said.

"Their crops are probably better adapted to heat stress than ours are, so the learning was definitely a two-way collaboration," he said.

In India, he worked at Banarus Hindu University with Dr. V. K. Mishra and in Bangladesh he was at the Bangladesh Agricultural Research Institute working with Dr. Naresh Barma.

"Bangladesh has a population of 160 million in a country the size of Louisiana," Hays said. "They are self-sufficient with their rice and a dynamic vegetable market. India is on the margin of being able to feed itself. They have the highest amount of arable land, and it is very productive."

Hays said the Fulbright scholarship offered him a good chance to build on this collaboration and make use of the two countries and their tremendous sources of environmental tolerance.

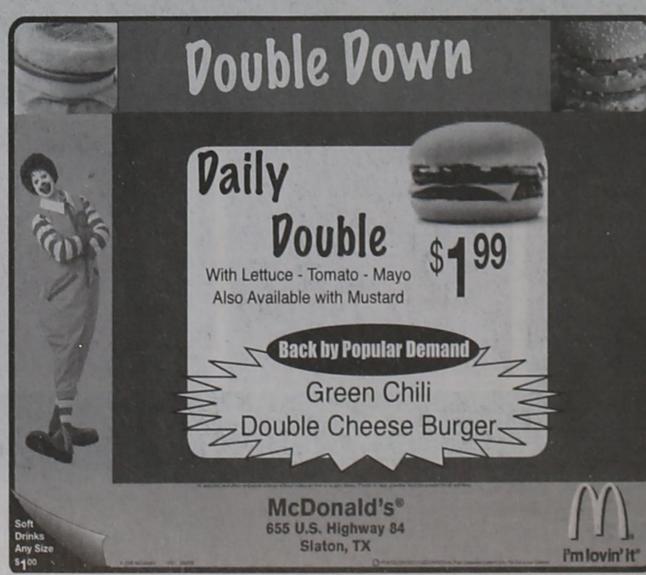

"We are working to improve the selection process," he said. "We are looking at what they are already selecting for and what phenotypic traits are there.

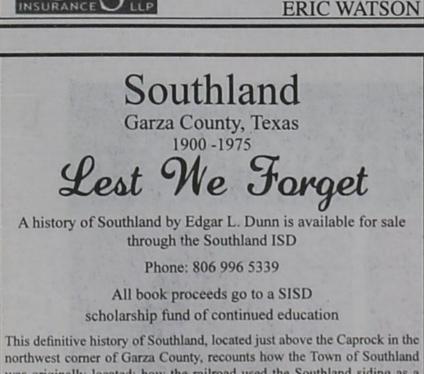

"No one has analyzed the detail of leaf wax and the chemical composition," Hays said. "But the growing interest now in genetic plant breeding is to package together traits - find optimal root or leaf structures and patch those into a cultivar that gives you ideal performance."

Finding these optimal traits can be done by using genetic marker-assisted breeding to track the genes that regulate wax and root leaf structure for optimal performance under heat and drought stress, he said.

Shift in cotton acres possible as grain prices are soaring

By Blair Fannin Special to the Dispatch

COLLEGE STATION - High grain prices as a result of continuous drought in the Midwest could cause a potential shift in some Texas cotton acreage looking ahead to the 2013 crop year, according to Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Service economists.

Dr. John Robinson, AgriLife Extension cotton economist in College Station, said you would have to look back six years to when the Lone Star State last saw a significant change in cotton acres.

"The last time we had a major reduction was over 20 percent in 2006-2007 as a result of higher grain prices," he said. "Even though we don't grow a lot of soybeans, I hear stories of high sorghum prices that will tempt a lot of growers. I wouldn't be surprised to see our acreage drop down 20 percent to about 5 million cotton acres."

"There is the possibility, but it is limited," said Dr. Mark Welch, AgriLife Extension economist in College Station. "Grain sorghum in the High Plains is secondary if they have a failed cotton crop. Overall, cotton farmers are cotton farmers."

The outcome of the 2013 wheat crop is the biggest question, Welch said, as prices continue an upward trend over the past three

"If we get a bunch of rain, this could lead to a lot of opportunity," he said.

Blair Fannin/Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Service Cotton prices are predicted to be in a tight range in the near term, although changes in world supply projections could trigger fluctuations. Producers can rely on options contracts to take advantage of price swings in both an up or down market.

Texas plants approximately 6 million wheat acres. If the state receives ample rain this fall, there could be an increase in harvested acreage and possibly an increase nationwide. This is in response to wheat following the recent run-up in corn prices, eclipsing more than $8 a bushel, Welch said.

"We are certainly setting ourselves up for a very large grain crop in 2013," Welch

Robinson said cotton prices will "pretty much stay in a sideways chan-

"They've been just under 70 cents a pound to most recently 77 cents a pound," he said. "I'm expecting a continuation of a range, sideways action pattern bouncing around with some outside news. I'm expecting prices to trade anywhere from 80 cents to the low 70s."

Robinson said prices could react accordingly to some type of world supply news, such as India, which hand harvests its cotton and could possibly come up a million bales short of expectations.

"That might generate a market rally," he said.

Marketing strategies for cotton producers this late in the season are limited.

"There is not much in the options world you can do at the moment," Robinson said. "I think right now just getting the best cash offer you can is the main thing. If you are shopping around for call options you might be able to catch any upside surprise."

Robinson said producers could take advantage of any possible volatility on the December 2013 futures by buying options "way in advance, so it may be worth shopping and thinking about what is affordable and what the price direction is."

Hunter-education course to be offered locally

The Post Dispatch

A hunter education class has been scheduled for Oct. 20-21 at the Post High School cafeteria.

Drew Spencer, game warden for Garza and Lynn counties, will instruct the class, which will run from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Attendance is required at both classes.

According to state law, hunters ages 9 to 16 must successfully complete a hunter-education course, and those 17 years and older tification is 9 years old, and must successfully compete a hunter-education course, or purchase a "hunter education deferral" and be accompanied by a licensed hunter.

Hunters younger than age 9 must be accompanies by a licensed hunter who is at least 17 years old.

"Accompanied" means a person who is at least 17, who is licensed to hunt in Texas, who has passed hunter education, or is exempt (born before Sept. 2, 1971. Proof of certification or deferral is required to be on your person while hunting.

Post rolls over Lamesa, 40-33

Antelopes look for revenge against Slaton Tigers this week

By Wayne Hodgin The Post Dispatch

Last week's game against Lamesa High can be summed up in a single word.

Barnburner.

The Bold Gold's 40-33 routing of the Golden Tors notched Post's second win of the season. Head coach Steve Smith couldn't say enough good things about his offensive team.

"It was a good game for us," Smith said. "Our offensive line is doing a fantastic job of keeping the ball out of the other team's hands. We just kept hammering away and wearing down their defense."

A Bryan Smith punt in the third quarter that was recovered about the 10-yard line allowed the Antelopes (2-0) to score and put them up eight points over the Tors (0-2).

Lamesa couldn't quite close in on that lead the remainder of the game.

"Early on, we were moving the ball like we wanted to. Outside of a 10-play span there in the third quarter, we were right there," first-year Golden Tor head coach David Ritchey told the Lamesa Press-Reporter. "Of course, not having Ryan (Garza) there in the second half hurt. Everybody's well aware of how explosive he is for us on both sides of the ball."

Garza was injured on a play late in the first half, which forced the Tor senior into watching the second half from the sidelines.

"Still, you'd like to think any night where you put up 33 points you'd have a shot at winning," Ritchey said.

Coach Smith pointed to other key players, including D.J. Brown, who rushed for 260 yards for the offense and Bryan Smith, who added another 26 yards rushing.

"Anytime you have you backs running 300 yards on the offense, it's going to be a good game," Coach Smith said.

Another key player, Smith said, was Alejo Rodriguez on the defense who notched eight tackles from the linebacker position.

The Antelopes will travel just up the road tonight to face an undefeated Slaton team, which last year slapped the Bold Gold with at 41-0 win.

"I definitely think this week's game will be the biggest challenge of the season," Smith said. "We'll go out and do the best we can do, and hopefully come away with our third win."

Weather Trivia

Where did the word tornado come from?

Answer: The Spanish word tronada.

Weather History

Sept. 14, 1987 - Thunderstorms developing along a cold front produced severe weather from Minnesota to Texas. Thunderstorms in Iowa produced baseball size hail at Laporte City and 80 mph winds at Laurens.

Sept. 15, 1752 - A great hurricane produced a tide along the South Carolina coast that came close to inundating downtown Charleston. However, just before the tide reached the city, a shift in the wind caused the water level to drop five feet in 10 minutes.

Detailed Local Forecast

Today we will see partly cloudy skies with a slight chance of showers and thunderstorms, high temperature of 73°, humidity of 38%. North northeast wind 15 mph. The record high temperature for today is 97° set in 1978. Expect partly cloudy skies tonight with an overnight low of 54°. Northeast wind 5 to 10 mph. The record low for tonight is 47° set in 1975. Saturday, skies will be mostly sunny with a high temperature of 78°, humidity of 29%. North northeast wind 5 mph. Skies will be mostly clear Saturday night with an overnight low of 60°.

Dixie Divas Crying and cussing

This is how bad times are getting — Claudette has taken to crying and Grace Ann has change. I resist it. So, when Claudette, tough as nails, broke down and cried and Grace Ann, who never met a Bible study she didn't memorize, cussed, and it both happened in the same week, I was stunned speechless. I walked around in a daze for two days.

"What is happening to the world as I know it?" I mumbled to myself as I folded clothes. The end of time must be near, I concluded. After all, strange things are supposed to happen before time concludes. Trust me when I tell you — really strange things are happening around here.

It started with Grace Ann. She's the epitome of calm and kindness; the one who loves her enemies, prays for those who hurt her and stirs up a casserole at the first hint of an obituary. She refuses to see a rated-R movie and the strongest word in her vocabulary is "darn."

Spelled out, I might add.

"Oh, d-a-r-n!" she exclaimed one day when she snagged her silk dress with her engagement ring.

"Oh, p-l-e-a-s-e!" I retorted, rolling my eyes. "You don't have to spell it out."

One day over lunch, she confessed the drama in her family was breaking her down. She detailed the sordid tales of relatives and how she often wound up as the punching bag when she was the one who tried so hard to keep peace. This, I know is true. For more than 20 years I have watched as she is the one who always scurries to mend rips and tears in order to keep the family as harmonious as possible.

"Finally, I had just had it," she admitted. "I got into my car, locked the doors, and I started screaming at the top of lungs."

Then she told me the word she was screaming.

I blinked. Then I blinked again.
"What?" I slapped my right

"What?" I slapped my right ear, trying to unclog it. "I know something is wrong with my hearing."

She smiled. Then she

She smiled. Then she laughed. "Nope, you heard correctly." The grin grew broader. "And you know what? It felt so good! Something about that word just released all my tension."

I'm still speechless on that

Claudette I have known since I was dressed in cotton dresses while she was sporting dungarees with striped T-shirts and climbing trees. She played baseball with the boys while I played Barbies. She's always been tough, stoic in the tradition of the country folks from which she comes.

She is smart, hard working and goes toe-to-toe with any problem that arises. She never complains. She just dives in and takes care of whatever goes wrong.

But Claudette, like many, has faced enormous challenges over the past few years. The weight of her problems would have long ago brought down a weaker person. The other day on the phone, she said, "Mom said something to me the other day and I just couldn't take it. I broke down and started crying."

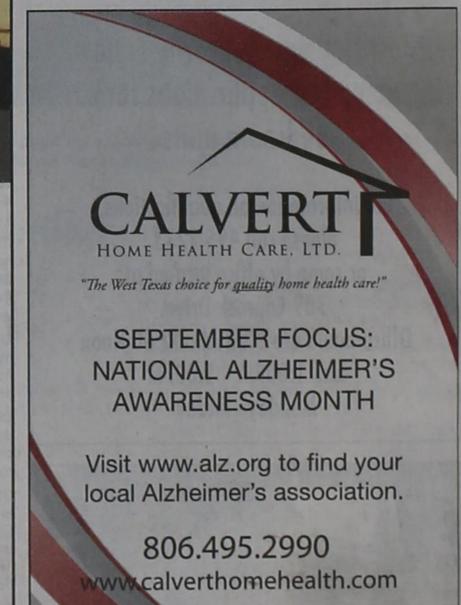

"You cried?" I shook my head in astonishment. "I sure did."

"First, Grace Ann cusses, then you cry," I said. "Am I living in an episode of 'The Twilight Zone'?"

Others might judge the state of the world by unemployment numbers, foreclosures and bank failures but not me. I judge it when sane people start acting crazy and crazy acting people start making sense. I judge it when the strong and the righteous are bending to ways of desperation.

Cussing and crying. That's how I judge it.
