FIRST MEETING P. T. A. FOR NEW SCHOOL YEAR

The first meeting of the Parent Teachers Association was held Sept. 9, 1926. In spite of the threatening weather the number out was certainly encouraging, as so many of the "old faithfuls" were back to take up their duty in making the Parent Teachers Association a success this year. Besides old members whom we learned to depend upon, we were delighted to see new faces that had not before been active members. We are very glad to welcome them and others who may yet avail themselves of the opportunity of meeting the teachers and learning the person that has their child in charge for so many hours per week for nine months each year.

You have a chance to learn your neighbors better. There is a chance of co-operation with each other and with the teachers for the best interest of every child in the school. Sometimes the parents suggest things that had never come to the attention of the teachers. Sometimes the teachers present subjects in a different light than you have been used to think of it. Then there is that mutual understanding the one with the other.

Let us have forgotten during these busy months since the election of officers the names of the officers, we will re-announce the names. They are:

Mrs. Tom Trent, President
Mrs. Frank Kendall, Assistant to the President
Mrs. Elvia Davenport, 1st V. P.
Mrs. R. W. Seales, 2nd V. P.
Mrs. R. L. Snider, 3rd V. P.
Mrs. Mary Reast, Rec. Secy.
Miss Elva Horne, Cor. Secy.
Mrs. J. P. Alexander, Treas.

Remember that your presence is always met with an encouraged response. You can encourage us on in our efforts or point out our errors and set us in the paths that we should go. If you see anything amiss do not sit there mum and go off grumbling. If you sit mum while there, go on home and still remain mum. Home is not the place to say "So and so should have been done, or so and so should not have been done." It is your school. If it is not the best, help us to make it what it should be.

Cor. Secy.

LAYING PIPE ON OUR WATERWORKS PLANT

Hedley's Waterworks System is entitled to front page position this week. The big ditching machine is here, along with several cars of pipe and other material. The pipe has been unloaded and placed along the streets, and we understand ditching and pipe laying operations started yesterday.

A waterworks system in operation before Christmas! It's almost too good to be true.

COTTON PICKING IS GETTING UNDER WAY

The cotton harvesting season is here again. Hedley gins have turned out something like forty to fifty bales, and the staple is beginning to open up pretty generally.

The crop in this territory is looking fine, and by next week cotton farmers and ginners will be hittin' the ball early and late—weather permitting.

A shipment of Wagon Sheets and Tents to arrive this week at Kendall's. Money saving prices.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Mexican Catholics Ask a Truce and Reform of the Constitution.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
 MEXICAN Catholics are now seeking a compromise of their controversy with the government. The episcopal committee, made up of archbishops and bishops, last week presented to President Calles a petition for suspension of the religious laws pending constitutional reform "so that worship, education and charity may from now on enjoy due guarantees."

The committee denies that the priests were rebellious in suspending public worship in the churches, and says they have given proof of their respect for the law as far as their consciences permit. The petition continues: "We answer the charge of not having petitioned for reform of the constitution by stating that the governors, for one reason or another, did not enforce the objectionable clauses, so we are not called upon to demand a repeal of the clauses, which were a dead letter. Similar action with regard to the constitution of 1917 we considered less called for since President Carranza himself qualified them (the religious clauses) as unjust and uncalled for and proposed the reform of certain articles that are contrary to liberties claimed by the Mexican Catholic people.

"These were not effected because of events known. Nor did General Obregon urge compliance with the objectionable laws. So we had no reason to object.

"Now, animated by a most sincere patriotism, desirous of a true and lasting peace, we ask you to use your influence to reform said articles, effectively, and also the penal prescriptions lately sanctioned.

"As a basis for this reform, we request full independence of church and state, so that the constitution and organic laws and regulations be faithfully interpreted; that the state dictate no laws prescribing any religious or legislative matters, as, for example, the fixing of the number of priests, or imposing conditions on the exercise of the ministry, etc.

"This is the true conception of civil law as observed among people faithfully respecting the independence of spiritual and temporal power. Accordingly, we ask the following liberties, to which we are entitled as Christians and citizens of a cultured nation and as men: Liberty of conscience, of thought, of worship, of instruction, of association, of press—all without onerous restrictions destroying the substance of the constitutional principles."

Though the Catholic authorities have repeatedly asserted that they do not countenance any revolutionary attempts, the government agents say they have uncovered extensive plans for rebellion, and scores of arrests were made. The one actual attempt at revolution so far was scotched by agents of the Department of Justice of the United States when they nabbed Gen. Enrique Estrada and more than 150 of his followers near San Diego, Calif., on charges of violating the neutrality laws. The band of insurgents had an armored truck, machine guns, rifles and lots of ammunition and was on its way to cross the border.

Secretary of State Kellogg, calling on the President at White Pine camp, told him of his discussion with the leaders of the Knights of Columbus who had presented that order's demand for intervention in the Mexican dispute. Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Kellogg were in complete agreement that no grounds exist for such intervention or for any variation of the administration's policy of dealing with the Calles government.

There has been but one specific complaint of infringement of American property rights in the church embargo, and not any complaints of bodily injuries to American citizens. The administration, it appears, has not felt warranted in interceding to prevent the expulsion of American clericals from Mexico, inasmuch as these expulsion measures have applied to all foreign clericals alike.

In the controversy over confiscatory oil lands the President is satisfied that the Mexican government has made large concessions.

SECRETARY KELLOGG took occasion, in a speech at Plattsburg, N. Y., to state the administration's attitude toward the Geneva preliminary arms limitation conference, and the government cabled the full text to American diplomatic missions in all major capitals. Dealing with published reports that the United States might withdraw from the Geneva deliberations, which have been complicated by efforts of the French and other delegations to have a limitation formula which would cover land and sea forces, aircraft and even national economic resources and possibly man power, Mr. Kellogg declared that "we are now working to make the Geneva meeting a success," and expressed hope that "progress towards naval limitation, as well as towards limitation of land armament, will result."

He made it clear that "what we desire is results," but left the door open, if the Geneva meeting should adjourn without constructive action looking toward reduction of military burdens, for the Washington government to initiate a conference among great naval powers with a view to extending the scope of the Washington limitation agreements.

YET another result of Mr. Kellogg's conference with the President was the decision to ask the Canadian government to receive American officials for discussion of a plan whereby the supply of bootleg liquor from Canadian sources can be completely shut off. The proposed agreement would permit American prohibition forces to arrest liquor smugglers wherever smuggling was attempted. It was given out that the President was determined that national prohibition, being the law, should be enforced to the limit of the government's power. Gen. L. C. Andrews has been persuaded to continue in office at least until the present congress ends. He believes the agreement he negotiated with the British will stop the smuggling of liquor from British possessions, and he expects congress to amend the Volstead act so the diversion of industrial alcohol to beverage purposes can be prevented.

WITHOUT waiting for the return of Carmel Thompson, his personal investigator in the Philippines, President Coolidge has made it known that he still does not regard the Filipinos as capable of independence at this time. He believes that they should make political advancement before being trusted to govern themselves. But that the United States will be justified in granting them independence eventually, he has no doubt.

POINCARRE'S government in France, of which Ambassador Herrick, home on vacation, speaks most optimistically, is putting into effect its retrenchment program, the first step being to cut down the wheat importations to the extent of 28,000,000 bushels the ensuing year. Dr. Andre Queuille, minister of agriculture, told the cabinet that by increasing the percentage of whole wheat in flour the country could dispense with 5,000,000 bushels this coming year. A further saving of 23,000,000 bushels will be effected by the obligatory use of 10 per cent of other cereals in bread-making.

WHEN Julius Rosenwald, Chicago capitalist, was in Europe recently he was immensely interested in the famous Deutsches Industrial museum in Munich, and determined that his city should have a similar institution. Accordingly, last week he gathered together a number of Chicago's leading men and announced that he would give $3,000,000 to equip such a museum, to be located in the Fine Arts building in Jackson park, a World's fair structure whose reconstruction has been provided for at a cost of $5,000,000. Mr. Rosenwald's guests were enthusiastic over the project and gave assurance of financial and moral support that makes it carrying out a certainty. The museum with all its industrial exhibits in-

Two Women Find Health Essential to Happiness

MRS. BELLE THOMPSON ROUTE 2, ROSSVILLE, GEORGIA

"My mother-in-law," says Mrs. Belle Thompson, Route 2, Rossville, Ga., "told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I took six bottles of the Vegetable Compound. I could sleep and would get up in the morning singing and feeling fine. I am the mother of three children, and always after the babies came I had to take treatments, but I can truly say that this last time I have only used the Sanative Wash. It does more good than the treatments. It keeps me on my feet to care for my children and I do most of my work. I feel it my duty to let you know how both of the medicines have helped me."

Another Happy Woman

Decatur, Illinois—"I took your medicine for weakness. I would sometimes have to hold myself up with my hands. I was this way for five years, off and on. I read in the newspapers where Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped a lot of women, and I thought I would take it. I am now getting better so fast that every month I can feel a difference. My work now is cooking. If you like, you may use these facts as a testimonial. I am willing to help you boost your medicine."—Mrs. IANYS REYN, 635 Greenwood Ave., Decatur, Ill.
 This dependable medicine has been in use for over fifty years.

Springtime streamed in through the open windows. The green fields of Georgia were basking in the sunshine. Somewhere a bird was trilling. It was a day to be happy.
 But the pale woman at the table sighed and pushed away her plate. Nothing tasted right. She couldn't eat much. She couldn't sleep well, either. She was so weak, it was hard to do her work. When the baby cried, she wanted to cry, too.
 She had not been well for four years. Her husband watched her with a man's helpless expression. But his mother knew a remedy.

Dr. W. C. Rountree, Texarkana, Texas.
Dear Doctor—I had Pellagra five years. I was nervous, had stomach trouble, rash on hands and arms, skin itched and turned brown, sore mouth, could not eat or sleep, lost weight and got awful weak. I tried many treatments. Took Hypodermics six months, got no relief. I took 3 of your treatments and was well of Pellagra. I wish I could influence every one who has this terrible disease to write you.

AT THE METHODIST CHURCH

Sunday School at 9:45
Preaching at 11:00.
Leagues at 6:30.
Preaching services at 7:30

The contest between the Hedley Methodist Sunday School and the Roby Methodist Sunday School is to begin next Sunday. This was arranged by Mr. Culwell during the meeting. Bro. Yeats is pastor at Roby, as you know. The two churches and schools are right evenly matched in numbers; their regular attendance has been about the same as ours. It is just at Rally and Promotion time, and each school is needing to pick up in attendance. So we are planning to begin with next Sunday morning and run through the first Sunday in November. The contest is as follows: Each pupil or officer or teacher who is present counts 10 points, and each penny in the collection counts 1 point in the contest. A report is to be made in the paper each week of each school's standing. Let's start out with a good lead next Sunday. Each new pupil counts 10 points also.

My theme for the morning service is to be "Evangelism or Revivalism, Do We Need Both?" I think I have some things to say on this that will be helpful in advancing the Kingdom; and surely some things are needed in some way different from what we have been doing. I want to lead you in the study of some problems and conditions that we face.

At 6:30 we want to ask the High School pupils who affiliate with the Methodist church to meet at the church for the purpose of organizing a High School Epworth League. Plans will be discussed then, and further announcements made later.

At 7:30 the service will be in charge of a group from Clarendon College. The following is a brief outline of the program:

Music by the Glee Club under direction of Mr. Grover Morris.
Solo, Miss Josephine Pounds.
Readings, Miss Farmer, teacher of Expression.
Address by Dean Condon.
You are cordially invited to attend each of these services.

THE DALLAS NEWS TO OFFER BARGAIN

We are in receipt of a letter from The Dallas News, stating that its Third Annual Reduced Rates Offer will be announced not later than December 1st. Once a year The Dallas News offers its readers an opportunity to make a substantial saving on yearly subscriptions. This is a sort of Christmas present from The Dallas News to its readers. Last year and the year before, practically all of the old subscribers availed themselves of this opportunity, and thousands of new readers were added.

Among other things The News stated that it maintains the highest priced news gathering organization in the Southwest. Its ten leased wires, aided by an army of regular and special correspondents, bring the news from all parts of America and the remote corners of foreign lands.

This news, concerning the big State newspaper, which has meant so much to the growth of Texas, will be of interest to the entire reading public.

PUGILISM, rough-neck among the arts, has played the role of she-wolf to the present-day Remus and Romulus of the arts—the movies and the radio. A prize fight on St. Patrick's day, 1897, nursed back to health the struggling motion-picture infant that was to become a giant among the industries of the world. And a prize fight on July 2, 1921, gave new life and vigor to that scientific youngster “wireless,” and almost overnight put radio broadcasting on an organized basis.

The court of public opinion long ago tore the screen from its low-brow foster mother by prohibiting the transportation of fight pictures in interstate commerce. But the child was already strong and no longer required parental aid. How long a careful society will permit the broadcast- ing of prize fights is another matter.

Thirty years ago the movies were wide open. Nearly anything that would draw spectators could be exhibited. At that time the art was barely seven years old, but the novelty of “living pictures” per se was beginning to wane. All the pictures were short, incoherent things. Little or no attempt had been made to tell a story, and the public, tired of seeing hooch dancers squirm through a couple of hundred feet of jerky film or the midnight run of the fire fighters, was ready to forget the screen.

In the autumn of 1895, the freckled Bob Fitzsimmons challenged James J. Corbett to do battle for the world's heavyweight championship. Enoch J. Rector and Samuel J. Tilden, pioneer film producers, had made arrangements with Corbett, the champion, for the film rights. At first it was planned to stage the bout in Texas, but the promoters got into difficulties with the law, and the affair was called off. Disgusted, Corbett handed his belt over to Peter Maher.

Rector, with $15,000 of motion picture rights at stake, began to get active, and before long a bout was arranged between Fitzsimmons and Maher to take place in Mexico across the Texas line. The date was set for February 21, 1896. Four ponderous cameras, electrically operated, were at the ringside. But a breath of wind arose in the south with a fresh smell of moisture. The country was parched, rainless for 18 burning months. Now rain came. The skies were dark, and a slow drizzle set in. Photography was impossible, but a trainload of fight fans demanded action. The fighters went into the ring while the cameras stood helplessly by. Fitzsimmons sparred with Maher for two flashing moments, then knocked him through the ropes, and out.

This pictorial fiasco emphasized the limitations of the early motion picture equipment. Rector, who had been using Edison cameras, sought an instrument which could be operated by hand. Before long fight fans began to clamor for Corbett to resume and defend the world's championship title which had been knocked out of the ring by Fitzsimmons in the Mexican fizzle. Promoters began to look around for a place in which to hold the fracas, but public opinion and politics barred them everywhere. In desperate last resort they went to Nevada and camped, lobbying for a bill through the legislature.

By the terms of his agreement, Rector was to pay Corbett and his manager, William A. Brady, today known as a theatrical magnate, 25 per cent of the proceeds of the pictures. With Fitzsimmons and his manager, Rector had made an agreement to hand them $13,000 when the fighters entered the ring. Hearing of the Corbett per- centage deal, Fitzsimmons screamed that he had been tricked. The whole deal was off.

Fitzsimmons went away to Carson City, Nev., with Rector and the promoters in pursuit. Peace was made on a basis which gave Fitzsimmons also a 25 per cent out of the picture profits.

Corbett and Fitzsimmons went into the ring at Carson City on March 17, 1897. Rector was at the ringside with three cameras and 48,000 feet of film, the largest single lot of negative that had ever gone out on location.

The fight went its vicious and bloody length, with Mrs. Fitzsimmons cheering her husband to victory. When the fight was over, Rector had exposed 11,000 feet of film, a world's record.

Rector and his partner, Tilden, were not yet sure of an avenue to the market for their picture, but they finally decided to present it in New York and market it territorially themselves. A projector was installed in the New York Academy of Music in Fourteenth street, where the picture ran through the summer. This was the first film

Invasion of the famous old Academy, dedicated to the ancient arts, and redolent with the memories of Pietro Bragoni, Ole Bull, and the names of Max Strakosch and Maurice Grau.

From the Academy the pictures were taken to the Park theater in Brooklyn. The Brooklyn Eagle of July 4, 1897, indulged in a column of editorial excitement beginning:

The man who would have predicted, at one time in our history, that an event of a prior month would be reproduced before the eyes of a multi- tude in pictures that moved like life, and that electricity would move them and light them, would have been avoided as a lunatic or hanged as a wizard.

Meanwhile the fight films were appearing all over the country, presented by buyers of territorial rights from Rector & Tilden.

The firm of Rector & Tilden with its fight pic- tures was the first to encounter one of the evils which later beset the picture industry with devastating piracy. According to Terry Ramsaye's “A Million and One Nights: The History of the Motion Picture” (Simon & Schuster, New York), to which the writer is indebted for the film history of this article, Pennsylvania politicians snatched at the agitation of the W. C. T. U. as a pretext for a special legislative bill to prohibit the showing of the fight films. Word presently was passed around that the bill would be permitted to die in committee if a certain exhibitor in Phila- delphia were to get the picture.

The gross sales on the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight amounted to $150,000, giving each of the participants in the profits about $90,000 each. The gate receipts at Carson City, a record for their time, were only $22,000, or less than a tenth of the picture takings. No other picture had ever approached such a figure.

“Here was a prophetic event,” Mr. Ramsaye says, “a prophecy of the motion-picture millions which were yet to come. But it was uninterpreted and unheeded. The camera was still merely a reporter. It took what happened and passed it on. The conception of having things happen specifically for the camera in terms of the great film spectacles of today was beyond the scope of picture makers' imaginations then. The only thing which fight pictures suggested was more fight pictures.

“One marked effect of the Corbett-Fitzsimmons picture as the outstanding screen production of its day was to bring the odium of pugilism upon the screen all across Puritan America. Until that picture appeared the social status of the screen had been uncertain. It now became definitely low-brow, an entertainment of the great unwashed commonalty. This likewise made it a mark for uplifters, moralists, reformers and legislators in a degree which never would have obtained if the screen had by specialization reached higher social strata.”

The scene changes from Carson City, Nev., to Jersey City, N. J. It is July 2, 1921, 24 years later. Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight cham- pion, and Georges Carpentier, French challenger, are socking each other in the arena at Boyle's Thirty Acres.

Standing at the ringside is a man who care- fully watches every movement of the fighters, at the same time talking into a tin can. And as the men sweat or clinch or stall, the observer puts their action into words. From Maine to Maryland fight fans hundreds of miles away hear these words spoken at the ringside. A scientific wonder brings blow by blow news to 300,000 persons, most of whom are hearing radio for the first time.

This was the beginning of organized broad- casting, as told by Maj. J. Andrew White, original impresario of the air, to the New York Herald-Tribune.

“Organized broadcasting was founded on the initial success achieved in putting the Dempsey- Carpentier fight on the air. Or, more accurately, it was that event which precipitated it. Broad- casting would have come along, but just when, nobody can say. But the 300,000 persons who heard broadcasting and liked it forced the issue. They immediately wanted radio and radio re- ceivers, and the large electrical concerns cut loose with their resources and brought a new industry and a new art into being overnight.”

As you remember, the movies were drifting in the doldrums of growing public apathy when the Corbett-Fitzsimmons film brought new life to the screen. Radio, the sport of a few scattered amate- urs, also was beginning to flop, according to Major White, editor of a radio magazine.

“In March, 1921, business in radio was practical- ly at a standstill; the only receiver sales at that time were of very small volume and consisted of parts sold to a few experimenters, and these had fallen off so that advertising patronage for my magazine was practically nil. Something had to be done to move the dealers' supplies.

“The liveliest issue in the public mind at the time was the forthcoming battle of the century between Dempsey and Carpentier, the advance publicity for which was then in full swing. I decided upon hitching my wobbly wagon to that particular ascending star, to drag forth the neg- lected radio baby, and set it down in the spotlight where public attention would be focused.”

The whole scheme of broadcasting originated in an office memorandum prepared in 1914, Major White says. This memorandum was prepared in the old Marconi days by David Sarnoff, who since has become vice president and general manager of the Radio Corporation of America, and was submitted for comment and suggestions to Major White, who in addition to his magazine work was in charge of Marconi public relations. The World war postponed any action on the broad- casting idea, and the memorandum had to wait until March, 1921.

“Arrangements were made with Tex Rickard, promoter of the fight, before I broke the news to Sarnoff,” Major White recalls. “He fell in with the idea and dug into an inactive spot in the budget and produced an appropriation of $2,500— which, I recall, he turned over to me with the strict admonition: ‘But don't you spend more than $1,500, remember!’

“My idea was to have the broadcasting received in halls and theaters in cities and towns through- out the Middle Atlantic states. The plan was to have amateurs do the receiving in the appointed auditoriums in their own neighborhoods and make the fight description audible to the audi- ences gathered together for that sole purpose. Well, first of all, there were practically no loud speakers in existence then—imagine that! Ear- phone arrangements such as are used by the deaf had to be improvised into loud speakers by attaching them to old tin tin horns which were relics of the early days of the phonograph.

“Throughout the stretch of many weary weeks this work of organization continued. Lining up the theaters was a herculean job, but finally done. “Each day the situation became more com- plicated. Funds to carry out the ambitious project were very sparse, and one of the early snags was a matter of $8,000 demanded to erect towers for the transmitters at Boyle's Thirty Acres in Jersey City. This alone was more than five times the actual money I had at my disposal, so something else had to be done. The something else consisted of getting the use of the towers of the Lackawanna railroad at Hoboken, and con- necting up the intervening distance by land wire.

“Finally we had a transmitter and towers and a receiving network. Testing began. Days went by a week; and we were getting seriously near July 2, but had been heard only a distance of three or four miles, and then only faintly. The testing had to be done late at night, for in those days receivers were not selective as they now are, and the harbor was filled with ships whose wireless telegraph messages must not be gunned up by our spoken words. As night after night went by and amateurs all along the eastern sea- board were unable to pick up our tests a deluge of frantic communications swamped my office. By long-distance phone, telegraph and special deliv- ery I was informed that things were getting panicky; posters were up in front of theaters and auditoriums inviting the public in, and here only a few days off was the fight, and no radio to be heard.

“Everything smoothed out at the last minute, as everybody knows now, though. The night before the fight the transmitter was heard from Maine to Maryland; haggard and worn from loss of sleep our little group took up places at the ringside and at the transmitter, and at the close of the thrilling hot afternoon of July 2, 1921, re- ports were pouring in from all quarters—suc- cess! “And it was a success way beyond my expecta- tions. An elaborate report system had been de- vised and the tabulation showed that more than 300,000 people had heard the fight description, practically all of them had heard radio for the first time. The dealers' shelves were swept clean of radio parts; an overnight demand had sprung up for thousands of radio receivers; the boom was on.”

AROUND THE HOME

By MARGARET BRUCE

Household Research

Every time that one of the little articles in this home-making series deals with some new device or convenience for the housewife, I receive a great sheaf of letters from readers inquiring where the article may be obtained. I am nearly always able to give a prompt answer, giving the name and address of the maker.

Now, there is no mystery or secret about this. My sources of information are open to every woman in this country, if she will but look through the advertising columns of the magazines and newspapers. The first step that any manufacturer takes to create a demand for his product is to broadcast advertisements of it. Such "ads" generally read: "If your dealer cannot supply it, write us direct." Of course, the dealer, when he keeps getting inquiries about any article, puts it in stock, and there you are!

In many cases these new devices are advertised some time before they appear in the shops. By sending a line, or cutting out a coupon, any reader may obtain an illustrated folder describing the article, and learn its price. This folder can be turned over to the dealer (unless one wishes to order direct), and the article may then be seen before it is bought. The attractive novelties described in this department shortly before Christmas were nearly all so new that they were not yet on the market; that is, they were not yet widely distributed to the shops. By clipping out the advertisement and sending for the printed matter I was able to write an article and give readers the address of the maker in time for them to order the novelties as Christmas gifts. Any woman reader of the magazine might have done this for herself, of course.

This household research is what keeps any home-maker up to the minute and makes her the envy of her neighbors, who wonder how she happens to know all about the newest equipment, odd little accessories, and unusual foods. A two-cent stamp, or even a postcard, will bring full information, and the reader may then buy or not, as she chooses. We must be on the lookout for better utensils, cleansers, special furniture ideas, fabrics, and ingenious mechanical devices. And the advertising column is the treasure chest where we may find all these things.

The Conserve Closet

"What in the world are you doing, Clarisse? You look as if you were putting up your summer preserves, and here it is only the middle of February!" The alert young woman on the threshold looked questioning at the pot of boiling sirup, sniffed the fragrant air, and peered into the array of jelly glasses on the window sill.

"Making orange and grapefruit marmalade this morning," was the reply. "Tomorrow I'm going to make my year's supply of apricot-pineapple marmalade. There's a delicious combination for you, by the way."

"Well, it certainly sounds good. But I never heard of putting up a year's supply of any preserve-closet stuff at this time of year."

"Why, this is the ideal time to make all sorts of marmalades and conserves that can be made without the fresh summer fruits," responded the little housewife. "Oranges and grapefruit are plentiful during the very early spring, and this year they have been cheaper than ever before, it seems to me. I am making some bitter orange marmalade, some grapefruit, and some combined orange and grapefruit."

"Another delectable marmalade, as I just said, is made of dried apricots or peaches (apricots are better, I think), combined with fresh or canned pineapple. To make it I cut up a half-pound of the apricots and soak them overnight. Next morning I drain them and add the grated pulp of one large pineapple or two small ones. Add a cupful or less of water and boil the fruit ten minutes. Then add the sugar—one scant cupful of sugar to one full cupful of fruit—and simmer slowly for an hour or an hour and one-half. Keep the gas very low.

"I put up several dozen of these marmalades during the cold, raw days, when it is a pleasure, instead of a torment to work in the warm kitchen and bend over the boiling fruit. This saves me many hours of hot work during the summer, and fills my shelves with delicious conserves for breakfast and afternoon tea."

THROUGH A WOMAN'S EYES

By JEAN NEWTON

"How Can I Repay?"

A unique letter has just come to me from a reader. It is from a person who is satisfied—a woman who has everything she wants and who is concerned about how to repay!

"I am so happy, God has been so good to me," she writes, "that I should like to do something in some small measure to make up for it. I have a wonderful husband, a beautiful child who has been spared to us after a dangerous illness. My home is what I have always wanted, and my husband is successful. I realize how fortunate I am and I should like to do something to make others a little better off, a little happier.

"If I had great wealth, I should know what to do. Or if I had no duties I should offer my time for service to the needy. However, since my little boy takes most of my time, the one afternoon a week sewing for the poor plus our contributions to the conventional town charities are all we have on the credit side of the ledger. And I feel so keenly that one who is so fortunate as I should do something really worth while, should give tellingly in return."

You are repaying—giving—every day, little woman. Your letter to me is in itself a contribution which will bring pleasure and perhaps something of content to thousands of our readers. In a world of struggle and complaint and discontent, where people are wont to emphasize their difficulties and their miseries and minimize their blessings, just to know that someone is satisfied and happy and tingling, as you do, with the joy and the majesty of life, is like having wafted into a heat and dirt-ridden back street the cool fragrance of an exquisite garden.

You may not have wealth to endow great charities, nor freedom to give yourself in daily service. But you have much to give that is no less vital and worth while.

You can give of your spirit to less buoyant travelers you meet along the road. You have courage and cheer and stamina to give and the red corpuscles of the winner to share with those who are weaker in the fight. As you would give of your substance and your service, if those you love were in need, so to the whole human family with whom you feel kinship you can give of the fullness of what you have. Much of your great wealth lies in your appreciation, your consciousness of the good, the beauty, the joy that has been given up. Share that appreciation with those who lack it—and you will be giving beyond the worth of pearls and rubies. Among those you meet there will be many who have much to be thankful for, but for whom the sun is obliterated by the tiny clouds which line almost every sky. Help them to see.

A Letter From Daddy

Last Sunday was the first Sunday that Dickie Stevenson ever spent without his dad. The sad truth is that his daddy died a few days before, and the little house through which he used to romp with Dickie will see him no more. But Dickie is not sad, for, though he didn't have his daddy with him, he did have a letter from him. And he'll have another every year for sixteen years, until he is twenty-one.

In the home where Dickie and his mother now live alone there is a tiny mailbox which plays a part in the pathetic plan of a loving father to heal the heart of his child. Once a year on his birthday for the next sixteen years the boy will find in this box a letter from the dad who, though separated from him by death, would live in his heart. Once a year will come fresh hope and cheer to the child bewildered by the absence of the daddy who had never forgotten him. Once a year will come renewed proof that daddy lives, somewhere, and is reaching out his hand in love and devotion to that little boy. Once a year will come the satisfying joy that was that boy's yesterday when gleefully holding a faded rose he explained that "Daddy sent it to me in a letter. I'll get another letter, too, next year, when I'm six!"

As the years pass and an older Dickie realizes the pathetic ruse conceived of a great heart and a great love of him, he will still find in the little mailbox and its yearly gift the comfort of an undying devotion and the inspiration of a great tradition. For to have had such a father, to have been the object of a love which would span even the Great Divide is inspiration enough to lead any man or boy to heights.

And although thought of himself doubtless did not enter his mind, it is a great monument that Dickie's father has left in his mailbox. It is a monument to a great father, and therefore a great man, a father whose vision of his responsibility to his son went outside the conventional lines of disciplinarian and payer of bills!

Life on Other Planets

The question as to whether there is life on Venus or not cannot be answered definitely. Dr. C. G. Abbot of the Smithsonian Institution says that it seems more probable that life corresponding to life on the earth exists on Venus than on Mars. The conditions on Venus are similar to those on earth, while Mars probably differs in many ways.

FISHER DESIGN SETS THE PACE

The pace set by Fisher—and exemplified in the beautiful new General Motors cars now commanding public attention—is the guide for the entire motor industry.

Fisher's vast experience, Fisher inventiveness and Fisher's unapproached facilities devise and perfect the beauties, comforts and conveniences which attract you to the leading new cars in all price classes—Cadillac, Buick, Chevrolet, Oakland, Oldsmobile and Pontiac.

For instance, Fisher achieves a new degree of safety—and nothing less than a Body by Fisher can approach it even after seasons of striving.

Fisher leads the way in luxurious fittings and decorations—and all the industry follows.

Fisher creates new standards of beauty in line and finish—and those standards are the measure of value for all of the world's cars.

It is easy to see, therefore, why the foremost of the new cars in all price classes carry the emblem—Body by Fisher.

And easy to understand why buyers the world over proclaim as the hallmark of quality that same magic symbol—Body by Fisher.

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS HOUSE PAINT SWP

How SWP cuts painting cost

The only way to buy paint economically is to forget gallon price and figure costs by area covered and years of life. SWP covers one-third more area than paints which are cheaper per gallon. It lasts twice as long without repainting, so requires half the material and costs half the labor price (for painting and repainting).

So price per gallon means nothing. Area covered, weather resistance, and years of life are the real things that determine price economy. On that basis SWP is the cheapest per-gallon outside paint you could buy. SWP has been the leading prepared house paint for half a century. You will find a complete line of it at our store. Let us figure with you on your house-painting.

BARÉE, Son of Kazan

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

WNU Service

It was a wonderfully clear night after the storm—cold and brilliant, with the shadows standing out as clearly as living things. The third idea came to Barée now. He was, like all animals, largely of one idea at a time—a creature with whom all lesser impulses were governed by a single leading impulse. And this impulse, in the glow of the starlit night, was to reach as quickly as possible the first of Pierrot's two cabins on the trap-line. There he would find Nepeese!

We won't call the process by which Barée came to this conclusion a process of reasoning; instinct or reasoning, whatever it was, a fixed and positive faith came to Barée just the same. He began to miss the traps in his haste to cover distance—to reach the cabin.

It was twenty-five miles from Pierrot's burned home to the first trap-cabin, and Barée had made ten of these by nightfall. The remaining fifteen were the most difficult. In the open spaces the snow was belly-deep and soft; frequently he plunged through drifts in which for a few moments he was buried.

Three times during the early part of the night Barée heard the savage dirge of the wolves. Once it was a wild paean of triumph as the hunters pulled down their kill less than half a mile away in the deep forest. But the voice no longer called to him. It was repellent—a voice of hatred and of treachery. Each time that he heard it he stopped in his tracks and snarled, while his spine stiffened.

At midnight Barée came to the tiny amphitheater in the forest where Pierrot had cut the logs for the first of his trap-line cabins. For at least a minute Barée stood at the edge of the clearing, his ears very alert, his eyes bright with hope and expectation, while he sniffed the air. There was no smoke, no sound, no light in the one window of the log shack. His disappointment fell on him even as he stood there; again he sensed the fact of his aloneness, of the barrenness of his quest. There was a disheartened slouch to his body as he made his way through the snow to the cabin door. He had traveled twenty-five miles, and he was tired.

The snow was drifted deep at the doorway, and here Barée sat down and whined. It was no longer the anxious, questing whine of a few hours ago. Now it voiced hopelessness and a deep despair. For half an hour he sat shivering with his back to the door and his face to the starlit wilderness, as if there still remained the feeble hope that Nepeese might follow after him over the trail. Then he burrowed himself a hole deep in the snowdrift and passed the remainder of the night in uneasy slumber.

With the first light of day Barée resumed the trail. He was not so alert this morning. There was the disconsolate droop to his tail which the Indians call the Akoosewin—the sign of the sick dog. And Barée was sick—not of body but of soul. The keenness of his hope had died, and he no longer expected to find the Willow. The second cabin at the far end of the trap-line drew him on, but it inspired in him none of the enthusiasm with which he had hurried to the first. He traveled slowly and spasmodically, his suspicious of the forests again replacing the excitement of his quest. He approached each of Pierrot's traps and deadfalls cautiously, and twice he showed his fangs—once at a warbler that snapped at him from under a root where it had dragged the trap in which it was caught, and the second time at a big snowy owl that had come to steal bait and was now a prisoner at the end of a steel chain. It may be that Barée thought it was Oohoomisew and that he still remembered vividly the treacherous assault and fierce battle of that night when, as a puppy, he was dragging his sore and wounded body through the mystery and fear of the big timber. For he did more than to show his fangs. He tore the owl into pieces.

There were plenty of rabbits in Pierrot's traps, and Barée did not go hungry. He reached the second trap-line cabin late in the afternoon, after ten hours of traveling. He met with no very great disappointment here, for he had not anticipated very much. The snow had banked this cabin even higher than the other. It lay three feet deep against the door, and the window was white with a thick coating of frost. At this place, which was close to the edge of a big barren, and unsheltered by the thick forests farther back, Pierrot had built a shelter for his firewood, and in this shelter Barée made his temporary home. All the next day he remained somewhere near the end of the trap-line, skirting the edge of the barren and investigating the short side line of a dozen traps which Pierrot and Nepeese had strung through a swamp in which there had been many signs of lynx. It was the third day before he set out on his return to the Gray Loon.

He did not travel very fast, spending two days in covering the twenty-five miles between the first and the second trap-line cabins. At the second cabin he remained for three days, and it was on the ninth day that he reached the Gray Loon. There was no change. There were no tracks in the snow but his own, made nine days ago.

Barée's quest for Nepeese became now more or less involuntary, a sort of daily routine. For a week he made his burrow in the dog-coral, and at least twice between dawn and darkness he would go to the birch-bark topee and the chasm. His trail, soon beaten hard in the snow, became as fixed as Pierrot's trap-line.

And then, of a sudden, Barée made a change. He spent a night in the topee. After that, whenever he was at the Gray Loon, during the day he always slept in the topee. The two blankets were his bed—and they were a part of Nepeese. And there, all through the long winter, he waited.

The winter passed, and spring came, and still Barée continued to haunt his old trails, even going now and then over the old trap-line as far as the first of the two cabins. The traps were rusted and sprung now; the thawing snow disclosed bones and feathers between their jaws; under the deadfalls were remnants of fur, and out on the ice of the lakes were picked skeletons of foxes and wolves that had taken the poison-baits. The last snow went. The swollen streams sang in the forests and canyons. The grass turned green, and the first flowers came.

All these things were happening, and the birds had mated and nested, and still Nepeese did not come! And at last something broke inside of Barée, his last hope, perhaps, his last dream; and one day he bade good-bye to the Gray Loon.

No one can say what it cost him to go; no one can say how he fought against the things that were holding him to the topee, the old swimming-pool, the familiar paths in the forest, and the two graves that were not so lonely now under the tall spruce. He went. He had no reason—simply went. It may be that there is a Master whose hand guides the beast as well as the man, and that we know just enough of this guidance to call it instinct. For, in dragging himself away, Barée faced the Great Adventure.

It was there, in the north, waiting for him—and into the north he went.

It was early in August when Barée left the Gray Loon. He had no objective in view. But there was still left upon his mind, like the delicate impression of light and shadow on a negative, the memories of his earlier days. Things and happenings that he had almost forgotten recurred to him, as his trail led him farther and farther away from the Gray Loon; and his earlier experiences became real again, pictures thrown out afresh in his mind by the breaking of the last ties that held him to the home of the Willow. Involuntarily he followed the trail of these impressions—of these past happenings, and slowly they helped to build up new interests for him. He came to the blind canyon up which Nepeese and Pierrot had chased him. That seemed but yesterday. He entered the little meadow, and stood beside the great rock that had almost crushed the life out of the Willow's body; and then he remembered where Wakayoo, his big bear friend, had died under Pierrot's rifle—and he smelled of Wakayoo's whitened bones where they lay scattered in the green grass, with flowers growing up among them.

And now, for the first time in many weeks, a bit of the old-time eagerness put speed into Barée's feet. Memories that had been hazy and indistinct through forgetfulness were becoming realities again, and as he would have returned to the Gray Loon had Nepeese been there so now, with something of the feeling of a wanderer going home, he returned to the old beaver-pond.

All through the month of August Barée made the beaver-pond his headquarters. At times his excursions kept him away for two or three days at a time. These journeys were always into the north, sometimes a little east and sometimes a little west, but never again into the south. And at last, early in September, he left the beaver-pond for good.

It was almost December when Lerue, a halfbreed from Lac Bain, saw Barée's footprints in freshly fallen snow, and a little later caught a flash of him in the bush.

"Mon Dieu, I tell you his feet are as big as my hand, and he is as black as a raven's wing with the sun on it!" he exclaimed in the Company's store at Lac Bain. "A fox? Non! He is half as big as a bear. A wolf—ou! And black as the devil, M'sieur."

McTaggart was one of those who heard. He was putting his signature in ink to a letter he had written to the Company when Lerue's words came to him. His hand stopped so suddenly that a drop of ink splattered on the letter. Through him there ran a curious shiver as he looked over at the halfbreed. Just then Marie came in. McTaggart had brought her back from her tribe. Her big, dark eyes had a sick look in them, and some of her wild beauty had gone since a year ago.

With scarcely a sound that the others could hear Marie had whispered into the Factor's ear, and folding his letter McTaggart rose quickly and left the store. He was gone an hour. Lerue and the others were puzzled. It was not often that Marie came into the store; it was not often that they saw her at all. She remained hidden in the Factor's log house, and each time that he saw her Lerue thought that her face was a little thinner than the last, and her eyes bigger and hungrier looking. In his own heart there was a great yearning. Many a night he passed the little window beyond which he knew that she was sleeping; often he looked to catch a glimpse of her pale face, and he lived in the one happiness of knowing that Marie understood, and that into her eyes there came for an instant a different light when their glances met. No one else knew. The secret lay between them—and patiently Lerue waited and watched. "Some day," he kept saying to himself—"Some day"—and that was all.

Lerue was thinking of this when McTaggart returned at the end of the hour. The Factor came straight up to where the half dozen of them were seated about the big box stove, and with a grunt of satisfaction shook the freshly fallen snow from his shoulders.

"Pierre Eustach has accepted the government's offer, and is going to guide the map-making party up into the Barrens this winter," he announced. "You know, Lerue—he has a hundred and fifty traps and deadfalls set, and a big poison-bait country. A good line, eh? And I have leased it of him for the season. It will give me the outdoor work I need—three days on the trail, three days here. Eh, what do you say to the bargain?"

"It is good," said Lerue. "Yes, it is good," said Roget. "A wide fox country," said Moss Roule.

"And easy to travel," murmured Valence in a voice that was almost like a woman's.

"Ghost-Fear" Strong Among Real Romanys

If, during a country stroll, you come to a clear-running stream or river, and notice at the bottom a collection of broken crockery, kettles, pans, and so on, you may be sure that a gypsy camp is near, and that a gypsy has died there.

On that day after the funeral of a real Romany, the relations burn all the clothes and other consumable belongings of the dead person. Then all the crockery and utensils are broken and solemnly thrown into the nearest running water.

Behind this queer custom lies "ghost-fear." It is believed that, so long as any of the possessions of a dead gypsy remain intact, his ghost will "walk," and ill-luck and misfortune will dog the camp. Sometimes, so strong is this superstition, even the horse of a dead gypsy is destroyed.

Gypsies never utter the names of the dead, and for a long time after a death will not eat or drink anything that was a favorite with the departed. This is "ghost-fear" again.

Rarely, if ever, are flowers placed on a gypsy's grave. Some little possions are big bowlders into a blazing bonfire until they are very hot, and then they roll them back into their homes, shut the doors and after divesting themselves of clothes, lie on a cot near the bath of a Turkish bath. To top off the bath the "bathers" take a quick and brief plunge into the river for what corresponds to the cold shower of civilization.

Why It Is
"I cannot understand," mused Professor Pate, "how it is that women are almost invariably regarded as superior to men."
"Because they say they are, of course!" promptly replied old Gusman Grimm.—Kansas City Star.

First Baptist Church Notes

Last Sunday morning two classes registered star reports, several fine students were promoted to higher classes and the officers and teachers all seemed happy. One class has grown too large for its teacher, Mrs. Maxey Jackson, and will be divided into two classes next Sunday. She will keep one half of them in her class. The church services were very loyally and prayerfully attended and the messages were apparently appreciated by everyone. Our Sunday School teaches church loyalty. Our night service was made possible by the conclusion of the Methodist revival at the six o'clock hour. We are all happy to know that their revival did much good, and are ready to pledge our hearty cooperation in their meeting again next year.

Next Sunday morning the text will be found in Proverbs 1:24 "Is it wise to refuse to contribute when the Lord's hand is stretched out to us?" The answer is recorded in verses 25-33. For the evening service text we will read Proverbs 17:4. The theme will be "Loosed and Laid Out" Everybody invited to come and worship with us and enjoy our lively music and thirty minutes preaching pep straight to the main point.

J. H. McCauley, Pastor.

CLARENDON COLLEGE IS A SENIOR COLLEGE

The twenty ninth session of Clarendon College opened Tuesday with appropriate ceremonies attending the celebration of the inauguration of the new president, Dr. R. E. L. Morgan, of Ardmore, Okla. and the transition of the college from junior to senior rank.

Dr. J. T. Griswold, president of the Board of Trustees, presided. About 200 distinguished visitors, pastors, presiding elders and laymen of N. W. Texas Conference, ex students and new students, citizens of Clarendon and nearby towns taxed the capacity of the college auditorium.

President Morgan's address was marked by an appreciative tribute to the retiring president, Dr. Geo. E. Slover, and honor was given liberally to other ex-presidents, including Dr. G. S. Hardy of Sweetwater, who was among those present. Dr. Morgan's message enabled the audience to get an inspiring vision of the future of a greater Clarendon College.

Bishop John M. Moore, principal speaker of the occasion, delivered a masterful address. He spoke of the place of the church school, emphasizing the importance of a college education, and stressing the opportunity of a Christian college.

Among the Hedleyans attending the opening exercises were Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Hawkins, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Pool, and Misses Jessie Lee Pool, Flora Curtis, Fay and Nita Gulwell.

A letter from Van Boone requests that we change his address on our mailing list from Glazier to Higgins, where they are now living.
