T IS only with'n the past decade that engineers have come to the realization that heat generated by electricity has enormous possibilities of industrial development. Of course it has always been known that electricity passing through a wire created heat of varying degrees and intensity, but formerly this was considered more in the light of an unavoidable nuisance than otherwise.

As the electrical industry developed, however. and central stations of ever-increasing size were built, engineers began to look for means whereby stations could sell their electricity to the best advantage to themselves and the customers they served. This resulted in the rapid development of electric heating devices until today 500.000 K. W. or 670,000 horse power is used for industrial purposes alone. This figure represents some 71/2 per cent of the electric energy used for all other Industrial uses, for it has recently been estimated that about 9,000,000 horse power is used by electric motors in manufacturing.

The principal factor contributing to the increased use of electric heating appliances is the way "Darling I cooked dinner for you in which they answer the modern demand for conservation-conservation not only in the saving of all myself, and you've never said a natural resources, but the saving of time, materials and the reduction of the uncertain "personal element" to a minimum, as well as the improvement of the product. Despite the fact that the conversion of fuel into electric heat is only reached after a long and complicated series of steps, whose ultimate efficiency is but 20 per cent, it has met requirements so well that in time it will undoubtedly replace the use of fuel heating to an enormous extent. At Niagara Falls, for example, fully 90 per cent of the energy now generated is used for industrial heating purposes. In fact, its development in recent years has gained such headway that it blds fair to surpass, in energy consumption, both the light and power branches > of electrical service together. With the enormous amount of undeveloped hydraulic power in the country, it is not easy to predict where the final stopping point will be, because it is by water power that electrical energy can be most efficiently developed as regards money input versus output. The limits to the use of electricity, produced hydraulically, can be grasped only when it is realized that there is one hundred and twelve million potential horse power on the continent of North America still undeveloped.

Most industrial heating of former days was obtained through three medlums-coal, oil or gas. With your fingers! You can lift off Taking coal as an example in reaching the exceedany hard corn, soft corn, or corn be- ingly high temperature necessary in some processes, 88 per cent of the B. T. U., or heat units, in a pound of coal are used up in merely raising the fuel and the excess air of the furnace to the little at any drug store; apply a few required temperature, thus wasting the natural resources upon which we depend so much, and making the average industrial town anything but a you lift that bothersome corn or cal- healthful or pleasant place in which to live.

With electrical heat, temperatures that are impossible to fuel-generated heat are reached quickly, economically, and without any consequent defilement of the surrounding atmosphere, Along the same line of conservation, manufacturers are "Whom have we here?" said the beginning to realize that the elimination of spoiled and unfit products, whether rendered so by inefficient and unreliable methods of heating, or by careless employees is just as much conservation as anything else. Also the elimination of unnecessary labor, and the establishment of cleaner, safer working conditions, tend toward the attainment of the rapid rate of production which is the paramount demand of the present industrial era.

Thus the variety of processes to which electric heat is applicable has given rise to many devices for its use, ranging all the way from a metalmelting furnace, whose production is 18,000 pounds a day, through the oven field, to small metal melting pots with a capacity of 25 pounds of metal. In the domestic field 25,000 electric ranges and an uncounted number of small household appliances are in use. All furnaces, ovens, etc., claim economy and perfection of their finished products.

To take the brass furnace as a typical example of what can be done by the application of electric heat in overcoming the difficulties of specialized operation, in the fuel-heated brass furnace, one of the greatest drawbacks is the loss of zinc through volatilization and oxidation due to the high temperature of the applied heat, as well as the atmospheric conditions surrounding the

In the electrically-heated brass furnace both bon resister, best for temperatures not exceeding but the only one that can be operated automati-

This furnace can be operated at higher temperature than the carbon resister type, and at the same time can be regulated to operate at lower temperatures economically, but with the additional feature of automatic control.

The electric furnace, in actual use, has reached in a research laboratory have, however, developed

ELECTRIC RIVET HEATER a furnace which gives a temperature of 4,500 C-enough to volatilize 'diamonds, A comparison of these temperatures with that of the sun, which is estimated at 5,000 C, gives a striking idea of what can be accomplished in handling refractory substances with electric heat.

There are other types of electric furnaces, which, although simple in construction, are capable of doing in one operation things which formerly took several heatings. In making shells, for example, for large caliber guns, it is necessary to expose different sections of the same shell to differen. degrees of heat. With an electric furnace this is done by simply combining heat units of varying resistance, according to the degree of heat de-

The war was responsible for many new devices designed with a view to increasing production quickly. One of the things the government needed most was ships-lots of them, and in building ships an enormous amount of rivets have to be heated, and that quickly. The usual method or heating these rivets was in a forge, usually buening coke or oil as fuel, which was after a careful survey, found to be woefully inefficient. The attendance was large, requiring a blower man as well as a passer; large quantities of rivers were burned, welded together, or insufficiently heated in the forge, and when it had to be taken into the hold of the ship for use, the difficulties of operation were only exceeded bythe vileness of the atmosphere resulting from the fumes of the forge.

The result was the electric rivet heater. Rivets are now heated by inserting them between two copper bars carrying a heavy current, supplied by a transformer. Since the iron of the rivets themselves is a material of high resistance, they are heated thoroughly and quickly. The bars are operated by a foot pedal, so that when the rivets are removed, or are being placed in position to be heated, the current censes to flow. The whole apparatus is easily portable.

It was found that this simple machine heated the rivets throughout; that, inasmuch as the energy was used only when the rivets were actually being heated, there was no waste of heat; that there were no noxious fumes or spoiled and wasted rivets, and that the machine was nearly foolproof. The attendance was reduced to a minimum, and there was no necessity of supplying fuel, with the consequent trouble in disposing of the ashes when it was being operated in more or less inaccessible parts of a ship. It has a capacity of 800 1/4-inch rivets, 1 inch long per hour, which is enough under ordinary conditions for a gang of gun riveters.

The place where electric heat has found its greatest application, from the standpoint of number of installations at least, is in the electrically. heated oven, or air-drying and baking apparatus, as one prefers. It is surprising how many products that are necessities of our everyday life require an oven treatment somewhere in the course of their manufacture.

Electric ovens are used more in the automobile industry than in any other field. Here 100,000 KW are used in baking the japan on 3,000 automobile bodies every day. In a few years the automobile whose japanned parts are not baked in an electric oven will be a rarity. Other large users of electric ovens are foundries, for baking cores; telephone and typewriter manufacturers; manufacturers of iron and bed frames, and chemical manufacturers of various sorts.

Oven processes include baking, air tempering, drying and sherardizing. Of these four the first is the most used, the other two are quite common, and the last is a process for protecting exposed iron parts from corrosion.

In many of these processes, accurate regulation of heat, and automatic control are absolutely necessary, because many materials are irrevocably ruined by a slight change in the temperature of the oven. And here again manufacturers have found that the saving in material which was spoiled by the vagaries of the fuel-heated furnace has more than paid for the increased expense of installing and operating a bank of electric ovens.

Of these three classes of ovens, those installed for baking are the most numerous. The work they do varies: beking japan on various articles,

COMPOUND MELTING POT baking enamels, cores and colored inks on lithographic plates. The japan baking oven has been developed from the experimental stage in the last four years. The process of baking japan in fuelng ovens, owing to the fact that v explosive liquids, such as naphtha and kerosene, are used as solvents, has always been a somewhat azardous operation. The gases given off are of a highly-explosive nature, and frequently highly-explosive nature, and frequently these as have exploded with decidedly disasts. Another fault of this fuel oven was treus r that in aking the lighter colors of a japan or enamels, soot from the gas sometimes would discolor the baking articles. Some of the ovens used in this work are of the conveyor type, so that loads can be loaded and unloaded while one is baking. The capacity of two of these ovens used in one plant is greater than that of six gas-heated formerly used to do the same work. It bout three-quarters of an hour to completed baking in one factory where these ovens are largely used, which more than doubles the number of loads finished per day, with a saving of 70 cents per load, which ran up into thousands of dollars when figured on a daily basis. The quality of work turned out is superior to that of the old type; it requires little or no attention, and the fire hazard is largely eliminated.

It is interesting to know that a new type of japan is being developed which consists of an emulsion of the asphalt base with water, thus removing the fire hazard, besides being much cleaner to handle. This process is called water japan.

Ovens are used for many other purposes; sterilizing dental instruments, baking effervescent salts and drying all sorts of products requiring well-regulated heat and a clean atmosphere in the oven itself. The fact that their temperatures can be so exactly regulated, the absence of a mass of fuel-carrying pipes, fumes, soot, and other by-products of burning gases, make the electric oven theoretically ideal for this purpose, The fourth process mentioned, electric sherard izing, is a patented process for protecting exposed iron parts from corrosion due to exposure to the weather.

Besides ovens, furnaces, and other devices mentioned, there are a number of small "individual" electrically-heated pots, furnaces, etc., for use in the shop, garage, or even at home. In this class are compound melting pots, glue pots, metal melters, small furnaces and electric soldering irons, Many of them are easily portable, in fact can be attached to almost any lighting or shop circuit. For work in a book bindery or pattern shop for instance, the electrically-heated pot keeps · the glue continuously at just the right temperature for use, but never burns it; the same may be said of the compound melting pot and the lead or abbitt melter, which are ideal for work around a garage or in a factory. As for the soldering iron, anyone who has used the gas-heated type on top of a ladder or in some inaccessible place, need not be told the advantages of an iron that is always hot and still light and well balanced enough to be used with accuracy and comfort

In spite of its growth in the last few years, the application of electrical heating to industry is only in its infancy. The time will undoubtedly come when the effort to conserve our natural coal and gas resources will cause it to assume much larger proportions. There is generally no limit to its possibilities of development not only as applied to factories, but in offices and homes. Engineers say that the saving of floor space, cleaner and more healthful working conditions, to say nothing of the improved speed of production an superior que've of work done, all tend to me but a matter of

"OH, MY GOD!"

Synopsis.-Dick Morgan of Syracuse, N. Y., a failure in life, enlist-ed in the Foreign Legion of the French army under the name of Henry Hillard, is disfigured by shrappel. The French surgeons ask for a photograph to guide them in restoring his face. In his rage against life he offers in derision a picture postcard bearing the radi-ant face of Christ. The surgeons do a good job. On his way back to Amer. a he meets Martin Harmon, a New York broker. The result is that Morgan, under the name of Hilliard, goes back to Syracuse to sell a mining stock. He is deter-mined to make good. He tells people of the death of Morgan. He finds in Angela Cullen a loyal de-fender of Dick Morgan. He meets Carol Durant, who had refused to marry him. She does not hesitate to tell him that she had loved Morgan. Hilliard finds he still loves her and is tempted to confess. Hilliard tempts Cullen, his former em-ployer, with his mining scheme. He discovers a rival for Carol's love to . wice young fellow named Armstroe, Hilliard betrays his love to Carol and is told he has one chance in a thousand." sells large blocks of mining stock to Culien and others. "Thank you. And you might take these drafts now; three of 'em. Right? Good. Well-any developments?"

"What?" Harmon tapped his cigarette case in the palm of his left hand. "Oh, you mean the mine?"

Hillfard nodded. "Yes. Have you gone any further with the shaft yet? Two or three of the more cautious men are holding back until something happens with that."

"Shaft?" Harmon was puzzled. "What shaft?" He placidly stowed away the drafts. "I'm not sinking any now shafts at this stage of the game."

It was Hilliard's turn to be puzzled. Why, I mean the old shaft on Silverbow No. 1. Have you gone any further with it? I've told these people we were just starting. That's right, isn't it?"

Harmon laughed noisily. "Oh, that shaft! Don't you think it's a little early to begin on that? Say, about ninety thousand dollars too early?"

As Hilliard sat gazing at him in profound bewilderment a waiter slid up alongside him and coughed for his at-

"I'm not sure. Let's go on discussing the mine."

"Not much else to discuss, is there? It's the same old mine." He looked intently at Hilliard. "What's got into you, anyway, in the last couple of minutes? You've lost all your pep. You look as though you've seen a ghost."

"Maybe I have," said Hilliard, with a short laugh.

"Well?" Hilliard regarded him with an odd intermingling of respect and alarm. At first, Hilliard was untouched by the shock; the force of it seemed to pass over him entirely; then all at once, as he was caught by the drift of it, his hands began to tremble violently; and his palms were clammy with sweat. His stomach seemed to drop out of him, and he was nauseated by the tremendous purport of his employer's cynicism.

"Of course, altogether there's about five hundred square miles of that same sort of land in the same state, but what's the odds as long's you're happy? Tell me you aren't wise? Rot! "To make some money-to get some fun out of it. I wanted to make fools of people; I didn't want to swindle anybody! I thought I was giving 'em something for their money! I-" Harmon lighted his cigarette, none too complacently. "The funny part about it," he said slowly, "is that I don't honestly believe you're bluffing. . . . But you knew it was only a prospect." "But I thought it was a good prospect! Never mind-" He made as though to rise. "You've said enough.

I'm through with you!" The big man's jaw thrust out belligerently, and he caught Hilliard by the arm.

"Now, stop right there! Sit down! Sit down! Maybe you thought it was a good prospect and maybe you didn't, but you're not through with me yetnot until I say so. "You know what I'm going to do about it, don't you?"

"Yes." Harmon nodded, as he drev the smoke deep into his lungs. "I'm going straight back to those four men, and-"

"No." Harmon wagged his head. 'No, you can't very well do that, either -even if you're as shocked as you look. Look at it just a minute . look at our contract. There's some loopholes for me you could drive a motortruck through; but you haven't got one as big as a knitting needle. But when you throw me down, I throw you down, and we'll see who comes out ahead. I'll bet I do. What do you

You can slip out of Syracuse just as easy as you please, and try your durnedest to make a getaway, and you'd have pretty hard work to keep away from the Pinkertons for twentyfour hours. . . . . . . At eight o'clock in the evening, when Rufus Waring knocked at Hilliard's door, it was opened by a man with a face to remember afterward. There were deep-cut lines-almost furrows-by the mouth and eyes; and the eyes themselves were startlingly luminous, and drawn. The man's complexion was chalk-white,

"Why, Mr. Hilliard!" exclaimed Waring, "What on earth's the matter with you?"

"Come on in," said Hilliard, and his smile was ghastly. "I've been waiting for you."

CHAPTER X.

Hilliard was waiting, hoping, praying for a blow from fate, but fate, which at other times had been ready enough for fisticuffs, and often premature with them, refrained from striking. The interview with Waring had passed without friction (and Hilliard had so contrived to present his data that Waring had finally declined the risk) and the night passed and the morning came, with its accompanying horde of old regrets and a new and sweeping inrush of fresh hallucinations.

To his tortured imagination, he was a greater paradox than even Jekyll and Hyde; for he was Hilliard and Dicky Morgan, the living and the dead, without the boon of the supernatural to separate them. And yet he felt that the wickedness of what he had done was the wickedness of Dicky Morgan. and that he, Hilliard, the soul, was sitting in impartial judgment on Dicky Morgan, the flesh. He conceded the wrong; he conceded the penalty; nevertheless, his youth ared out to him for mercy.

At the maid's announcement, Doctor Durant, who had been eccupied with nothing more momentous than filling a pot-bellied calabash, rose hastily and went out into the hallway.

"Come in, Hilliard!" he said cordially. "Carol's off looking at somebody's trousseau . . . somebody's always geb ting married in Syracuse . . . she'll be in directly. Come smoke a pipe with me, and be sociable."

Hilliard, lingering nervously by the outer door, started at the kind voice

"You're not busy?" "Busily composing my mind," said the doctor. He ushered Hilliard into the comfortable old study and motioned towards a squat little smoking stand. "All kinds of poison there," he said. "Cigar-cigarettes-pipe tobacco. Suit yourself."

Hilliard laughed affectedly. "You call it poison? And you a doctor-and smoking?" "Ah, but it's the pleasantest poison there is. . . . I'm always having to explain that to Carol. . . . Matches? Well, what have you been doing to yourself?" "I?" Hilliard didn't look at him. Nothing important, doctor."

"But that's not quite true, is it?" The tone was gentle, but it filled Hilliard with portentious qualms, "You've been enjoying a little attack of insomnia, haven't you?" Hilliard winced.

"Why-yes. As a matter of fact-The doctor attempted a smoke ring.

fells how his cough was conquered and health restored.

"In November, 1916, I was working in coal mine and the doctors said the coal dust had settled in my lungs. I couldn't lie down on my right side, coughed so I couldn't sleep and had constant pain in my right lung and under my shoulder blades. I coughed so hard the blood would spurt out of my nose. Finally the doctors had me change climate and live outdoors, but didn't improve. "Then I came home and started on Milks Emulsion. Thank God I did, as it did me a lot of good right from the start, loosening up the coal dust in my right lung. In a few weeks my lungs were free. I could sleep like a baby, had an excellent appetite and my cough left me entirely. I cained back 30 nounds in me entirely. I gained back 30 pounds in weight and went back to work in the mines completely restored to health."— G. H. Bunn, 6th Ave. & No. 13th St., Terre announce this week the candida cy of W. B. (Burt) Ayers who is n the race for County Commisto the Democratic primaries.

AYERS FOR COMMISSIONER

Mr. Ayers has lived in Don'ey an "old timer," and perhaps no man in this section is better or more favorably known. He is an enterprising farmer stockman, successful in his business, and public spirited in all respects. He is acquainted with a commissioner's duties and fully competent to perform them satisfacterily. In fact, his friends say he would make an ideal commissioner, and are enthusiastic in their support of him.

Remember him at voting time.

S. . If Your Back hurts or Bladder Bothers.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.-Adv.

USES OF ASPIRIN

Bayer Company, who introduced Aspirin 18 years ago, give advice.

Aspirin created a sensation when introduced by Bayer over eighteen years ago. Physicians at once proved its wonderful efficiency in the relief of pain. The genuine, world-famous Aspirin, in "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" is safely taken by millions for Colds, Headache, Rhenmatism, Neuralgia, Earache, Toothache, Aching Joints, Neuritis, and Pain generally.

Be sure the "Bayer Cross," which is the mark of true "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin," is on each genuine package and each genuine tablet.

Boxes of 12 tablets cost but a few cents and contain proper directions. Druggists also sell larger "Bayer" packages. Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid .- Adv.
