McLEAN IS VISITED BY DESTRUCTIVE WIND STORM

A severe wind and hail storm struck McLean community last Monday afternoon about 4:30, demolishing some twenty homes and damaging others, killing live stock and fowls, and destroying growing crops. The damage is estimated at $100,000.

No lives were lost, as those in the storm's path had time to get in their storm cellars, except two children, who were caught before they could reach the cellar, but were not hurt.

All wire communication to the east was destroyed.

This storm cloud was plainly visible from Hedley.

Try a pipeful or two direct from the factory

Not that it will be any better than the Edgeworth you buy in a store, but we want you to have your first Edgeworth smoke at our expense.

You may repay us by finding that Edgeworth just suits your taste. And if it doesn't—for there are some few men to whom Edgeworth is not just the thing—there's no harm done.

We are glad enough to send free samples in the same spirit that we'd hand you our pouch if circumstances permitted. We wish it were possible to save you even the little trouble of writing for Edgeworth.

Edgeworth is a likable smoke. Men who have tried it and found it to be the right tobacco for them never think of smoking other tobaccos. They'll tell you there are many good tobaccos—and there are. And when you offer them your pouch with "stranger" tobacco in it, they may use a pipeful just to be friendly.

But notice how quickly they get back to their beloved Edgeworth!

Day after day Edgeworth fans write to us. They tell us human little stories, friendly anecdotes centering around Edgeworth. Often it is the number of years they have smoked Edgeworth that prompted them to write.

Knowing how hard it is for the average man to write letters, we consider these unsolicited messages the greatest tribute to Edgeworth we could possibly have—greater even than the increasing sales. It gives the business of making tobacco a pleasure that runs through the whole gamut—from factory executive to the smoker in the backwoods.

If you have never tried Edgeworth, let us repeat our offer, "Try a pipeful or two direct from the factory." All you have to do is to write "Let me try a pipeful or two" on a postcard, sign your name and address and send the postcard to us. The address is Larus & Brother Co., 66 South 21st Street, Richmond, Va. If you want to add the name of your tobacco dealer, we'll make sure that he has Edgeworth in stock.

To Retail Tobacco Merchants: If your jobber cannot supply you with Edgeworth, Larus & Brother Company will gladly send you prepaid by parcel post a one- or two-dozen carton of any size of Edgeworth Plug Slice or Ready-Rubbed for the same price you would pay the jobber.

Nicotine and Plant Lice.
Nicotine dust destroys plant lice by gassing them. Drs. Thomas J. Headlee and William R. Hoofs of the New York agricultural experiment stations have found. Other things being equal, they said, the value of nicotine dust is measured by the amount of nicotine evolved from it within 48 hours following its application, because the agent destroying the lice is nicotine gas. Dew reduces and heavy rains destroy the effectiveness of the dust.

Lift Off with Fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers. Truly!

Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the calluses, without soreness or irritation.

MAKING GARMENTS FOR CHILDREN

One Pattern Used to Make Five Different Dresses.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Clothing for children should be of the simplest kind, says the United States Department of Agriculture. It should permit absolute freedom of movement, hanging chiefly from the shoulders, and permitting the child to bend over freely, squat on the ground, kick, run, climb, or otherwise indulge in the activity natural to a growing boy or girl. Rompers for very little children, and bloomer dresses or separate knickers and blouses for those a little older are, as a rule, the most practical from the standpoint of the child's comfort and appearance, and a minimum amount of laundering. Elaborate designs are unsuitable at any time for active young children. Children should not be conscious of their clothing either from a sense of discomfort, or from vanity or embarrassment. Washable materials are preferable for children's clothing, until they are old enough to take some responsibility for keeping their clothes clean. Where extra warmth is necessary, washable woolen materials may be selected, such as serge, flannel, or challis, but most mothers find that it pays best to use woolen underwear and cotton or linen dresses, with sweaters and leggings for extra warmth when the children go out. A set of cover-all aprons made on the "kimono" pattern will be found very practical for use when children are playing in the house or yard either after school or when they are too little to go to school. Oilcloth or rubber bibs for very little children can be easily made and will lessen the number of garments to be washed.

Garments Made at Home.
A large part of the clothing for girls can always be made at home, and many garments may be made for boys as long as they wear washable clothes. Boys' knickers for play, blouses, pajamas, underwear, and even mackinaws, which are unlined, may be successfully made from patterns at home by most mothers, but as a rule the work involved in making a boy's suit or lined overcoat is such that it pays to get these garments ready-made and economize in some other way. At times it happens, however, that a man's suit has such good material in it that it is worth while to make it over for a boy. Women's garments may be cut over much more easily to fit the girls of the family. There is always the possibility of combining two materials when the material is not enough of one, or of adding just enough new contrasting material to make the result seem like a new dress.

One Pattern Sufficient.
In the illustration one pattern was used to make five different dresses. Variety was obtained by making decorations entirely different and using different materials in each dress and guimpes. Even with dresses for other persons it is frequently possible to vary a simple foundation pattern means of trimming, various styles collars or cuffs, or a different way opening, so as to have the result seem totally different. A glance at any pattern book will show how the same foundation pattern can be made up to give various effects. The advantages of using one pattern for number of garments in this way that with repeated use one is able to handle the pattern more easily consequently to work more rapidly and no time is lost measuring and fitting out several different kinds of terms. The simpler the pattern easier it is to cut and make, and more likelihood there is of being able to use it for cutting over a limited amount of material, as in the case making over an old dress.

STANDARDIZE RECIPES FOR BREAD.

The following basic table for quick doughs is suggested to save time looking up recipes. It is indorsed by the United States Department of Agriculture. Any recipe may be varied by the addition of nuts, raisins, & prunes, cherries, or other fruits, seasonings or spices, but the proportion liquid, flour, and baking powder do not vary greatly. The measurements all level.

	Flour	Baking Powder	Liquid	Shortening	Sugar	Eggs
Griddle Cakes	2 Cups	2 Tsp.	2 Cups	2 Tbsp.	1 Tbsp.	1 or 2
Muffins (plain)	2 Cups	4 Tsp.	1 Cup	1 Tbsp.	1	1/2

HOUSEKEEPER WOULD HAVE IDEAL LAUNDRY

Running Water and Modern Labor-Saving Devices Cannot Always Be Provided.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The ideal of every housekeeper would be a separate room for her laundry with running water and modern labor-saving devices. These cannot be provided in every home, but even where the arrangement and equipment are necessarily very simple it is often possible to make minor changes or to plan the work in such a way that it will take less time and strength.

In olden days, tubs and wash benches were brought into the kitchen because water could be heated there most conveniently, and from this seems to have developed the idea that the kitchen is the place for the laundry. The doors and steam from laundry work, however, are disagreeable in a kitchen, and the handling of soiled clothing in any room in which food is prepared is highly objectionable. If clothes must be washed in the kitchen the preliminary sorting should be done elsewhere.

In some sections it is considered preferable to have the washing done out of doors or in a room outside of the house. Otherwise the best place for a laundry is usually either in a room next to the kitchen or in a basement room directly below it, because this makes it possible to use the same chimney and if the house is equipped with running water the same water pipes for both rooms. A basement laundry generally means too many stairs for the housewife, while a room adjoining the kitchen may enable her much more easily to carry on or oversee the work in both rooms at the same time.

Good lighting is necessary for good laundry work, and tubs and ironing board should be so placed that the light comes from the side. Doors and windows should be arranged to give the thorough ventilation especially necessary because of steam, odors and heat.

A laundry floor should be of material that wears well, is not too slippery for the feet, does not soak water and is cleaned. Wood, cement, composition and linoleum are used. Wood is not easily cleaned and is slippery when wet. Cement floors are common in some parts of the country and relatively inexpensive, but painted with special cement paint do not absorb water. Some composition floors are not too hard, and expensive than hardwood, and are easily cleaned. A floor covered with linoleum is easily wiped up, is impervious to moisture, and is easy to tread, but is slippery when wet. Oil paints are preferable to water color for the walls.

The room should be divided into a washing and an ironing section. The position of the stove will determine the details of this division. To make boiling the clothes convenient, the stove should be near the tub. If a washing machine is to be used, the tub should be so arranged that the garments go directly, without handling, from the machine through the wringer to the tub, and vice versa. If arrangement is well planned, one wash-tub will be sufficient with a washing machine.

Household Questions

- Remove scorch with sunlight.
- Remove milk and cream with cold water.
- Keep your spice jars tightly sealed and the spices will retain their strength for years.
- If cake pans are greased when they are cold cake will not stick to them when taken out.
- Water in which potatoes have been boiled is the very best thing to sponge and freshen up a silk dress with.

you a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick. Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working, your headache and dizziness gone, your stomach will be sweet and your bowels regular. You will feel like working; you'll be cheerful; full of vigor and ambition. Dodson's Liver Tone is entirely vegetable, therefore harmless and can not salivate. Give it to your children.

Something to Think About By F. A. WALKER

A RAY OF SUNSHINE

IT MATTERS not how lovely we may be, nor how dread life-tides about our little selves may ebb and flow, there is always some one among our friends and acquaintances upon whom we can shed a ray of sunshine.

Some one is living under darker skies than we, longing for encouraging words or cheering smiles; some one is starving for affection which means to him or her a lamp of hope; some one is striving to overcome ruinous habits, too weak to hold his or her frail craft on a safe course.

Each one is living in a state of gloom, from which there seems to be no way of escape.

Each one needs a ray of friendship, the blessed boon which if used aright would make the whole world brighter, knit mankind closer in happiness, soothe aching hearts, dry burning tears and hide from cold stares the beggar's outstretched hand.

There is something in soul-sunshine that penetrates the toughest fibre in human nature.

So send forth this mystic cheer far and wide.

Strew flowers over the rugged path of the poor and the sorrowing, the ill and the wretched, the old and the lonely.

Pour sunshine in their hearts and see it illuminate their countenance, wing their feet and tune their tongues to praiseful songs.

Let it shine on every cross and care. There are hungry hearts everywhere, behind walls of marble and slabs of hovels, praying for appreciation and sympathy.

WHAT TO EAT

IF THE members of your family are fond of ginger this will be a delightful dish to serve as a dainty dessert: Gingered Jelly.

Add one-half teaspoonful of cold water to one-half package of granulated gelatin; after standing ten minutes add one and one-half cupsful of boiling water. Now add one cupful of orange juice and the juice of two lemons, three-fourths of a cupful of chopped candied ginger. Set in a cool place to harden, stirring gently during the stiffening process to mix the ginger well through the jelly. Serve in stemmed glasses, garnished with a spoonful of whipped cream and thinly sliced ginger.

Cheese Souffle.

Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour, and when well mixed add one-half cupful of scalded milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt, a dash of cayenne, one-half cupful of grated cheese, the yolks of two eggs; cook until thick. Cut and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and set in boiling water and bake 15 minutes. Cover the whole time of cooking and serve at once. A souffle like an omelet will not await a tardy guest.

What an English cookbook calls the original English rarebit is simply melted cheese to which salt is added, just as it is taken up for serving. Instead of milk, or even with it, a tablespoonful of catsup may be added, or two tablespoonfuls of chili sauce.

A piquant dish good for an open-air luncheon or in a group where onions are enjoyed, onions are sliced thin and sauteed in bacon fat; when tender add the cheese and serve as soon as it is melted.

When a little chicken, ham or other meat is too small in quantity to serve, cheese, white sauce and generous seasoning makes a most tasty dish. (© 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

Has Anyone Laughed At You Because

You Always Want to Go Dutch? Going Dutch is a good plan, because it allows you to go to many a party and everyone goes away without obligation. Of course treating is a joy, yet for all practical purposes going "Dutch" allows more freedom. "Are you treating or am I," said a girl, "for if I am I feel as if I can eat all I want and I am awfully hungry." This is one argument for the "Dutch" treat. The other is that—argument time is saved and there is a good fellowship born which is worth pounds of treats. It isn't a saving in money but it is in time.

SO Your get-away here is: You're a good fellow and you save time in not having to think "whose turn it is to treat." Every one keeps independent. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

flame the spark that kindles love. Scatter sunshine across the sea and over the land until it shall turn night to noon-tide. We may speak different dialects, but we can punctuate our sentences with cheer and make ourselves understood, not clumsily nor dimly, but easily and clearly as the sunlight of heaven. And if we have within us the right spirit, we can continue this beneficent work until love shall canopy the earth, faith and hope flood the dark places with glorious light and sorrow turn to gladness. Whatever the number of good deeds we may have done, however far we have flung the sunshine, there will be times in our lives when we shall feel that we have not done enough to merit the peace which is ours—unspeakably sweet and rich beyond price. SCHOOL DAYS

Uncommon Sense By JOHN BLAKE

YOUR FRIENDS

THE man who doesn't make friends isn't worth his salt. Man is a social animal. He needs friends to talk to—and to listen to. They are the solace of his leisure hours. They are his confidants in his time of trouble. Without them he might as well be an outcast on a desert island.

Make all the friends you can. At best you will make but a few, for there will be but few men who will take you at your own value, and have enough interests in common with you to be really your friends.

But never use friendship as a means of advancement. Put business on a business basis.

Be independent of friendship in your work. Advancement obtained through friendship is obtained through favor. And what is obtained through favor is of no value.

Never make the mistake of depending on a friend in a business relationship. Often your friend can and will help you. But that sort of help is not the help you want.

Sooner or later, if you are going to get anywhere, you will discover that you must depend on yourself, and yourself alone.

Your friends can advise you, they can sympathize with you, they can if they are honest point out your mistakes to you—provided you are big enough to let them.

But neither by lending you money—, or securing you positions or promotions, can they be of any true value to you.

If they are rich and powerful, they will assist you not because of your deserts, but because of their liking for you. Through such assistance you will get a false idea of your importance, of your worth in the world.

And when you wake up some morning and see yourself in your true light you are going to be sadly disillusioned. Make friends and keep them. Make them, if you can, among men of different callings, so that you can exchange ideas with them and broaden yourself.

Interest yourself in what they are doing, and interest them in what you are doing. Spend your leisure with them. Enjoy their comradeship. But never depend on them. Friendship was not meant for a ladder by which to climb to higher places in the world. It is too sacred for that. (Copyright by John Blake.)

EXPERIENCE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I WONDER that we worry so And lose our way with wandering When ev'ry hill and vale we know— For Time has shown us ev'rything. We know where we may walk, and where

The brambles are, the dangers lie— For Time has set a signpost there, Experience to guide us by.

We know the way, for other men Have walked a thousand times before, The world the same world it was then, The path unchanged forevermore. We know we need but follow on With faithful Conscience for our guide—

We know that we shall find the dawn Who falter not, nor turn aside.

Yet men will venture into sin, Forget the sun, forget the star, Will seek new lands to wander in, Where all the hidden dangers are. Experience has marked the trail, And Time has proved the trail is true—

Yet men will fall and fools will fall While stars shine clear from skies of blue.

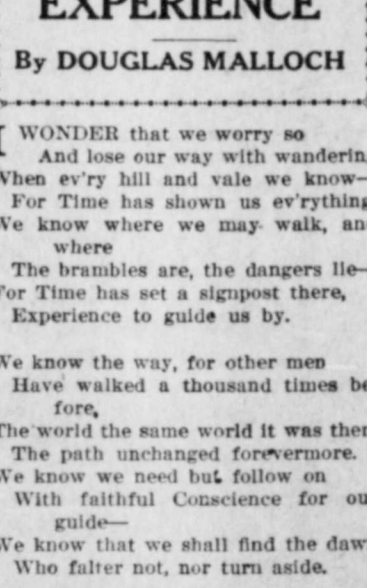

Life is no problem—life is plain: Here is the right, and there the wrong;

And here is peace, and there is pain, And there is sorrow, here is song. With Conscience for our guide and friend

Experience our counsel wise, We need not follow to the end An earthly path to find the skies. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

JACK THE CLIMBER

SYNOPSIS.—Disliking the prospect of a month's visit to her aunt, Lady Erythea Lambé, at Jervaux abbey, and her cousin, Alexander Lambé, Almee, vivacious daughter of the very Reverend Vicar of Scoope, meets a young man who introduces himself as "Billy," American. The two ride on his motorcycle the "Flying Sphinx," and part. With Georgia Berners, her cousin, Almee sets out for Jervaux. She forces Georgia to impersonate her at Jervaux, and she goes on a holiday. Almee again meets Billy. He tells her his name is Spencer, and she gives her as Amy Snooks, at present "out of a job." Billy offers to take her into partnership in selling the Sphinx. In a spirit of madcap adventure, she accepts. The two proceed to the town of Stanhoe, taking separate lodgings in Ivy cottage. While Almee is secretly visiting Georgia at Jervaux, the place is burglarized, and the famous Lambé emeralds are stolen. Almee escapes. Police decide the thieves are "Jack the Climber" and "Calamity Kate," who travel on a motorcycle. Billy, who has shadowed Almee to Jervaux, follows the thieves. He is knocked out, but emerges from the fight with the Lambé emeralds. He meets Almee, with the police in pursuit in a secure hiding place, a cave among the crag-pits. Almee tells her the whole story. He urges her that she make a frank confession to her father, but on reflection both realize Almee's good name has been compromised. Assuring Almee he has a plan to save her, Billy leaves her in the cave and, proceeding to Jervaux, restores the emeralds to the astounded Lady Erythea. Billy tells a story that satisfies the police, refuses a reward and accepts a chauffeur's job from Lady Erythea. Almee gets the place of parlor maid at Jervaux. Alexander thinks he recognizes Almee as "Calamity Kate." Georgia divulges Almee's identity. Hearing her story, Alexander consents to keep the secret. Alexander finds himself very much in love with Georgia. Alexander's sister, Lady Diana, arrives. Another visitor is the Vicomte de Jussac, her suitor. Diana recognizes Almee and threatens to denounce her. Almee confides in De Jussac. De Jussac is accepted by Diana and Almee makes her promise to keep silence. Alexander is still in the dark, is delighted.

CHAPTER XXI—Continued.

He passed along the wider lane in the direction of Jervaux, his eyes scanning the ground and the ditch. A little distance short of the gate through which Billy had wheeled the Sphinx when dodging the police, he stooped quickly and picked up a scrap of metal. It was the broken end of an exhaust silencer.

"I was right!" ejaculated Billy. "Here they crashed again—or the engine gave out for good. And they came the very way I did myself. And one of the two was lame—dead lame. One sure thing—they couldn't have got far that night. And if they weren't able to ride the thing, what did they do with it?"

He hurried to the far end of the field, where the last of the tracks had faded. He hesitated, and glanced towards the distant crag-pits.

"What should I have done myself—if I hadn't known the ground?" he thought. "I'll try here first."

Less than a hundred yards to the right was a clump of brushwood, growing alone, a little oasis on the bare field.

The bushes masked a narrow clay pit, twenty feet deep, that had been delved in times past to bring up the heavy marl subsoil and spread it over the sandy field. It was now completely cloaked with brambles. Billy pulled them apart, and saw something gleaming dimly at the bottom of the pit.

It was the buckled frame of a big twin Indian motorcycle.

With a whoop of triumph Billy clambered down the steep side of the pit and disappeared through the brambles. He remained below some time.

When at last he emerged and stood on the brink, Billy's face was rather pale, and his eyes troubled.

"Great Caesar's ghost!" he said. "Who'd have expected this? Now—if I can pick up the other track, I'll have the game in my hands!"

He hurried in the direction of the distant crag-pits, then suddenly pulled up short and glanced at his wrist-watch.

"Almee!" he exclaimed.

He had an appointment with Almee at five, and an urgent one. It was already past the hour. Billy set off at a run, and in ten minutes reached the rendezvous. Almee was there already, in a rough serge walking-cloak and a Snooks hat trimmed with calico violets. In spite of the costume she looked vividly lovely.

"Mr. Chauffeur," said Almee, severely. "I don't know if you think I want to waste my afternoon off like this. You're late."

"I'm sorry," panted Billy. "Come as quick as I could."

"What are you looking excited about?" she said, eyeing him suspiciously.

"Oh—just seeing you," blurted Billy. "That isn't true. I've never seen you look excited before. You've found out something. What is it?"

Billy panted.

"It's true. I have found out something," he said quietly, "but there's more to do, and I haven't quite all the cards in my hands. It's the most amazing stunt yet. I'll tell you about it the moment I've got it set."

Almee looked at him wistfully.

"I don't think you ought to have any secrets from your partner," she said. "I always tell you everything."

"Give me till tonight," pleaded Billy. "I hate to talk about it now. It's ugly. By tonight we shall have either won or lost—but we'll win! Will you trust me?"

Almee seated herself on the turf beneath the sweetbriars.

"All right then," she said happily. "Let's forget our troubles for a bit. Sit down—you look so tall, towering up there, that I can hardly see you—and I'll tell my news. It's much more interesting than yours. Do you know that Alexander has got himself engaged to my dear fat Georgie, and they're idiotically happy?"

"Has he?" cried Billy, dropping beside her. "Good for him! She's a real trump of a girl, that. And the parson's as white as they make them—he's a fine fellow."

"Yes, Georgie will exactly suit him. I shouldn't have a bit."

"You!" exclaimed Billy.

"Exactly. Aunt Erythea's idea is that Alexander's marrying me. You're not very bright today, Billy. They'll have a funny tangle to straighten out when the crash comes."

"Georgie! They will. We'll have to help them somehow."

"Of course we shall. But I wonder how we'll do it. And that's not all—the Vicomte has suddenly become betrothed, as he calls it, to Alexander's sister—Cold Lambé."

"She'll tone him down," said Billy.

"Not a bit. He'll tone her up," replied Almee confidently, "and a jolly good thing, too. So there they all are."

Billy Stared Before Him Gloomily.

I oughtn't to have mentioned it to you, Billy—I know how it depresses you. It's horrible—all this sentiment."

Billy stared before him gloomily, and was silent.

"Isn't it!" insisted Almee.

"Sickening!" said Billy, bitterly.

Almee glanced at him and, looking away, stirred the grass with the point of his shoe. There was a long pause.

"What was it you were saying about things?" said Almee.

"I told you," replied Billy, "that before tomorrow it will either be a complete crash—or all clear."

Almee nodded.

"I see. That means, in the first case, that I'll be exploded—broken—done for."

"No!" said Billy, sharply.

"It does, though. But in the second, if things go better—I shall just be back at Scoope, in a sort of mild disgrace—stood in the corner. That's nothing much. I'm used to it. And there you are! Well, the curtain's soon going to ring down. Our partnership—"

Billy turned to her quickly.

"Is finished," continued Almee quietly, looking out across the park. "I shan't be able to ride the Sphinx for you, Billy. I'm sorry about that. It would have been fun."

Billy caught his breath.

"You mean," he said slowly, "that I shan't see you again?"

"I mean that. How can you? Our little holiday is over, Billy."

His fingers closed on the turf on either side of him, and dug deep.

"I understand. It's up to me. Tomorrow—we don't even know each other."

He let go the turf, and caught her hands.

"Almee!"

"Billy!"

Before either of them knew how it happened, he had her in his arms.

"I can't let you go!" said Billy wildly. "You're the darling of the world. The loveliest, brightest thing that ever breathed. Almee—do you think—you could try and love me?"

"Love you?" said Almee, trembling. "Who could help loving you, Billy!"

He held her tight and kissed her.

"I was so frightened—" said Almee, in a stifled voice.

"Frightened—!" He held her tighter.

"That you'd be frightened—"

"Me!"

"—of being sentimental," panted Almee.

Billy felt stunned.

"If you knew what I've been through," he said a little hoarsely, "this past week—trying not to let you see it!"

He kissed her again—more than once. Then he sat back, his head in a whirl. There was the longest pause yet; a silence that seemed interminable.

They were recalled to earth by a staccato noise.

"Yap! Yap! Yap! Yap! Yipe-yipe!"

Almee and Billy started violently. A small white Highland terrier, with its four legs braced, was barking at them excitedly, but not wholly with disapproval.

Almee felt stricken as though by a sudden paralysis. Behind the terrier stood Lady Erythea, erect and rigid. The glare in her eyes was the glare of a destroying Gorgon.

CHAPTER XXII

Not Guilty.

The guilty pair arose to their feet. Almee, from rosy red, had turned extremely pale. There was every expression on it. Lady Erythea's expression was enough to unnerve the stoutest heart.

"And this," in a voice like the clashing of a motor's gear-box, "in the face of my express warning! You are discharged." She took a step towards Almee. "And as for you—"

Billy interposed his large figure between them.

"Madam," he said, "if you have any comments to make, please make them to me. Or, better still—do not make them at all."

His voice was quiet and respectful. But his chin was lifted remarkably high, and his lips compressed dangerously.

Lady Erythea struggled for breath.

"Are you presuming," she said, in a strangled voice, "to dictate to me?"

Mr. William Spencer bowed.

"I hope—my lady—that it will not be necessary. What I do presume is to defend Miss—Snooks—against any reproaches whatever. This is her afternoon off."

Almee looked at them both—especially at Lady Erythea. And for once the "sand," on which she had so often been complimented, deserted her. Almee turned suddenly and fled.

The terrier, under the impression that it was all an extremely interesting game got up for his amusement, pursued her out of sight round the bushes, giving tongue excitedly.

Billy kept his eyes fixed on the intruder.

"If you require an explanation, Lady Erythea," he said quietly, "I guess I can give you one very briefly. I have just asked Miss Snooks to marry me."

Lady Erythea was mentally staggered.

"You have asked her—to marry you?" she said, staring at Billy.

"And she has done me the great honor to consent."

Billy's grim expression relaxed into a very charming smile.

"I feel sure your ladyship will not throw any obstacles in the way of this humble romance," he said gently. "We shall be very happy to have our employer's approval."

His employer gazed at him dumbly. The announcement came as a shock. And it was difficult even for Lady Erythea to resist Billy's smile. As she melted imperceptibly, her faculties were benumbed. Billy, despite the smile, looked so extraordinarily dignified that Lady Erythea almost felt an impulse to apologize to her chauffeur.

She made an effort to recover her austerity.

"You have asked this girl to marry you—after an acquaintance of four days?" she said acidly. "Is that—an American custom?"

Billy's smile intensified.

"I haven't much experience, my lady," he said, "but I think it's a British custom, too—sometimes."

With two such recent examples at hand, her ladyship felt unable to contradict him. She looked at him steadily, wondering why she felt no resentment. There was something so remarkably disarming about Billy.

"What you tell me, Spencer," she said at last, "places a new aspect on the case. It is, I suppose, within your discretion to engage yourself to a young woman if you wish to do so. The situation in which I found you led me to suspect mere irresponsible philandering—a thing most stringently forbidden within the precincts of Jervaux. Admitting the seriousness of your intentions," she continued with returning indignation, "I am still unable to consider your behavior decorous."

"I was very careful to choose a place just outside the park boundary, my lady," said Billy gravely, "and I was obliged to make use of the small amount of free time at my disposal."

Lady Erythea drew a long breath.

"I am making unprecedented allowances for you, Spencer," she said, "since I cannot forget how far I am indebted to you for the recovery of my emeralds. If I was under a misapprehension as to your conduct just now, it was natural. I will say no more. But I gather from this event that you will be leaving my service in any case, so I will merely give you a week's notice—if you are willing to stay so long."

"Yes, I guess I shall be quitting rather soon," said Billy, "but I'll be very glad to serve your ladyship in the meantime, and I hope I'll give satisfaction. But, may I take it that you won't put it across—that you will not say anything to—Amy?"

"I have nothing more to say in the matter whatever," replied her ladyship abruptly. "But you must understand that the conduct of both of you will have to be rigidly circumspect and correct."

Billy twinkled.

"We shall be careful to give your ladyship no grounds for complaint," he said.

Lady Erythea had a vague impression that Billy was laughing at her. It was stranger still that she did not seem to feel any resentment.

"You may go!" she said, with a gesture of dismissal.

Billy saluted and walked away. She watched his tall figure till it had receded some little distance, and then recalled him.

"Spencer!"

Billy returned. Lady Erythea inspected him through her lorgnette.

"Are you sure that this is a wise thing you are doing?" she said slowly.

"You seem to me a somewhat superior young man. I think you could do much better for yourself."

Billy twinkled yet more brightly.

"I should hate to disagree with your ladyship," he said, "but I am quite sure I couldn't."

Lady Erythea turned and walked away with a dazed air.

Billy passed through the gate into the lane, and made for the abbey at his best speed. He hoped that Almee might be waiting for him somewhere within call, but there was no sign of her. Thinking it likely she would be in the neighborhood of the garage, he hurried in that direction. He was within sight from the park boundary, when Monsieur de Jussac, approaching the fence from the abbey, saw him and called him by name.

Billy was too far away to hear. The Vicomte whistled, without result. He saw Billy disappear in the direction of the crag-pits. De Jussac hesitated, uncertain whether to follow.

"Our amazing chauffeur appears to be in a hurry," murmured Bertrand. He took out a cigarette and, smoked it reflectively. Bertrand was looking a little puzzled and anxious. Finally he wandered slowly back towards the abbey.

As he neared the main entrance the quack of a motor horn was heard, and an automobile drove up rapidly. It contained the stolid Inspector Panke from Stanhoe. Beside him sat a slim and active-looking man in a gray tweed overcoat.

De Jussac, raising his eyebrows, drew near unobtrusively. The man in tweeds got out and stepped briskly up to Mr. Tarbeaux, who was standing on the steps.

"You have a chauffeur here," said the man in tweeds quietly, "who calls himself William Spencer."

"Yes, sir," said Mr. Tarbeaux.

Bertrand de Jussac moved away, with the air of one retreating from a situation with which he had no concern. He lit a cigarette as he went, but once on the far side of the rhododendrons, Monsieur de Jussac began to move with uncommon swiftness.

"Is he on the premises at the moment?" said the visitor.

"I do not know, sir," replied Mr. Tarbeaux with cold reserve, eyeing the police car. "If you wish to see her ladyship—"

"I do. Inform her at once, if you please, that the police are here."

Mr. Tarbeaux went indoors, leaving the visitor on the step. It was some little time before Lady Erythea herself came to the entrance, grim and forbidding, ear-trumpet in hand.

"I am Detective-Inspector Arkwright, from Scotland Yard," said the visitor. "I wish to see your chauffeur, my lady—William Spencer."

"For what purpose?" said her lady-ship whatever, and I have complete confidence in him. If that really is your intention, it is my opinion you are about to make fools of yourselves."

Inspector Arkwright looked both surprised and irritated.

"I am here with full authority, my lady," he said abruptly, "and my task is to clear this matter up. Out of consideration for you, I have come here quite openly, and what my intentions are I must at the moment keep to myself."

"It is Spencer's afternoon off, I believe," said Lady Erythea coldly. "I do not think he is on the premises."

The inspector was plainly taken aback by his reception. His lips tightened to a thin line. Just then a policeman on a bicycle came riding rapidly along the drive. It was Constable Polson.

"Beg pardon, sir," he said, dismounting and saluting the inspector. "Have you found the man you are looking for here?"

"Why?" said Arkwright abruptly.

"Well, sir, I know him by sight, of course," said Polson in a lower voice—"the chauffeur. I mean—and as I came off the Stanhoe road awhile ago, I saw somebody like him crossing the forty-acre field and going towards the crag-pits. I thought I'd better hurry on and tell you. I'm sure it was he."

"Excellent! You are a man that keeps his eyes open," exclaimed Inspector Arkwright. "Come, Panke—leave the car here. Polson, show us the way."

The three of them departed together hurriedly in the direction of the park boundary.

Lady Erythea stared after them with mingled anger and anxiety. She waited for some time on the steps, pondering, and then went slowly indoors. Her eyes were troubled.

The three police, crossing the park, left it by a wicket gate near the sweet-briar clump. After a short consultation with Polson, Inspector Arkwright gave an order. The three men spreading out in a wide semi-circle, stalked the crag-pits by way of the lower meadow.

CHAPTER XXIII

Jack the Climber.

Mr. William Spencer, after arriving in the fallow-field where stood the clump of bushes that hid the broken Indian motorcycle, made a rapid survey of the situation. He resumed his task of quartering the ground for tracks.

This, being unfruitful, occupied but a little time. He gave it up and went forward again, dipping down into the crag-pits beyond.

Billy had formed upon the factors already in his possession a theory which appealed to him strongly. He hoped to prove it. But the hope was very slender.

"If I'd only got wise to this two days ago," he said gloomily, "I might have done something. But there's no saying how old the tracks are. And there's so little time."

He looked about him thoughtfully. The area of the crag-pits covered some twenty acres; a wide bottom of red sand studded here and there with tangled bushes. The place was shut in by low red bluffs of coralline crag, with a few gaps in them through which winding paths sloped up to the higher ground.

"The soil tells me nothing," said Billy to himself; "too loose and wind-blown to hold a trail more than two days. But there's five—maybe six caves, most of them too plain and easy—anybody can see 'em. Still, I'll go over them. My own first. I guess there's nobody could have found that."

He wound his way through the bushes to the screen of brambles that masked the cave where Almee had taken refuge on the night of the burglary, and after scanning the ground near its approaches, pushed the briars aside and entered cautiously. The cave was empty—save for that super-motorcycle, the Flying Sphinx, which stood waiting in patient dumbness at the far end, weeping slow tears of oil into a little pool beneath the silencer.

Billy laid a hand upon his Arab steed, and sighed. Then his face brightened amazingly.

"Your time'll come again—and mighty soon!" he said with affection. He turned, and left the cave. It was holy ground to him now; for one night it had been Almee's refuge.

He passed farther along the pits, inspecting a second and much more obvious cave on his way. He was just about to emerge from it when something caught Billy's eye, on the far side of the pits. He shrank back quickly into the cave's mouth and flattened himself against the wall, watching.

The object which gave him pause was very small, and fully four hundred yards distant. But it showed against the sky-line and to the eye of a frontiersman anything that cuts the sky-line, and that moves ever so little, is at once apparent. What Billy saw was the upper part of a head, peering over the edge of the little cliff on the opposite side.

A pair of shoulders followed the head, and their owner was obviously watching the pit with a desire to discover whether the coast was clear. There was a curious furtiveness about the figure that presently appeared, and dropping down the cliff by a steep path reached the lower ground and crossed it at a run.

Billy crept from the gloom of the cave's mouth and, crouching behind the briar bushes, peered through them eagerly. The running figure was a woman—a small woman clad in a khaki-colored dust-cloak, carrying a little red bundle. She ran with a stooping gait, bending low as she threaded between the bushes. She reached a point against the cliff on Billy's side, three hundred yards farther along, close by a tangle of undergrowth. There she halted, and looking round her quickly, disappeared with extreme suddenness.

"Great Christopher!" said Billy.

He rose to his knees, staring at the place where she had vanished. His eyes were bright, his face had lit up.

"I was right," he said in a hushed tone. "But, gee! I never thought of this."

He rose, as if to follow, but on second thought subsided again and waited. He remained there fully ten minutes, when the figure reappeared, and hurried along the pit bottom in his direction.

Billy wormed himself hurriedly under the tangled briars at some cost to his skin. The woman passed him within seventy yards, walking rapidly. She was no longer carrying the bundle.

When she had passed, Billy peeped after her. Though he could not see her face, he had not the slightest doubt who she was. She disappeared round the bend of the pits.

Billy extricated himself cautiously from the bush and waited for some time on his knees, staring in the direction she had taken. There was nothing more to be seen of her. Then, springing to his feet he sprinted to the spot where she had first vanished with the bundle.

The bushes partially cloaked the mouth of one of the many crag caves; the entrance was not difficult to find when one was close to it. Billy walked in without hesitation. He found precisely what he expected.

On the floor of the cave, stretched upon a couch of dry bracken, lay a man. He was not a spectacle which in any way gladdened the eye.

He was big and lusty of limb; what little could be seen of his face through a week's growth of brown stubble was haggard. His head of a nose jutted between two fierce deep-sunk eyes. One of his legs was extended, and swathed from foot to knee in dripping-wet calico bandages that looked as if they had been ripped from a woman's garment.

Billy found himself looking down the muzzle of a small repeating pistol, held in a hairy but very steady fist.

"Stop right where you are," said the occupant of the cave, reclining on one elbow. "Don't move a step forward, nor yet a step back. Get me?"

Billy stopped obediently. He calculated the distance between them to be a dozen feet; there was no likelihood of capturing the pistol before the bullet struck him. The eyes of the man showed that he meant business. He was in fact, less like a man than a crippled wolf.

"Jack the Climber," said Billy blandly, "I am pleased to meet you. I've been looking for you quite a while."

"Don't give me that fool name!" snarled the cave-man. "My name is Jake."

"Anything to oblige. Mr. Jake, there's the little matter of the Jervaux burglary against you, among others."

"What are you givin' me!" retorted Jake.

"The bluff doesn't go," said Billy. "Your motorcycle's yonder in the clay pit. All the cards are out."

The man's face twitched.

"Are you the police?"

"No," said Billy.

Jake stared at the tall form in front of him, and emitted a startled oath.

"I b'lieve you're the guy that slugged me, last Saturday night," he said.

"Quite correct."

"You're on your own, eh?" Jake's head craned forward, his eyes on Billy's face. "And alone, I guess!"

"Do you take me for a fool?" said Billy calmly.

The man shivered. The expression in his eyes was dreadful.

"See here!" he said sullenly. "You've got me set. I can't move. I'm up against it. I know they'll pull me. Well, I'll take my dose. I'll throw my hand in!"

"Wise of you."

"Let her go!" said Almee, breathlessly. "Let her go!"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Honest.

"Can you pick out a good cantaloupe?" "Not even for myself," replied the truthful grocer.

ADVERTISING IS AN INVESTMENT!

A Great Many Good Men

in business are laboring under a delusion that is proving a heavy handicap -- and will continue to prove so until they wake up to the true situation. They have become imbued with the idea that Advertising in the Home Paper is a Dead Expense, and therefore something to be avoided except at rare intervals and in small doses. Don't ask me how they got that way; I don't know. The whole history of business succes teaches something entirely different from that.

Thousands of Paying Business Institutions have been built up in this country on nothing but Hustle and Printing Ink. And many more will be built the same way. It's a combination that can't be beat for getting the business. If there be any who are skeptical, the Informer man, if approached circumspectly, might be induced to furnish a limited amount of space for testing purposes.

TWO-FLAT MAKES GOOD INVESTMENT

Design Which Shows the Trend of Modern Construction.

TWO FIVE-ROOM APARTMENTS

Two-Flat Building Is Simplest Form of Apartment Construction—Income Helps Take Care of the Fixed Charges.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie Avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

The building shown in the accompanying photograph is an ingenious income producer, since without greatly exceeding the outlay required for the ordinary dwelling of substantial construction, it affords living quarters for two separate families—one on each floor.

The two-flat building is the simplest form of apartment building. From it all other types of the same structure have developed. In this instance, the owner will, it is assumed, occupy one of the apartments, a member of the owner's family performing the incidental janitor work, such as furnace tending, caring for the lawn, garden, etc.

It will accordingly appeal to the prospective builder anxious to secure the most for his money, and at the same time insure a steady income which will aid him greatly in clearing the building of any indebtedness incurred in connection with its construction. For in building a home of this type it is only necessary to pay down a small initial payment, having the balance secured by note or mortgage until such a time as the payments would take care of all the outstanding indebtedness.

Notice how, by placing the "front" entrance well back at the side, full scope has been given to the plan of the sun parlor, which thus extends across practically the whole width of the building. Sun parlors have become an integral part of apartment design within the past few years. They are really, when substantially constructed, an extra room. In any event, they are welcome extensions of the living rooms from which they usually open out.

The floor plan of our apartment building is arranged to utilize every bit of space. The plan is typical, with no change for the second or the first floor. There is an entrance vestibule on the lower floor, and from this access is had to the hall of the first floor, and by stairway to the second floor.

Although this building has been designed to make the most of the usual narrow city lot, it will be seen that ample provision has been made for light and ventilation, in case other buildings build close up to adjoining building lines. If it were to be erected on a corner lot, or were to occupy a lot of good size, without danger of other buildings encroaching too close, so much the better. In such a case it would naturally be better in every way to have face brick extend around the sides also, instead of being merely on the front portion.

An apartment building like this is good for another reason, since many property owners have graduated from the ownership of a small flat building to being the landlords of much larger buildings, their initial experience standing them in good stead. With a good tenant proper upkeep of a two-flat building is no more than that of an ordinary private dwelling. In winter fires must be kept up; springtime decorating must be done; proper pride in one's place suggests some attention to landscaping the ground with flowers and shrubbery. All this is work which is not doubled when we consider in relation to the two-flat building, for with the usual house owner it is work which must be done anyway.

One suggestion which has to do with the interior arrangement might not be inappropos. That is in connection with the fireplace. The day is gone when the fireplace was the support, merely, of the scroll-framed mirror above it. Gone, likewise, is the day of the fireplace twice as massive as the size of the room permits. Choose a fireplace that will not exceed half the height of the room, and which will not jut out unnecessarily far into the area of the room.

CLIMATE HAS NOT CHANGED

Weather Conditions on the Earth Probably the Same for a Billion or More Years.

Geologists now hold that one thousand million years ago—yes, one thousand million, not one million—the earth had a climate not greatly different from that of today.

The radio-active minerals and their products in the rocks seem to prove that the earliest known sedimentary rocks must have been laid down one thousand million or more years ago. The life of that time as read from the rocks was essentially like the lower types that still exist. Similar shellfish, worms and other forms today can live only where the temperature does not remain permanently below freezing and where it never rises much above perhaps 150 degrees Fahrenheit.

The air of those vastly remote days must have been much like that of today, for even the lowly forms of life require oxygen, nitrogen, carbon dioxide and water in order to live and reproduce their kind. The sun itself cannot have been greatly different from our present sun, for otherwise the earth's climate would have been so different from that of today that it would have been wholly incompatible with the forms of life from which all present life appears to be descended.

So far perhaps one thousand million years the climate of the earth has apparently not passed beyond the limits where life, as we know it, can flourish. How this is possible, how the sun can have remained hot, how the earth's atmosphere can have retained so nearly the same composition, and how the climate can repeatedly have changed and yet always have been brought back almost to the same condition, is one of the most puzzling of the unsolved mysteries of science.—Ellsworth Huntington in Harper's Magazine.

Gasoline From Coal.

The conversion of soft coal into liquid oil was the subject of a lecture delivered to the Mining Society of the University of Birmingham by Dr. F. Bergius, an eminent research chemist. The process is simple. To coal under a very high pressure the gas hydrogen is added, and the result is that 90 per cent of liquid oil is obtained. By various modifications of the process it is possible to produce petrol or other kinds of mineral oil. A process which would enable a large part of the British coal reserves to be transmuted into liquid fuel would secure Britain against any risk of a liquid fuel famine and enable it to make its own oil at home. Hydrogen for such processes is generally obtained by decomposing water (a combination of hydrogen and oxygen) with electricity.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected.

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Practical Innovation.

Recent discussions concerning the decimal system of weights and measures render more interesting a curious paragraph reprinted in the Journal des Debats from its issue of August 22, 1868, when Napoleon I was at the height of his power; it states that there were two dials on the principal building of the Tuilleries, one counting the hours by twelve and the other by ten. Taking advantage of the need for repairs, the dial divided into ten hours was destroyed, since, as the report goes on to say, "it had served for no purpose, except to show to what point the mania for innovation was capable of mounting in opposition to the settled habits of all times and all peoples."—Washington Star.

Rights, Percy!

"And so, children, all these modern conveniences came into being by invention," said the teacher. "And now, Percy, tell me who invented the alarm clock."

"I dunno'm," said Percy, "but if my daddy ever meets him ther's going t' be trouble."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Railway Seismographs.

An indication of the swift progress of the Japanese mind in practical science is afforded by Doctor Omori's report on the measurement of the vibrations of railway cars by means of seismographs. The primary purpose of the seismograph is to measure the oscillations of earthquakes. Japanese engineers use it for determining the proper balance of locomotives and the state of the permanent way of railways. Many practical advantages in the saving of fuel and the detection of faults in construction have thus resulted.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Much Interest Being Shown in the Large Number of Women Safely Carried Through the Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The Following Letters Are Impressive

Owing to modern methods of living, few women approach this perfectly natural change without experiencing very annoying and often painful symptoms. Those dreadful hot flashes, nervousness, headaches, melancholia and irritability are only a few of the symptoms incident to this trying period of a woman's life, and the following letters prove the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to overcome these abnormal conditions.

A Michigan Woman Helped

Ionis, Michigan.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and had been under the doctor's care without any relief. A friend in Lansing, Mich., asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I feel fifty per cent better already. If any one in this condition doubts the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to help them I will gladly answer their letters."—Mrs. MAX W. HARR, 637 N. Jefferson Street, Ionis, Mich.

Fisherville, Ky.—"For several months I was under the doctor's care as he said my nervousness, chills, hot flashes and weakness was caused by the Change of Life, but I did not seem to get any better. I was not able to work and spent most of my time in bed. A friend called to see me and asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I cannot tell you how much good the medicine did me, as I had such a hard time before taking it. I can only advise every woman passing through the Change of Life to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it did so much for me."—Mrs. EDWARD B. NEAL, Star Route, Fisherville, Ky.

A New York Woman Helped

Syracuse, N. Y.—"I was used up with nervousness, weakness and hot flashes so I could hardly keep around, and could not get out much on account of these awful prickly feelings. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helping another woman with symptoms like mine. My husband got some for me, and after taking it five months I can get around and even do my housework, washing and ironing included, and my friends can see what a change it has made in me."—Mrs. SIDNEY HUMPHREY, 826 1/2 Burnet Avenue, Syracuse, N. Y.

TERM FOR POLITICAL CUNNING

Italian Genius Gave Name to What Might Be Called Unscrupulous Statesmanship.

"Machiavellian" is a term for political cunning, duplicity or bad faith, because Niccolo Machiaveli, an Italian statesman and historian, held as one of his principles that any means, however lawless or unscrupulous, might be justifiably employed by a ruler in order to maintain a strong central government. He produced among other works a treatise on government called "The Prince," the principles of which have gained for him a notoriety as wide as the civilized world.

All Aboard.

Some sailors went ashore and as a change thought they would like to go for a ride on horseback. They went to the nearest lively stable and the spokesman asked for the 'ostler.

Spokesman—We want an 'orse.

Ostler—What kind of an 'orse?

Spokesman—We want a four-legged 'orse.

Ostler (annoyed)—Yes, I know that, but d'yer want a quiet 'orse or a spritly 'orse?

Spokesman—Oh, it don't matter about that, mate. Give us a pretty long 'orse—there's eight of us and we're all goin' aboard.

Briefly, Machiavelli's political doctrines maintained a justification of the means by the end. The ruler or prince was to refrain and augment his power; and to do so he might be an adept at misleading his opponents and getting rid of them. The interests of the state, represented by the ruler, were held to be above all laws or virtues, and the despotism of the prince was to be maintained by cunning and unrestrained by morality.

Seemed Somewhat Personal.

There are things one might have expressed differently. A gushing matron was getting up an afternoon affair and called on a somewhat elderly dandy who had promised to assist.

"Now," pattered the matron, "I have secured a sweet girl to pour tea. You, my dear, will look after the slices of lemon."

"What am I to infer from that?" asked the other acidly.

Masterpiece Oddly Written.

"Songs to David," the lyrical poem of Stanzas, was written by Christopher Smart during lucid intervals of his wild madness.

There is a Time.

North—Is it possible for a young man to know everything?

West—If he is young enough.

Many a man doesn't realize how fortunate he is when the girl refuses him.

TWO GOOD PLAYS STAGED BY HEDLEY HIGH SCHOOL

The Informer regrets that the editor of its School News department has been kept too busily engaged in other matters to find time to prepare any school news for our last three issues. We are not blaming said editor, however, for we know that along toward the close of the school year every fellow has more to do than he can do.

The school has staged two excellent plays during the past two weeks—one last Saturday evening, and one the Saturday evening before.

On Saturday, May 12, "Parlor Matches" was given. A sand storm, which arrived just at the hour the play was scheduled to begin, kept the Informer family at home, but those who attended declared it great and praised the performers highly.

On the evening of the 19th, "Windmills of Holland," an operetta in two parts, was presented and much enjoyed by a crowd that comfortably filled the large auditorium. From the Overture to the Finale the interested attention of the audience was closely held, and all of the performers—soloists, chorus, and accompanist—are deserving of special mention.

Both of these performances were put on under the auspices of the Parent Teachers Association, the funds to be used for the benefit of the school.

GARD OF THANKS

We wish to give public expression of our thanks to our many good friends who have been so thoughtful of us and helpful to us since the destruction of our home by fire some two weeks ago. Be assured that we shall always hold you in grateful remembrance.

There will be a program given in honor of Mothers next Sunday night. Everyone is cordially invited to come.
