FARM LABOR WILL

LIKELY BE BIG PROBLEM

The Informer man has never considered himself capable of running the farmer's business, but there is one point upon which we are going to offer a little advice to the farmers of this vicinity.

Last year production was curtailed more or less all over the country because of a dearth of harvesters at harvest time. The same condition, in greater or less degree, has obtained for many years. In the absence of co-operative effort, this year bids fair to prove a record breaker in labor scarcity. So far as we know, no movement in this direction has been made in these parts.

Why wouldn't it be a good idea for Hedley farmers to meet, or gauge, and make a strong united pull to save their full crops.

Concerted action is the thing. It won't do to trust to luck. "Better be safe than sorry."

FOR SALE—Five O. I. G. Shoats. Papers furnished with them. J. M. Dunfer, 220 Gann St., Mens, Ark.

J. T. Craddock, in explaining his sun-blistered condition, as well as his continued absence from the daily meetings of the "whittlers' union," informed the editor Saturday that he'd been hittin' the ball of late;—in other words, he and the cultivator had been following old Beek and Kit in a war-to-the-death raid on Gen. Green.

AEROPLANE VISITS IN

HEDLEY LAST TUESDAY

Tuesday of this week Hedley was visited by Aviators Benson and Harrison, from Childress, in their Curtiss aeroplanes. The object of their visit at this time is said to have been the obtaining of a permanent landing field in Hedley.

Arriving here about 3 p. m. from the west, the ship circled the town a few times and landed out in the Kinslow pasture, to which place a large crowd was attracted within a few minutes.

During the remainder of the afternoon a number of local people took short spins at ten bucks per spin. For two excellent reasons, both of which are his own private property, the editor remained on terra firma, getting his share of the thrills via the rubberneck route.

FOR SALE—Red Durham milk cow, fresh, four or five years old. Gives 3 gallons a day and with proper handling will give more. W. I. Rains stock, gentle, and easy to milk, $100 for cow and calf. Frank Simmons.

Mr. and Mrs. Van Boone are the parents of a fine boy baby, born last Saturday. They are very proud of him, as he is their first boy. May his life be a long and useful one. Van says the youngster is already so smart that he (Van) has to resort to all sorts of camouflage stunts in order to sneak off from the boy and get to town.

HERO MONUMENT

T. Jones of Clarendon was in Hedley last Monday talking to our people in the interest of the proposed Monument to be erected somewhere in the county as a memorial to those of our boys who made the supreme sacrifice in the great war. Mr. Jones has started a "Monument Fund" by depositing $100 in a Clarendon bank—the memorial to be erected somewhere in Donley county.

This is a commendable move on Mr. Jones' part, and we'd be glad to see Hedley people take the matter up. We may be able to get the monument if we want it—and we ought, at least, want to help

If information is wanted, ask the Informer, the Clarendon News, or communicate with T. Jones, at Clarendon, who expressed his willingness to go anywhere in the county and help in organizing an active movement in this direction.

DAIRY TALES

STOCK THRIVE ON ROUGHAGE

Feeding Value of Silage, Fodder and Stover in Dairy Ration Not Fully Appreciated.

The feeding value of corn silage, corn fodder and corn stover in the dairy ration is not sufficiently appreciated, especially in those regions where legumes do not thrive, says a specialist of the dairy division, United States department of agriculture. A recent study of records from cow-testing associations points to the conclusion that the growing of more corn roughage and less non-leguminous hay would increase the profitability of the ration.

In all sections where legumes thrive it is, of course, advisable to grow them, as their value is well recognized for feeding dairy cattle. In fact, from a study of cow-testing association reports it would seem that even grain does not fully take the place of good legume roughage. It is in these sections where legumes do not thrive, however, that dairymen may well consider the growing of more corn roughage and less non-legume hay.

Few plants apparently contain all the substances required to nourish properly the animal body, but in the light of present knowledge, the corn plant seems to be one of these. It is possible to balance a ration from corn products only that will enable the animals to thrive and reproduce with apparently no ill effects. This is not the case with many other crops. Corn, then, has unusual feeding properties.

Experimental work done at the South Carolina and Pennsylvania stations has shown that it is practical under some conditions to feed dairy cows on a ration of corn silage and grain without hay. Such a ration has been used successfully in feeding beef steers. Reports from one cow-testing association in a non-leguminous hay region having an unusually high production per cow is in a district where the dairymen have practically discontinued the feeding of hay, but instead feed silage and corn fodder. In this association the grain ration is also composed largely of corn by-products.

No matter what other conclusions may be drawn from the evidence available showing the value of corn fodder and corn silage as dairy feeds, it is certain that the corn plant produces excellent roughage.

It is often damaged very much by becoming overripe. Storms damage it seriously. The feeding value of corn is not damaged by its becoming mature, and if it is properly shocked storms do little damage to it.

There are undoubtedly many dairymen who can well consider the wisdom of reducing the amount of non-leguminous feed, corn fodder, and silage to feed their dairy cows.

SQUARE HOUSE IS ALWAYS POPULAR

Suits Needs and Purposes of the Greatest Number.

MOST ECONOMICAL TO BUILD

Design Shown Here Has Been Given Unusual Exterior by Use of Clapboard Siding—Accommodates Average Family.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD. Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1825 Avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only two-cent stamp for reply.

For years American home have been erecting square houses containing six or seven rooms. Not only is this type of house with home builders, but with men builders and real estate men. In arrangement of rooms, a type are very much alike. They are made to look very different treatments of the divisions present an attractive appearance.

The value of this type of house to the home builder is that it not only makes a comfortable and convenient home, but, should occasion arise, it is readily saleable, for the simple reason it will suit the needs and purposes of the greatest number of buyers.

Herewith is shown a standard square, seven-room house that has been given an unusual exterior. This is accomplished by the use of ship-lap, or clapboard siding. The long boards give the house an appearance of breadth, and, although it is only 26x30 feet, it seems to be a much larger house. A square house is the most economical of all to build. There are no "jogs" in either the foundation or the superstructure; and "jogs" are expensive. The overhang of the porch roof and the roof proper and the dormers set in two sides of the roof take away the square effect on the house.

The entrance at the front is on the side and leads into a hall, out of which run the stairs. A cased double opening connects the living room, which is 16 by 17 feet, and contains an open fire-place. At the rear of the ... roots is the dining room, 15 by 6 feet. Adjoining is the ... 9 feet 6 inches of the floor plans it will be seen that this is a house that will comfortably accommodate the average family. The room arrangement is such that every room is pleasant and conveniently located.

Scarcity of homes everywhere has brought forcibly to the attention of thousands of families the advantage of building a home. Building costs have advanced less than almost any other of the necessities. And, as more than 80 per cent of the cost of building a home is a labor cost, there is not probability that it will decline until wages are lowered, a contingency wage earners do not welcome. But when it is considered that rents nowadays are based on the present cost greater prosperity for the people. "Good-bred stock will outsell scrub every time." "If you want better stock of the county agent in your own or else write to the division of sion, Knoxville, Tenn." "Now is the time to put Tent on the live-stock map." "If you believe in better live and poultry join this movement. nessee has natural advantages wonderful live-stock development the 'better sires' crusade will do to hurry along this development."

of building and not on what the actual cost of the building was when it was erected, it is just as logical to build now as it was before the war.

Owning such a home as is pictured, or a house of some other good design is a most excellent investment, even though building costs have advanced with every other cost. By obligating himself to pay for a home, a head of a family is saving systematically and in a few years will have an asset that is worth while. Real estate always is accepted as security for a loan, and just now can be sold easily. By the payment of a part of the cost down and the balance in monthly payments the owner's equity in the property steadily increases. But building a home provides a great incentive to save, and the home is rapidly paid for.

But aside from the standpoint of saving and accumulating money, the investment in a home brings large dividends in contentment and satisfaction. A home owner always is a good citizen and a substantial member of the community in which he lives. He and his family have social opportunities that do not come to the man who rents. Also he is looked on as a more desirable employee or partner in business than the man who rents.

Considered from every angle home building is well worth the many small sacrifices required of the average family to secure a home of their own. The quicker the start is made the better.

KEEP TROUBLES TO YOURSELF

The World, as a General Thing, Has Little Use for the Man Adicted to Self-Pity.

The trouble with the man in a little trouble is that he is inclined to pity himself and imagine that he is the only man who ever had a trouble.

All he can see in the moment of his irritation is his own burden. It seems not to occur to him that at the very moment he is wrestling with his difficulty thousands of people around him are fighting against far greater odds and in much greater danger.

Trouble, anyhow, is a part of the game of life. Nobody ever went anywhere or did anything worth while without meeting it in one form or another. Let others pity you if they will, but don't waste any time pitying yourself. The chances are that your next door neighbor would be tickled to death if such troubles as you have were all he had to worry about.—Exchange.

Lucile, who is five, does not like to say her prayers at night when she is sleepy.

What's the Matter With Alaska?

"What's the matter with Alaska?" bids fair to take the place of the historic inquiry regarding Kansas. Gov. Thomas Riggs, Jr., was asked this question the other day in Washington, thus:

"Governor, what's the matter with Alaska? Some people refer to it as the most bedeviled, harassed and government-pecked possession of the United States. We have always been under the impression that the Alaskan country was rich in gold, silver, copper, coal, timber, fine agricultural lands and other vast natural resources and therefore ought to be making rapid strides in advancement along all lines. Yet we understand it is neither progressing nor even standing still, but is actually going backward. What's the answer?"

"There is absolutely nothing the matter with Alaska," was his quick and earnest reply. "We have everything that goes to make a solid, permanent community. We have all the precious and commercial metals, the coal and oil possibilities, timber in plenty, the world's greatest fisheries, agricultural and grazing lands and a small but prosperous population.

"There is, though, something radically wrong with the management. The whole government of the territory is a crazy quilt.

"The discouraged settler pulls his stakes and packs his freight in disgust."

Mead: From Office-Boy to Bishop

From office boy to bishop in the Methodist Episcopal church is the record held by the Rev. Dr. Charles L. Mead, for the last six years pastor of Trinity Methodist church, Denver. He was named a bishop at the general conference of the church at Des Moines.

Doctor Mead was born in Vienna, N. J., in 1868, the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Joshua Mead. At the age of sixteen, after graduating from a preparatory school, he gained employment with the Merchants' National bank of Hackettstown, N. J., as an office boy, where he remained for three years, when he decided to take up the ministry.

While attending New York university he became a football star. He was also on the university baseball nine. Bishop Mead was graduated from New York university in 1890 and later from Drew Theological seminary. After being ordained he was awarded the doctor's degree from Syracuse university.

He became pastor at Newark, N. J.; Hoboken, N. J., and Baltimore, Md. Before going to Denver, six years ago, he was pastor of Madison Avenue church, New York city.

He was asked to accept service with the overseas Y. M. C. A. with a promise that he would be sent to the front. He sailed for France early in April, 1918, where he remained for six months. As a Y. M. C. A. chaplain he served on all fronts and traveled throughout France in the interest of the soldiers of the A. E. F. Most of his time, however, was spent with the Seventy-seventh and Seventy-eighth divisions.

Queen Can't Play Second Fiddle

Queen Marie of Roumania is too clever to play second fiddle to a presidential election in the United States. So she and King Ferdinand have decided to postpone their visit till next spring. King Ferdinand says he's too busy to come this year.

"After Queen Marie and I visit Bessarabia and pay official calls at some European capitals," said the king, "we will be able to plan our trip to America, to which we are both looking forward with great pleasure."

Queen Marie, however, remarked that the American people "would have no time to receive a queen while busy selecting a president."

"I am afraid," she continued, "I should be in the way if I went to your country in the midst of a national political campaign. As practical people you must be more interested in presidents than in queens. I think next spring would be a better time to go."

to the United States. The General Federation of Women's clubs has invited her to be its guest and offers have been made by railroad officials for her travel throughout the country."

The Macedonian Cry for Economy

Senator W. H. King of Utah (Dem.), is active in any debate on matters of economy. He said recently in a debate on the proposed budget system, in part:

"We have believed that our resources were limitless and that no providence nor extravagance could jeopardize nor endanger our future. We have regarded our country as vast in area and unrestricted in power. We have employed the microscope. We have insisted upon doing big things in a small way. We have opened our eyes to economy and we have regarded for the first time the things that were mate-

MRS. DAVIS DEAD

The Informer man while reading last week's Hall County Herald learned for the first time of the death of Mrs. T. J. Davis, a former highly esteemed resident of Hedley, which occurred June 26th. in Memphis. We copy the article, and join many friends in sincere sympathy to the bereaved. The Herald says:

In the rush and hustle of making up the weekly grind of the Herald, we failed to make mention last week of the death of Mrs. T. J. Davis of this city, which occurred Saturday, June 26th, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. G. L. Tipton, on Cleveland street. The funeral took place Sunday, June 27th, at five o'clock, conducted by Rev. A. L. Moore of the Methodist church, and attended by many friends of the family and citizens who had known the family for many years. The remains were tenderly laid away in Fairview cemetery.

The deceased leaves a sorrowing husband and eight children. The children are Messrs. Alex. Elmer and Earl Davis, Mesdames M. D. Vinson, G. L. Tipton, John Edwards and Luther Grundy, and Miss Susie Davis. All of the children were at the bedside of their mother except Earl, who lives in California and could not reach this city in time.

The deceased was a consistent member of the Methodist church and had been since childhood. She was sixty-one years of age at the time of her death. Mrs. Davis was Miss Susie Harnie and was born in Alabama. Her parents moved to Bosque county, Texas, when she was a child. She and T. J. Davis were married in Bosque county Dec. 8th, 1875. They moved to Hall county about twenty years ago.

Mrs. Davis was a loving wife, a splendid mother, a kind and obliging neighbor, and a fine Christian character, rearing to manhood and womanhood a family of splendid children.

In her death we feel that Heaven has been enriched and we can but cheer the sorrowing loved ones with the fact that there will be many stars in her crown of glory.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH REVIVAL

Evangelist A. K. Scott is still preaching strong gospel sermons to large and attentive audiences at the Christian revival which has been under way at the tabernacle the past two weeks.

You have a cordial invitation to attend these meetings.

"DOUBLE PERSONALITY."

SYNOPSIS.—Alighting from a train at Denver a well-dressed traveler is familiarly accosted by a man about his own age. The traveler ignores the advance. A few minutes later he is greeted as "Will" by an elderly lady and gentleman, who stop their auto to speak. He imagines it a case of mistaken identity and announces himself as "Richard Clinton," on his way to the coast. The couple appear greatly surprised, and learning he is to be in town until midnight, the lady, introducing herself as Mrs. Kirkland, and her husband as Doctor Kirkland, invites him to dinner, explaining the action by his truly remarkable resemblance to a friend of theirs. He accepts. At the Kirkland home he meets a young lady who greets him as her fiancé. She is Ellen Kirkland, and plainly is greatly hurt by his assertion that he is "Richard Clinton."

"Miss Kirkland!" he begged. "Calm yourself. This—it is most unfortunate. Had you first seen your mother—had she explained to you—prepared you."

"Explained? Prepared?"

"But I must insist, Miss Kirkland, that I— He glanced past her and smiled with relief. "Here is your mother."

The girl darted along the porch to clasp her mother's arm. "Mamma!" she appealed. "What is it? Tell me! Will insists he is not—not himself. It—it frightens me!"

"My dear," soothed Mrs. Kirkland, "there is no reason, none whatever. Had you been in your room—" She smiled at the guest. "You will understand, Mr. Clinton, the resemblance being so absolutely close. The child is excited—not quite herself. So great a shock if you will kindly excuse us a few minutes."

"I am very sorry," he said. "Perhaps it would be better if I should go."

"Oh! no, no! Do not go!" hysterically cried the girl.

"Hush, dear," reproved her mother. "Mr. Clinton is not going. He is to stay and dine with us."

"If you really wish it," he assented. "Then you'll not go?" exclaimed the girl.

"Of course not, Ellen," said her mother. "Come in with me."

CHAPTER II.

Bonds.

Left alone on the porch the guest again faced the sunset. But the dazzling glories of red and gold were already fading into the gray of twilight. He looked absently at the blackened shulk of the mountains, his expression shifting between annoyance and amusement, curiosity and apprehension.

He was still evidently considering the situation when a small touring car came whirling along the street in the clear twilight. It stopped before the house and Doctor Kirkland sprang out with a briskness unusual in a gentleman of his portly figure. He came up to the porch, his alert gaze on the lone guest.

"What's this?" he demanded. "Don't mean to say you've been left all this time to entertain yourself?"

"Not all the time," smilingly replied the guest. "On the contrary Miss Kirkland and I— His look became grave. "Much to my regret Miss Kirkland made the same mistake as Mrs. Kirkland and myself."

"Naturally. But if her mother—"

"She had gone to when Miss Kirkland came outside the house. I regret that my insistence on my identity rather overcame her."

"Not surprising, when she is engaged to you, is it?"

"Engaged to me! You mean of course—"

"To your double, to Will Lowrie," explained the physician. "Do you need further proof that you are his double?"

"No more. She was still quite positive, I fear, after all my attempts to convince her of the mistake. However, Mrs. Kirkland came, and no doubt has explained the mistake to her."

"Very likely," agreed the physician. "I would have gone had they not very kindly insisted that I must remain."

"You must."

"It is very hospitable of you to insist. Still I do not wish to cause your daughter the slightest distress."

"Nothing would distress her more than the fact that you refused our offer."

"I am glad to hear that. I am glad to hear that you are so kind as to consider the matter."

"I am glad to hear that you are so kind as to consider the matter."

He Eyed His Guest With Intense Keenness.

housemaid appeared, to take the stairway to his room.

When he came down he found his host and hostess waiting for him in the drawing room. The doctor still wore his professional frock coat. As he rose to meet his guest the maid announced dinner. Miss Ellen was not with her parents.

Mrs. Kirkland chatted familiarly with Clinton as she led him into the dining room. She observed him look at the housemaid with amused expectancy.

"No," she remarked, quick to catch his thought. "Mary will not be calling you Mr. Lowrie. She was not with us when you—when Will left."

"And Miss Kirkland?" he asked. "Have you convinced her?"

The lady smiled the least bit forcedly. "Have no fear. Ellen now knows the truth."

"That is good. I can understand how it must have seemed to her. I wonder if you can realize my embarrassment? Think of a young lady mistaking one for her fiancé!"

"Good joke that," put in the physician. "How many kisses?"

"Karl!" reproved his wife.

They entered the dining room, the lady indignant, her husband chuckling and the guest a trifle constrained. Ellen stood at the far side of the oval table arranging the lilies in the center. She was pale and her eyelids were slightly swollen. When she looked up and saw Clinton across from her she did not blush. If anything she became still more pale. He was quick to observe her appearance.

"I am very sorry, Miss Kirkland," he murmured. "It must have been quite a shock."

"You must not blame yourself," she replied. "It was simply that I did not understand. Now, you see, I am quite over my excitement." She smiled uncertainly at her father. "Between courses papa can give me a sedative suggestion."

"Do you really use suggestion in your practice?" Clinton inquired of the physician as they seated themselves.

"Suggestion—little else," replied Doctor Kirkland. "You must bear in mind my specialty. Not but what, in time, the entire profession will be using suggestion as promiscuously as the Christian Scientists."

"How the Scientists would be scandalized if they heard you!" said Mrs. Kirkland. "The slightest intimation that their treatment is related in any way to suggestion—"

"There is no matter; therefore everything is immaterial; therefore it is immaterial what they think," solemnly reasoned the physician.

"Isn't it?" queried Clinton.

"It is not immaterial," his host flatly contradicted himself. "What they think—what anyone thinks—is exceedingly material. As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." For instance, you think you are a certain personality named Richard Clinton."

"I not only think it. I know it."

"Do you know yourself? Do you know what you really are? Does anyone know what he or she really is?"

"I at least have some idea who I am," replied Clinton, smiling.

"Some idea? You mean a small idea, an extremely small idea. Every day there are millions of pictures, myriads of sounds, being stored away in your subconscious mind. Of how many of these were you aware at the time and how many can you now recall? Only a few, a pitiful number."

Only disjointed fragments of her talk were audible:

"Amy . . . alone? . . . How shall I tell you! . . . this afternoon . . . dined . . . No, no! . . . looks splendid, but . . . not Will. Not the slightest remembrance . . . must not despair . . . Yes, I'm certain, if anyone can cure him . . . be prepared . . . believes himself . . . Clinton."

As he realized that he was listening to talk that had reference to himself, the young man thrust out his hand to close the door. The sound attracted the attention of Ellen. She looked about at the guest, the corners of her perfect mouth drooping.

She bent over the keyboard and began to play something soft and low that ran into eerie minor notes. He stood at the corner of the piano gazing down at her with a look of frank enjoyment. She was undoubtedly beautiful and she played well.

When she looked up her eyes were suffused with tears, but there was eager expectancy in her glance. In his eyes was only the politely reserved admiration of a stranger. Her lips began to quiver. A tear overflowed and ran down her white cheek. She bowed forward with her face in her hands, sobbing in an uncontrollable outburst of grief.

The Face in the Miniature Was His Own.

He was overcome with consternation. "Miss Kirkland! I—what can I have done? Believe me, I would not for anything—"

"It's—it's not what you've done!" she sobbed. "It's what you've not done!"

"What I've not done?" he asked. "If only you'll tell me!"

"You don't even remember it—our favorite!" she cried.

"You mean—surely you cannot expect me to remember something I never— It's not possible you still believe that I am not myself."

"But it's—it's you who deny it; you who— She looked up at him, her tear-streaming eyes full of pitiful entreaty. "Oh, Will! won't you please try to remember who you are?"

"Miss Kirkland, pray be calm. I assure you that I am Richard Clinton. I can easily prove that I—"

"Look!" she interrupted, holding up her slender left hand, on which sparkled the diamond, of a single ring. "Try to think! You must remember; you cannot have forgotten about—"

A rosy blush swept down over her pale face—"about when you put it there, dear!"

About her slender neck was a fine gold chain, from which an oval locket hung pendant on her heaving bosom. She caught up the locket and touched the spring. The jeweled front of the locket opened. Within was a miniature painting.

"Who is this—tell me, who is this?" she asked.

To see the miniature it was necessary that he should bend down close to the blushing girl. His own face flushed with embarrassment, but he seated himself on the end of the bench and leaned over with his square jaw beside her rounded white shoulder. Had he looked only at the girl it would not have been surprising.

As it chanced, however, the young man glanced first at the miniature. At once the incredulity of his expression gave place to surprise and perplexity. He leaned over for a closer look, his cheek only a few inches from the cheek of the girl. Except for a certain pinched look about the nose the absence of the mustache and a marked thinness of jaw and cheek, the face in the miniature was his own—it was his face as it might look in ill health.

The young man drew back, his face clearly expressive of his astonishment. "It is a—most remarkable resemblance, Miss Kirkland. I no longer wonder that you were deceived at the first, and this continued delusion on your part can, no doubt, be accounted for by the intensity of that first impression."

"You still refuse to believe!" she cried. "You do not recognize your own picture! Can nothing make you remember?"

"Rare Olde Chester"

The Castle, Chester.

FEW cities in England retain so distinct a flavor of medieval times as "Rare Olde Chester," on the River Dee. Gloucester, Canterbury, Coventry and countless other places in the kingdom, writes Katherine Shepherd Smith in the Springfield Republican.

But should one disembark at Liverpool with a mind intent upon studying English lands, people—and, above all, English history—Chester, sixteen miles distant, would be an ideal place in which to set out upon such a pilgrimage.

There, more easily than almost anywhere else, one can trace the very beginnings of England. Chester's ancient walls still surround the site of the Roman deva, or Devana Castra (camp of the Dee). The Anglo-Saxons called it Chester.

Phantom City of the Past.

The Romans, whose occupancy lasted four centuries, selected this high, picturesque spot overlooking the river and the mountains of North Wales, for the station of their famous 20th Legion.

Excavating a solid rock to a depth of four to ten feet, upon which to found the camp, they built roundabout their defensive walls.

The Roman camp was in the form of a parallelogram and Chester followed the same lines in the original streets of the city. The four principal thoroughfares now cross at right angles the rocky Roman oblong.

After the Romans there came, in turn, the Welsh, Saxons, Danes and Normans. Chester was not taken by William the Conqueror until 1070.

In viewing the city the walls claim one's first attention. The present residents seem to live in a phantom city of the past, and almost to be a part of that medieval period in which they are so well versed. They tell you, apologetically, that only on three of their four sides do the walls follow the exact lines of those built by the Romans, and that they are not of earlier date than the fourteenth century.

But a stroll of two miles upon these great arms of masonry, which have encircled the city for seven hundred years, should satisfy the most exacting antiquarian.

As one traverses this now peaceful promenade, frequent reminders of a turbulent past are encountered. The most impressive of these—perhaps because the most tangible—is the Phoenix, or King Charles tower, bearing an inscription recording that from this tower King Charles I. in 1645, viewed the battle of Rowton Moor, and a local chronicler records how the king "witnessed with mingled mortification and despair the defeat of his army and the overthrow of his last field force."

Besides the King Charles tower, others bordering the parapet of the old walls are the Bonvaldesthorpe and the water tower; then there are those known as Morgan's Mount and Pemberton's Parlor.

Historic Watch Towers.

During all the assaults made upon Chester these and other watch towers, long since dismantled, were vantage points for the guardians of the old city, who, when scanning the valley of the Dee and the mountain passes of nearby Wales, gave little heed, we can believe to the beauty of the panorama about them, which today is the scene of the most delightful of promenades.

Bonvaldesthorpe and reached by long tree tops, picturesque of Chester pointing, castle things

Hugh Lupas, with the aid of Benedictine monks, established here a Benedictine monastery—one of those early centers, not alone of religion, but of learning, also.

In 1541, after the dissolution of the monasteries by Henry VIII, the abbey church became the Cathedral of Chester, and remains of Norman construction, dating back to 1093, are incorporated in the cathedral, but most of it dates from the twelfth to the sixteenth century. Since 1819 restorations have been made at intervals, as is the custom in practically all European cathedrals.

"The Chester Imp."

In monastic times the abbey was rich and of much importance. The "Chester mysteries," or miracle plays, were performed each year before its gates, when a fair was held on the feast of St. Werburgh, the patron saint of Chester. A curious custom prevailing among builders in the middle ages was that of carving grotesque figures—not only on the exteriors of churches, like gargoyles, but often on their interiors. Perched coyly in a corner high up on the cathedral, is such a joke, known as "The Chester Imp."

A reminder of more recent days is found in two flags draped on the wall of the south aisle of the cathedral which were carried by the British at the battle of Bunker Hill; not far from these are displayed the colors of the Chester Guards, borne at Quebec.

A wonderful work of restoration to be seen in Chester is that in the Church of St. John. This was a cathedral church and dates from the late eleventh century. It was occupied by a Norman bishop in 1073, but in a few years he removed the seat of his bishopric to Coventry. The church as restored today—a gem of Norman architecture—includes only sections of the nave and transepts that belonged to the original structure. Standing apart from it are the picturesque ruins of the ancient choir.

SUNDAY DAY OF MERRIMENT

Practically Only Break in the Otherwise Uneventful Lives of Filipino Men and Women.

It is the women of Manila who market the produce there. Early every morning long lines of these farmer wives, with great baskets of wares on their heads, can be seen striding along the narrow trails toward the capital city, where market is held.

Strong and happy, they wade through the streams and the mud, to one another as they go, stopping to get a fresh light from some one of whom they chat, smile, and barter for tomatoes, some chickens, eggs, they go to have, and sell or exchange.

Sunday day for the market of the old city, who, when scanning the valley of the Dee and the mountain passes of nearby Wales, gave little heed, we can believe to the beauty of the panorama about them, which today is the scene of the most delightful of promenades.
