What programs hold the farmer's interest? What does his wise like? What time of day finds the greatest farm audience listening a? Surveys made by two independent Surveys made by two ind organizations have resulted in the tabulation of certain definite information concerning radio on the farm. Answering the first question, WLS of Chicago, says that one of every five farm homes in the United States contains a radio set. This conclusion is based on a survey of more than 18,000 rural homes. Twenty-five per cent of the farmers prefer music to any other program, while 24 per cent listen in regularly to get the daily weather ." and market reports, thus taking advantage of the more practical side of radio. This is found to b especially true, the survey showed, among col belt farmers in Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, India and Ohio, where 42 per cent reported that the rely almost entirely on weather and market if formation which the radio is able to bring to the East and west of the Mississippi river, down the cotton country, only 3 per cent view this as a important radio feature.

Turning now to a consideration of radio progress, we find that the quality of speech or music

as broadcast by an up-to-date station and reproduced by a modern receiving set is many times better than the best of three or four years ago.

But despite this, many persons are dissatisfied with radio because there is such a wide difference between speech or music as we hear it in the theater and as it emerges from the loud speaker.

It lacks color, vitality and fine shading. Its quality is hard and metallic. Two explanations for this are reviewed by Charles Magee Adams in the

New York Herald-Tribune. The first, he says, is the limitations of receivers and transmitters.

Even the most up-to-date apparatus cannot catch or reproduce the overtones, both lower and higher in the scale, which determine quality and character in sounds. In addition, Adams points out that broadcasting as it is now carried on is like listening with one ear. Broadcasting of the usual

tain extent is responsible. We have five major senses-sight, hearing, touch, taste and smell--generally thought of as distinct functions operating altogether independently of each other. This is wholly natural. Each has a highly specialized purpose to perform, and, as equipment, an individual set of end organs for converting received impressions into nerve pulses, nerves for transmitting these, and brain aters for converting them into sensations. Each ensation as it is finally registered is distinct from every other, and the fact that these five faculties are even remotely co-ordinated perhaps never Carburetor Gets Out of Adjustment and Then Mischief Is Done.

"How did your car take fire?" "I don't know. I heard it pop back at the carbureton and suddenly discovered that it was on fite." "What made it backfire in the carburetor?" "I don't know. We can't find out because the car is a total loss." This is no imaginary conversation because cars have burned in the past and will again in the future due to backfiring in the carburetor.

Cause Is Lean Mixture.

The most frequent cause is a lean mixture. This means more air in the mixture than usual. The carburetor gets out of adjustment in some way and the mischief is done. A lean mixture is slow-burning. It burns all during the power stroke, all during the exhaust stroke, and it is still burning when the inlet valve opens, admitting the fresh mixture. This takes fire and the flame runs back to the carburetor. If there is any gasoline dripping from the carburetor a heavy vapor is formed, extending under the engine, where it is held by the mud pan. The flame spreads under the engine and soon reaches the tank, melting the connections and releasing a flood of gasoline.

Lean mixture may be due to derangement of the carburetor or a leaky inlet manifold. Spray nozzle too far closed, auxiliary air valve spring too weak or valve stuck open or clogged fuel line are a few carburetor causes. A leaky inlet manifold may be detected by running the engine and injecting oil around the joints. Oil will be sucked in at the leak where the bolts must be tightened or a new gasket installed in place of the leaky one.

Inlet Valve Defects.

We now come to troubles of the inlet valve, which indeed are very rare. The valve lifter may be out of adjustment, leaving no clearance, or actually pushing the valve off its seat. If there is little or no clearance the valve will hold compression when the engine is cold, but will leak when the engine warms up, due to lengthening of valve stem, and, of course, popping in the carburetor occurs immediately. Set the clearance at about two thicknesses of newspaper." Occasionally this valve may become stuck, so that it cannot close. This may be seen from the outside, as there will be an unusually large space between the valve stem and lifter. Electrical troubles now engage our attention. With a single coil and distributer system such as used on the majority of cars there would be some distributer trouble or a short so much as occurs to us till a cold brings home circuit of the distributer wires. See and wine all dust from distributer head. If you know how to open the distributer you should wipe out the dipped in gasoline. This will remove all accumulations of dust, which will cause short circuit if allowed to remain.

The county agent in Walsh county, North Dakota, has found a solution for a problem that has perplexed many a motherwhat to do with the baby when the family is taking an automobile ride. He describes his apparatus as follows:

Hammock for Baby

Good Way to Sling

"Take two pieces of threeeighth-inch rope, each long enough to reach from one top bow around back of the seat to the other. Into these splice two short pieces to make a rectangle about a foot wide and nearly as long as the car body is wide. Leave ends of rope at the four corners to tie to the four bows on the top.

"Over this rectangle fit a denim basket about two feet long. This will make a very satisfactory hammock and one that can be used at any time of ; the year. The baby carried in it will be happier than in the mother's lap and the mother will have a pleasant trip."

Adjustable Arm Support Rests Driver of Motor

Most drivers of closed-model cars rest the left elbow on the sash sill to lessen the fatigue incidental to long-distance driving. However, the sill is usually located just a little too high, and is too hard for comfort, and the adjustable padded arm rest shown in the drawing will be found much better. It is made of a plece of sheet metal, bent as shown, with a pad top and a slot in the support. A sheet-metal bracket attached to the side of the body holds a bolt, which keeps the arm rest in "position by turning down the wing-nut on the slotted part of the rest. This arrangement allows the rest to be raised or lowered to suit the driver .-- G. A. Luers, Washington, D. C., in Popular Mechanics Magazine.

value of his radio. Only 16 per cent are interested in the farm schools and lectures offered by universities and other agricultural organizations. Relatively few radios are in use in the cotton states west of the Mississippi, Texas, Oklahoma, Mississippi and Louisiana, but 26 per cent of al of them are tuned in regularly to the educational programs. Twenty-three per cent of the when belt and 20 per cent of the corn-belt farmers al going to school regularly via the radio. Th three sections are served by stations which cialize in programs for farm folk.

Music are favored by 31 per cent, lecture 8 per cent, talks on gardens and poultry. pecially interesting to 1 per cent, while 3 per enjoy their radio most for the church servig sacred music it brings to them.

New England housewives were by far the maenthusiastic group for the home-makers' hom with its suggestions on economics and new recipes. Corn-belt farm women run them a close second. due perhaps to the fact that these sections are close to stations which offer programs of prime interest to rural homes.

Women on farms in the tobacco lands, Kentucky and Virginia, seem to prefer music, and they likewise are the most enthusiastic about church and religious programs. Women in the cotton-growing states west of the Mississippi enjoy the serious, educational programs; 37 per cent will always "fish" around in the ether after a lecture from distant stations.

But farm folk, on the whole, are not prone to be fussy about the kind of entertainment they can get over the air; 18 per cent of the men and 16 per cent of their wives refuse to state a preference, because they like it all so well.

The most radios are found in the New England states, New York and Pennsylvania, where they have invaded 38 per cent of the homes. The central corn belt, Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, runs a close second with 33 per cent. But the eastern cotton states should be the radio salesman's paradise, for radio has found its way into only 3 per cent of the homes, according to the survey of WLS.

The survey covers 18,456 typical American farm homes in 42 states, and was gathered by some twelve hundred scouts or observers, each of whom studied carefully the conditions in a small group of homes in her own neighborhood. The survey is being made in an effort to help the farm woman herself to find out how her home, her working conditions, her chances for social life and health protection for her families compare with those of women in other walks of life, Radio is changing the marketing methods of entire groups of farmers, according to the survey made by the National Farm Radio council.

Importance of radio in the marketing of farm cts is illustrated in the National Farm Rancil survey by reports from 43 states, more 46 per cent of the replies giving specific ex-es of cash savings effected by the use of nd practically every report indicated the ordinated. The functions of all are bound up one with another many times more intimately than inside occasionally, using a cloth owners, we suspect, and most conspicuous of all sight and s a ufflity hearing. think of

It is altogether logical that these two should be. They handle by far the greater bulk of all impressions we receive, and were they not coordinated their combined efficiency would be far less than it now is. But it is the effect of this co-ordination, particularly on hearing, with which we are concerned, and this is astonishing, even amusing sometimes.

For example: A quartet appearing on a small town chautauqua program found itself forced to present its afternoon concert in street clothes because the trunks containing their costumes had been delayed in shipment. The response of the audience was only perfunctory. By the time the evening program was presented, however, their trunks had arrived, and, appearing in costume, the quartet received an emphatically enthusiastic ovation. Their singing was no better than it had been in the afternoon. If anything, that in the afternoon was somewhat the better because they were trying harder. The audience merely responded, without thinking, to better appearance.

It is difficult to appreciate just how far this co-ordination can be carried. Violinists, to cite another example, in playing selections with planissimo endings, often raise the bow clear of the strings when they have reached the point where they cannot play more softly and go on drawing it back and forth. The audience continues to hear something as long as the bow is seen to move and the violinist receives credit for a masterful ending he did not actually play.

It will be seen, then, that under most conditions co-ordination makes sight a very real and practical part of hearing. But let us consider the situation this co-ordination faces in the case of listening in on broadcast speech or music. Here there are no costumes or movements of performers to be seen-nothing visible which proceeds concomitantly with or as part of the music and its setting-only the unchanging loud speaker and the music issuing from it. Vastly changed conditions are accordingly confronted by, say, a habitual concert goer who enjoys particularly the Rachmaninoff preludes. He has been accustomed to bearing them in a spacious concert hall, lights turned low except on the stage, revealing a shimmering plano, the artist seated at it, hands and arms in swift, sure movement, back erect, head intent, the faint rustle of programs nearby, a whispered comment on some passage, faces and shirtfronts standing out in the dimness, the thunder of applause as the number is finished. Of what does this prelude consist by radio? The same notes, played with the same skilled artistry, but with only the lights of a living room revealing the cone or horn of a loud speaker for visual background.

It is small wonder they that the concert goer protests in dismay that this is not the same music he heard in the auditorium. That radio has left something out. He is right. Radio has left something out-the visual component to which he has so long been accustomed, not to mention the usual background of concert hall sounds

Sticker on Windshields One Cause of Accidents

Windshield stickers are made the object of the latest campaign conducted by the accident prevention department of the Chicago Motor club. "Chambers of commerce and trail associations, especially in the West, induce tourists to plaster stickers all over their windshields with the result that visibility is decreased and the driver is likely to cause an accident. The collecting of stickers from various sources has become a fad, and should be discouraged. Organizations using this form of advertising should discontinue it for the sake of safety."

The bulletin also condenms the use of stickers on rear windows, for the reason that these stickers disconcert the drivers following, and because unobstructed rear vision is needed by the driver in backing.

Loose, demountable rims cause a lot of tire trouble, if not watched carefully. When one of the wedges becomes loose, the rim starts "working" and gradually the other wedges become loose. A "creeping" rim is the result and the valve stem bears the whole strain until it is finally pulled off.

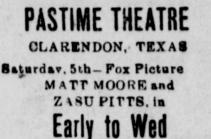

Furthermore, those wedges are often tightened up unevenly. This ends in what is referred to as a "wobbly" tire and the tread is worn down prematurely. At other times, motorists pound both the rim and the tire with a hammer to get the rim off or on. The pounding of the rim doesn't do any particular harm, unless it bends the rim, but every blow on the tire may cause a fabric break, and that is very serious.

Rusty rims are dangerous, because they corrode tubes, make it hard to change tires and sometimes result in freezing on the tire. Rims should be cleaned at least once every six months. Ordinary paint sometimes placed on the rims after the cleaning process is not good practice, inasmuch as the heat generated by the tires melts the paint and the tire sticks to the rim.

R. M. Rapelian and T. C. Copson of London have arrived in this country bringing with them their 7 horse power "Austin" motor car. It is claimed that the motor car will travel 50 miles on a gallon of gas and is capable of a speed of 80 miles per hour. The car carries only 5 gallons of gasoline and is reputed to be the smallest two-passenger car in the world.

PROBABLY very few people n this country knew there was another revolution in progress in Nicaragua. Well, there is, and it has gone so far that the Nicaraguan government has declared a state of war. This seems an unwise step for it virtually recognizes the rebels as belligerents and gives them the privilege of obtaining arms and munitions from neutral countries. The movement is led by Luis Beltram Sandoval and Elizeo Duarte. They have captured Bluefields and other towns and at last accounts were in control of the Rio Grande valley, which is the great banana belt. Prime Minister Baldwin told the house of commons that "the general strike threatens the existence of the ordered government and comes nearer to a proclamation of civil war than we have known for hundreds of years." This would appear to be true : but the assertion of labor leaders and of Lloyd George, that not 90 per cent of organized labor in Great Britain would vote for a revolution, seems equally true, because almost all the workers are of British nationality and at heart loyal to their country. At this writing there are rumors afloat in London that some sort of a compromise will soon be reached. It is difficult to understand how this can be, since the government cannot and will not recede from its position that the strike must be called off before negotiations can be reopened, and the trades union congress still has plenty of funds and claims that the workers' response to the strike call exceeded investigation of impeachment charges all expectations.

He strays into the trapping grounds of Pierrot and Nepeese. Nepeese wounds Baree with a rifle, but he escapes.

The wings made a great tumuit about Baree, but they did not hurt him. He buried his fangs deeper. His snarls rose more fiercely as he got the taste of Oohoomisew's blood, and through him there surged more hotly the desire to kill this monster of the night, as though in the death of this creature he had the opportunity of avenging himself for all the hurts and hardships that had befallen him since he lost his mother.

Ochoomisew had never felt a great fear until now. The lynx had snapped at him but once-and was gone, leaving him crippled. But the lynx had not snarled in that wolfish way, and it had not hung on. A thousand and one nights Ochoomisew had listened to the wolf-howl. Instinct had told him what it meant. He had seen the packs pass swiftly through the night, and always when they passed he had kept in the deepest shadows. To him, as for all other wild things, the wolfhowl stood for death. But until now, with Baree's fangs burled in his leg. he had never sensed fully the wolffear. It had taken it years to enter into his slow, stupid head-but now that it was there, it possessed him as no other thing had ever possessed him in all his the. Suddeni Dohoomisew ceased, his beating and maked himself upward. Like huge fans his powerful wings churned the air, and Baree felt himself lifted suddenly from the earth. Still he held on-and in a moment both bird and beast fell back with a thud Ochoomisew tried again. This time, he was more successful, and he rose fully six feet into the air with Baree. They fell again. A third time the old outlaw fought to wing himself free of Baree's grip; and then, exhausted, he lay with his giant wings outspread. hissing and cracking his bill.

Under those wings Baree's mind worked with the swift instincts of the Next morning Baree found mar crawfish along the creek, and h feasted on their succulent flesh unt he felt that he would never be hung again. Nothing had tasted quite s good since he had eaten the partridg of which he had robbed Sekoosew th ermine.

In the middle of the afternoon Bare came into a part of the forest the was very quiet and very peaceful. The creek had deepened. In places it banks swept out until they formed small ponds. Twice he made consider able detours to get around these ponds

He traveled very quietly, listening and watching. Not since the ill-fated day he had left the old windfall had he felt quite so much at home as now. It seemed to him that at last he was treading country which he knew, and where he would find friends. Perhaps this was another miracle mystery of instinct-of nature. For he was in old Beaver-tooth's domain. It was here that his father and mother had hunted in the days before he was born. It was not far from here that Kazan and Beaver-tooth had fought that mighty duel under water, from which Kazan had escaped with his life without another breath to lose.

The forest grew deeper. It was wonderful. There was no undergrowth. and traveling under the trees was like being in a vast, mystery-filled cavern through the roof of which the light of day broke softly, brightened here and there by golden splashes of the sun. For a mile Baree made his way quietly through this forest. He saw nothing ting with their UUTS. and all the time emitting soft little squeaking cries. Baree knew that it was not fight, but frolic. He rose up on his feet. He forgot where he was-forgot everything in the world but those playing, furry balls. For the moment all the hard training nature had been giving him was lost. He was no longer a fighter, no longer a hunter, no longer a seeker after food. He was a puppy, and in him there rose a desire that was greater than hunger. He wanted to go down there with Umisk and his little chums and roll and play. He wanted to tell them, if such a thing were possible, that he had lost his mother and his home, and that he had been having a mighty hard time of it, and that he would like to stay with them and their mothers and fathers if they didn't care. In his throat there came the least bit of a whine. It was so low that Umisk and his playmates did not hear it. They were tremendously busy.

Softly Baree took his first step toward them, and then another-and at last he stood on the narrow strip of shore within half a dozen feet of them. His sharp little ears were pitched forward, and he was wiggling his tail as fast as he could, and every muscle in his body was trembling in anticipation. It was then that Umisk saw him, and his fat little body became suddenly as motionless as a stone.

"Hello!" said Baree, wiggling his whole body and talking as plainly as a human tongue could talk. "Do you care if I play with you?"

Umisk made no response. His three playmates now had their eyes on Ba ree. They didn't make a move. They looked stunned. Four pairs of staring. wondering eyes were fixed on the stranger.

Baree made another effort. He groveled on his forelegs, while his tail and hindlegs continued to wiggle, and he grabbed a bit of stick tiller Suddenly he changed his hold. burying his fangs into the under part of Ochoomisew's body. They sank into three inches of feathers. Swift as Baree had been, Oohoomlsew was equally swift to take advantage of bls opportunity. In an instant he had swooped upward. There was a jerk, a rending of feathers from flesh-and Baree was alone on the field of battle.

Baree had not killed, but he had conquered. His first great day-or night-had come. The world was filled with a new promise for him, as vast as the night itself. And after a moment he sat back on his haunches, sniffing the air for his beaten enemy; and then, as if defying the feathered monster to come back and fight to the end, he pointed his sharp little muzzle to the stars and sent forth his first babyish wolf-howl into the night.

Chapter III

Baree's fight with Oohoomisew was good medicine for him. It not only gave him great confidence in himself, but it also cleared the fever of ugliness from his blood. He no longer snapped and snarled at things as he went on through the night.

His wound was much less painful the next day, and by nightfall he scarcely had noticed it at all. Since his almost tragic end at the hands of Nepeese, he had been traveling in a general northeasterly direction, following instinctively the run of the waterways; but his progress had been slow, and when darkness came again he was not more than eight or ten miles from the hole into which he had fallen after the Willow had shot him.

All sounds now held a meaning for Baree. Swiftly he was coming into his knowledge of the wilderness. His eyes gleamed; his blood thrilled. For many minutes at a time he scarcely moved. But of all the sounds that came to him, the wolf-cry thrilled him most. Again and again he listened to It. At times it was far away, so far that it was like a whisper, dying away almost before it reached him; and then again it would come to him fullthroated, hot with the breath of the chase, calling him to the red thrill of the hunt, to the wild orgy of torn flesh and running blood-calling, calling, calling. That was it, calling him to his own kin, to the bone of his bone and the flesh of his flesh-to the wild, fierce hunting packs of his mother's tribe! It was Gray Wolf's voice seeking him in the night-Gray Wolf's blood inviting him to the Brotherhood of the Pack.

Baree trembled as he listened. In is throat he whined softly. He edged the sheer face of a rock. He nted to go; nature was urging him o go. But the call of the wild was uggling against odds; for in bim but a few winged flittings of birds; there was almost no sound. Then he came to a still larger pond. Around this pond there was a thick growth of alders and willows; the larger trees had thinned out. He saw the glimmer of afternoon sunlight on the waterand then, all at once, he heard life. There had been few changes in Beaver-tooth's colony since the days of his feud with Kazan and the others. Old Beaver-tooth was still older. He was fatter. He slept a great deal, and perhaps he was less cautious. He was dozing on the great mud-andbrushwood dam of which he had been engineer in chief, when Baree came out softly on a high bank thirty or forty feet away. So noiseless had Baree been that none of the beavers had seen or heard him. He squatted himself flat on his belly, hidden behind a tuft of grass, and with eager interest watched every movement. Beaver-tooth was rousing himself. He stood on his short legs for a moment : then he tilted himself up on his broad, flat tall like a soldier at attention, and with a sudden whistle dived into the pond with a great splash.

In another moment it seemed to Baree that the pond was alive with beavers. Heads and bodies appeared and disappeared, rushing this way and that through the water in a manner that amazed and puzzled him. It was the colony's evening frollc Tails hit the water like flat boards. Odd whistlings rose above the splashing-and then as suddenly as it had begun, the play came to an end. There were probably twenty beavers, not counting the young, and as if guided by a common signal-something which Baree had not heard-they became so quiet that hardly a sound could be heard in the pond. A few of them sank under the water and disappeared entirely, but most of them Baree could watch. as they drew themselves out on shore.

The beavers lost no time in getting at their labor, and Baree watched and listened without so much as rustling a blade of the grass - which he was concealed. He was trying to understand. He was striving to place these curious and comfortable-looking creatures in his knowledge of things. And then, close under him-not more than ten feet from where he lay-he saw something that almost gave voice to the puppyish longing for companionship that was in him Down there, on a clean strip of the shore that rose out of the soft mud of them into a small congregation that the pond, waddled fat little Umisk and held its meetings in his house.

between his teeth. "Come on-let me in," he urged. "I know how to play !"

He tossed the stick in the air as if to prove what he was saying, and gave a little yap.

Umisk and his brothers were like dummies.

And then, of a sudden, some one saw Baree. It was a big beaver swimming down the pond with a sapling timber for the new pond that was under way. Instantly he loosed his hold and faced the shore. And then, like the report of a rifle, there came the crack of his blg flat tail on the waterthe beaver's signal of danger that on a quiet night can be heard half a mile away.

"Danger," it warned. "Danger-danger-danger !"

Scarcely had the signal gone forth when tails were cracking in all directions-in the pond, in the hidden canals, in the thick willows and alders. To Umisk and his companions they said:

"Run for your lives!"

Baree stood rigid and motionless now. In amazement he watched the four little beavers plunge into the pond and disappear. He heard the sounds of other and heavier bodies striking the water. And then there followed a strange and disquieting silence. Softly Baree whined, and his whine was all most a sobbing cry. Why had Umlsk and his little mates run away from him? A great loneliness swept over him-a loneliness greater even than that of his first night away from his mother. He had not found comradeship. And his heart was very sad.

Plants and Animals

From the study of plants we learn how to grow them more efficiently and make the fullest use of plant products; also, because life in plants and animals is similar, if not identical, and as plants lend themselves in some ways more readily than do animals to such observations, any information we can obtain on how plants "work" will most certainly throw some light on similar functions in animals and human beings.
