WATER BOND ISSUE IS DEFEATED HERE

"The battle is over" In the election held last Friday to determine whether or not the City of Hedley should issue bonds in the amount of $35,000 to provide a system of water works, the proposition was defeated by just nine votes—63 to 54.

The light vote was caused by the fact that the weather was very bad that day.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

FAR-OFF TOMORROW

THOSE happy-go-lucky individuals who manifest so little interest in the stirring events of life, which are buzzing like bees all around them, are often insensible to their lamentable delinquencies.

Occasionally, however, their consciousness flutters a moment, but, seemingly changing its benumbed mind, yawns, nods and falls asleep to dream.

But they are going to wake up and do something tomorrow.

They will yank the old world from its easy chair and wake its billion inhabitants with an earthquake.

Hitherto they have been shaping a brilliant course, not quite matured yet, or in a fit state to be presented in its entirety to their intimates, who have wept over them, prayed for them, and done their utmost to arouse them to action.

There is, however, no declaration on the part of these habituated drones of making undue haste.

The months and years stretch ahead in long rows on either side of tomorrow's path. Why fuss, fluster and worry?

Why should they bother themselves while youth is so full of delighted expectancies and time so abundant?

They are not seeking the dull, common roads in life, but the magnificent avenues that take direct to fame and wealth in the glare of sunlight and amid the plaudits of an admiring

The Why of Superstitions

By H. IRVING KING

POTS, PANS AND RAIN

THERE is a curious superstition sometimes met with in this country, and especially prevalent among the Pennsylvania Dutch, that if you scour out all the pots, pans and kettles in the house you will bring on rain. The underlying idea in this superstition would be hard to guess did we not find in existence almost exactly similar superstitions among the uncivilized Indians of Guiana.

Mother's Cook Book

Life without hope draws nectar in a sieve. And hope without an object cannot live.

DAINTIES FOR OCCASIONS

MOST of these dishes are too fine for daily food, but one likes to serve them occasionally.

Line pound baking powder boxes with vanilla ice cream. Fill with golden parfait and cover with buttered paper and then the tin cover. Pack in one part salt and two parts ice and let stand to ripen for three hours.

Remove the meat from a lobster. Cut into pieces for serving; season with salt and lemon juice. Mix aspic jelly; make with chicken stock with an equal amount of mayonnaise dressing; when very thick coat each piece of lobster, lay on a wire cake cooler, decorate with truffles cut into small pieces. Cover the decorations with more aspic and leave until cold. Serve on lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Boil together three-fourths of a cupful of sugar with one-fourth cupful of water until the sirup spins a long thread. Pour slowly over four egg yolks, beaten until thick, in a double boiler. Cook over hot water until the egg is cooked, stirring constantly; remove and beat until cold, adding a teaspoonful of vanilla, a little salt and when cold one and one-half cupfuls of stiffly beaten cream folded in at the last.

Scald three-fourths of a cupful of rich milk with two-thirds of a table-spoonful of gelatin. Mix two egg yolks beaten with four table-spoonfuls of sugar, a bit of salt, and pour over the world, swept suddenly off its feet by the daring work of genius.

So the years drift by, and in their drifting there comes sometimes to these disciples of the god of futurists a petrifying fear that makes them sick at heart.

While they are loitering, putting off until tomorrow, their plodding associates were improving their time, gaining respect and an assured competence for the bare days of winter, sighting its appearance in the naked branches of the trees and drifts of snowflakes.

Tomorrow is man's most terrible trouble-maker, luring by promises which are seldom redeemed and leaving him ragged and alone at the cross-roads, where youth and opportunity lie buried in the piled up heaps of dust and ill-spent years.

water being supposed to assist the rain-making through homeopathic, or imitative, magic.

"On the contrary," says Sir James Frazer, "during heavy rains the Indians of Guiana are careful not to wash the inside of their pots, lest by so doing they should cause the rain to fall still more heavily."

MEN YOU MAY MARRY

By E. R. PEYSER

Has a man like this proposed to you?

Symptoms: Fine brow, sandy hair, neatly, but not too neatly, brushed off head; tweedy clothes, soft collar—general thickness of garb—likes the country, has a "little place and gets off there whenever he can "slip the bunch" in his "two-room plus" in town. Always wants you and your ma to take his country place. He loves you and if you refuse him he'll always be your friend—he's loyal.

In Fact: He is a philosopher. Prescription for the bride-to-be:

Remember philosophy is a good thing. Remember it takes his patience as well as yours—this marriage game.

THE HAPPY MARRIAGE IS THAT IN WHICH TWO PHILOSOPHIES WED.

GO ON AND TALK

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I HAVE a way to judge a man. A simple way you always can; For I have found I do not need His lengthy history to read, His wealth I do not need to see, Examine all his pedigree.

No, when I want to know the kind Of man he is, I want to find His worth, his wisdom, and the way He lives his life from day to day, I do not ask his neighbors, nor With any microscope explore His past career; no, all I do is let him talk an hour or two; The while we visit, ride or walk, I let him just go on and talk.

A man as lots of things may pose, But there's a test that always shows The man he is, a test that tells, No matter what he says or sells, No matter what it is he claims, In spite of clothes, in spite of names If dark his soul or clean his heart, One test will tear the veil apart And tell mankind the man he is In spite of anything of his.

No, brother, I shall not inquire What wealth is yours, or whom you sire. There is a better way to know The nature of the man below, If carved of marble, made of chalk, The man you are; Go on and talk.

FARM STOCK

MANY DEVICES USED TO EXERCISE BULLS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Many a valuable bull is rendered useless by improper care and management, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The importance of exercise is often underestimated, and many bulls, after their value has been proved, are found to be sterile or slow breeders, due largely to close confinement and lack of activity. This is more true of dairy bulls, perhaps, because of their temperament, which makes them more difficult to handle.

Regular exercise helps materially to keep the bull in good condition. Any method that will make the sluggish bull take exercise regularly and without overwork is satisfactory. The main point is for him to get it. In some countries bulls are yoked like oxen and used to pull a plow, to haul manure, or to do other farm work. Where there is only one bull, special hitching arrangements for work on a cart may be made. Thus the bull not only gets his exercise but at the same time does useful farm work. A treadmill is sometimes used, but is not always satisfactory because the bull sometimes learns tricks for stopping the machine and needs to be watched.

A pen large and roomy enough for exercising may be all that is needed for some bulls, but others are lazy and need to be forced to exercise. A young bull turned in the lot with an older one will usually cause the older one to take his "dally dozen." The younger bull will usually be active enough to keep out of danger if the pen is large enough to prevent his being cornered. The owner should use his judgment as to the merits of this plan.

Bulls may be induced to exercise themselves with an empty barrel or keg by hunting or rolling it around the pen. The keg may be left on the ground or hung by a rope or chain long enough so the bull can butt it with his head. A block of wood, with the corners removed, will serve the same purpose. Some bulls spend hours playing with contrivances of this sort, while others pay little attention to them.

When an exercise pen is not available, it is a common practice to tie the bull to a ring which slides on a suspended wire or cable 75 to 100 feet long and high enough above the bull's head to prevent him from getting his feet over the lead chain, which should be 12 to 15 feet long. A revolving sweep will give the bull some exercise, if he will use it.

Many Animals Inspected During Year Just Ended

Slaughter of nearly 80,000,000 animals in establishments operating under federal meat inspection during the year ended June 30, 1924, is shown by figures recently compiled by the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. The exact total is 79,814,000, which is more than 6,000,000 more animals than were slaughtered during any previous fiscal year.

Hogs were the most numerous of all classes of stock, there being 54,416,481 of these animals slaughtered. This number, nearly three-fifths of the total, is also a new high mark.

Cattle slaughtered during this record-breaking year numbered 4,697,948, which is also the largest number on the records of the United States meat inspection service for any year. Cattle and sheep killed under the supervision of government inspectors numbered 9,188,652 and 11,505,001, respectively.

This record slaughter of animals indicates an increased total meat consumption in the United States, as would be expected with the growing population. It also shows what a comprehensive service the United States Department of Agriculture renders in the inspection of the nation's meat supply.

Live Stock Facts

The loss of little pigs will mean the loss of big profits.

The wise stockman recognizes that careful attention to little details pays well in the end.

Too much skim milk or too much thin slop tends to produce a "pot-bellied" type of pig. Middlings should not make up too much of the ration for either the sow or the pigs for it causes the pigs to scour.

Pure breeds of good quality do better in the feed lot than scrubs or common stock.

It is poor economy to stint the feeding of the suckling sow. The cheapest gains are made by the pig in feeding the sow liberally.

A canvass of live stock feeders over the entire country shows that pure breeds make about 40 per cent more product for their owners than scrubs, or common stock when fed in the same way.

DADDY THE DAIRY

CREAM SEPARATOR IMPORTANT MACHINE

To encourage dairymen to adopt methods that will make their cream a little more wholesome and the separator last a little longer, the following advice is given by W. R. Brown, professor of dairying, Manitoba Agricultural college.

(a) The manufacturer's instructions should be read with care and carried out to the limit. Better than anyone else, he understands the direct needs of the machine.

(b) Absolute firmness and levelness of the machine are essential. Failure to secure either means that the bowl will not run true, which defect will cause not only poor separation and loss of fat but injury to the finer adjustments of the spindle, and consequently shorter life of the machine.

(c) The separator must be kept thoroughly oiled with good separator oil, which can be obtained from the separator companies. The dirty oil should be drained out occasionally and a good cleaning with kerosene accomplished. This, in turn, should be drained off and a new supply of good oil added. This makes the machine run easier as well as lengthens its life.

(d) Start the machine slowly and increase the speed gradually until the proper speed, which is indicated on the handle of most separators, has been obtained. This should be maintained steadily throughout the time that the milk is being fed into the bowl. Any carelessness in turning will result, not only in an injury to the machine, but also in unnecessary loss of fat in the skim milk.

(e) Before the milk is turned in, run into the separator enough warm water (110 to 120 degrees F.) to fill the bowl. This prevents the milk from sticking to the bowl parts, thus making washing easier and lessening the loss of fat.

(f) Milk should be clean and warm when fed into the bowl. Every precaution should be taken to prevent dirt getting into the milk. It is wise, however, to make sure that no dirt is in it by using a fine strainer plus four pieces of cheesecloth before the milk is put into the supply can.

(g) Have the speed uniform before the milk is turned into the bowl. Open the tap to its full capacity. The float, which serves to regulate the discharge from the supply can, should always be used.

(h) Use a flush. About one quart of warm water or fresh skim milk should be run through the bowl after the whole milk. This flushes the bowl free of any cream that may be clogged in the bowl and thus lessens the loss of fat. Warm water, if used, tends to make washing of the interior parts of the bowl easier.

(i) Allow the speed of the machine to "die down" without applying any brake or pressure. The fact that the bowl runs a long time is proof that it runs smoothly and the machine turns easily. Any effort to stop the bowl is apt to shift the adjustment of the bowl or otherwise put it out of balance, with consequent loss in efficiency.

(j) Wash the separator immediately after use and exercise the strictest care in getting all parts of the tinware absolutely clean. It is conceded that improper cleaning of utensils, including pails, cans, separators, etc., is responsible for a big percentage of the bad flavor that develops in milk. Unless care is exercised, the separator offers a good breeding place for those germs that develop the bad flavors.

Stage Scrub-Bull Trial at Farm Bureau Meeting

The trial of a scrub bull in which every part of the proceedings—except of course, the prisoner—was taken by boys' and girls' club members, recently occurred at a farm bureau meeting in Lincoln county, Oregon. The event took place during a picnic and was the chief attraction of the day. The bull was found guilty. The 200 spectators rendered an additional verdict, unanimously, that the work of the boys and girls was extremely creditable.

In reporting the event to the United States Department of Agriculture J. R. Beck, county agent of Lincoln county, Oregon, described a scrub-bull exchange plan recently inaugurated. Under this plan the owners of pure bred cattle list their surplus bull crop to scrub-bull owners at a flat price of $30 each if taken by the time the bull calves are six weeks old. The purchaser must agree to butcher his scrub bulls as soon as the pure bred calf is old enough for service.

Cause of Lumpy Milk

The usual cause of a cow giving lumpy milk is the inflammation of that quarter of the udder from which the bad milk comes. Ordinarily this condition will not continue for a very long time. Incomplete milking is often the cause. The application of turpentine and lard, or camellia oil, will aid materially in restoring the udder to its normal condition. The administration of epsom salts is also advisable, as the bowels are apt to be sluggish.

THE BIG WASH

"We are so cordial," said one of the two washtubs.
"So cordial," said the second washtub.
"We welcome a big wash," said the first washtub.
"We have fun when there is a big wash," said the second washtub. "There is always a chance some of the water may spill over and that is an excitement."
"Then we like the soapy, foamy water."
"And we like all the activity and fun of having the clothes moved about as they come in to accept our invitation to join the Big Washing Party."
"Yes," agreed the first washtub, "that is true. But you know the one who washes the clothes says, every single week:
"Dear me, what a big wash."
"She doesn't seem to like it so much. But still we can't help being cordial, you know."
"Now and again she seems to be very busy over other things, and a week goes by when no washing is done at all."
"Then there is high excitement, and she says:
"My, my, what an enormous wash, what a simply huge wash."
"Well, you know we feel that as long as we did no entertaining the week before, we should surely make up for it the following week."
"Then when she is ironing, she says:
"Gracious, but I didn't realize the wash was as big as all this: It just

"Dear Me, What a Big Wash!"

seems as though I couldn't get through."
"And, the joke of it is, that as she is ironing and as she is saying this, the playful soiled clothes are being joined by other playful soiled clothes for the next week's wash."
"It is a great joke."
"A great joke," said the second washtub.
And the two washtubs then sang their washtub song:

Washtub one,
Washtub two,
Oh, what splendid
Work we do.
We keep the clothes
So nice and clean,
We are always cordial,
We're never mean.

Washtub one,
Washtub two,
Soapy washtubs,
Clothes love you.
They come along
And splashily sing
With you this song
Where Soap is King.

They also know
That to see you
Dressing up
They needn't do.
They come along
Just as they are,
With dirt and spots
From near and far.

But you don't mind
How dirty they seem,
You welcome them
With your soap-sud cream.
Oh, washtub one
And washtub two,
You will always
Always do.

The two washtubs did not sing now. They took a little rest, for soon another big wash would be coming along and the washtubs were going to be fresh and ready for their party.

And no matter what anyone said about the big wash, the two washtubs liked it, for what would they do with themselves if there weren't big washes?

Washtubs would have little fun in life if clothes were always clean!

The name of Phyllis Bruce came to him with almost a shock. He had been so occupied with his farm and with Zen that he had thought but little of her of late. As he turned the matter over in his mind now he felt that he had used Phyllis rather shabbily. Grant lit a cigar and sat down to smoke and think. The matter of Phyllis needed prompt settlement. It afforded a means to burn his bridges behind him, and Grant felt that it would be just as well to cut off all possibility of retreat. Fortunately the situation was one that could be explained—to Phyllis.

He had told himself, back in those days in the East, that it would not be fair to marry Phyllis Bruce while his heart was another's. He had believed that then; now he knew the real reason was that he had allowed himself to hope, against all reason, that Zen Transley might yet be his. He had harbored an unworthy desire, and called it a virtue. Well—the die was cast. He had definitely given Zen up. He would tell Phyllis everything. That is, everything she needed to know.

It would be best to settle it at once—the sooner the better. He went to his desk and took out writing paper. He addressed a note to Phyllis, pondered a minute in a great hush in the storm, and wrote:

"I am sure now. May I come? Denison."

This done he turned to the telephone, hurrying as one who fears for the duration of his good resolutions. He gave the number of Linder's rooms in town; it was likely Linder had remained in town, but it was a question whether the telephone bell would wake him. He had recollections of Linder as a sound sleeper. But even as this possibility entered his mind he heard Linder's phlegmatic voice in his ear.

"Oh, Linder! I'm so glad I got you. I've a message I will deliver to Miss Bruce. . . Linder? . . . Linder!"

There was no answer. Nothing but a hollow empty sound on the wire, as though it led merely into the universe in general. He tried to call the operator, but without success. The wire was down.

He turned from it with a sense of acute impatience. Was this an omen of obstacles to bar him now from Phyllis Bruce?

CHAPTER XVII

Suddenly came a quick knock at the door; the handle turned, and a drenched, hatless figure, with disheveled, wet hair, and white, drawn face burst in upon him. It was Zen Transley.

than in this moment of confession and of high resolve.

"I am so glad," she repeated, "for your sake—and for my own. Now, again, you are really the Man-on-the-Hill. We have been in the valley of late. You can go ahead now with your high plans, with your Big Idea. You will marry Miss Bruce, and forget."

"I shall remember with chastened memory, but I shall never forget," he said at length. "I shall never forget Zen of the Y. D. And you—what will you do?"

"I have the boy. I did not realize how much I had until tonight. Suddenly it came upon me that he was everything. You won't understand, Denison, but as we grow older our hearts wrap up around our children with a love quite different from that which expresses itself in marriage. This love gives—gives—lavishly, unselfishly, asking nothing in return."

"I think I understand," he said again. "I think I do."

They turned their eyes to the mountains, and as they looked the first shafts of sunlight fell on the white peaks and set them dazzling like mighty diamond-points against the blue bosom of the West.

"It is morning on the mountains—and on you?" Grant exclaimed. "Zen, you are very, very beautiful." He raised her hand and pressed her fingers to his lips.

As they stood watching the sunlight pour into the valley a sharp knock sounded on the door. "Come," said Denison, and the next moment it swung open and Phyllis Bruce entered, followed immediately by Linder. A question leapt into her eyes at the remarkable situation which greeted them, and she paused in embarrassment.

"Phyllis!" Grant exclaimed. "You here!"

"It would seem that I was not expected."

"It is all very simple" Grant explained, with a laugh. "Little Willie Transley was my guest overnight. On account of the storm his mother became alarmed, and drove out from the city early this morning for him. Mrs. Transley, let me introduce Miss Bruce—Phyllis Bruce, of whom I have told you."

Zen's cordial handshake did more to reassure Phyllis than any amount of explanations, and Linder's timely observation that he knew Wilson was there and was wondering about him himself had valuable corroborative effect.

"But now—your explanations?" said Grant. "How comes it, Linder?"

"Simple enough, from our side. When I got your telephone call all I could catch was the fact that you were mighty glad to get me, and had some urgent message for Miss Bruce. Then the connection broke."

"I see. And you, of course, assured Miss Bruce that I was being murdered, or meeting some such happy and effective ending, out here in the wilderness?"

"Not exactly that, but I reported what I could, and Miss Bruce insisted upon coming out at once. The roads were dreadful, but we had daylight. Also, we have a trophy."

Linder went out and returned in a moment with a sadly bedraggled hat.

"My poor hat!" Zen exclaimed. "I lost it on the way."

"It is the best kind of evidence that you had just recently come over the road," said Linder, significantly.

"I think no more evidence need be called," said Phyllis. "May I lay off my things?"

"Certainly—certainly," Grant apologized. "But I must introduce one more exhibit." He handed her the note he had written during the night. "That is the message I wanted Linder to rush to you," he said, and as she read it he saw the color deepen in her cheeks.

"I'm going to make breakfast, Mr. Grant," Zen announced, with a sudden burst of energy. "Everybody keep out of the kitchen."

"Guess I'll feed up for you this morning, old chap," said Linder, knowingly. At the door he glanced back. "I think Miss Bruce has something to say to you," he added, mysteriously.

They were alone—Phyllis and Denison. He caught her hand in his and led her to the French windows. The sun was filling the valley with a flood of silver, and there was sunshine, too, in the heart of Denison Grant. He had drunk his cup of renunciation, but he had not dreamed that at the bottom could lie a pearl so beautiful.

"Phyllis—Phyllis," he breathed. He reached out to take her in his arms, but she held him gently away; when he looked in her eyes they shone back at him through tears.

"Oh, Denny, you mustn't! I'm so sorry. You know what you have been to me. But you were so long, so long! Yesterday I promised Linder."

In the days that followed Denison Grant drank his cup of renunciation anew. He worked his fields early and late; he noted the tiny spirals of smoke ascending like incense from Zen's cottage; but he went no nearer the Transley home than the end of his furrow. He had handed back Transley's wife from the edge of the abyss; he had made up his mind; that much was settled.

The battle that raged within him now centered about Linder and Phyllis Bruce. When he had recovered from the first shock of Phyllis' revelation and was able to think sanely he was sure that her heart might still be his if he went after it—and took it. It was another case of a man being worth his salt. But Linder was not Transley. He had spared Transley; could he be less generous with Linder? And what of Phyllis? Would she be happy with Linder?

Then Truth stood up before him in the furrow, as he plowed its slow length one hazy summer afternoon, and called him a hypocrite. He heard the voice as clearly as the champing of his horses on their bits. "Hypocrite!" cried Truth to him. "You make a great virtue of your generosity to Linder. Easy generosity that, while you continue to love—Zen Transley!"

Down by the river a spiral of smoke wound upwards from the Transley chimney, and even as Grant looked he saw an automobile trailing dust about the shoulder of his hill. It was Transley returning to his home.

Transley's wife had fortified her good resolutions behind an outburst of activity.

But there were times when the craving to be quite alone, where she could re-survey her life and bask for a moment in the luxury of old imaginings, became irresistible. On such occasions she would follow the road that skirted the cliffs of the river bank to a point where it turned in the basin of a now deserted quarry. The old quarry lay on the edge of the hills like a cup from which a side had broken and fallen into the river which boiled in a green foam a hundred feet below. The only access to this cup was by the road, no longer frequented, which Zen had chosen for her solitary rambles. Once inside the quarry she was isolated from the world; here her vision could sweep the sloping bluffs across the valley, or the circle of blue sky above, and her thoughts could rove at will without prospect of being interrupted. The road by which she entered the cup was the road by which any intruder must enter it. It was also, as Zen was suddenly to discover, the only road by which one could escape.

It was upon the afternoon when Truth confronted Denison Grant in his furrow that Zen made that discovery. Her self-imposed tasks completed for the day, she scoured the fruit stains from her hands, changed her frock, and took the now familiar trail up to the quarry. "I'll be back in an hour," she told Sarah; "I'm going to the quarry just to loaf and lave my soul." The quotation was lost upon Sarah, who took refuge in her gift of silence.

At a point where the road rose high enough to command a view of the surrounding valley she stopped and swung a slow, half-giddy glance to the southward. There, sure enough, was the plow team of Denison Grant, warping its slow shuttle back and forth across the brown prairie. For a long minute she fed her eyes and her heart; then resumed her slow course to the quarry.

Inside the great cup she was conscious of a sense of security.

Zen seated herself in a half-reclining position on a great slab of rock and fell into a day-dream, watching the while with unseeing eyes the procession of white clouds which drove across the disc of blue sky above her. Perhaps it was because of the position which she had taken, or her unconscious study of the sky, that she caught no hint of the presence of a man at the point where the road entered the quarry. From an ambush of willow scrub he had seen her stop and survey the fields where Denison Grant was at work, and had followed her stealthily down the trail which led to her trap. Now he had her.

"How do, 'em?" he said, suddenly stepping into the open. "Ain't you glad to see me?"

The girl sprang to her feet and turned startled eyes toward the road—the only exit from this stone dungeon.

"Who are you? What do you want? Go away! I don't know you at all!"

The offensive smile broadened. "That is where I have the advantage of you, Mrs. Transley. I have changed, I admit, but you—you are as beautiful as ever."

"How dare you speak to me in such a way! You have learned my name, it is true, but I do not know you at all. Now will you go, or must I call my husband to throw you into the river?"

"That would be some shout, seeing that your husband isn't at home, and hasn't been for two weeks. You see, I may be a stranger, but I know some things. And even if he was at home, wouldn't you be more likely to call Denison Grant?"

The man had gradually advanced, but still kept himself well between Zen and her only avenue of escape.

"Who are you?" she demanded again. "Why do you follow me here?"

"An old friend, Zen; just an old friend, come to collect an old account. Pay up quietly and there'll be no trouble, but raise a fuss and I'll throw you into the river. That wouldn't leave much evidence, would it? It's wonderful how a person who has been drowned disappears and is soon forgotten."

Zen's eyes had gone large and her limbs were shaking. "Drazk!" she exclaimed.

"Right enough; your old friend, George Drazk." He came up close to her and extended his hand. "Ain't you goin' to shake hands with your old friend, Zen?" he smirked before her.

"You were no friend of mine—never," she flared back, while her brain was hunting wildly for some plan of escape. "I thought I had killed you. And I was sorry I had done it. Now I'm sorry I didn't."

"Well, now, Zen, that's too bad. I was willin' to forgive you, and hopin' we'd be friends. Don't you think it would be better to be friendly-like, Zen?"

There was a menace under his oily words that gripped her in terror. She decided to play for time. Perhaps Sarah—perhaps Denny— if only Denison Grant would come!

"Sit down, George, and tell me about it," she said. "I suppose I owe you an apology. Tell me how you got away, and where you have been all this time."

"That's better. We're goin' to be good friends, eh, Zen? The best of friends, eh, Zen? You and George 'll just sit down and talk it over."

She led him to the rock where she had been seated, and let him sit down beside her. He seized one of her hands in his; she would have withdrawn it, but he held it tighter.

"No, we're goin' to be good friends," he reminded her. "The best of friends—"

"Yes, but first tell me about yourself. How did you get out of the river that day?"

"Oh, I drifted ashore. Can't kill George Drazk. I was pretty full of water, and I lay on the bank for quite a while, but I came around in time. Then I seen what had happened about the fire, and I reckoned this was a good time to make my getaway. So I beat it right out of the country, and nobody bothered followin'."

"Yes, yes, go on," she urged, eager to keep him absorbed in his story. "That was very clever of you. And then what did you do—after you got out of the country?"

"Got a job. No trouble for George Drazk to get a job. Then when the war came I tried to get on, but somehow they wouldn't have me. Said I'd be more useful at home. So I stayed on and had some pretty good jobs and some pretty nice girls, Zen, but I never got you quite out of my head and I kept sayin' to myself, 'Some-time I'll go back and make it up with Zen.' And here I am. Ain't you glad, Zen?"

"Yes—in a way I am." (Oh, will nobody ever come?) "But—how did you find me? You knew I've been married since then?"

Living in the Dark

Pit ponies are not the only creatures that live in coal mines, seldom seeing the light of day. Miners are often troubled with rats, mice, flies, and even frogs and toads.

The presence of mice spells danger. They have been known to gnaw cables, causing electric wires to fuse and vapor to be exploded in gassy pits. Their food consists of scraps from the miners' meals, and they have a strange liking for oil, which they lick from the lubricated parts of machinery in the mine. Whatever their diet, however, the mice never grow very big, because the entire absence of light has a dwarfing effect.

Flies seem to thrive underground, and are a great nuisance to the miners, especially at mealtimes. Other minute forms of insect life inhabit the mines explain why frogs and toads are frequently found there, looking fit and well-fed.

In measuring land located in that part of the South once under French rule it was common practice to express fractions of an inch in eighths, not in tenths as now is usual.

HOW GREAT MEN MAKE LOVE

AS REVEALED BY THEIR LOVE LETTERS

By JOSEPH KAYE

(© by Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

HENRY GEORGE AND ANNIE FOX

IF EVER a man knew what the very dregs of poverty were that man was Henry George, the founder of the single tax. To what depths a man so intellectual and gifted as George was could be driven can be seen from the following entry in his diary, made at a time when he was living in San Francisco trying to make a living through printing jobs, and when his second child had just been born:

"I walked along the street and made up my mind to get money from the first man whose appearance might indicate that he had it to give. I stopped a man—a stranger—and told him that I wanted $5. He asked me what I wanted it for. I told him that my wife was confined and that I had nothing to give her to eat. He gave me the money. If he had not, I think I was desperate enough to kill him."

And the bravery of the young wife who had to stand this! To her great credit it is to be recorded that she bore her trials with cheerfulness and lived the life of a gypsy, with no complaint to make her husband's lot harder than it already was.

In this darkest moment of Henry George's life his wife was a beacon which upheld and guided him safely to the port of better times. And a note which he sent to his wife during this period shows how greatly he treasured her:

"Times seem pretty dull here but I think I can get along. Anyhow, we'll try. I stayed at the 'What Cheer House' last night. My darling I don't know how much I love you until I am separated from you. I don't believe I could live without you. And the dear little fellow—how I love him!"

Henry George was born in Philadelphia in 1839 and had a varied career until he came to his life-work. At fourteen he left school and worked for a time in a store. Then he shipped as a foremast boy on a ship bound for Australia. Returning to America he learned printing and the desire for traveling seized him again he went on a U. S. lightship and worked his way to California.

Hearing of gold being struck in British Columbia, Canada, he turned his attention next to prospecting in that country but returned to California and engaged variously as a printer, reporter and editor in coast cities.

His journalistic success was meager because of his uncompromising stand against monopolies. From this period on, however, he began to develop his theories of the single tax and a well-paid position in the California state civil service being obtained for him he had enough leisure to write his celebrated book, "Progress and Poverty," which brought him the recognition of the world as an economist.

George ran twice for mayor of New York City. The first time he was defeated and the second race, entered into against the advice of his doctor, resulted fatally for him. Already in a weakened condition, the campaign requirements proved too strenuous for him, and, only four days before the election he died.

Among the most famous of George's followers was the Russian writer and reformer, Tolstoy.

MICHELANGELO AND VITTORIA COLONNA

UNTIL almost his allotted three score years and ten had passed Michelangelo held aloof from the intimate society of women. His was a lofty genius and few women could climb up to his pinnacle. Or perhaps he did not let them.

At sixty-three he met Vittoria Colonna and from then on until he died he worshiped her. Colonna was the widow of the marquis of Pescara and lived in magnificent state in a palace on a bewitching island called Ischia. She adored her husband and when he died he left a void in her heart which was so deep that only a man of the intellect and genius of a Michelangelo could fill.

Below is one of the poetical addresses the artist made to his ideal:

Better plea, Love cannot have than that, in loving thee. Glory to that eternal peace is paid. Who such a divinity to thee imparis As halloes and makes fine all gentils hearts. His hope is treacherous only whose love dies. With beauty which is varying every hour. But in chaste hearts, uninfluenced by the power Of outward changes, there blooms a deathless flower. That breathes on earth the air of Paradise. Michelangelo painted only two portraits in his life. One of these was of Vittoria Colonna. The portrait shows the features of a woman possessing more intellectual power than beauty.

Simplicity

Cultivate simplicity, Coleridge, or rather, I should say, banish elaborateness; for simplicity springs spontaneously from the heart, and carries into daylight its own modest buds, and genuine, sweet and clear flowers of expression; I allow no hotbeds in the gardens of Parnassus.—Charles Lamb.

Relieved of Catarrh Due to La Grippe

Thanks To PE-RU-NA

Mrs. Laura Berberick, over 70 years of age, 1205 Willow Ave., Hoboken, N. J., writes: "A severe attack of La Grippe left me with a hoarseness and slime in the head and throat. I had chronic catarrh. It grew worse. I could not lie down or sleep at night. I was always bothered by the slime, pain in the back and a terrible headache every morning.

Finally I bought a bottle of Pe-ru-na which was of great benefit. It gave me blood and strength. I have no pains in head or back, nor noises in the head. The slime has gone and I can sleep. My weight has increased. I am cheerful and happy, thanks to Pe-ru-na, which I shall always keep in the house and recommend to my friends."

For every form of catarrh Pe-ru-na meets the need, Coughs, Colds, Nasal Catarrh, Indigestion, Bowel disorders are all forms of catarrh.

When You Catch Cold Rub on Musterole

Musterole is easy to apply and it gets in its good work right away. Often it prevents a cold from turning into "flu" or pneumonia. Just apply Musterole with the fingers. It does all the good work of grandmother's mustard plaster without the blister.

Musterole is a clean, white ointment, made of oil of mustard and other home simples. It is recommended by many doctors and nurses. Try Musterole for sore throat, cold on the chest, rheumatism, lumbago, pleurisy, stiff neck, bronchitis, asthma, neuralgia, congestion, pains and aches of the back and joints, sprains, sore muscles, bruises, chilblains, frosted feet—colds of all sorts.

To Mothers: Musterole is now made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole. 35c and 65c, jars and tubes; hospital size, $3.00.

How quickly that rash disappeared!

THOUSANDS of users have wondered at the quickness of the action of Resinol Ointment and Soap. The answer is that it is not a surface treatment, but one that reaches the depths of the pores and attacks the source of the disorder, starting the healing right.

The first touch relieves the itching, burning and soreness and a few days' persistent use rarely fails to clear away the trouble.

When the skin is once restored to its normal condition, the daily use of Resinol Soap is generally sufficient to keep it healthy. Ideal for the complexion—unsurpassed for the bath and shampoo. Ask your druggist what he knows about the Resinol products.

LATEST ENSEMBLE COSTUME; TRIM AND SERVICEABLE

ACCORDING to eye-witnesses of the mode in all fashion centers the ensemble costume is the most important new feature in modes for fall and winter. It entered the company of formal suits and costumes in Paris and New York almost simultaneously and in no time became the dominant style note among them. It is developed as a one-piece frock with long coat to match or as skirt and overblouse, with long coat, and the coats with these suits are expected to do extra and separate service.

Fur fabrics prove themselves especially well adapted to dignified en-her slenderness. Note that the up-to-date young lady wearing it arranges her long strand of pearls in a mode, first around her throat and then knotted at the front.

When the younger set is all dressed up it finds itself in frocks and coats that reflect the fashions of grownups, but styles are modified and delightfully adapted to little wearers. For them there is greater freedom in the use of high colors. It appears that the more diminutive the garment, the more vivid the cloth that makes it or the touches of color that brighten it.

New Version of Ensemble Costume.

semble suits, with caracul and broad-tail, in black and dark brown, the favorites. They provide the coat, which is generally collarless with genuine fur, and make bands for adorning the one-piece dress, which is usually of crepe de chine, georgette or corded silk. Coats of these fur fabrics are very rich and just as durable and are interlined to make them warm. They may be worn with anything.

Suede de laine, fawn skin, suede velours and other new wool materials give variety to the ensemble suit and while black and dark brown are very handsome in them, other colors look just as well. They are shown in oxford and mole gray, green and bronze tones.

But, of course, in these frivolous days the ensemble suit could not stand

The charm of coats and frocks for the younger generation is sufficient to make one envious, but "trim and serviceable" are the words that spell success in their everyday, workaday clothes. There is a wide range of popular woolen frocks that are pretty and interesting, as well as "trim and serviceable," and the same is true of coats. For frocks, crepe, flannel, serge, twills, tweeds and velveteen are among the important fabrics that furnish plenty of variety. The favored colors are brown, blue, henna, tan and green. Pippings in high colors and bright buttons share popularity with applique and embroidery for trimmings.

In coats many sports materials are used; also new suede-finished fabrics, on its dignity always and now comes along an enticing and youthful version of it with a short jacket as shown in the picture. Here a skirt, quite plain and rather short becomes the background of a graceful overblouse which merges into long sash ends. It is of printed silk with round neck and very long sleeves which extend over the hand. The same silk lines the short, flowing jacket with three-quarter-length sleeves. This ensemble is something quite new and tremendously chic and youthful. It is calculated to make the slim young woman rejoice in bolivia, chinchilla, and flamingo cloth. A typical coat of the last mentioned fabric is shown in the picture, in tan, with three decorative buttons serving to fasten it. Many little girls' coats have fur collars and trimmings similar to those on grownup models, and many of them are double-breasted. Rabbit fur, dyed to match, is much used in the basket-weave coats in fur colors, and sometimes embroidery in several colors gives them a lively touch.

"Chinook Wind"

This is a name given to a strong, warm wind and dry south or west wind descending the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains into Montana and Wyoming, evaporating or melting the snow and bringing a great relief in cold weather. The name was probably given it because it blew from the territory occupied by the Chinook Indians.

Wave Catches Crowd

Hundreds of persons at Southsea beach, England, were thoroughly drenched when a huge wave produced by the passing of two big transatlantic liners swept upon the shore. The Berengaria and the Majestic were passing each other off the Isle of Wight and the wash set up by their combined motion rolled like a tidal wave on the lower end of the beach.

"O Happy Day" sang the laundress as she hung the snowy wash on the line. It was a "happy day" because she used Red Cross Ball Blue.—Advertisement.
