Jimmy, eagerly, as the girl drew near. "No," she answered. "At last, though, he's consented to explain why he won't relent. So come quickly before-he-why, Blackbeard Teach, what are you doing?"

Hastily withdrawing the paw that he had inserted under the closed lid of Jimmy's fishing creel Blackbeard gazed into space with an air of injured innocence. Picking up the creel, Jimmy dropped his reeled line into it and started, with Molly at his side, back along the path by which she had They went in silence, Blackbeard, his plume-like tail raised gracefully, following as before. Jimmy was thinking hard.

Alpheus Teach, a childless widower, was Molly's grand-uncle and the only parent she had ever known. Adored by Molly, she never would marry without his consent, as Jimmy knew only too well. But why Uncle Alpheus should refuse his consent, without even having seen the young man to whom he objected, had been an utter mystery even to Molly.

"He's waiting for us up in the Lantern," said Molly, as they neared the house, nodding toward a huge, square cupola that surmounted it. "I don't know why he loves that place," she added wistfully. "He has some queer little ways, but I know you'll be patient, Jim."

Jimmy promised. Together they climbed upstairs and into the Lantern, with Its view of the gray Atlantic. There Jimmy discovered, with surprise, that Uncle Alpheus was a mere wisp of a man, with a dreamer's eyes and a smile of winning sweetness.

"I fear that you had poor sport if you fished Teach's brook," said he, taking Jimmy's hand. "I doubt if it can boast anything larger than a min-

"The one trout that I caught wasn't much larger," replied Jimmy, setting rod and creel in a corner. "But-pardon my abruptness, Mr. Teach-I'm awfully anxious to-"

"I understand," interrupted the other. "You want to know why I object to your marrying Molly. Be seated, please. It isn't easy to convey my exact point of view. Perhaps I would best begin with the statement that I am an absolute believer in the doctrine of heredity. Then-do you see that Jimmy saw it. It hung by a chain from the ceiling and seemed to be very old.

"That bell was taken from a Spanish ship by an ancestor of ours, Edward Teach, who was killed in 1719. He was better known as Blackbeard, the pirate. You've heard of him?" "Rather!" nodded Jimmy. "But d' you suppose I'd let that make any dif-

"You misapprehend; the point is this," returned the older man. "You-I know, for I have investigated-are descended from the Villiers, who were dukes of Buckingham. That is, from a family pampered in royal courts-'

"That was three centuries ago!" objected Jimmy; but the other, now fairly in the saddle of his hobby, galloped unheedingly on. "Blackbeard," he continued. "was far more than a mere cutthroat. He possessed a personality so strong, so incredibly dynamic, that-as it is said, and as I am strongly inclined to belleve-it did not cease with his death, but persists to the present day. Almost certainly, in my opinion, it is with us at this present moment."

"Good heavens!" cried Jimmy, as uncontrollable little shudders chased each other down his backbone. "How is this ghost supposed to manifest itself?"

"By jingling that silly old bell!" answered Molly with a scornful sniff. "More like a scissors-grinder's spook than a pirate's!"

horrified reproof; but Molly only sniffed again, so, after a little, he went on, once more addressing Jimmy:

"As a matter of fact, Blackbeard never has directly manifested himself to me, though I often have hoped that he would. In times of dire family emergency, in order to prevent some gent error about to be committed. It Strue that he is said to have sounded this bell. "I'm sorry you overheard me; I didn't want to trouble you, my dear." replied the old man. "Still, our ancestor is said to have his own methods of regulating our family affairs. If he desires this match, as I fear he

"Dong! Dong! Dong-dong! Dong!" It was the pirate's hell!

Uncle Alpheus turned pale. With a scream, Molly rushed back upstairs, upsetting the candle, which went out. Though startled, Jimmy picked up the candle and, while fumbling for a match, heard the old man stumbling after the girl. He had vanished upstairs when the match flared up, but in his stead Jimmy saw another member of the family coming-not to say slinking-down.

This was Blackbeard - Molly's blackbeard; and in his mouth was that solitary little trout, with a severed portion of Jimmy's pet, tapered-silk fishing line tied to its tail. In Jimmy's mind there dawned an idea which caused him hurriedly to relight the candle and follow the other two back into the Lantern. Eagerly he looked at the bell. Yes, there it was, just as he expected-another bit of his troutline, tied to the clapper. Uncle Alpheus descried it at the same moment. "This bit of string-" he began, doubtfully. "That!" interrupted Molly. "That's nothing. I tied it there myself."

Jimmy just managed to suppress a snort of semi-hysterical laughter. Tied it there herself-that was true enough. But she didn't go on to say that she had tied the dead trout to the other end of that string, which she hurried back in order to cut as the cat was tugging at it. This omission, however, was unknown to Uncle Alpheus, so the bit of string passed from his mind as a thing of no consequence.

"Our ancestor is right, now as always," said he solemnly. "He has saved me from a terrible mistake. And," he added, with that smile of his, "I cannot tell you how happy I am in the assurance that this is so.

Then he placed their hands together and, turning, left them alone in the candle-lighted Lantern.

Jade's Strange Appeal to the Feminine Heart

Many women long for diamonds; nearly all covet jade. I myself have gazed into the heart of a giant diamond worth four figures-1 have drowned in its white depths, says an English writer who signs herself "A Lucky Woman." Yet it scarcely even stirred my admiration. It was exquisite-yes, but I did not want to take it home, to touch it. I left it without a pang, to glitter in its velvet case and wink at its neighbor, the sapphire tlara.

But that strir was different. It was almost pain. I longed so much to finger it, to feel its green ice on my neck.

Half the women in England are jade mad. Why should this strange quartz hold such a unique position in the feminine heart? Is it because its wonderful color reminds us of nothing else on earth? Maybe it is because we are superstitious, and we think it brings us luck. For thousands of years tade has been looked upon by the Chinese as a symbol of eternity and long life. To give a friend a piece of Jade was to wish him "the happiness and life you desire." Lucky jade . . . the very thought stirs the imagination. It brings hazy dreams in its train-dreams of yellowskinned men with slanting eyes, who buy and sell, carve and polish the stone we love. All the finest isde comes down from the roof of the world, from the quarries of Khotan in Chinese Turkestan, along the caravan route that has been used for 3,000 years, and through that narrow break in the Great Wall of China that is known as the Jade gate.

Chinamen are adepts at carving this stone, which is hard as diamond. Few western lapidaries know how to treat it as they do; they can get the last grain of beauty from the smallest and least valuable chunk of the quartz. So wonderfully do they carye it that to the uninitiated, the comparatively inexpensive white jade streaked with smoky apple green often appears more beautiful than the almost priceless vivid green.

Lake Storms Dangerous

It is hard for salt water sailors to believe that storms of the great inland seas are often more disastrous than those of the open ocean, because there is less space for drifting and because of powerful lake currents during gales which take the ship out of control. Also, the fresh lake water is lighter than the salt water of the ocean and is, therefore, more easily heaped up into great waves by a strong wind. When the December gales arrive and the snowstorms, which continue till spring, shipping remains safe in port, for ice closes the lake to navigation.

Church next Sunday morning: Rev. K. F. Keller,

Pastor First Baptist Church, Hedley, Texas.

Dear Brother Keller: Our assistant, Dr G H Lewis, reports arranging with you for a service for Sunday morning, October 19th, himself to be the speaker. I am writing to confirm this arrangement and to thank you for your kind co operation. Dr. Lewis is a high class Christian gentleman, a minister in the Baptist church, and I am sure that he will bring your good people a great message.

The issues that face us today are so complex that it is highly important that our good people keepinformed-know just where they are. That is just what they have got to do, else they cannot give that co operation that will make it a success.

With personal good wishes, I Sincerely your friend,

Atticus Webb As this is the only engagement Dr. Lewis will be able to make in Hedley for some time, it is hoped that members of all denomina tions will come out and hear him. The Pastor.

Eating Lunch at Home After School.

Rare is the home where the school children do not come in from school clamoring for food, no matter how many sandwiches and cookies were tucked in the lunch box. Almost any leftover in the ice box, from cold beans to pie, is liable to disappear at

Necessary Calories.

The average person over twelve years of age requires 27 100-calorie portions of food a day, or about 190 a week. This is true of a man or a alarmed by this appetite. Instead of boy using little muscular energy in work or play, or of a woman or girl low "piecing" she sets out an extra who uses a good deal. A very active afternoon school lunch of milk and man or boy may need as much as perhaps crackers, buns, cookies, 40 100-calorie portions a day, or 280 in a week. These must be distributed found by studying the foods served to among the five food groups, so that boys in a school where considerable fruits and vegetables furnish about one-fifth; protein-rich food another fifth: fats and fat foods a fifth: cereal may eat even more than his father, if foods, such as bread, and foods made the latter does only moderately active of flour, rice, cornmeal and other work. All utensils with which milk comes in contact should be rinsed in cold water, washed, and scalded with water at or near the boiling point every time they are used, and set away unwiped. In no case should they be cleaned in water that has been used for other utensils, or wiped with a towel that has been used for other dishes since it was scalded.

Kitchen Not a Wash Room

It is better to use the kitchen only as a place for preparing and, if necessary, serving food. This is more sanitary and permits more compact and convenient arrangement of equipment, the United States Department of Agriculture believes, than having it a combination cook room, laundry, wash room, passageway, and dining room. Laundry, wash room, and general storage room are sometimes combined and used as a place for men and children coming in from out of doors to leave work clothes and muddy boots and rubbers, but if possible this should be separate from the kitchen.

MARTYNIAS CAN BE MADE INTO PICKLES

able for Mixtures.

(Prepared by the linital States Department of Agriculture.)

If you have martymas in your locality, either growing wild or in the garden, you can make them into very good pickles, says the United States Department of Agriculture, by first Martynias grow, wild and in great abundance in the semi-arid regions of southwestern United States, but they can be grown successfully in other localities. The plant grows from two to three feet high and bears large leaves and a purplish flower. It may be planted for ornamental purposes. The seed-bearing pods are used for pickling. They grow close to the stem and should be picked for pickling when two inches long. They are curved in shape and covered with a fuzzy growth which exudes a gummy substance, irritating to the skin.

It has been found that these fruits respond very readily to the action of brine. A 40 per cent brine, made by dissolving one pound of salt in nine pints of water, is the most satisfactory strength to use for martynias. As the brine must be maintained at the same strength throughout the entire process of curing, and as juices which dilute the brine are drawn out of all products, it is necessary to add salt from time to time. A salinometer, which is a simple, inexpensive piece of apparatus, is the best means of determining when the brine is of the required strength. Its use is recommended wherever possible, especially if any quantity of fruit is being handled ..

A keg or stone jar is satisfactory for brining. Kegs must be well washed with hot water, and soaked overnight with fresh water, to be sure they are watertight. Round board covers, coated with hot paraffin are used to keep the vegetables submerged in the brine. Clean bricks are used as weights. Another large round wood cover over the top of each keg is necessary to keep out dirt and dust. When the martynias have been in the brine from two to three weeks they are sufficiently cured, and ready to be freshened by soaking in fresh water overnight. They may then he pickled, either in plain vinegar or in a sweet spiced vinegar. Martynias are especially desirable for combining

Charming and Unusual Brick Home Borrows Apartment House Ideas

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue. Chicago, Ill. and only inclose two-cent. Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Apartment builders, when apartment building was rather an experimental proposition, were forced to take their ideas for the most part from those developed from years of experience in building separate homes. And it is high time that the apartment returned the compliment and presented some ideas which can be used with gain in the erection of the detached home.

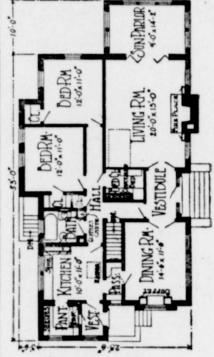

This is exactly what has been done in this charming and unusual home of brick, for while the floor plans show only five rooms, the home really has the efficiency of a six-room house through the use of a closet bed, such as are so generally utilized in the planning of modern apartments.

The home as shown is designed for a corner lot, with the unusual arched entrance in the center of the long side of the building. The fireplace chimney of field stone is a decorative touch.

The arched entryway opens into a vestibule which gives access to the which can be utilized when needed. living room, the dining room and a solving the problem of the spare room hall which leads to all other parts of the home.

Moderate Priced House

Is Now the Chief Need That the need of today is for homes of moderate price and moderate size, the opinion of William Elder, Indianapolis real estate man. During the times of apparent unrest in business, the greater part of the building population is beginning to be dubious as to the benefit in building houses, the price of which ranges above $5,-000, he said. Mr. Elder said the present business conditions are merely reactions which had to follow the war main drain or sewer extending from and also that the country was once again shifting back to the prewar pe- front wall of the building, vault or riod. He believes that the natural area, to its connection with the pub-

"Today the thing needed is houses of moderate price," he said, "so that the ordinary working man who has only the average chance of paying his debts will be able to pay for his home. It is a long pull for the average man to pay for a home on terms regardless of the price. A house is not like a piece of furniture that can be bought one week and paid for the floor for fixtures other than the tollet. next. A house takes time, as anything that runs in the thousands of dollars does."

If a man has the "payment habit." which results in his spending a dollar of his pay roll here and another there, the profitableness of his buying a home on payments is doubtful, Elder sald. It sometimes proves to make the home buyer wish to save his money, but this is seldom the case with the man who spends all his money this way, he said.

If all the prospective home buyers who are holding back because they weather-stripping. Mr. Elder sald, industry would be tremendously stimulated.

Concrete Block Used Now for Building Entire House

In addition to its strength concrete block first became popular with builders because of the fine appearance of the rock-face block in basement walls, dows protects rugs, drapes, wall paper, its convenience in laying and economy. Providing as it does from 20 per cent to 50 per cent dead air space, dust, smoke, soot and dirt sifting in a concrete wall affords greater protection from the cold than solid masonry, and it will not sweat like solid ma-

Small Suite Houses

In many cities the house built after the manner of the small apartment suite is popular. Wall beds are provided in several rooms and are cheap er than building more rooms.

Lighting Service Rooms In the kitchen, pantry and cellar it is essential to provide direct lighting fixtures, so that light can be thrown down upon the working plane.

Things About Plumbing

Householder Should Know The trap is a curved pipe permitting the last of a flow of water to remain in the pipe to prevent a back flow of sewer gas into the house. There are many different types. The grease trap is used to separate grease from water in large or institutional kitchens and saves plumbing bills, Traps must be in plain sight under the sink.

Weather Stripping Way to Protect Furnishings

An all-warm house in winter time is a practical impossibility without even on the best foundations; doors and windows adjust themselves; air passages appear, and drafts and heat waste result. Realizing this, many inventive minds have developed weatherstrips for doors and windows calculated to be practical and efficient, and last indefinitely.

In the old days the weather-strip was considered simply a cold weather advantage. Now, however, they have been found as necessay and effective in excluding dust and dirt. Good weather-stripping of doors and winpainting and good furniture against soiling and deterioration from the from the outside.

Let us consider the scientific basis of weather-stripping. It is a fact that burning fuel at full-blast "spots" heat at certain points. These points are

SOILING CROPS ARE REQUIRED FOR MILK

Because of a succession of dry summers in northeastern Minnesota it has become necessary to supplement permanent pastures, if dairy cows are to be properly fed and the milk flow maintained in August just as butterfat prices start on the ascending scale, says M. J. Thompson, superintendent of the Northeast Experiment station of Minnesota university. Mr. Thompson believes this condition should be anticipated when seeds are being ordered and crops planned. Three things can be done to provide summer succulence, he says.

1. Sweet clover pasture. Not yet generally established; sow seed for

2. Summer silage. Not wholly practical since most farms with silos have winter capacity only and if there is a carry-over much of it spoils. 3. Soiling crops, that is, crops cut green, hauled in and fed.

"The last offers the cheapest and best solution of the problem," says Mr. Thompson. "Such crops require only a limited acreage. Fall sown rye is the first available in the summer. Oats, though somewhat later, offers the greatest range of seeding. late April to late June, and thus serves more need. Peas may be sown with it. Second crop sweet clover, and later sunflowers (chopped) and corn all make excellent feed. Our herd consumes over 90 per cent of these feeds, so that waste is small. In this manner the milk flow is sustained and prolonged into the winter high price period."

Homemade Spray Mixture Helps Milk Production

Files on the cows in hot weather often cut down the milk. A good fly spray, well put on, will not only quiet the cows and help the milk run freely, but will also save the temper and language of the milker.

A good spray for this purpose can easily be made a home, according to the cow men of the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca. Use 41/2 quarts of coal tar dip; 41/2 quarts fish oil; 3 quarts coal oil; 3 quarts whale oil; and 11/2 quarts oil of tar. Dissolve 3 pounds of laundry soap in water, add the ingredients of the spray, and bring up to 30 gallons with lukewarm soft water. This spray, applied twice a dayin the morning after milking and in the afternoon while the cows are in the barn for sllage or other green feed-will keep the files away and keep the hair coats of the cow soft.

Thirty gallons of this mixture will spray 40 cows twice a day for ten days, at a cost of one cent a cow a day. Two men with a portable halfbarrel cart carrying a spray pump and nozzle can spray 40 cows in five minutes, and save a lot of time, milk, and general unpleasantness.

Average Profitable Age for Cows Kept for Milk

Ten years is the average age at which cows kept for milk are slaughtered for beef, according to investigations made by the United States Department of Agriculture. Thus one can expect a cow to produce for about eight years before becoming too old for profitable production. In Wisconsin and other dairy states the average age is eleven years; in others, nine years is the average. But the general level for the whole country is ten years. Cows, when sold for beef slaughter, brought an average price of $31.69 a head. When sold for milk they brought about $62.90. These two prices indicate that the average beef-slaughter price of cows that had been kept for milk eight years is about one-half the average price of cows having a milking for Feeding Dairy Cow Rye should always be cut for hay before the awns harden, and inasmuch as the cows like the hay better when rye is cut about the blooming time, we consider that about the best time to cut rye intended for dairy cow feeding. In fact, rye hay cut from the time of heading out to bloom is reasonably good feed. With all this hay the cows will readily clean up, plus 10 pounds of good legume hay daily for the roughage, a good ration may be had with one pound of the following for each three pounds of milk produced: Ground corn or barley, four parts; ground oats, four parts; wheat bran, two parts; oilmeal one part, gluten meal one part.

Feed Grain to Calves

Calves will begin to eat grain at three weeks of age, and at the end of six weeks will consume about one half pound per day. At the end o eight weeks they will eat one poun per day. At three months they should be getting two pounds of grain day, which is enough until six monof age, unless it is desired to p them very rapidly. After six moa little more should be given or ever they are weaped from ekimmed milk.

FARM ANIMALS MUST HAVE SALT SUPPLY

One of the most commonly used mineral elements with live stock and one with which we are all familiar is that of salt, or sodium chloride, this material supplying the elements, sodium and chlorine, which seem to be necessary for live stock. It has been a practice with successful stock men for centuries to supply common salt to all kinds of live stock, and while there is a considerable difference in opinion as to the necessity of this, it is considered a good practice, and from the experiments that have been conducted, is doubtless a necessary

Salt should not be given to animals in too large amounts, as it would induce the drinking of great quantities of water, which would lessen digestion, bring about abnormal secretion of digestive fluids and other undesirable results. There is no question but that salt improves the palatability of certain feeds, and probably increases the appetite in some cases.

Exhaustive experiments were made by Babcock and Carlyle of the Wisconsin experiment station, which proved conclusively that it is absolute ly necessary to supply salt, especially to dairy cows, as in every case after withholding salt for a short time, these animals evidenced an abnormal appetite for it. Every one of them reached a point where vitality was extremely low and a general breakdown occurred. This occurred in most cases after several months. In every case, when either a potassium or sodium salt containing a chlorine was furnished, a complete recovery took place. This experiment brought out the fact that it was not the sodium, but that it was the chlorine that was necessary.

The amount of salt required by animals will vary considerably, according to the locality from which the feed is secured for them. It will also vary considerably, according to the production of the various individuals of the herd. The safest and most satisfactory manner in which to supply salt to live stock is to allow them access to it at all times, and when handled in this way, no bad results should

It is well to keep in mind, however, that swine and poultry are very susceptible to salt poisoning, and for this reason only small amounts should be fed to them. In no case should swine or poultry be allowed free access to salt, or solutions of brine, as this is a dangerous practice. Many cases of salt poisoning in poultry and swine are reported each year and most of

Avoid Many Kinds of Pig

Diseases by Sanitation Under the present state of domes tication the hog is subjected to more conditions that are detrimental to his health and predispose him to disease than any other of cur domestic animals. His very nature also makes him liable to many of the diseases that are contracted by him.

The hog for centuries has been considered more or less in the light of a scavenger, eating feeds or refuse of any and all kinds, and much of it in a spoiled or decayed condition. In the earlier times most people were of the opinion that such practices were safe with the hog, but in later years we have discovered they are really the cause of large losses that were often attributed to other causes. Such practices are not as common as formerly, but are still too common for the best interests of the industry.

Sanitation, proper feeding and housing and providing for plenty of exercise are known means of avoiding many kinds of sickness, and are cheap in comparison with the loss they save and must be practiced if the industry is to be profitable in the long

Clean Ground for Pigs

Is of Big Importance

Every farmer should without delay provide a sanitary farrowing place for fall litters, says E. G. Elling, swine specialist, Kansas State Agricultural college. Several hundred Kansas swine producers who followed Elling's instructions last spring are agreed that "clean" ground for young pigs is one of the essentials of profitable pig production. Their enthusiasm about the method is selling the idea to entire communities, Mr. Elling says.

"Pigs nursing, sleeping, eating, and drinking in old hog quarters become unthrifty and subject to heavy loss. They are too young and tender to compete with the worm, lice, mange, scours, and thumps-their inheritance from unclean yards," Mr. Elling points

Safest Cattle Feeding

Feeding calves for the baby beef market is the safest kind of cattle feeding and a larger number of calves are being fed for the market this year than ever before. Feeders of this kind of cattle too often send them to market before they have become fat enough to command a price that will insure the large net returns. No other class of cattle is discriminated against so severely as a half-fat baby beef. The fatter the baby beef the profit be makes

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's amp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large. However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr.

Further questions brought no further information. The woman didn't know the firm for which Phyllis worked; she thought it had to do with Bruce, but to Zen Transley! He munitions. "I am very glad to see you safely back," said Phyllis Bruce. "We have all been thinking about you a great deal."

"Why, Miss-Phyllis! It was you I was looking for!" The frank confession came before he had time to suppress it, and, having said so much, it seemed better to finish the job.

"Yes, Phyllis is making her home with us now," Mrs. Murdoch explained. "It is more convenient to her work."

Grant wondered how much of this arrangement was due to Mrs. Murdoch's sympathy for the bereaved girl, and how much to the addition which it made to the family income. No doubt both considerations had contributed to it.

"I called at your old home," he continued. "I needn't say how distressed I was to hear- The woman could tell me nothing of you, so I came to Mur-

"Come, Mr. Grant; come, everybody!" a cheerful voice called from behind the sliding doors which shut

At the table their talk dribbled out young man's shoulder; he was with into thin channels. It was as though there were at hand a great reservoir of thought, of experience, of deep gropings into the very well-springs of life, which none of them dared to tap lest it should rush out and overwhelm them. They seemed in some strange awe of its presence, and spoke, when they spoke at all, of trivial things. Grant proved uncommunicative, and perhaps, in a sense, disappointing. He preferred to forget both the glories and the borrors of war; when he drew on his experience at all it was to relate some humorous incident. That, it seemed, was all he cared to remember. He was conscious of a restraint which ing it was a moment before Grant hedged him about and hampered every

Phyllis, too, must have been conscious of that restraint, for before they parted she said something about human minds being like planos, which get out of tune for lack of the master-touch. . When Grant found himself in the street air again he was almost swallowed up in the rush of things which he might have said. He paused at a bridge to lean against the railing and watch the trembling reflection of city lights in the river.

"I have it!" he suddenly exclaimed to the steel railing. "I have it!"

He paused for a moment to turn over his thought, as though to make sure it should not escape. Then, at a pace which aroused the wondering glance of one or two placid policemen, he hurried to the hotel.

Linder and Grant had been assigned to the same room, and the sergeant's dreams, if he dreamt at all, were of the sweet hay meadows of the West. Grant turned on the light and looked down into the face of his friend. A smile, born of fields afar from war's alarms, was playing about his lips. Even in his excitement Grant could not help reflecting what a wonderful thing it is to sleep in peace. Then-"I have it!" he shouted. "Linder, I

"Them, you mean," said Linder, suddenly awake. "Why, man, what's wrong with you? You're more excited than if we were just going over

The window was gray with the light of dawn before Grant's mind had calmed down enough for sleep. When Linder awoke him it was noon. "You sleep well on your Big Idea," was his comment.

"No better than you did last night," retorted Grant, springing out of bed. "Let me see . . . yes, I still have it clearly. I'll tell you about it sometime, if you can stay awake. When do we eat?"

"Now, or as soon as you are presentable. I've a notion to give you three days' C.B. for appearing on parade in your pajamas."

"Make it a cash fine, sergeant, old dear, and pay it out of what you owe would do that. I made up my mind up a decent meal. I'll be shaved and that if you wrote three times, then I dressed long before it arrives. You would know you really wanted to re- know this is a first-class hotel, where member me. . . . > As they ate together Grant showed no disposition to discuss what Linder called his Big Idea, nor yet to give any satisfaction in response to his companion's somewhat pointed references as to his doings of the night before.

"There are times, Linder," he said, when my soul craves solitude. You, being a sergeant, and therefore having no soul, will not be able to understand that longing for contemplation-"

"It's all right," said Linder. "I don't want her."

"Furthermore," Grant continued, "tonight I mean to resume my sollloquies, his mind had leapt, not to Phyllis and your absence will be much in demand." "The supply will be equal to the de-tickets and settle with the chief extortionist downstairs, I will join you at the night train going west."

Linder sprang to attention, gave a salute in which mock deference could not entirely obscure the respect beneath, and set about on his commissions, while Grant devoted the afternoon to a session with Murdoch and Jones, but it was noted that Grant's interest centered more in a certain telephone call than in the very gratifying financial statement which Murdoch was able to place before him. And it was probably as a result of that telephone call that a taxi drew up in front of Murdoch's home at exactly six-thirty that evening and bore Miss Phyllis Bruce and an officer wearing a captain's uniform in the direction of the best hotel in the city. The dining room was sweet with the perfume of flowers, and soft strains of music stole vagrantly about its high arching pillars, mingling with the chatter of lovely women and of men to whom expense was no consideration. Grant was conscious of a delicious sense of intimacy as he helped Phyllis remove her wraps and seated himself by her at a secluded corner table.

"By Jove!" he exclaimed. "I don't make compliments for exercise, but you do look stunning tonight!"

A warmth of color lit up her cheekhe had noticed at Murdoch's how pale she was-and her eyes laughed back at him with some of their old-time spirators won't give me palpitation." vivacity.

"I am so glad," she said. "It seems almost like old times-"

They gave their orders, and sat in silence through an overture. Grant was delighting himself simply in her presence, and guessed that for her part she could not retract the confession her love had wrung from her so long

"There are some things which don't change, Phyllis," he said, when the orchestra had ceased.

She looked back at him with eyes moist and dreamy. "I know," she

There seemed no reason why Grant hould not there and then have laid dimself, figuratively, at her feet. And there was not any reason-only one. He wanted first to go West. He almost hoped that out there some light of distillusionment would fall about him; that some sudden experience would readjust his personality in accordance with the inevitable.

"I asked you to dine with me tonight," he heard himself saying, "for two reasons: first, for the delight of your exquisite companionship; and second, because I want to talk over with you some plans I have for the future. The fact is, I have been in a dilemma. I find that Murdoch, like the canny old Scot he is, has doubled my fortune during my little engagement overseas, and now I have to take up the reins again. But I am filled with the West. Do you know what I mean?"

"I have never lived in the West," said Phyllis, "but I think I can guess. You're homesick for it."

"That's it-homesick for it; for the smell of a thousand miles of grass, and sunny hillsides dotted with cattle, and fellows who take you for what you are-or don't take you at all. A broker's life, no matter how successful, has nothing to offer which compares with that. It wasn't until last night that I saw it clearly, and then, all of a sudden. I knew what I was going to do."

Grant plunged into an explanation of what Linder had called his "Big Idea." He was going back to the ranching country to buy land and start a farm on a large scale. He believed more attractive was the prospect of offer employment to many of the boys of his battalion who, upon their return home, had not found their fortunes doubled-if they had any fortunes to double. Besides, it would give him a chance to take care of Linder.

"You know, I've got to take care of Linder," he explained, "and it's a business that has to be done tactfully. In some respects Linder is as aphim a meal or so and get away with it, but if he thought I were supporting him out of charity he would start an omy to paint. insurrection. Now, I'm going to make him manager of the farm; the stars in their courses shaped him for just that job. As for me, I'll stay in the background. I want time to loaf and invite my soul."

They talked over many angles of the Big Idea," and, even after he had talked himself out, Grant continued to sit at the little table, reveling in the happiness of a man who feels that he has been called to some purpose worth while. His companion hesitated to interrupt his thoughts: her somewhat drab business experience made her pessimistic toward all idealism, and yet she felt that here, surely, was a man who could carry almost any project through to success. The unique quality in him, which distinguished him from any other man she had ever known, was his complete unselfishness In all his und coveted no reward for himself; he was seeking only the common good.

"It all men were like you there would be no problems," she murmured, and while he could not accept the words quite at par they rang very pleasantly in his ears.

A movement among the diners reminded him of the flight of time, and with a glance at his watch he sprang up in surprise. "I had no idea the evening had gone!" he exclaimed. "I have just time to see you home and get back to catch my train.'

He called a taxi and accompanied her into it. They seated themselves together, and the fragrance of her presence was very sweet about him. It would have been so easy to forgetall that he had been trying to forgetin the intoxication of such environment. Surely it was not necessary that he should go West-that he should see her again-iu order to be sure.

"Phyllis," he breathed, "do you imagine I could undertake these things if I cared only for myself-if it were not that I longed for someone's approval-for someone to be proud of me? The strongest man is weak enough for that, and the strongest man is stronger when be knows that the woman he loves-"

He would have taken her in his arms, but she resisted, gently, firmly.

"You have made me think too much of you. Dennison," she whispered. . On the way West Grant gradually unfolded his plan to Linder, who accepted it with his customary stoicism.

You are to go on with the physical work at once." he told him. "Buy the horses, tractors, machinery; break up the land, fence it, build the houses and barns; in short, you are to superintend everything that is done with muscle or its substitute. I will bring Murdoch out shortly to take charge of the clerical details and the general organization. As for myself, after ! have bought the land and made the necessary funds available, I propose to keep out of the limelight. I will be the heart of the undertaking; Murdoch will be the head, and you are to be the hands, and I hope you two con-Linder assented, laconically, "What are you going to do?" he inquired.

"I'm going to buy a half section of my own and farm if f teel like it." (TO BE CONTINUED.)

Fable of the Unusual Cop Once there was a traffic cop wh. was kind and considerate and who never falled, when the engine dled on the street, to come over and say, "That's too bad. But don't get excited. Take your time getting her out. The people behind don't mind "

Economic Wrong to Be Sparing of Paint

The first requisite in making the home bright and cheerful is to dress It up in beautiful colors, outside as well as inside. The little cottage or bungalow may be dressed just as cleverly and be as beautiful as the stately mansion. A little care used in the selection of the colors and quality of the paint will transform the dingy, unattractive house into one that will be a credit to the happy family within, as well as to the neighborhood round about.

Say! Don't we all of us throw our shoulders back and step a little higher in a new coat or gown? It is a just pride, a healthful indication that we are going forward and not slipping. But, if it is a choice between a new coat or gown and a new coat of paint for the home, the prudent person will choose the new coat for the house and will be just as proud and happy as in the new su't. A judicious investment of cash in paint is like putting money in the bank, since it really costs more not to paint than it does to paint. To put off the painting not only robs you of the pleasure it would afford, and he could make money out of it, but detracts from the general appearance of your neighborhood, but the longer outdoor life and an opportunity to it is put off the more your property is damaged and the more paint and labor is required to do the job. When painting is put off too long the putty falls away from the glass, the nail heads rust, moisture gets into the tiny fissures and widens them into long cracks. The boards and casements warp and the joints open up; the waterspouts, troughs and flashings rust away. This picture is not proachable as a porcupine. I can buy in the least overdrawn. The lumber must be protected or these very things will happen. It is therefore real econ-

Organized to Further Beauty in Every Town

At the state conference on regional planning held recently at Buffalo and attended by officials from every community in the state a federation was formed to accomplish the following:

1. To encourage and assist in the formation and organization of planning boards throughout the state. 2. To affiliate organizations and individuals interested in scientific plan-

3. To aid the work of existing commissions or planning boards by acting as clearing bureau for information on scientific planning. 4. To further all needed legisla-ning.

5. To collect and publish facts regarding the econ social values in scientific town and regional planning.

6. To otherwise promote in all ways possible the extension and the proper development of city, town and regional planning.

Arrangement of Shrubs

More important than even the flowering qualities of shrubs is their arrangement. In other words, planning to plant is the most essential-the beauty of our yards depends entirely upon it, and is almost as important as the planning out of a house.

By making a plan of the lot it is possible to make it into "outdoor living-rooms," with interesting vistas and at the same time made convenient to the existing conditions.

No lot is too small to have nature express herself beautifully under man-made, limited surroundings.

In choosing shrubs for all-around purposes, probably the border planting of the lot would be most in common for every home. The rear yard generally has the greatest opportunity and the more massive and tallergrowing varieties of shrubs should be considered.

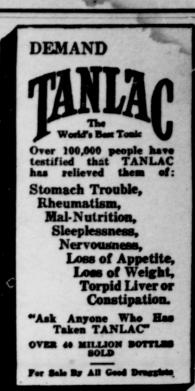

Study Industrial Problems

Co-operation between the domestic commerce division of the Department Commerce and the National Association of Real Estate Boards to promote efficiency in the industrial growth of American cities is the object of a special committee which has just been appointed by the national association's industrial property division.

The committee will confer from time to time with officials of the division, organized a short time ago by Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover. The new department branch has special facilities for the study of industrial property and for assisting in the solving of industrial problems. Members of the special committee are William Merriken, Baltimore; Edgar C. Neal, Buffalo, and W. Malcolm Gray, Brooklyn.

Lawns

One of the best methods of smothering the weeds in your lawn is through excessive cutting of the grass. Two or three cuttings a week will aid the growth of the lawn and result in a very close stand of grass, which will strangle the weeds and drive them out. It also will help through keeping the weeds from running to seed. It is a mistake to let the grass grow too long before cutting, and many new lawns have been spoiled through this neglect. Cut often and give the lawn plenty of water.
