REVIVAL MEETING AT METHODIST CHURCH

The Revival Meeting at the Methodist Church is to begin next Monday night, with Rev E. L. Yeats, of Roby, doing the preaching and Mr. W. M. Cullwell, of Stamford, leading the song service. Neither of these men could reach us before Monday night. On account of this, and because the Baptist meeting is to be closing Sunday, we will not have services at the Methodist church Sunday night or Monday morning.

We shall be glad to have a good crowd at the first service Monday night, then we believe you will not want to miss a single time. The services will be held at the Methodist church, unless other plans are made after beginning.

We shall be glad to have every one who can to attend, and shall be glad to have the cooperation of all Christian people. We invite any Christian to feel welcome to help in the singing, the praying, or in any other way.

There are at least two things that ought to be accomplished in every real revival: Every Christian ought to have his or her spiritual life made a little more real and active for the rest of life, and there should be an gathering of those who are being saved.

We feel confident that with Bro. Yeats' gospel messages and the gospel in the song services and the prayerful working together of the Christian people, these two great purposes of a revival should be accomplished to a right satisfactory degree.

Be present at the first service Monday evening at 8.00 o'clock.
J. W. Hawkins, Pastor.

Mrs. Bratke continued to take the Compound for a year and a half and at the end of that time she found herself in excellent health. "I am feeling fine now and do all my work myself," she wrote in her most recent letter. "I am the mother of six and manage an eight-room house without anybody to help."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Mexican Government's Conflict With the Catholic Church Reaches Crisis.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT CALLES and the Roman Catholic church in Mexico are now in the midst of one of the bitterest struggles of recent times and the outcome, not at present easy to predict, may be of vast importance to the republic before the Rio Grande. Calles and his government are determined to enforce the new religious laws, and they now have behind them the Labor and Socialist parties, which control a majority in the Mexican congress. On the other side stands all the power of the mighty Catholic church which claims the allegiance of nearly all the inhabitants of Mexico. Early in the week an episcopal letter, signed by Archbishop Mora y del Rio, the seven other archbishops and thirty bishops, was sent to churchmen throughout the country instructing them that after July 31 no religious services would be held in the churches and the priests would be withdrawn from them, though the buildings would be kept open. The letter set forth that penalties would be inflicted on those of Catholic faith who were in any way responsible for the religious laws or who in any way aid in their enforcement. There was a plain hint of excommunication, and immediately there were many reports that bishops and others were being arrested for sedition. These were unconfirmed, but such arrests are not unlikely.

The government's reply to the letter was a statement that all churches abandoned by the priests would be taken over by the civil authorities and entrusted to citizens' committees to be used for worship and other public purposes. The secretary of the interior said once the churches were thus taken, they never would be returned to the clergy. The church properties thus liable to seizure were estimated to be worth $300,000,000. The attorney general sent a circular to his agents throughout the country asking them for statements as to whether they support the government's determination to enforce the religious laws. It is reported that all those who do not sympathize with the government will be removed from office at once.

Catholic leaders said they would continue the fight for modification of the religious laws. One of their latest moves was an appeal by the women to Senator Natalia Calles to defend their cause before her husband, the President. They said: "Your husband will do whatever you desire because man is noble and easy to lead. . . . We demand equity, tolerance, and justice. We desire peace, union, and welfare. You are a woman, a wife and mother, and we hope that you will bear our appeal."

Directors of the League for Religious Defense—the lay Catholic organization—having been arrested on charges of sedition, the league appointed new directors but kept their names secret. All last week the churches were thronged and baptisms, confirmations and marriage ceremonies were astonishingly numerous.

Organized labor demonstrated its adherence to Calles' policy by holding great parades in Mexico City and other centers. "We are determined to fight the issue to a finish in the interest of the liberation of the working man from the trammels of centuries," said a prominent labor leader. "As we see the question, the issue is whether workmen will be allowed to think or have our thinking done for us by the makers of creeds and preachers of superstition. We are behind the President to a finish, through peace or war."

WHAT the Illinois senatorial primaries cost, where the money came from and for just what purpose. It was paid out were the subjects of the investigation opened in Chicago last week by the senatorial "slush fund" committee. Chairman Reed— he is in effect the committee until the time comes to write its report—found out a lot of interesting facts, and as the inquiry goes on he probably will dig up a great many more, including those concerning the political activities of the Anti-Saloon league in the Middle West.

As had been expected, Samuel Insull, the public utilities magnate, was the leading character in the first part of the proceedings. It appeared that he was a sort of horn of plenty for both parties and for several factions of the Republican party in Cook county. The donations made by Mr. Insull, so far as made known up to the date of writing, were:

Table with 2 columns: Name and Amount. Total: $193,735.19

Senator W. B. McKinley, who was defeated by Smith, paid his own expenses, which reached the large total of $358,616. The total collected and spent for Smith was $287,282; that for George E. Brennan, Democrat, who had no real opposition, was $20,841. For the Deaneen county ticket $129,894 was spent, of which no part was contributed by Senator Deaneen. The Crowe-Barrett faction, which was generally victorious in the county, spent $150,000. Some of these figures may be changed by later testimony. Edward H. Wright, a colored political leader of Chicago, refused to answer many of the committee's questions, and so did Mr. Insull. Later they may be compelled to reply. Also Senator Reed planned to call on the Governor Small-Lundin faction for an accounting of the amount of cash they collected and for information as to what was done with it. It has often been charged that this group squeezed something like a million dollars from state employees and contractors. This was supposed to be a fund to aid Governor Small in his fight to avoid paying about $1,000,000 which the Supreme court has decided he owes the state.

GOV. MIRIAM A. FERGUSON of Texas was rather badly beaten by Dan Moody, the attorney general, in the gubernatorial primary. Dan had a majority of about 900 over his four opponents and led Mrs. Ferguson by 125,000. "Ma" had promised that she would resign if Moody beat her by so much as one vote and now he and others are calling on her to make good. But she has called a special session of the legislature for September 13 to consider certain legislation she wishes passed and therefore plans to retire from office about the first of November. Moody's nomination by the Democrats is equivalent to election.

JOHN W. DAVIS, who because he was the Democratic Presidential nominee in 1924 is considered the party's leader, has joined the movement for abolition of the two-thirds and unit rules in Democratic conventions. At least twenty Democratic national committee members favor the change. Mr. Davis believes, however, that if either rule is retained, neither should be discarded.

PREMIER POINCARÉ at this writing has good prospects of putting his financial program through the chamber of deputies, which already has expressed its preliminary confidence in the new ministry by a 358 to 131 vote. The veteran statesman proposes to raise 5,000,000,000 francs in new taxes, and when the financial commission of the chamber refused to approve one section which calls for a 15 per cent increase in passenger and freight rates, Poincaré told it that the project could exist only as a unity and he would make the passage of every article, once the plan reached the chamber, a question of confidence. The commission naturally did not wish to contribute to another cabinet crisis so it approved the whole plan, adding to it a clause increasing the salaries of deputies from 27,000 to 45,000 francs. Communist and Socialist deputies are still opposing the premier's plan, but the necessity of adopting these new taxes on French business and industry is generally recognized. The government also has introduced a measure designed to safeguard the country's wheat supply.

DEMONSTRATIONS against Americans in his summer camp, has taken notice of the ugly feeling in France and through the correspondents there he urges the American people to adopt an attitude of moderation, forbearance and sympathy toward European nations struggling to repair the economic ravages of war. He especially deprecates the bumpiness of many tourists and hopes foreign peoples will recognize that these are irresponsible individuals whose utterances do not represent the sentiments of the American people.

The President evidently has no thought of yielding to the barrage of French and British criticism of America which is believed to cover a concerted revival of the effort to force complete cancellation of the war debts. He is standing pat on the terms to France representing a cancellation of more than half the entire French borrowing and all of the portion obtained for actual prosecution of the war before the armistice. He is standing pat on the British settlement, representing a 25 per cent cancellation.

GERMAN industry is being throttled and that country's financial and material recovery is prevented by the national welfare laws forced by the Socialists, according to a statement by interallied experts. These men say the German industrial situation had improved this spring and early in the summer, but now the unemployed are increasing. Every week new plants close down because they have not enough export orders to warrant the expenses of production. The main reason for the unfavorable situation is that the German prices are so high the country cannot sell goods abroad. The chief reason for the high prices is the social welfare laws, which have forced the employers and workers to pay $631,000,000 in 1925 for alleged welfare, when the entire exports of the country for the same period amounted only to $1,513,000,000.

MANY millions of dollars of damage was wrought by a terrific hurricane that swept through the West Indies, up the Florida east coast and along the Georgia coast. While there were some deaths in Florida, the greatest loss of life was in the Dominican republic, where three vessels were wrecked and scores of passengers drowned. Property damage at Palm Beach was estimated at $1,000,000, and at Miami, Stuart and other Florida localities it was in the hundreds of thousands. At Nassau, in the Bahamas, it was said the damage might reach $5,000,000, as several of the great hotels there were heavy sufferers.

ON THE twelfth anniversary of the beginning of the World war the League of Nations office at Geneva gives out statistics showing that Great Britain, France and the United States, in the order named, are spending the most per capita on preparations for new wars. Great Britain's average annual outlay, including military, naval and aerial budgets, is $573,000,000, or $12.96 per capita. France has an average annual expenditure of $255,000,000, or $6.43 per capita. The figures for the United States are $554,000,000, or $4.94 per capita. Italy's per capita expenditure for armaments is $3.80; Japan's is $3.68; Russia's is $1.45, and Germany comes last of the nations noted with $1.70. The British house of commons was officially informed last week that Germany has failed to keep faith with her disarmament promises.

ROBERT TODD LINCOLN, last surviving son of the Emancipator, died last week at his home in Manchester, Vt. The end came peacefully in the night, death being caused by cerebral hemorrhage. The body will be placed in the Lincoln tomb at Springfield, Ill., beside that of his father. Mr. Lincoln, who would have been eighty-three years old on August 1, had a noteworthy career. He was secretary of war in the cabinets of Presidents Garfield and Arthur, and President Harrison appointed him minister to Great Britain. After the death of George M. Pullman Mr. Lincoln was made president of the Pullman company, which position he resigned in 1911.

George Inness, Jr., an eminent American painter and son of a yet more noted artist, passed away at Cragmoor, N. Y. He spent his winters in Florida and many of his pictures were of Florida scenery.

Not Alarmed by Sight of Airplane

In the jungle of southern Annam live the Moie, a primitive tribe, until recently without contact with civilized people, white or yellow. In the forests of the high plateaus they have lived for centuries, exactly as their ancestors, who came from Malaysia in unknown times, must have lived. They have no writing and hence no history; no religion but fear; not a glimmer of knowledge. Such are the primitive folk suddenly assaulted by the Twentieth century, in one breath presented with electricity, the telegraph, motor cars, airplanes, motion pictures.

The territory is being exploited by France, with the result that these primitive natives are receiving suddenly the inventions of centuries. When the first airplane flight was made, the natives were warned, so they would not be panic-stricken, but the flight caused only a little flurry. The other inventions they are accepting with the same calm. They exhibit surprise at first, but when the novelty wears off, they cease to wonder.—Asia Magazine.

The Impasse

Senator James Reed, opposing the World court and League of Nations, said at a Washington reception: "When we try to investigate the broils and conflicts in the league, its champions assure us that everything will be harmonious next September, and they answer all our questions very frankly." The senator paused, then he added with a chuckle: "Yes, they answer all our questions, and we question all their answers."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

STYLE PROCLAIMS TUNIC BLOUSE; JUNIOR MIDSEASON MILLINERY

IT REQUIRES more than one blouse or tunic to complete a stylishly appointed wardrobe. A blouse for every occasion is not an extravagance, but rather an evidence of careful thought. A sports blouse for outings and practical wear, a suit-blouse for one's tailored street costume, a dressy blouse or tunic, gay in coloring, to wear over one's plaited black satin princess slip or a handsome lace tunic which is the preferences are being given a very definite recognition. There is the matter of choosing one's hats, for instance. Nowadays juvenile, junior and Miss Subdeb are invited to visit a special section or salon, if you please, which is distinctly their own realm where millinery designed by specialized talent is displayed in a very tempting array. A glance at the collection of charm-

A GAY TUNIC BLOUSE

Mode's latest word, these and a few extras for one's white plaited skirt are none too many if one would be dressed at a moment's call.

The latest sports blouse, which after all is not so much a blouse as a waistcoat type, is made of checked linen toweling with a plain back and just below-the-shoulder sleeves, which is almost equivalent to saying sleeveless.

To wear over a black plaited foundation choose a tunic of striking color. One cannot grow too reckless in the matter of bizarre coloring. The model in the picture features a gorgeous embroidery done after the manner of the handwork and colorings which so glorify the Spanish shawl. Some stylists go so far as to add fringe, which further emphasizes the ing hats shown in this picture reveal the fact that millinery for the younger generation is vastly interesting these days. In each model the spirit of youth is maintained and there is every evidence that infinite care and attention is being lavished on millinery for the growing girl. To be sure, the first is made of quilted silk after the manner of grown-up's smart styling, but somehow the designer has contrived to adapt it to the school-girl age.

In the top model to the right silk is again the medium, although this time it is corded and tucked—which goes to show the importance of the all-fabric hat.

A generous bow of hemmed taffeta gives a girlish aspect to the hat below to the left in the group. The off Spanish influence. Note in the picture that the girle shows a plaited panel. This is something new and matching the skirt as it does the tendency is to give the impression of a composite costume rather than a separate blouse and skirt.

If you have never owned a lace tunic or blouse do not let the season go by without acquiring one. They are a real asset in one's collection.

An outstanding enthusiasm among the youth of this day is that of self-expression. Nor is it a mere theory confined to classroom discussion. In the commercial world, as well as in every other walk of life, youth and its individual needs and the-face effect given by the plaiting of taffeta across the front assures becomingness.

Very colorful is the large hat to the right. The crown is formed of knitted visca in brilliant yellows, greens and blues offset by a brim facing and a roses of shirred satin, which may be of any bright shade desired.

Leghorn, that ever faithful friend of youth, appears to picturesque advantage when crowned and bound with silk and embellished with tiny handmade flowers such as one sees in the concluding hat of this group.

Device Shows Strain Incurred by Flyers
Instruments have been devised for measuring an airplane's speed, altitude and direction; now comes a gauge for the aviator himself, called the accelerometer, an intricate little apparatus which shows how his body reacts to the craft's bounces, sudden turns and dips. It is the invention of Lieut. James H. Doolittle of the engineering division of the army air service, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine, and it is placed under the pilot's seat. Stresses and strains on his body are outlined on a small strip of film.
Lieutenant Doolittle has found that a flyer can stand instantaneous movements of the plane without ill effects, but comparatively slower dips and dives, if continued several seconds, sometimes cause him to lose his faculties. In rounding a pylon at high speed, for instance, the blood is driven to the feet. A pilot in the pink of condition can stand this, but about 12 seconds is the limit.

"Success? Well, to succeed nowadays you must be very quick—take time and everything else by the forelock—like the young man at the seashore."
"Darling," the young man said to a girl with whom he was sitting out a dance, "darling, I love you."
"But," said the girl, "my goodness me, we didn't meet till half an hour ago!"
"Yes, I know, darling," said the young man, "but I'm only down here for the week-end."

Fighting Tree Pests
There is an easy way to get rid of curculios, which are the pests that spoil plums on the trees. These pests are almost dormant early in the morning, and if the trees are jarred sharply most of them will come tumbling to the ground. The jarring is done readily enough without damage to the trees by using a stout pole, one end of which is wrapped with burlap or old blankets.

HEDLEY SCHOOLS TO OPEN SEPTEMBER 6

No doubt every boy and girl in the Hedley district is wanting to know when our school begins; so I take pleasure in saying September 6th. Every boy and girl will be expected to be in their respective places by 9:00 a. m. The first hour will be devoted to classification and lesson assignment. Each child shall be expected to bring your book and report cards. In event you have lost your report card, remember we have a permanent record of all your work, hence the proper adjustment shall be made.
A short program has been prepared to be rendered on this occasion, so we insist that the patrons and visiting friends come and be with us from 10:00 to 11:00. At present the Hedley School has 154 affiliated units, and I am frank to say that these credits have been made largely by the support of the patrons and friends of education; hence our motto should be, "Onward with the Greatest Co-operation"
Yours for better schools,

AT THE METHODIST CHURCH

All the services as usual next Sunday, except there will be no preaching at the evening hour. This is on account of the meeting now in progress at the Baptist church.

It is understood that Rev. A. L. Scales, pastor of St. Paul's church, Abilene, is to be in Hedley next Sunday visiting his brother. If he is here he will preach at our church if he can be induced to do that much work while he is resting. In either case we shall be glad to have a good congregation on Sunday morning.
J. W. Hawkins, Pastor.

FAREWELL SERVICE

I will be in Hedley to fill my appointment on the First Sunday in next month. All the Church has a special invitation to attend this Farewell Service.

To the Sheriff or Any Constable of Donley County - Greeting:

You are hereby commanded to summon J. A. Brown by making publication of this citation once each week for four successive weeks previous to the return day hereof, in some newspaper published in your county, if there be a newspaper published there in, but if not, then in the nearest county where a newspaper is published, to appear at the next regular term of the District Court of Donley county, to be holden at the court house thereof, in Clarendon, on the third Monday in October, A. D 1926, the same being the 18th day of October, A D 1926, then and there to answer a petition filed in said Court on the 23rd day of March, A. D 1926, in a suit, numbered on the docket of said Court as No 1483 wherein Mrs. Fannie Brown is plaintiff, and J. A. Brown is defendant, and said petition alleging that plaintiff is a resident of Donley county, Texas, and has been for a period of more than six months prior to the filing of this petition, and a resident of Texas for more than 12 months prior thereto; that plaintiff and defendant were married in Athens, Texas, about June 22nd, 1911, and defendant abandoned plaintiff and their child, Gladys, without just cause in Joplin, Mo., about June 25, 1922; that the period since abandonment is more than three years, since which time plaintiff has provided for herself and child; plaintiff alleges that the marriage relations still exist between herself and defendant, and prays the Court that such relations be dissolved, for custody of the child Gladys, a minor, for costs of suit, and such other relief as she may be entitled to.

Herein fail not, and have before said Court, at its aforesaid next regular term, this writ with your return thereon, showing how you have executed the same

FAMOUS CARTOONS

Laws of Moses and Today

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
THE recent announcement of the Pulitzer Journalism prizes for 1925 and the award to the cartoon "The Laws of Moses and the Laws of Today," drawn by D. R. Fitzpatrick of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, adds one more to the small and exclusive list of what may rightfully be called "famous cartoons." Most cartoons deal with ephemeral things and are therefore essentially ephemeral themselves. The haste of modern daily American journalism is an impelling force back of the mind and the hand of the cartoonist as it is of all other newspaper workers. So his mind must grasp quickly the spirit of some current event or some thought which is the paramount concern of that fickle thing known as public interest and with a few strokes of his pen or brush his hand records an interpretation of the event or thought which the millions of newspaper readers can grasp quickly and easily.

Conceived in haste, executed in haste and directed to the attention of a people, in the background of whose thought ever lurks the words "Hurry! Hurry!" it is not to be wondered at that the average cartoon lacks the permanency of other forms of pictorial art. Occasionally, however, some cartoon, timely though it may be, has some indefinable quality of permanence, some universal appeal, which so strikes the popular fancy that it lives beyond the brief 24-hour existence of the average cartoon and can be looked at as pleasantly and profitably a week, a month or even years later as it could on the day it was first printed on the daily newspaper page. So these exceptions to the rule of the cartoon as an ephemeral thing make them all the more notable and worthy of designation of "famous cartoons."

Perhaps the most striking example of the cartoon which lives is John T. McCutcheon's "Injun Summer." It was first published in the Chicago Tribune in the autumn of 1907. Although McCutcheon almost immediately began to receive letters of appreciation, it cannot be fairly asserted that it created a sensation, as do some cartoons—including others by McCutcheon himself—which enjoy a brief day of fame and are then forgotten. It was so typical of the kindly, human work which this Hoosier artist and author has been doing with his pen for Chicago newspapers for nearly a quarter of a century, that readers of the Tribune, for which he has worked since 1903, accepted it pretty much as a matter of course. They looked at the two pictures—the rows of corn shocks in one transformed by the magic of imagination into a tented Indian village in the other—read the homely explanation of "Injun Summer" given the little boy by his grandfather and smiled reflectively as they thought of similar "Injun stories" that their grandfathers had told them. Perhaps some of them clipped the cartoon and laid it away so that they could look at it and enjoy it again. Then the next day its place in their thoughts was taken by another of McCutcheon's cartoons on congress, or some problem of the farmers or the local political situation.

But a year later, when Indian summer came around again, the Tribune began to receive requests that the cartoon be reprinted. So it appeared again and every autumn since that time, when the soft blue haze begins to spread over the Middle West as a token that Indian summer is again at hand, the same request comes in to the Tribune. "Please reprint John McCutcheon's 'Injun Summer' cartoon." So its appearance has become an annual event and to readers of this newspaper throughout the Mississippi Valley, that appearance is looked upon as a herald of a season as much as the wild geese honking northward foretell the coming of spring.

"Injun Summer" is a famous cartoon—nearly twenty years of popularity is sufficient evidence of that fact. It is also a Tribune tradition, almost as much of an institution in that newspaper as is McCutcheon himself. So it was eminently fitting that only recently it should be reproduced as a mural painting on the walls of the news room in the Tribune tower, the new home of that newspaper which is one of the striking figures on the Michigan boulevard skyline. So a simple newspaper cartoon which had those rare cartoon qualities of universal appeal and what is known in the newspaper world as "good any time" becomes a work of enduring art.

Another cartoon for which, like McCutcheon's "Injun Summer," there is an annual request for republication is the Lincoln's birthday cartoon drawn by H. T. Webster in 1918. Webster is now on the staff of the New York World, but he was at that time drawing for the New York Tribune and his work then, as now, was syndicated to many dailies throughout the United States. The title of his cartoon was "Hardin County, 1809." It shows two pioneers meeting in a snowy country road on the Kentucky frontier. "Any news down t' th' village, Ezzy?" asks one. "Well," replies the other, "Squire McLean's gone t' Washington t' see Madison swear in, an' of Spelman tells me this Bonaparte fella has captured most of Spain. What's new out there, neighbor?" "Nuthin' a tall, nuthin' a tall," disclaims the first, "Cept for a new baby down t' Tom Lincoln's. Nuthin' ever happens out here."

As in the case of "Injun Summer," "Hardin County, 1809" was not a sensation at the time. But in it Webster put something—an idea, a feeling, a sharp reality—which gave it a lasting appeal and every year, some time before February 12, newspapers which were then using the New York Tribune syndicate service and printed this cartoon receive requests for its republication.

Perhaps one reason for the appeal of this cartoon as well as that of others by Webster lies in the fact that he, like Clare Briggs, is known better as a "cartoonist of boyhood" than a cartoonist of current events. Briggs and Webster, Briggs with his "Days of Real Sport" and "When a Feller Needs a Friend" and Webster with his "Thrill That Comes Once in a Lifetime" and "Life's Darkest Moment," have preserved in pictures the life of the American boy on the farm and in the small town as faithfully as Mark Twain, Booth Tarkington and Judge Henry A. Shute have done it in literature. Webster was born in Wisconsin, lived the life of a country lad there, felt the lure of the "big white tops," ran away with a circus and traveled for awhile as a clown. Then he drifted into newspaper work and eventually landed in New York as cartoonist for the Evening Globe. Later he went to the Tribune and from it to the World where he is still chronicling the joys and tragedies in the life of American boyhood.

sources with her army of soldiers in Europe and her army of civilians at home. It was at a time when the fate of the world still hung in the balance.

In such an hour of crisis the spirit of Flag day had a deeper meaning than usual and it was that spirit which Kettner caught in his cartoon. Without the support of the civilian army at home, the efforts of the American army on the western front could not succeed. In the cartoon the symbol of that civilian army was the young farmer standing with bare head, facing toward the national capitol in which has been centered the ideal of liberty and democracy, the ideal on which the American nation was founded and for which its wars have been fought. And over it all spreads the "canopy of liberty," the Stars and Stripes!

Kettner's cartoon which expressed so well what was in the minds and hearts of the American people at that time met with instant favor when it was published in the thousands of papers served by the syndicate for which he draws. It was reprinted in magazines and many requests were received from patriotic organizations by the editor of the syndicate for the original drawing. Because of its universal appeal and constant timeliness, "The Canopy of Liberty" is as strong a cartoon today, in times of peace, as it was in 1918, in a time of war. Government officials may fall of their trust, faith in the working of our form of government may be shaken, but the heart of America, as symbolized by the young farmer still looks to the national capitol under the canopy of liberty, the Stars and Stripes, as the symbol of its abiding faith that the nation will live.

"The Canopy of Liberty," however, was only one of many striking cartoons which Kettner drew during the war. So valuable was his work in support of food conservation that Secretary Herbert Hoover more than once wrote personal letters of appreciation and several originals of Kettner's cartoons are framed and hang upon the walls of Mr. Hoover's office in Washington. The fame of his work spread abroad and one of his cartoons, drawn after the Armistice and showing the defeated Germany going home "in a barrel," was reprinted in the London Tatler as one of the most striking comments on the retribution which had overtaken the Prussian war lords. During the war, and long afterward, Kettner received in letters many echoes of the influence of his work. One soldier wrote of having seen one of his cartoons clipped from a "home-town paper" pasted up on the walls of a French dug-out which had been occupied by a detachment of Yanks. It was a cartoon with the simple title of "Diggin' In" and showed that while our soldiers over there were "digging in" to repulse the enemy, the civilian army at home was "digging in" in its gardens and fields to make the last line of defense against the foe—a simple picture which had evidently heartened some war-weary Yank with its thought that the home folks were backing up his efforts.

AROUND THE HOME

By MARGARET BRUCE

The Perfect Shampoo

Susy sat before the mirror in her pretty apricot and jade negligee and heaved miserable sighs. She was drawing a comb through her thick hair, her growing out after a long era of bobbedness, and was gloomily regarding the comb, which held a sticky gray line of mingled soap and lint.

"Well, I just can't get my hair clean, that's all there is to it," she snipped. "I washed it and washed it, and rinsed and rinsed it, and still the soap is in it, and it feels absolutely horrid. I don't see how Madame Berthe gets it so clean. I do it just the way she does and look at it! I simply can't afford to go and pay her a dollar and a half every fortnight—my allowance won't stand it!" And Susy's head drooped with discouragement.

"Well now, I wonder if you do wash it just exactly as Madame Berthe does," exclaimed Aunt Susy, who was visiting. "First of all, how many times do you put the soap on?"

"Why once," said Susy, "but I put a whole lot on and rub it a long time."

"Well, there's your chief trouble," soothed Aunt Susy. "Now let's do it again, and get it clean. First of all, we'll get this pure castile soap melted down into a thick smooth liquid. Never rub a cake of soap on your hair—you'd never get it out. It must be poured on. Now rub it in lightly, all through. Then here's the secret. Take the bath spray, attach it to the faucet and wash every bit of that first soaping right off. You see that only loosens the dirt, it doesn't remove it.

"Now put on your real thorough supply of soap. Pour it on lavishly, and rub and rub. Scour! Rub hard—harder! See that splendid mass of soap suds. Rub it into the ends of your hair and scrub hard. Now we are ready for the rinsing spray. Get up a strong pressure; let the water beat down on your head and fairly drive the soap out. Then if it doesn't feel silky clean, apply another dose of soap and scrub and rinse again!

"That's the most important thing—that second or third application of soap, after washing away the first soap and dirt. The drying is simple—rub well with a linen towel, that doesn't leave lint, and then fan it or dry it slowly in front of the radiator. Comb it out before it is quite dry and it will not tangle. And there's a beautiful clean shining head for you!"

The End Table

A pretty piece of furniture, and useful, too, that has put in an appearance within the last few years, is the little end table which stands at the head or foot of a big divan. Sometimes each end of the divan is equipped with one of these handy little stands, straight along one side and curved at the other, which holds a reading lamp, a book, or the newest magazine.

To curl up in one corner of a deep couch, propped up with cushions, and have at one's elbow a resting place for the cupful of tea, the box of candy or the book one is reading, is to know solid comfort of the sort that spells home. The straight side of the stand fits perfectly the straight end of the couch, and the curve of the outside end projects the occupants of the room from bumping into sharp corners or knocking the stand sideways in passing.

Some of these stands are semi-circular in shape, others have variously designed sides and front edge, but all have cut-off corners and, in general, one front supporting leg and two rear legs. While many persons like to have them match the woodwork or the rest of the furniture in the room, they may be of any wood that harmonizes, as they rank with the "occasional chair" and the curved chest which are part of no set and need only harmonize in general effect. End tables of mahogany, circassian walnut, painted wood, and even of wicker are chosen for rooms of more or less formality.

These end tables may be used in very narrow halls to take the place of a console, and in small sunrooms they are very handy for putting close up against the wall, where they take up little room. An end table standing at the head of a chaise longue provides a convenient place to lay book or magazine during a resting hour, and they are particularly pretty at either end of a day bed.

SAFFRON SKIN FROM SOUR BILE

SOUTH GEORGIAN DRIVES OUT ENORMOUS QUANTITY SOUR BILE WITH DODSON'S LIVER TONE.

After a long period of the worst form of weakness and the terrible feeling of sickness that comes from a system loaded with sour bile, Mr. Sam Puckett says: "When I kept getting those bilious attacks reckon I took enough calomel to kill a mule. Got worse all the time. Finally I turned saffron color all over. My wife happened to read about Dodson's Liver Tone in the Weekly Constitution, so we drove to town and got a bottle. It was like magic. I drove quarts of sour bile out of me as black as ink. From that day I have felt as if I had a new liver, and whenever I begin to feel weary and bilious, with no appetite, a dose of Dodson's Liver Tone puts me to rights."

This wonderful, quick-action, liver starter ought to be in every household, if for no other reason than to stop the use of dangerous calomel. Dodson's Liver Tone is pleasant to take, even for children, and never makes you sick. Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs but a few cents, and if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

Pierrot, deep in his own somber thoughts, scarcely heard the strange laugh that came suddenly from her lips. Nepeese was listening to the growl that was again in Baree's throat. It was a low but terrible sound. When half a mile from the cabin, she unslung the panniers from his shoulders and carried them herself. Ten minutes later they saw a man advancing to meet them.

It was not McTaggart. Pierrot recognized him, and with an audible breath of relief waved his hand. It was DeBar, who trapped in the Barren Country north of Lac Bain. Pierrot knew him well. They had exchanged fox-poison. They were friends and there was pleasure in the grip of their hands. DeBar stared then at Nepeese.

"Tonnerre, she has grown into a woman!" he cried, and like a woman Nepeese looked at him straight, with the color deepening in her cheeks as he bowed low with a courtesy that dated back a couple of centuries beyond the trap-line.

DeBar lost no time in explaining his mission, and before they reached the cabin Pierrot and Nepeese knew why he had come. M'sieu, the Factor at Lac Bain, was leaving on a journey in five days, and he had sent DeBar as a special messenger to request Pierrot to come up to assist the clerk and the half-breed storekeeper in his absence. Pierrot made no comment at first. But he was thinking. Why had Bush McTaggart sent for him? Why had he not chosen some one nearer? Not until a fire was crackling in the sheet-iron stove in the cabin, and Nepeese was busily engaged getting supper, did he voice these questions to the fox-hunter.

DeBar shrugged his shoulders. "He asked me, at first, if I could stay. But I have a wife with a bad lung. Pierrot, it was caught by frost last winter, and I dare not leave her long alone. He has great faith in you. Besides, you know all the trappers on the Company's books at Lac Bain. So he sent for you, and begs you not to worry about your fur lines, as he will pay you double what you would catch in the time you are at the Post."

"And—Nepeese?" said Pierrot. "M'sieu expects me to bring her?" From the stove the Willow bent her head to listen, and her heart leaped free again at DeBar's answer. "He said nothing about that. But surely—it will be a great change for M'selle."

Pierrot nodded. "Possibly, Netootam." They discussed the matter no more that night. But for hours Pierrot was still, thinking, and a hundred times he asked himself the same question: Why had McTaggart sent for him? It must be, he told himself finally, that M'sieu had sent for him because he wanted to win over the father of Nepeese and gain the friendship of Nepeese herself. For this was undoubtedly a very great honor that the Factor was conferring on him. And yet, deep down in his heart, he was filled with suspicion.

When DeBar was about to leave the next morning, Pierrot said:

"Tell M'sieu that I will leave for Lac Bain the day after tomorrow."

After DeBar had gone, he said to Nepeese:

"And you shall remain here, ma cherie. I will not take you to Lac Bain. I have had a dream that M'sieu will not go on a journey, but that he has lied, and that he will be sick when I arrive at the post. And yet, if it should happen that you care to go—"

Nepeese, straightened suddenly, like a reed that has been caught by the wind.

"Non!" she cried, so fiercely that Pierrot laughed, and rubbed his hands. So it happened that on the second day after the fox-hunter's visit Pierrot left for Lac Bain, with Nepeese in the door waving him good-by until he was out of sight.

On the morning of this same day Bush McTaggart rose from his bed while it was still dark. The time had come. He had hesitated at murder—the killing of Pierrot; and in his hesitation he had found a better way. There could be no escape for Nepeese.

It was a wonderful scheme, so easy of accomplishment, so inevitable in its outcome. And all the time Pierrot would think he was away to the East on a mission!

He ate his breakfast before dawn, and was on the trail before it was yet light. There was a vast amount of brutal satisfaction to McTaggart in anticipating what was about to happen, and he reveled in it to the full. There was no chance for disappointment. He was positive that Nepeese would not accompany her father to Lac Bain. She would be at the cabin on the Gray Loon—alone.

This aloneness was to Nepeese burdened with no thought of danger. There were times, now, when the thought of being alone was pleasant to her, when she wanted to dream by herself, when she visioned things into the mysteries of which she would not admit even Pierrot. She was growing into womanhood—just the sweet, closed bud of womanhood as yet—still a girl with the soft velvet of girlhood in her eyes, yet with the mystery of woman stirring gently in her soul, as if the Great Hand were hesitating between awakening her and letting her sleep a little longer. At these times, when the opportunity came to steal hours by herself, she would put on the red dress and do up her wonderful hair as she saw it in the pictures of the magazines Pierrot had sent up twice a year from Nelson House.

On the second day of Pierrot's absence Nepeese dressed herself like this, but today she let her hair cascade in a shining glory about her, and about her forehead about a circlet of red ribbon. She was not yet done. Today she had marvelous designs. On the wall close to her mirror she had tacked a large page from a woman's magazine, and on this page was a lovely vision of curls. Fifteen hundred stiles north of the sunny California studio in which the picture had been taken, Nepeese, with pouted lips and puckered forehead, was fighting to master the mystery of the other girl's curls!

She was looking into her mirror, her face flushed and her eyes aglow in the excitement of the struggle to fashion one of the coveted ringlets from a tress that fell away below her hips, when the door opened behind her, and Bush McTaggart walked in.

Chapter XI

The Willow's back was toward the door when the Factor from Lac Bain entered the cabin, and for a few startled seconds she did not turn. Her first thought was of Pierrot—for some reason he had returned. But even as this thought came to her, she heard in Baree's throat a snarl that brought her suddenly to her feet, facing the door.

McTaggart was standing with his back against the door; and at Nepeese—in her wonderful dress and flowing hair—he was staring as if stunned for a space at what he saw. Fate, or accident, was playing against the Willow now. If there had been a spark of slumbering chivalry, of mercy, even, in Bush McTaggart's soul, it was extinguished by what he saw. Never had Nepeese looked more beautiful, not even on that day when MacDonald the map-maker had taken her picture. The lighting through the window, lighted up her marvelous hair; her flushed face was framed in its lustrous darkness like a tinted cameo. He had dreamed, but he had pictured nothing like this woman who stood before him now, her eyes widening with fear and the flush leaving her face even as he looked at her.

It was not a long interval in which their eyes met in that terrible silence—terrible to the girl. Words were unnecessary. At last she understood—understood what her peril had been that day at the edge of the chasm and in the forest, when fearlessly she had played with the menace that was confronting her now.

A breath that was like a sob broke from her lips. "M'sieu!" she tried to say. But it was only a gasp—an effort. She seemed choking.

Mainly she heard the click of the iron bolt as it locked the door. McTaggart advanced a step.

Only a single step McTaggart advanced. On the floor Baree had remained like a carved thing. He had not moved. He had not made a sound but that one warning snarl—until McTaggart took the step. And then, like a flash, he was up and in front of Nepeese, every hair of his body on end; and at the fury in his growl McTaggart lunged back against the barred door. A word from Nepeese in that moment, and it would have been over. But an instant was lost—an instant before her cry came. In that moment man's hand and brain worked swifter than brute understanding; and as Baree lunged himself at the Factor's throat, there came a flash and a deafening explosion almost in the Willow's eyes.

It was a chance shot, a shot from the hip with McTaggart's automatic. Baree fell short. He struck the floor with a thud and rolled against the log wall. There was not a kick or a quiver left in his body. McTaggart laughed nervously as he shoved his pistol back in its holster. He knew that only a brain shot could have done that.

With her back against the further wall, Nepeese was waiting. McTaggart could hear her panting breath. He advanced halfway to her.

"Nepeese, I have come to make you my wife," he said.

She did not answer. He could see that her breath was choking her. She raised a hand to her throat. He took two more steps, and stopped. He had never seen such eyes.

"I have come to make you my wife, Nepeese. Tomorrow you will go on to Nelson House with me, and then back to Lac Bain—forever." He added the last words as an afterthought. "Forever," he repeated.

He did not mince words. His courage and his determination rose as he saw her body droop a little against the wall. She was powerless. There was no escape. Pierrot was gone. Baree was dead.

He had thought that no living creature could move as swiftly as the Willow when his arms reached out for her. She made no sound as she darted under one of his outstretched arms. He made a lunge, a brutal grab, and his fingers caught a bit of hair. He heard the snap of it as she tore herself free and flew to the door. She had thrown back the bolt when he caught her and his arms closed about her. He dragged her back, and now she cried out—cried out in her despair for Pierrot, for Baree, for some miracle of God that might save her.

And Nepeese fought. She twisted in his arms until she was facing him. She could no longer see. She was smothered in her hair. It covered her face and breast and body, suffocating her, entangling her hands and arms—and still she fought. In the struggle McTaggart stumbled over the body of Baree, and they went down. Nepeese was up fully five seconds ahead of the man. She could have reached the door. But again it was her hair. She paused to fling back the thick masses of it so that she could see, and McTaggart was at the door ahead of her.

He did not look it again, but stood facing her. His face was scratched and bleeding. He was no longer a man but a devil. Nepeese was broken, panting—a low sobbing came with her breath. She bent down, and picked up a piece of firewood. McTaggart could see that her strength was almost gone.

She clutched the stick as he approached her again. But McTaggart had lost all thought of fear or caution. He sprang upon her like an animal. The stick of firewood fell. And again fate played against the girl. In her terror and hopelessness she had caught up the first stick her hand had touched—a light one. With her last strength she struck at McTaggart with it, and as it fell on his head, he staggered back. But it did not make him loose his hold.

Dan Beard Organized American Boy Scouts

The experiences of Lieut. Gen. Sir Robert S. S. Baden Powell of the British army with boys as messengers during the Boer war in South Africa so impressed him that he came later to devote almost his entire time to work with boys. He organized the boy scouts in England, and from there the movement spread to most other countries, and the membership has grown until it now includes millions of boys.

"The boys' general," however, freely acknowledged his debt to movements of a similar character in the United States. And so, although the Boy Scouts of America were not incorporated until 1910, which was some little time after the British organization had been formed, the scouts in this country really date to a boys' organization founded by Daniel Carter Beard—Dan Beard—about 1905. This body became, with another founded by Ernest Thompson Seton, the foundation of the American scouts.

"Packing Industry"

From the beginning pork was salted down and packed in barrels, hence arose the name now given the meat industry. It is more or less a misnomer today because it applies in a greater degree to the industries of fruit and vegetable canning where packing in containers is an important feature.

INFORMATION ABOUT COTTON PICKERS

About 75 farmers were present at a meeting of the farmers in the court house at Clarendon last Saturday, at which time several problems dealing with the gathering of the cotton this fall were discussed.

Jess Davis and Secretary A T
 Holcomb of the Clarendon Chamber of Commerce sent out more than 200 letters urging farmers to come in and settle on some of the questions that had been sent to the secretary's office by C. W.
 Woodman of Ft Worth who has charge of the Federal Farm Labor Division of the U S Department of Labor.

Many dollars were wasted last year by farmers and others in trying to bring pickers to Donley county, and the plans this year will stop this waste to a great extent.

It was the consensus of opinion that the crop will be ready about the last of September, and that $1.00 a hundred with board and $1.25 without board would be a tentative price to expect to pay for the first picking.

Several farmers said that they could use Mexicans, others can use negroes, while others expressed a desire to use single hands.

Mr. Woodman of Ft. Worth is urging the Chambers of Commerce everywhere to not publish the immense calls for laborers, but to handle the calls thru his office, so that the pickers will not get confused. When different farmers from the same county go to Ft Worth and offer different prices and inducements, it causes the laborers to wait, thinking that prices will be better soon.

The farmers of the county are asked to send their names, telephone numbers, distance and direction of the farms from Clarendon, kind of pickers, whether single hands, negroes, Mexicans or white families can be used.
 As soon as this information is in the hands of the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce he can tell wherever the help is needed and can place the pickers as fast as they are brought into Clarendon.

All the Secretaries along the route from Ft Worth out here are planning to co operate with each other to see that the pickers do not congest at any point, but are gradually distributed as the season for picking comes in along the route.

Every farmer who expects to get pickers of any description from outside of the county is urged to call, see, or write to the Secretary, giving the information asked for above, so that no one will be left out in the distribution of pickers.
