PE-RU-NA Worth Its Weight in Gold

You cannot mistake the words of Mr. W. W. Northrup, of 908 Fourth Street, Sjoux City, Iowa. He is enthusiastic about his present health and the merits of PE-RU-NA and wants everyone to know it. Here is a recent letter from him :-

"PE-RU-NA is worth its weight in gold and then some. I used to think it only a woman's remedy but have changed my mind. I had a cough, especially in the morning. After using half a bottle of PE-RU-NA was much better. I would cough up chunks of phlegm and mucus, my eyes itched and bothered me. Judging from the symptoms given in your almanse it was catarrh. My stomach is in much better condition since using your

LAUGHS AT GREENLAND COLD

In His Primitive Abode, Eskimo Dwells in Comfort Through the Monotonous Arctic Winter.

The Eskimo of Greenland, no matter what his station in life may be, always has both a summer and winter home. The winter house is de scribed by Roger Pocock in the Wide NOT MUCH STUDY INVOLVED World Magazine as being a dugout and beams of driftwood. It has but one window, as winter in Greenland occurs during the four-month-long arctic night. Entrance to the one large room of which the house consists is gained through a long tunnel about five feet in height, in which the dogs is a raised dais on which the entire family sleep, and in the front part stands the stove. This stove consists of a hollow stone filled with seal oil in which burns a rag wick, which lights and heats the house and cooks part in the debates. the meals.

RAISE MORE PUREBRED COWS

Increase of 249 Per Cent in Bull As sociation Herds Shown by Records for 1919.

(Prepared by the United States Depart-ment of Agriculture.)

Purebred cows in bull association herds have increased 249 per cent since 1918, according to the bull association directory recently compiled by the United States department of agriculture. The records for 1918 show that the number of cows owned by members of bull associations was 10,248, of which 597, or 5.5 per cent, were purebreds; while the records for 1919 show the total number of cows was 18,244, of which 2,086, or 11.43 per cent, were purebreds.

Comparing only those associations which reported in both 1918 and 1919, it is found that in 1918 there were 450 purebreds, and in 1919, 1,601 pureoreds, or an increase of 118 per cent.

That the bull association is proving a great help to the small breeder is evidenced by the fact that the number of associations has increased from

Well-Bred and Profitable Cows Such as This Result From the Use of Dairy Bulls of High Quality.

44 in 1918 to 78 in 1919. The bull association guarantees the farmer the continued use of a good purebred bull at a cost that is within his reach, and the farmer has not been slow to realize its value. If the present rate of improvement is maintained it is certain that the future will show a steady replacement of the grades by purebreds, and that this will take place both by natural increase and by purchase until the members of bull associations will have practically all purebred cows in their herds. Without a bull association few of these smaller breeders would have found it possible to get into the raising of purebreds.

PROFITABLE FEED FOR COWS

"June Pasture" Suggests Ideal Condition for Production of Milk and Butterfat

The profitable feeding of dairy cows consists of supplying them with plenty of well-balanced, palatable feed, in surroundings which afford them health and comfort. Nature gives the dairyextent that the very words, "June pasture," suggests the ideal condition for producing milk and butterfat of the highest quality and in greatest abundance. The dairyman should, therefore, endeavor to extend all these ideal conditions throughout as much of the year as possible, and will succeed just as far as he recognizes and applies the

Tell Dairyman Whether He Is Running Behind With Cows and Where Profit Is Being Lost.

Nine times out of ten the man who s sure he is running behind in dairying does not know whether he is or not-no accounts, no careful reckoning up of the cost of production. What shall the man who is in that fix do? Sell out? Not a bit of it! Turn over a new leaf. Keep account of everything that enters into the cost of production. Improve methods of marketing, and see if you are not really making good on the dairy end of your farming operations. The chances are you will think more of the cows, and if you do you will take better care of them and they will do better for you.

Keep Your Liver Active, Your System Purified and Free From Colds by Taking Calotabs, the Nausealess Calomel Tablets, that are Delightful, Safe and Sure.

Physicians and Druggists are advising their friends to keep their systems purified and their organs in perfect working order as a protection against the return of influenza. They know that a clogged up system and a lazy liver favor colds, influenza and serious complications.

To cut short a cold overnight and to prevent serious complications take one Calotab at bedtime with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea, no griping, no sickening after effects. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified and refreshed and you are feeling fine with a hearty appetite for break-

Not until then did the doctor think of his empty gas tank. It was too late. He walked a mile to the nearest farm house, roused a sleepy but obliging farmer, borrowed a gallon of gasoline and walked a mile back to the auto. He poured the gas in the tank and expected soon to be home, but he was doomed to disappointment. He had the carburetor set for a "high test" gas and the common fuel refused to respond. After repeated efforts and adjustments. Dr. Hawkins got the motor started, but in the meantime he had used most of the gallon of gasoline and when he started for home, the car soon went dead again. Then another long walk and the rousing of another sleepy farmer to get to a telephone and the doctor had help sent out from a local garage. He got home, but not until in the wee small hours of the morning and with the old saying 'never again" firmly impressed on his mind.-Indianapolis News.

TRUCKS AIDING ROAD PLANS

Long Island Cited as Example of Prosperity Maintained by Efficient Highway System.

By WINDSOR T. WHITE, Chairman Motor Truck Committee, National Auto-mobile Chamber of Commerce.)

Motor highway transportation has grown to such vast importance in the past few years and has so well demonstrated its value and efficiency that it has won official public recognition in many of our states. But this activity can develop in a sound economic way only as good roads programs are developed. While there are examples where motor transportation has succeeded when run in territories that have undeveloped roads, they, in comparison with the thousands of motortruck routes, are practically negli-

One of our greatest wastes in the andling of the prime necessity, food, ecurs in our present transportation methods. Hundreds of millions of dollars are annually wasted because the present method of transportation adapted to our present road system, is so costly that it does not pay to move this food from the farm to an area of consumption.

It is said that New York state has 18,400 miles of surface highways and 79,398 miles of unimproved raral roads. While the state has a much higher percentage of improved roads than is common for the United States, they do not benefit the farmer as much as could be desired.

Long Island is one of the most pros perous agricultural areas in New York state. It is not exceptionally fertile; in fact, it may be said that it is fertile because man has made it so. There are many areas in the state that are naturally more productive than Long Island, but which are far less prosperous. If you could take a trip over the island you would know the reason why the island farmers are famous for their product and financial independence. A well-planned, well-constructed, and finely maintained system of roads is the greatest asset the island has. Every evening one can see hundreds of motortrucks, from two to five ton capacity, rolling over these roads, bound for the New York market. Here is no 50 nor 40, nor ever 10 per cent waste. #### "ANGELA KISSED ME!"

Synopsis.-Dick Morgan of Syracuse, N. Y., a failure in life, enlist-ed in the Foreign Legion of the French army under the name of Henry Hilliard, is disfigured by shrapnel. The French surgeons ask for a photograph to guide them in restoring his face. In his rage against life he offers in derision a picture postcard bearing the radiant face of Christ. The surgeons do a good job. On his way gack to America he meets Martin Harmon, a New York broker. The result is that Morgan, under the name of Hilliard and unrecognized as Morgan, goes back to Syracuse to selling a mining stock. He is determined to make good. He tells people of the death of Morgan. He finds in Angela Cullen a loyal de-fender of Dick Morgan. He meets Carol Durant, who had refused to marry him. She does not hesitate to tell him that she had loved Morgan. Hilliard finds he still loves her and is tempted to confess. Hilliard tempts Cullen, his former employer, with his mining scheme.

"A good principle, too, but-" Mr. Cullen glanced at his watch. "It's dinner time, and more too. We'd better get along up to the house, or the first thing you know, we'll have servant troubles in our midst. And you didn't bring up that subject anyway-I brought it up." He took Angela's arm paternally. "Just as a matter of fact," he said, clearing his throat. "As a matter of fact, Mr. Hilliard-whereabouts did you say this property is located?"

Shortly after dinner Angela, who had fled to the telephone in answer to a peremptory summons, came back ne announced. "All three of us. Very quiet, Carol said. So I accepted -and that means you've got to stay with us two days more anyway, Mr. Hilliard. Do you mind very much?"

"Mind!" Hilliard had risen half out of his chair. His tremendous yearning to see Carol again, and his violent reaction at the prospect, had greatly influenced his voice, which was strident, explosive. The Cullens were laughing aloud at his confusion.

"He's blushing!" crowed Angela. "Look at him! Look at him!"

Indeed, he was crimson to the temples. Sunday-forty-eight hours! How he had spurned her !- and how he had suffered from that moment until now! To see her again . . . merely to see her! Business was business, and the farce must go on; no matter what else happened, he must hew out his success; he had ceased to love her, and he had come prepared for guerilla warfare . . . but to see her again! To hear her voice! To watch that smile of hers, and remember the tears she had shed for Dicky Morgan!

Sunday-forty-eight hours! The Cullens were still laughing at him, and in Angela's soprano there was a note of feminine resentment, but Hilliard's ears were suddenly stone

CHAPTER VII.

Since Friday night, Hilliard had lived only for Sunday; his whole existence had been turned to Sunday, and when at last the morning dawned, his greatest fear was that he might not live until dinner-time.

On reaching Carot's side, he was both awkward and incoherent; and he falled to derive encouragement from the realization which gradually stole over him, that the Durants had asked a number of other guests to dinner. emstrong was waiting patiently in isle, and keeping closer to Carol Uliard liked, and there was also ced boy of nineteen or twenad promptly attached himself ingela-his name was Waring, and s the grandson of the patriarchyman, with the head of Moses pirit of youth, who presently n to join the little group, and So that altogether there ple who finally sat down lilliard's dream of quiet time, he amused himself by watching Angela and Waring playing their world-old game across the table; after that, he paid a little polite attention to Mrs. Durant, and to the clergyman; and then snatching an opportunity unlooked for, he gave his kindest smile to Carol, and for an instant took the monopoly from Armstrong. And he had hardly looked down once into her October-brown eyes before the mystery of his restlessness was as clear as crystal, and Hilliard was thoroughly

dumfounded, and confused.

It had come upon him, a quarter of an hour ago, as they exchanged their first superficial sentences, that he was lonelier than he had ever imagined, but he hadn't realized, until this immediate contingency, that this sensation had carried over until now. He was prevented, by the very limits of the project which had brought him here, from releasing any of his sincere thoughts; he hadn't comprehended, until he had learned the truth just now by actual experience, that loneliness is nothing but an aggravated state of self-repression. Never in all his life, not even when he had lain for months in hospital in France, had he been as lonely as today, and at this moment, when he was surrounded by people he knew intimately, and when he was enjoined from sharing in their community of mind.

Carol, looking up at him with what wasn't exactly a smile, but was at least a cousin to it-that well-remembered flash of sympathetic interest-Carol spoke to him under cover of the general conversation.

"A penny for your thoughts!" she proffered.

"They aren't worth it," said Hilliard. "I was thinking about myself." He continued to regard her steadily, and he was alarmed to discover that "Dinner at the Durant's on Sunday." he was losing one of the abilities which had made him so sure of him-He continued to hold that she had treated him shabbily, mercilessly; but notwithstanding that, as he gazed at her, and perceived the sweet naturalness which was developing out of last week's shock, he was secretly perturbed. In spite of himself, he began to see, as though by camera obscura, dim visions of the past; he was righteously annoyed that they should rise to torment him, and still the visions came.

"But after all that you've been through," she said, "I should think your thoughts about yourself would be extremely interesting!"

"I'm afraid they're rather gloomy, Miss Durant, whenever they touch on what I've been through. And when anything like this gathering here today builds up a comparison. . . . I'm sorry, but I can't always master it."

"You mean the difference between a family over here and a family over there?"

"Exactly," he said. "Down to the last detail-what we eat, and where we live, and what we talk about, and what we think about-everything."

"I've thought of that, too," she said soberly. "But I'll have to confess that it wasn't until you came-it wasn't until after that first night at Angela's -that the great difference came home to me. It's made me feel that it's al-

ple, and no more—there wasn't the slightest use in Armstrong's loitering disconsolately in the neighborhood; it had a maximum capacity of two. Furthermore, it was removed by several feet from the nearest listening post.

He was so close to her that their sleeves touched: he looked into the beautiful eyes which were so clear, so unsuspecting; and his will swayed perilously. Had he prepared so long and savagely for his requital, only to lose his impetus at almost the first glance of those brown eyes? He reflected that there was nothing to prevent him from being a good salesman, and from renewing his predilection for Carol at the same time. The idea of courting her again, in his false character, was highly dramatic. . .

"I know you won't misunderstand me," he said, his heart shaking, "and I hope that you won't consider it as too presumptuous-but-the other day you spoke of Dicky Morgan as a very dear friend of yours. Miss Durant, I want to do everything in the world I can for you, and he was my dear friend as well as yours. I'm not disloyal to him, or to you, or to myselfbut I should like more than I can ever tell you to feel that I had done my utmost to take his place. No one can do that literally-I am not so vain-but I feel, and I have felt from the time we met each other, Dicky would have wanted us to be friends."

"That's-that's wonderfully thoughtful of you," said Carol, softly. "And ... and I mink he would have wanted that . . . if he'd known. . . ." Her eyes were suspiciously dim and Hilliard's loneliness dissolved into a great spasm of longing which held him and shook him and left him weak with impotence

"Then I'll stay in Syracuse," he said abruptly. "Provided-provided you won't be offended if I do have to want to know you for yourself-just a little selfishly. I'm afraid that isn't very clear-it's difficult to separate it-but

"Don't try to explain," she said, subdued. "I know how hard all this must be for you-and I think perhaps you need my friendship as much as I need

Before he could reply, there was a flutter of indescribable gracefulness before them. Angela was courtesving in mock obeisance to the floor. Behind her. Waring was watching her possessively.

"If your majesties will wake up half second," she said, "everybody's going to walk up around the Sedgwick farm tract to get some fresh air. Coming?" As they stood together, drenched with regret for the confidences that might forever remain unsaid, a maid appeared in the doorway. "Please, ma'am," she said breathsly "it's the Western Mr. Hilliard."

"Right in my study," called the doctor, hurrying. "Just across the hall. There you are!" and ushered him into the sanctum and considerately closed the door.

Despite the urgent summons which the average person feels under such circumstances Hilliard was astonishingly tardy in sitting down to the receiver. For one thing he was still vibrating from his recent stress of passion; for another he knew pretty certainly what the message was going to be, and for a third, he was somewhat emotionally under the spell of the doctor's room. Hilliard had spent a hundred hours in it-pleasant hours, so that involuntarily yielding to its kindly atmosphere, and all that the atmosphere implied, he took time to survey all four walls before he took up the receiver. And after he had listened to the telegram, and ordered a copy mailed to him in care of Mr. Cullen, he took time to survey those walls again, more closely; and this was partly for their intrinsic significance, and partly because his feelings were so fresh and tender that he dreaded to return at once to the guthering which, as a whole, couldn't be expected to defer to them. His eyes fell upon the doctor's desk, wandered and suddenly focussed hard and piercingly. He went over to the desk and slowly put out his hand and lifted up a small photograph in a metal frame.

"Well, I'll be darned!" said Hilliard, just above a whisper. The turning of the doorknob roused him; he wheeled with the photograph still in his hand. "Hello!" sald Doctor Durant, cheerfully. "Get your message all right?

What's that you've found? Oh, yes-Dick's picture." Hilliard swallowed hard, and found that his voice was queerly out of con-brought back. I've had it there ever since he gave it to me." He took it gently from Hilliard's hand; replaced it on the desk. "How and left them together. "You walk along with me, sir!" said Angela, imperially. "And you'd better behave yourself-I'm fierce!" At the same moment that he looked yearningly toward Carol, who up ahead by the doorway was already captive to the wily Armstrong, young Rufus Waring was glaring belligerent. ly toward Hilliard.

The masquerader smiled in defeat, then smiled with sudden realization of the woman-child clinging to him. He squeezed her arm out of sheer affec-"Your gallant cavalier'll cover me

The others were all on the steps; these two were in the dusky vestibule. Waring was fretting impatiently outside. "Would you?" asked Hilliard. He intended only to tease her; but all at once her head came up, and he could see that her eyes were big and soft and frightened. She was hardly seventeen, and to Hilliard she had never ceased to be the child of two years ago. He bent and kissed her; her lips were trembling, expressive.

"Now we've got to hurry," he said. It was the tone he would naturally use to a child, but he had an uneasy feeling that he had used it to a woman. Children's lips aren't expressive. And he had another intuition-still more upsetting to him-which was that he had been observed. For on the threshold of the outer door Carol and Armstrong and Rufus Waring, as though turned back to inquire into the cause of Hilliard's and Angela's delay, were standing. . . He could not tell, of course, whether they had actually seen him. It was possible that in the dusk of the hallway he had escaped; certainly there was nothing in the manner of any one of the three, when Hilliard joined them, to convince him one way or the other. But he knew that he was in a critical situation; he knew that to any reasonable person who had seen him at that spontaneous little outburst of I want." sentiment, his motives wouldn't appear to be very opaque.

No. the manner of those three who had stood on the threshold was astonishingly casual. Perhaps too casual. . . Hilliard frowned, and tried to glimpse their various expressions. Ah! Waring, striding stiltedly ahead, had thunderclouds on his forehead, and as for Carol . . .

She turned to speak to Armstrong. and Hilliard knew.

For the remainder of the first stage of that walk, he spoke not a word to Angela, who trudged along by his side with God knows what tumults in her bosom. He thought not of Angela, nor concerned himself with the storm he had stirred within her. He was absorbed solely with the puzzle which lay before him, which was to detach Carol as soon as possible, and to explain himself. Otherwise, his reputation was ashes ever now. And, to his unbounded joy, the opportunity came soor-at the end of the road, where the party halted for a moment, to take a referendum as to oute. Armstrong strayed a yard or too far, and on the instant Hil-lian was Carol's erbow. She said no pie, hor did he; but who h was resumed, he was and beating his brains wy remark. He had of warmth creeping into her voice. Hilliard held his breath:

He had spoken the lines magnificently, with the precise humor and pathos which go to make them immortal. "I'm glad she fits into the meter," he said thoughtfully, "because I can understand just how Leigh Hunt felt about Jennie." "And-how do you think that was?"

"Very sensitive," said Hilliard, "and perhaps a little repressed and-decrepit." He smiled reminiscently. "I suppose there are very few things in life that make a man feel more mindful of his own crudity and general worthlessness than to have a child's spontaneous affection." It was the testing venture. She looked at him sidewise.

"More than if-if it weren't a child?"

"I think so." His tone was fauitless. "A woman can make a man feel like Romeo, but it takes a very young girl to make him feel like Launcelotat my age."

"She is adorable, isn't she?" His heart jumped at her cordial acceptance of his statement. "Only-she's seventeen, Mr. Hilliard." "I know," he said gravely. "And that's why I'm so conscious of my own senility. Because all that beautiful innocence and ignorance is doomed. Miss Durant-who knows that I'm not the very last person to see it? Today, I'm only a much older man, some one she likes; tomorrow, I may be a man without the 'only,' and the more she liked me, the less she'd show it. But there's been mighty little of that sort of thing for me in the last few years from anybody, and I do appreciate it, and I'm not ashamed of it, either."

"No," she said, "you couldn't be. You're too human." She smiled at him, and he was transported at the proof of her sympathy. "If I were in your place, I'd want to feel the same way about it."

He thanked her in his heart. He had saved both Angela and himself, and held his pristine advantage.

But there was no disputing the fact that he had made an active enemy of Waring, and an alert rival out of Armstrong. He smiled grimly as he locked at the man ahead.

"Mr. Armstrong seems to be very aervous," he said. "Not that I can blame him for wanting to be in my place. On the contrary, I'm sorry for

"That shows a very good disposition," she said demurely. "Perhaps it does, and perhaps doesn't. I believe every man owes it to himself to get what he wants. If he does, he's a success; if he doesn'tit's his own fault."

As he said this, they came abreast of the others, and Armstrong, who had heard the final sentence, whirled toward Hilliard.

"Regardless of methods?" he demanded. "Why-to some extent," laughed Hilliard. "Why not?"

Armstrong delayed, so that the two men were a few paces behind the rest of the group. "Is that your regular creed, Mr. Hilliard?"

"My creed isn't composed of words,

Mr. Armstrong, but of actions." They had spoken so quietly that no one perceiving them would have remotely suspected that a challenge had been offered and accepted.

"Actions do speak louder, of course." no offense. But-I generally get what

"So do I Shall we shake hands on it?" Armstrong was very affable, but tremendously in earnest.

"With pleasure. I can count on your generosity, I see."

"And I on your courtesy." "Thank you." He went complacently forward; but inwardly he was steeped in perturbation. The man was so deadly sure of himself. Could it be that he was tacitly engaged to Carol, in spite of what Angela had surmised, or so nearly on the road to an understanding with her that Hil-
