EVERYBODY BUSY; COTTON ROLLING IN

In contrast to the situation the past week, when rain and mud predominated, our people are unusually active this week.

Work on the water system is going forward rapidly. We are not able to predict as to when the system will likely be completed, but, anyway, that time is nearer than it ever has been before. And that's something.

Farmers and their helpers are busy in the fields. Cotton is coming in steadily. We have not learned the total ginnings here, but there are 330 bales on the yard, which added to the 624 round bales turned out by the Dishman & Beatty gin make 642 bales that we know of—(counting round bales half bales).

The "fly in the ointment" is the price. We hope that will be better soon.

When in need of an Oil Cook Stove, Heater Stove, a good Mattress, Furniture, Monitor Washing Machine, or anything in the shelf line—go to

Guests of the Class were Mrs. Davenport, Mr and Mrs. Snider and Mr. Weaver.

MRS. D. D. DAVIS

Thursday morning, September 30, 1926, at 2:30 o'clock, the Death Angel called to her reward Mrs. D. D. Davis, long time resident of Childress and dearly beloved character.

Margaret Lewis, born October 14, 1849, at Mertkil, Wales, came to America with her parents at the age of five years and settled in Illinois. On May 22, 1872, she was united in marriage to Daniel D. Davis and to this union ten children were born, of which five now survive her. After having lived in Illinois 41 years, they moved to Emporia, Kans., where they resided until 1910, then locating at Childress.

Mrs. Davis was a member of the Presbyterian church since a small child and was a true and faithful Christian, and all who knew her and came in contact with her felt that they had been in the presence of one of His children.

Surviving her are three sons and two daughters: William and Thomas, of Emporia, Kansas; Arthur, of Wichita Falls; Mrs. Mamie Prettyman of Childress, Mrs. Fannie Adams of Hedley. Eight grandchildren, and one brother, G. W. Lewis, of Emporia, Kansas, also survive her. All were present when the end came. The husband preceded her in death, February 1, 1917.

Funeral services were held from the family residence on Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock, by Rev. Garland Shell, assisted by Rev. Jim Sharp. The body was prepared for shipment to Emporia, Kansas, where interment was made.—The Childress Index.

Mother Finds Lost Health

Tanlac Rescues Woman From and Milk Diet, Indigestion, Nervousness, Relieved, Gains Weight.

"I was a mother of 3 children, in Philadelphia, Pa., and I was suffering from indigestion, nervousness, and loss of weight. I had been on a milk diet for some time and I was running a grocery business. My condition was so bad that I had to stop work. I tried an egg and milk diet. But I only became weaker. My nerves were so jumpy that I would be bothered by the slightest noise in the store. I began taking Tanlac. It calmed my nerves, put my stomach in good shape and gave me an appetite. I put on weight. In fact, gained 20 pounds. And the customers who come into the store comment upon the improvement in my appearance. I can certainly recommend Tanlac for nerves and stomach."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Germany Enters the League of Nations and Spain Resigns in Anger.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GERMANY at last is in the League of Nations—and Spain is out of it. The seventh assembly of the league, in Geneva, voted the German republic a member unanimously, and also approved the designation of Germany to a permanent seat in the league council. Forty-eight nations participated in the voting and the applause when the result was announced was long and loud.

In the effort to conciliate Spain and Poland, who had demanded permanent seats, the league leaders planned to create three semi-permanent seats, enlarging the council to that extent. M. Louden of Holland and Doctor Nansen of Norway both criticized this measure, charging that steam-roller tactics were employed. Doctor Nansen expressed surprise at a statement by Doctor Motta of Switzerland that, if the nonpermanent council membership were not augmented, Germany's election might be imperiled. Both speakers, however, admitted that the league crisis must be solved as soon as possible.

Dispatches from Spain, meanwhile, stated that a cabinet council presided over by King Alfonso had agreed that Spain should refuse the semi-permanent seat and resign from the league, and that the letter of notification was drawn up by Primo de Rivera, the dictator, and Foreign Minister Yanguas. It reproached the league for lack of consideration shown to Spain—her prestige, traditions, and importance as the mother country of 29 Latin-American nations who speak the same language. Official statement of this action was delayed. Of course, Spain's resignation does not take effect until after two years have elapsed, but it is supposed she will not participate in the league's activities in the interim.

The German delegation arrived at Geneva, and the last action was taken admitting the republic to the league. The Teutons were headed by Foreign Minister Stresemann and had with them a number of advisers.

At the council session a project was adopted for a settlement of 120,000 Bulgarian refugees who have been forced out of various Balkan states. A loan of $12,000,000 is called for by the scheme. M. Coolamano of Greece protested that Bulgaria is preparing to construct a strategic railway paralleling the Greek frontier. He said the railroad is to serve for military purposes and the rapid mobilization and transfer of troops in case of hostilities.

MORE immediately important to the discovery and suppression of a mutiny in the artillery corps. Officers of certain garrisons, supported by their batteries, refused to obey orders and were quickly placed under arrest. The king hurried from San Sebastian to Madrid and at the request of Dictator de Rivera signed an edict dissolving the artillery corps and decreeing a state of siege throughout the country. Gen. Fabriciano Haro y Porta, chief of the artillery section of the ministry of war, was relieved of his post. There was no bloodshed except at Pamplona, where two of the mutineers were killed and two wounded. At the bottom of the revolt was the recent order doing away with the seniority rule in promotions. Despite strict censorship, the news leaked out of Madrid that the king had persuaded Primo de Rivera that lenient treatment of the offenders would be the wisest course.

OF FOUR Republican senators who sought renomination in last week's primaries three were successful and one was turned down by the voters of his party. The man who failed was Senator Irvine L. Senroot of Wisconsin, and he was beaten by Gov. John J. Blaine. The contest was a tangle of La Folletteism and Volsteadism. In the gubernatorial race it appeared that the so-called Madison ring controlled by La Follette received a hard blow in the nomination of Fred R. Zimmerman over the "ring's" candidate, Attorney General Herman L. Kern. Returns would indicate that the Republican nominees for the other state offices are the members of the La Follette-Progressive ticket. They are: Lieutenant governor, Henry H. Huber; treasurer, Solomon Levitan; attorney general, John W. Reynolds; and secretary of state, Theodore Dammann.

Up in New Hampshire, Senator George H. Moses, foe of the World court, easily won renomination, despite the fight put up by former Governor Bass. His Democratic opponent will be Robert C. Murchie of Concord, who won the nomination over Albert W. Noone of Peterboro. The Republicans refused to shatter a forty-eight-year-old tradition and Gov. John G. Winant was defeated for renomination by Huntley N. Spaulding of Rochester. Not since 1878, when the two-year gubernatorial term was adopted, has New Hampshire sent a governor back to office.

Nevada Republicans renominated Senator Tasker L. Oddie, a World court advocate, rejecting E. E. Roberts, mayor of Reno. In the Democratic race for the senatorial nomination Raymond T. Baker, who served under Woodrow Wilson as director of the mines, held a lead over his three opponents in the four-cornered race. Senator Cameron of Arizona was unopposed for renomination, but there was a hot fight down there over the governorship. G. W. P. Hunt sought the Democratic nomination for his sixth term and at this writing has a commanding lead over his two rivals, E. E. Ellingswood and J. J. Cox. The Democrats named Congressman Carl Hayden as their senatorial choice. Republicans put E. S. Clark up for governor.

Dispatches from Washington say that Senator Ashurst of Arizona, Democrat, declares that if William S. Vare of Pennsylvania and Frank L. Smith of Illinois are elected to the senate he will move to unseat them when their credentials are presented, on the ground of excessive expenditures in the primaries. "Wets" found some degree of satisfaction in the defeat of Representative Uphaw (Dem., Ga.) for renomination. This feeling, however, was tempered by the fact that they failed to gain a member, as Lester J. Steele, his successful opponent, also is classified as a "Dry."

CABLEGRAMS indicating that an understanding in European capitals was that the Coolidge administration was planning a strategic development of military aviation led the President to redefine his position in this and allied matters. He declared himself opposed to any military aviation or naval-building program that might provoke competitive building by other nations. So determined is the President to avoid giving other powers any incentive for naval competition with the United States that this government will not build auxiliary war-craft on the basis of the 5-5-3 ratio established for capital ships of Great Britain, the United States, and Japan by the Washington treaty limiting naval armaments. Under this policy the American navy may continue below parity with the British and less than two-fifths stronger than the Japanese.

The President holds that American naval craft in every class not covered by the Washington treaty shall be built with an eye single to the defense needs of the United States. We are not to build cruisers, submarines, aircraft, and other auxiliaries to give the United States as many of these craft as Great Britain possesses and two-fifths more than Japan either has built or building. We are to consider only the number of ships we need for defense and to build accordingly. If that number falls below the treaty ratio, we are not to worry.

WITHOUT great hope of its success, the Catholic episcopate of Mexico presented to the congress its bill asking for reforms in the laws governing the church, and it was immediately taken up for study by the senators and deputies, who are anxious to get the religious question out of the way. The bill was also sent to all the state governors and legislatures for consideration, since a majority of the states must assent to any changes in the constitution. The petition carrying the bill, after explaining that the Catholic church has no desire to mix in politics but will maintain itself within its own proper sphere, declares that while the government has the right to dictate laws governing the church in so far as its civil state is concerned, it has no right to invade the territory belonging peculiarly to the church.

PRISONERS captured by federal officers near Raymondville, Texas, for gathering arms, presumably to be carried into Mexico, agreed to lead the officers to the place where the weapons were cached. The prisoners were ordered to precede the officers into the brush. They had gone about 100 yards in this manner when fire was suddenly opened from ambush. Two of the prisoners fell at the first shots. The officers quickly took to cover and returned the fire, and when the fight ended there were four dead Mexicans and one dead Austrian. None of the officers was hit.

HARRY M. DAUGHERTY, former attorney general of the United States, and Col. Thomas W. Miller, former alien property custodian, went on trial in New York on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government. The trial is based on what is known as the American Metals case. The defendants are accused of having accepted a bribe of $301,000. In return for this sum, in the language of the indictment returned by a federal grand jury in May, they are accused of approving "a claim of $8,453,970, made upon the alien property custodian by the Societe Suisse pour Valeurs des Metaux—wholly without reference to the legality or merits of said claim."

THE British appear to be getting seriously entangled in the fighting that is going on along the Yangtze river between the Chinese factions, and they have been getting in bad with both the bolshevik Cantonese forces and the troops from the north. The row with the latter started at Wanshsien when General Yangsen, ally of Marshal Wu-Pei-fu, tried to seize two British ships. British gunboats went to the rescue but were repulsed by the land forts and suffered several casualties. The English guns, however, are said to have laid the city of Wanshsien practically in ruins. At Hankow, center of the conflict between the northern and southern Chinese, the British and French landed bluejackets and helped the local volunteers to construct barricades along the bund. But a late report to London says the British party from the cruiser Carlisle was attacked by the Cantonese and cut to pieces. Meanwhile Wu's forces there collapsed when the Canton troops captured the nearby city of Hanyang. After the latter occupied Hankow and Wuchang, General Wu fled to Honan.

At Shameen, the foreign residential settlement of Canton, a British naval detachment was landed to protect a British-owned wharf and it arrested some Chinese snipers. Now the Cantonese government foreign minister has written the British consul demanding the immediate withdrawal of British marines from the jetties near Shameen; the cessation of British interference with river traffic, and retirement of British gunboats to their usual anchorages.

ONE of the worst train wrecks of recent times occurred when a Denver & Rio Grande passenger train struck a boulder in the mountainous country near Leadville, Col., and dived downward into the Arkansas river. The engine, baggage cars, two coaches and one sleeper piled up in eight feet of water. The casualties were 27 dead and scores of injured.

In Chicago a Northwestern train telescoped the rear coaches of another that was loaded with returning Labor day excursionists, and five persons were killed and more than fifty were hurt.

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative—Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help, else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels. Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?
Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

Trail Drivers of Texas

THE TRAIL DRIVERS' MONUMENT FOR SAN ANTONIO
Courtesy San Antonio Chamber of Commerce

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
Whoop-ti-ti-yo, git along little dogies,
It's your misfortune, and none of my own.
Whoop-ti-ti-yo, git along little dogies,
For you know Wyoming'll be your new home!
—Old Cowboy Song.

AN ANTONIO, where stands the Alamo, the sacred shrine of liberty and the Lone Star state, is to have another memorial before which Texans will bow in homage to the historic past. It is to be a monument to the trail drivers upon whose mighty labors the prosperity of the state is based and whose deeds form one of the romantic incidents in American pioneer history. The memorial is to cost $100,000 and Gutzen Borglum of Stone Mountain fame is now at work on it. Citizens of San Antonio have raised $50,000 of that amount and the other $50,000 is to be raised by contributions from all parts of the state.

Baskets completed and dedicated the dream Monday a Trail Drivers' association, that rapidly grew out of the ranks of men who rode the ranges of the state more than half a century ago, to hold the service of their comrades who died and severally drove nearly 10,000,000 head of cattle out of Texas to the railroad as of Kansas and brought back with them approximately $100,000,000 to save Texas and the industry will be realized.

At the annual reunion of the Old Trail Drivers' association was a three-day affair with the selection of the site for the Borglum monument as one of the main features. The sculptor chosen was there, put on a cowboy costume and rode in the parade which was the climax of the reunion. Other interesting figures in the parade were "Uncle Charley" Goodnight, former owner of the famous Goodnight ranch, whose experiments in crossing buffalo and Galloway cattle to produce the "catalo" gave him the nickname of "Catalo" Goodnight; "Uncle George" Glenn, a seventy-five-year-old negro and one of the most-beloved members of the association, who led a "riderless horse," in memory of his "boss" who had perished on the trail, and Mrs. Amanda Burks, the only woman alive known to have made the trip over the old Chisholm trail to Abilene, Kan., who is said to be the original of Talsie Lockhart, the heroine in Emerson Hough's "North of 36."

The president of the association is George W. Saunders of San Antonio and he has been the mainspring of the organization and the force behind the movement to erect the memorial in San Antonio. The association is an offshoot from the Texas Cattle Raisers' association, which meets every year to discuss ways and means for the improvement of the cattle business. At one of these meetings (in 1915) Mr. Saunders proposed an auxiliary organization of old-time trail drivers to be composed of men who "went up the trail" in the early days. The organization was formed that year and in 1916 the first annual convention was held in Houston. Mr. Saunders became president in 1917, and has been the head of the association since that time.

At the 1917 reunion Mr. Saunders reported that the association had a membership of 500. Since then the number of old-time trail drivers have been made eligible for membership. It also has a ladies' auxiliary, of which Mrs. R. R. Russell is chairman, and this auxiliary has had a large share in the work of raising money for the San Antonio memorial.

But the monument and the annual reunion are not the only memorials which the surviving trail drivers have erected to the comrades of their youth. There is one which is more durable than bronze or stone and which, even more strikingly than the sculptor's art, is an accurate picture of the lives and times of the men who engaged in the epic cattle trade. That is the book called "The Trail Drivers of Texas," compiled and edited by J. Marvin Hunter and published under the direction of President Saunders. The book was originally issued in two volumes, the first appearing in 1920 and the second in 1923. This year the two volumes have been issued as one by the Cokesbury Press of Nashville, Tenn.

When the second volume appeared three years ago, J. Frank Doble, a Texan, wrote of it: "The Trail Drivers of Texas" is not literature. Neither is Hakluyt's "Voyages" literature. Yet I have long thought the latter far superior in reality, in dramatic interest, in the reflection of a great body of men of a great age—the English seamen of the "spacious times" of Queen Elizabeth to Kingsley's "Westward Ho" which is literature. "The Trail Drivers" is the very stuff from which literature is made, as Emerson Hough acknowledged and demonstrated in his "North of 36." Yet these volumes are more than mere source books. They are a remarkable social document. A hundred years hence people will read them for a picture of the men and times they record as we now read the diary of Samuel Pepys for its reflection not only of Pepys, but of the age of the Restoration.

"This is high praise; it is meant for such. Take these sketches from 'The Trail Drivers of Texas,' take Andy Adams' 'The Outlet,' take 'North of 36,' and if nothing else had been written on the subject, if nothing else were ever written, yet we should have a full and a just picture of the most picturesque and probably the most epic movement of men in the Western hemisphere—the movement of 9,800,000—cattle and 1,000,000 horses by 35,000 men in 28 years' time (estimate given by Saunders) over a weedless and beeless and an uncharted land, stretching from the Gulf of Mexico—nay, in some instances from far into Mexico—clear to the Dominion of Canada."

This book, a collection of true stories of the actual experiences of these old-time cowmen, is proof again that "truth is stranger than fiction." Do you remember when Emerson Hough's "North of 36" appeared some three years ago and an Eastern critic took him to task for "historical inaccuracy" and kindred sins? Perhaps you remember, too, the furore that was raised by this critic's words. A great chorus of protest against the critic's aspersions went up. Such noted writers as Andy Adams, Charles Siringo, Eugene Manlove Rhodes, William McLeod Raine, J. Frank Davis, E. E. Harman and Hugh Pendexter, Charles M. Russell, the noted cowboy painter, President Saunders of the Old Trail Drivers' association and other members of that association, as well as dozens of old-timers in every part of the country who had ridden the cattle trails, rallied to Hough's defense and had a hand in "taking several yards of skin" off of that particular critic before they were through with him. The fact was that Hough had obtained much of his data for his novel from "The Trail Drivers' book." Some of his "fiction" which seemed improbable or untrue was based on solid fact as told by the old-timers whose narratives appear in this book, and in some cases he actually toned down fact because it would have seemed too improbable!

In fact "The Trail Drivers of Texas" is full of material which a writer of fiction might hesitate to use lest his tale be considered improbable. In it are hundreds of stories of human endurance tested to the limit, of countless perils along the trail, from stampedes, from thirst, from hunger, from hostile Indians and even more desperate white men, of heroic deeds by men of whom President Saunders has well said, "I fear there will never be another set of men with such traits of character." Andy Adams' "Log of a Cowboy" has well been called the "epic of the cattle trade." In this compilation of the experiences of hundreds of other old-timers there is material for a dozen epics of the cattle trade, even though to Andy Adams must go the credit for having written the first one.

The conditions which produced these men now seem very remote and it is difficult to realize that it all began only sixty years ago, well within memory of many men now living. Consider first the cause and then the result will be more easily understood. At the close of the Civil war Texans who had served in the Confederate armies came home to find their state in a deplorable condition. It was virtually bankrupt. Texas possessed great wealth, but it was wealth which could not be realized upon. Here's why: During the war the old men, small boys and negroes had taken care of the stock on the range, but the range was overstocked and there was no market for it. The western railroads had just begun to push west into Kansas and many hundred miles separated the Texas herds from the railroad towns in Kansas from which the cattle could be shipped east to the markets which wanted the cattle.

In 1866 one or two small herds had ventured north over a trail which later became famous as the Chisholm trail (it was named for Jesse Chisholm, a Cherokee cattle trader who had supplied the frontier posts before and during the war), and despite many hardships had proved that such a linking of demand and supply were possible. But the real impetus to the trade came about as the result of a conference in Junction City, Kan., in 1867 between Col. J. J. Meyers, a former member of the Fremont expedition and a Texas cattle hunter, and Joseph H. McCoy, a business man of Illinois. The arrangement was for Meyers to gather cattle in Texas, drive them everland to Abilene, Kan., where McCoy was to take charge and arrange for the shipment east. The news of the success of these two men spread like wildfire among the Texas cattlemen and each successive year saw the mighty army of cattle men and horses marching north. And this continued for more than a quarter of a century!

One of the points in Emerson Hough's "North of 36" to which the critic took exception was Hough's having a herd of 4,500 go over the trail. Yet the fact remains that herds of that size or even larger (5,000 and 6,000 in later years) did go north over the old Chisholm trail. For they dealt in big numbers in those days. In this book is the description of a trail herd strung out for 20 miles from "point" (the leaders) to "drag" (the rear). One old-timer tells of the joining of two herds thus: "When the two other herds came up with us we threw all three together and had about 9,000 in the bunch. Four thousand head of picked cattle were to be selected from this main herd and we started cutting early in the afternoon. By quitting time we had 500 head cut and the boss and his men took this bunch to hold for the night."

"At sundown, when we bedded down the cattle, there were eleven trail herds in sight. Along in the night a terrible storm came up. It was the worst for wind, rain and lightning I ever experienced. The cattle in all the herds broke and the next morning they were scattered over the plains as far as the eye could see in every direction. All the eleven trail herds were mixed up together. There were about 120 cowboys in the combined outfits and when we had made the general roundup we had about 32,000 head in one bunch. We worked for ten days before we could get the cattle separated and in shape to get under way."

One old-timer tells of swimming herds across the Red river when it was half a mile wide and doing three days and nights on one horse without sleep and with very little to eat. There is the story, too, of one outfit which arrived in Kansas with its cowboys actually on foot—they lost their horses but they brought the herd through!

No wonder Texas is proud of these men—of that first trail driver who set forth in 1867 and, Columbus-like, dared the unknown to drive his cattle over the trackless waste to the north and of the hundreds who followed in his footsteps and endured all manner of hardship and danger—and wishes to pay her meed of honor to them while some of them still live.

FIRST to adopt DUCO

THE General Motors Research Laboratories cooperated with E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, Inc., in the development of Duco—an achievement ranking in importance with the invention of the self-starter.

DUCO is not only far more lasting than paint and varnish; it is finer, more beautiful and more economical to apply in factory production.

DUCO was first adopted by Oakland, and immediately thereafter by the rest of the General Motors cars.

BUYERS of General Motors cars have profited by the development of this finer, more enduring finish. Their cars wear well longer.

Our Shining Saucepans

In the descriptions of old-time kitchens, met within fiction and folk stories, there is always a "row of shining pans" reflecting the rosy, beaming face of the cook! Generally these are copper saucepans, and their reddish glow fills those of us who love the gleam of copper with a pang of yearning. But copper is not a practicable material for the less sturdy housewives of today. It is very soft and must be lined with a heavy coating of some better-wearing metal, which also will not affect food chemically as copper is said to do. So we must content ourselves with snowy porcelain or silvery aluminum.

These present-day utensils, however, can be kept a "shining row" if they are polished and cared for as assiduously as the old-time housekeepers cared for their copper. Aluminum especially has its own particular cleansers and metallic sponges, and by following the instructions given with these polishes one may always have clear silver-gray saucepans, teakettle, double boilers, and cooking spoons.

A very efficient housekeeper told me recently that one should not scour thin aluminum saucepans too vigorously or too often. Very good little saucepans can be secured now for ten cents each, but they must be handled gently, as the handles bend easily and too hard rubbing will soon wear them through. If a metallic sponge is used on them, it should be washed very thoroughly. Never use ammonia or washing soda on an aluminum utensil.

Steel and iron skillets, on the contrary, may be kept smoothly clean by boiling a half-teaspoon of washing soda in them. Every trace of grease is dissolved and vanishes down the sink; and this bath of boiling soda-water is the best thing in the world for the drain pipe of the sink as well.

Tin is totally out of it, as a cooking container. It blackens quickly, and gets out of shape. Gray enamel or granite are within reach now of the slimmest purse, and these materials are easily cleaned, so that our "shining row" may be maintained by a little daily care.

Color in Cookery

"This is the prettiest salad I ever saw in my life!" said one of the guests at a luncheon given to a group of young matrons.

Before her at the little round table was a salad plate of cool yellow Chinese ware holding a round bed of California lettuce. Upon the lettuce was an amazing-looking piece of fruit—a ball of delicate green, with a stem at the top. A spoonful of golden mayonnaise at one side, and a sprig or two of cress, completed the most inviting spring concoction imaginable. But what on earth could the fruit be for? It was a fruit, as evidenced by the stem. Could it be some one of the tropical fruits—some queer pomegranate or pear or melon?

The guests peered and wondered. But when forks were at last applied to the odd fruit and its flavor tasted, it proved to be merely a delicious cooked apple, soft but not mushy, chilled to perfection and of melt-in-the-mouth quality. When begged for particulars the hostess explained that the apples were peeled, leaving only the stem at the top, and boiled until tender in a pure sugar sirup to which a little green vegetable coloring had been added. As it boiled slowly the apple absorbed the delicate color and became quite a different-looking fruit. A slice of lemon had been added to the sirup to give zest.

"At Christmas time I cooked the apples in a bright red sirup," confided the housewife, "and you have no idea how pretty they were. They can be made pink by using less of the red coloring, and there is a yellow dye, an orange and a lovely lavender. I don't like to call these colorings 'dyes,' as it doesn't sound wholesome, but of course these vegetable products are entirely pure and harmless and can be safely used. You can make such attractive dishes for luncheons by using different color schemes.

"Other fruits can be colored in the same way, of course, and sometimes I make colored whipped cream for desserts. The least little drop of coloring tints a large amount of sirup or cream. I depend upon these colorings very largely in making my table pretty, not only for special occasions, but for everyday menus."

THROUGH A WOMAN'S EYES

By JEAN NEWTON

Fooling the Bees

An apiculturist in Canada is trying the experiment of shipping his bees to Australia in the fall. The idea is to eliminate their long winter rest and make them produce all the year round. After they have worked all summer in the North, and just as they would begin to think of going to hibernate into winter quarters, they are to find themselves in a new field of activity, where summer has just begun. So, by closing summer around the globe, their owner expects to get double duty out of his bees.

Then our modern rush is to reach even the bees. That perfect model of industry, that most efficient and indefatigable producer known to man is to be made to work overtime! One wonders whether the apiculturist from Canada can get away with it!

In their display of intelligence and common sense, in organization and constructive ability, the bees present an example that might well be emulated by humans. They have a well-organized society system, each of their three classes having a distinct purpose in life from which they never for a moment depart.

The queen has her flight and then settles down to constant increase of the population. The males, or drones, play their part in the propagation of the species, after which they are systematically massacred by the workers. These, with a deliberateness and a singleness of purpose which would do credit to any human, fulfill their purpose of preparing the comb, rearing the young, and producing honey, always producing, not merely what is needed for sustenance, but a plentiful supply for the long winter season when there are no flowers to yield their nectar. A "rainy day" never finds the bees unprepared!

When a hive has become too large for efficient management, or when a second queen is maturing the bees do not revolt or dispute or fight or contest with each other for a place. They simply gather under their chosen leader and swarm—colonizing a new hive, where business goes on "as usual."

Bees never "rush," never try to overdo. They are calm, deliberate, sure of themselves. One cannot imagine a bee, for instance, having the clock set ahead in order to get him out of bed on time, and insisting that in this way he could cheat himself of sleep and not be tired. That's a human stunt, not the bee's.

And so one wonders whether the trick of moving the bees to follow summer will work, whether these very superior beings can be fooled into burning the candle at both ends! I'm just unpractical enough to hope they strike. What do you say?

Is Life Worth Living?

It is a question which philosophers of all times have taken seriously and which intelligent people ask today. Yet it is a question which, to borrow the terminology of the law, is "incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial."

It is "incompetent" because the question involves every single one of us, and no one of us can answer for the rest of us.

It is "irrelevant" because it makes no difference whether you think life is worth living or not—you have to go on living just the same unless you swallow bichloride or something.

And it is "immaterial" because the real issue every one of us ought to have out with ourselves is not "Is life worth living?" but "Am I making my life worth living?"

If my life is not worth living, what makes it a failure?

The right and obvious thing for any man or woman to do who feels that his or her life is a failure is to try to make it a success, to try to remedy the conditions in his or her life that make it not worth living so it will become very much worth living.

"A man loses faith in angels after he has married one," says the cynic. "Married life is what you make it," parries the optimist.

"This is a 'dead' place," said a new arrival at a pleasure resort. "Everybody makes his own good time," somebody chirped.

So the whole of life is pretty much what you make it and throughout, every man and every woman has to make his or her own "good time"—make his or her life worth living.

"The essentials are all about us," wrote Ruskin. And they are to be had for the taking.

Family associations, love, a few faithful friends, good books, time for reflection, useful work, honest ambition—all judiciously interspersed with play, exercise and fresh air—stammered down, there are the things which alone will make any life worth living. All of which, in a measure, a benevolent Providence has placed within the reach of every one of us.

Where It Went

It was well after midnight and dark as pitch when the car stopped before the farmhouse.

Though there was no sign of a light the motorist blew and blew in the hope of arousing some one. Finally an indistinct figure appeared at the door, and inquired as to the cause of the trouble.

"Where does this road go to?" bellowed the motorist with more vigor than politeness in his tone.

"I've lived here seven years, and so far as I've been able to see it hasn't never gone anywhere," replied a peevish voice as the door slammed.

Canada Institutes Bird Sanctuaries

With the progress of settlement the Canadian prairies are losing those special characteristics generally associated with them. Their isolation, their treelessness, their lack of social amenities, are becoming things of the past.

Yet certain developments need to be regulated. For example, the Department of the Interior has just set aside a number of public shooting grounds, and has added eleven bird sanctuaries to those already established. These regions contain the most important breeding grounds on the American continent for wild fowl, which, from time immemorial, have found in marsh and reedy lake food and security. The advent of civilization, with its attendant draining of swamps, tends to reduce the size of the breeding grounds, and this, together with increased facilities for sport, has reduced the number of birds to an alarming extent, some species, indeed, being threatened with extinction.

LYDIA of the PINES

By HONORÉ WILLISIE

Author of "Still Jim" and "The Heart of the Desert."

The heroine, Lydia, is a wonderful girl character developing in the sort of love story American men like, for it pictures the type of girl real men are always keen about. Through a seemingly hopeless tangle of difficult surroundings, she blazes her own way to splendid womanhood. Her honesty, ambition and affectionate loyalty never waver, and are responsible for the optimism and romance which the story fairly radiates.

The stranger was looking at Barea. His face was turned away from McTaggart. He said:

"I guess you are right. Let the devil rot. If you're heading for Lac Bain, m'sieu, I'll travel a short distance with you now. It will take a couple of miles to straighten out the line of my compass."

He picked up his gun. McTaggart led the way. At the end of half an hour the stranger stopped, and pointed north.

"Straight up there—a good five hundred miles," he said, speaking as lightly as though he would reach home that night. "I'll leave you here."

He made no offer to shake hands. But in going, he said, "You might report that John Madison has passed this way."

After that he traveled straight northward for half a mile through the deep forest. Then he swung westward for two miles, turned at a sharp angle into the south, and an hour after he had left McTaggart he was once more squatted on his heels almost within arms' reach of Barea.

And he was saying, as though speaking to a human companion:

"So that's what you've been, old boy. A trap robber, eh? An outlaw? And you beat him at the game for two months! And for that, because you're a better beast than he is, he wants to let you die here as slow as you can. An outlaw!" His voice broke into a pleasant laugh, the sort of laugh that warms one, even a beast. "That's funny. We ought to shake hands. Boy, by George, we had! You're a wild one, he says. Well, so am I. Told him my name was John Madison. It ain't. I'm Jim Carvel. And, oh Lord!—all I said was 'Police.' And that was right. It ain't a lie. I'm wanted by the whole corporation—by every danged policeman between Hudson's bay and the Mackenzie river. Shake, old man. We're in the same boat, an' I'm glad to meet you!"

Chapter XV

Jim Carvel held out his hand, and the snarl that was in Barea's throat died away. The man rose to his feet. He stood there, looking in the direction taken by Bush McTaggart, and chuckled in a curious, exultant sort of way. There was friendliness even in that chuckle. There was friendliness in his eyes and in the shine of his teeth as he looked again at Barea. About him there was something that seemed to warm the chill air—a strange something that radiated cheer and hope and comradeship just as a hot stove sends out the glow of heat. Barea felt it. For the first time since the two men had come his trap-torn body lost its tenseness; his back sagged; his teeth clicked as he shivered in his agony. To this man he betrayed his weakness. In his blood-shot eyes there was a hungry look as he watched Carvel—the self-confessed outlaw. And Jim Carvel again held out his hand—much nearer this time.

"You poor devil," he said, the smile going out of his face. "You poor devil!"

The words were like a caress to Barea—the first he had known since the loss of Nepeese and Pierrrot. He dropped his head until his jaw lay flat in the snow. Carvel could see the blood dripping slowly from it.

"You poor devil!" he repeated.

There was no fear in the way he put forth his hand. It was the confidence of a great sincerity and a great compassion. It touched Barea's head and patted it in a brotherly fashion, and then—slowly and with a bit more caution—it went to the trap fastened to Barea's forepaw. In his half-crazed brain Barea was fighting to understand things, and the truth came finally when he felt the steel jaws of the trap open, and he drew forth his maimed foot. He did then what he had done to no other creature but Nepeese. Just once his hot tongue shot out and licked Carvel's hand. The man laughed. With his powerful hands he opened the other traps, and Barea was free.

For a few moments he lay without moving, his eyes fixed on the man. Carvel had seated himself on the snow-covered end of a birch log and was filling his pipe. Barea watched him light it; he noted with new interest the first purplish cloud of smoke that left Carvel's mouth. The man was not more than the length of two trap-chains away—and he grinned at Barea.

"Screw up your nerve, old chap," he encouraged. "No bones broken. Just a little stiff. Nibby we'd better—get out."

He turned his face in the direction of Lac Bain. The suspicion was in his mind that McTaggart might turn back. Perhaps that same suspicion was impressed upon Barea, for when Carvel looked at him again he was on his feet, staggering a bit as he gained his equilibrium. In another moment the outlaw had swung the pack-sack from his shoulders and was opening it. He thrust in his hand and drew out a chunk of raw, red meat.

"Killed it this morning," he explained to Barea. "Yearling bull, tender as partridge—and that's as fine a sweetbread as ever came out from under a backbone. Try it!"

He tossed the flesh to Barea. There was no equivocation in the manner of its acceptance. Barea was famished—and the meat was flung to him by a friend. He buried his teeth in it. His jaws crunched it. Now fire leaped into his blood as he feasted, but not for an instant did his reddened eyes leave the other's face. Carvel replaced his pack. He rose to his feet, took up his rifle, slipped on his snowshoes, and fronted the north.

"Come on, Boy," he said. "We've got to travel."

It was a matter-of-fact invitation, as though the two had been traveling companions for a long time. It was, perhaps, not only an invitation but partly a command. It puzzled Barea. For a full half minute he stood motionless in his tracks gazing at Carvel as he strode into the north. A sudden convulsive twitching shot through Barea; he swung his head toward Lac Bain; he swung his head toward Lac Bain; he looked again at Carvel, and a white that was scarcely more than a breath came out of his throat. The man was just about to disappear into the thick spruce. He paused, and looked back.

"Coming, Boy?"

Even at that distance Barea could see him grinning affably; he saw the outstretched hand, and the voice stirred new sensations in him. It was not like Pierrrot's voice. He had never loved Pierrrot. Neither was it soft and sweet like the Willow's. He had known only a few men, and all of them he had regarded with distrust. But this was a voice that disarmed him. It was lureful in its appeal. He wanted to answer it. He was filled with a desire, all at once, to follow close to the heels of this stranger. For the first time in his life a craving for the friendship of man possessed Barea. He did not move until Jim Carvel entered the spruce. Then he followed.

That night they were camped in a dense growth of cedars and balsams ten miles north of Bush McTaggart's trap-line. For two hours it had snowed, and their trail was covered. It was still snowing, but not a flake of the white deluge sifted down through the thick canopy of boughs. Carvel had put up his small silk tent, and had built a fire; their supper was over, and Barea lay on his belly facing the outlaw, almost within reach of his hand. With his back to a tree Carvel was smoking—luxuriously. He had thrown off his cap and his coat, and in the warm fireglow he looked almost boyishly young. But even in that glow his jaws lost none of their squareness, nor his eyes their clear alertness.

He rubbed his hands together, and held them out toward the fire. Barea watched his movements and listened intently to every sound that escaped his lips. His eyes had in them now a dumb sort of worship, a look that warmed Carvel's heart and did away with the vast loneliness and emptiness of the night. Barea had dragged himself nearer to the man's feet, and suddenly Carvel leaned over and patted his head.

"I'm a hard one, old chap," he chuckled. "You haven't got it on me—not a bit. Want to know what happened?" He waited a moment, and Barea looked at him steadily. Then Carvel went on, as if speaking to a human, "Let's see—it was five years ago, five years this December, just before Christmas time. Had a dad, fine old chap, my dad was. No mother—just the dad, an' when you added us up we made just One. Understand! And along came a white-striped skunk named Hardy and shot him one day because dad had worked against him in politics. Out an' out murder. An' they didn't hang that skunk! No, sir, they didn't hang him. He had too much money, an' too many friends in politics, an' they let 'im off with two years in the penitentiary. But he didn't get there. No—s'elp me God, he didn't get there!"

Carvel was twisting his hands until his knuckles cracked. An exultant smile lighted up his face, and his eyes flashed back the firelight. Barea drew a deep breath—a mere coincidence but it was a tense moment for all that.

"No, he didn't get to the penitentiary," went on Carvel, looking straight at Barea again. "Yours truly knew what that meant, old chap. He'd have been pardoned inside a year. An' there was my dad, the biggest half of me, in his grave. So I just went up to that white-striped skunk right there before the judge's eyes, an' the lawyer's eyes, an' the eyes of all his dear relatives an' friends—and I killed him! And I got away. Was out through a window before they woke up, hit for the bush country, and have been eating up the trails ever since. An' I guess God was with me, Boy. For He did a queer thing to help me out summer before last, just when the Mounties were after me hardest an' it looked pretty black. Man was found drowned down in the Reindeer country, right where they thought I was cornered; an' the good Lord made that man look so much like me that he was buried under my name. So I'm officially dead, old chap. I don't need to be afraid any more so long as I don't get too familiar with people for a year or so longer, and 'way down inside me I've liked to believe God fixed it up in that way to help me out of a bad hole. What's your opinion? Eh?"

He leaned forward for an answer. Barea had listened. Perhaps, in a way, he had understood. But it was another sound than Carvel's voice that came to his ears now. With his head close to the ground he heard it quite distinctly. He whined, and the whine ended in a snarl so low that Carvel just caught the warning note in it. He straightened. He stood up then, and faced the south. Barea stood beside him, his legs tense and his spine bristling.

After a moment Carvel said:

"Relatives of yours, old chap Wolves."

He went into the tent for his rifle and cartridges.

Barea was on his feet, rigid as hewn rock, when Carvel came out of the tent and for a few moments Carvel stood in silence watching him closely. Would the dog respond to the call of the pack? Did he belong to them? Would he go—now? The wolves were drawing nearer. They were not circling as a caribou or a deer would have circled, but were traveling straight—dead straight for their camp. The significance of this fact was easily understood by Carvel. All that afternoon Barea's feet had left a blood-smell in their trail, and the wolves had struck the trail in the deep forest, where the falling snow had not covered it. Carvel was not alarmed. More than once in his five years of wandering between the Arctic and the Height of Land he had played the game with the wolves. Once he had almost lost, but that was out in the open Barren. Tonight he had a fire, and in the event of his firewood running out he had trees he could climb. His anxiety just now was centered in Barea. So he said, making his voice quite casual, "You aren't going, are you, old chap?"

If Barea heard him he gave no evidence of it. But Carvel, still watching him closely, saw that the hair along his spine had risen like a brush, and then he heard—growing slowly in Barea's throat—a snarl of ferocious hatred. It was the sort of snarl that had held back the Factor from Lac Bain, and Carvel, opening the breech of his gun to see that all was right, chuckled happily. Barea may have heard the chuckle. Perhaps it meant something to him, for he turned his head suddenly and with flattened ears looked at his companion.

Authors Who Evinc'd Interest in Cookery

If the stories of Brillat-Savarin which it is proposed to publish in commemoration of his centenary reveal their author to the world as a successful writer of fiction as well as a gastronomer, he may perhaps be regarded as repaying the interest which some noted novelists have taken in matters of the table. Balzac took a keen interest in cookery, as befitted a man of gigantic appetite. So also did George Sand, whose cookery must have been pretty good, since it was reputed to be as exciting as her romances. Joseph Conrad, as he admitted in connection with a cook book written by Mrs. Conrad, gave a high place in his esteem to the culinary arts, while George Meredith left a book of cookery receipts in his own handwriting which figured in a book seller's catalogue some years ago and may possibly yet appear in print.

Crops North of "53"

Wheat, oats and similar grain have been found to ripen satisfactorily in that part of Canada north of the fifty-third parallel. Four varieties of wheat have been tried, some ripening in ninety-eight days. The yields varied twenty-three to forty bushels, depending on the variety, and from fifty-four to seventy-three bushels of oats to the acre were obtained, depending also on the variety planted. The experiment is considered important for Canadian development.

Chinese Surprise Devil

The upturned eaves which are a characteristic architectural feature of all Chinese houses are intended to catch the devil should he venture too close to the domicile and throw him far up into the heavens.

IT IS high time to be buying one's new coat for fall, and just what shall it be? It all depends, for there is a most clean-cut distinction drawn this season between informal and formal coats. As to the practical utility coat, and it is the one which interests most of us who are either at school or at business and if at leisure planning health-giving hikes over countryside and moor, the major trend is to handsome and striking novelty woollens, fur-collared and often fur-cuffed, generously pocketed and sturdily built in fashion smart as smart can be.

When it comes to dressy wraps for social occasion, that is a different also the lining which is of quality-kind crepe de chine. The raglan sleeved topcoat is very much in evidence this season.

Let's talk of something cheerful—shoes for instance, for never have they been more fanciful, more colorful or more beautiful than at this very moment, and for time to come according to displays of advance autumn modes. Not only are the leathers of which present-day shoes are made almost sensationally unique, but there is also an interesting use of fascinating color.

To be sure, for practical utility wear, there are excellent styles which help us keep in mind that "shoes is shoes," and endless story of whims and fancies, of intricacies of design and elegance of fabric sometimes gleaming with gold and silver interweavings, richly fur-laden and garnished with handwork of world-wide attainment.

Tweeds of durable promise accent deep rich colorings this season and the very last word in practical cloakings of irresistible attraction is the fabric of ombre coloring, that is plaids or stripes shaded in gradations. There are such combinations available as red ombres in wide stripes, plaids; also small block designs. Then there are soft brown ombres done in complementary tints and the new greens in ombre styling but when it comes to the dressier modes, oh me, oh my! where are the adjectives to describe them. Perhaps this picture of four of the reigning styles will best tell the story of the elaborate trend of modern shoe-ology.

In the list of shoe fashions the pair shown first in this illustration register as strap sandals. In line with the thought that the smartest footwear this season invariably features a combination of colors, narrow underlays and heels of blond kid combine with champagne kidskin.

A French tie-model is shown to the right which declares most frankly the supremacy of the extremely ornate. In that it combines royal blue lizard skin on a background of pearl gray kid.

The newest note in Paris is the slipper which appears from the outer side to have but one strap, which develops into three narrower straps across the inside. This modish pair in the picture, shown to the left, are of parchment kidskin.

Cutout effects are very fashionable as defined in the exquisite kid slippers are exceptionally handsome. Black and white plaids in deep-pile wool are stunning trimmed with either black or white fur.

It seems as if novelty woollens call for fur as unique and it is a fact fur trims are almost without exception included in every coat styling. A fur collar is almost a certainty on every topcoat for sports or utility, and often there are wide fur cuffs, likewise frequently neck to hem revers, but hemline borders are conspicuous by their absence.

The attractive topcoat in the picture aptly defines the popular trend in coats for schoolgirl, business woman and for general practical wear. The fur collar is toned to the browns in the fabric patterning, as is which concludes this interesting group of leading footwear styles.

The close relationship between fall dress colors and the tones and tints of new leathers is a subject to ponder over. Many snakeskin slippers appear to have been dyed to match the costume. Bright green, royal blue and red are shades noted in footwear now at fashion's rendezvous.

In practical daytime styles for fall, favor is expressed for black patent leather, also tan in both dark and light shades. Growing demand for moderate cuban heels is noted, especially among American women, although abroad the higher heels are very much in evidence.

Excess Uric Acid Gives Rise to Many Unpleasant Troubles.
AUTHORITIES agree that an excess of uric acid is primarily due to faulty kidney action. Retention of this toxic material often makes its presence felt by sore, painful joints, a tired, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backache and headache. That the kidneys are not functioning right is often shown by scanty or burning passage of secretions. Thousands assist their kidneys at such times by the use of Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. TO COTTON FARMERS

Much has been said about the difference in weights on cotton put up in Round Bale as compared with the usual square bale method

The point is: Square Bale bagging weighs 20 pounds, whereas Round Bale bagging weighs 5 pounds, which makes 15 pounds more weight to add to Square Bale,—commonly called tare difference.

The following table explains this difference in figures:

Difference in weight on Bagging	Square Bale Price	Money Difference	To equalize, Difference reduced to Points	Round Bale Price Should Be
15 Lbs.	10c	$1.50	30	10.30
15 Lbs.	10½c	$1.58	31½	10.82
15 Lbs.	11c	$1.65	33	11.33
15 Lbs.	11½c	$1.73	34½	11.85
15 Lbs.	12c	$1.80	36	12.36
15 Lbs.	12½c	$1.88	37½	12.88
15 Lbs.	13c	$1.95	39	13.39
15 Lbs.	13½c	$2.03	40½	13.91
15 Lbs.	14c	$2.10	42	14.42
15 Lbs.	14½c	$2.18	43½	14.94
15 Lbs.	15c	$2.25	45	15.45
15 Lbs.	15½c	$2.33	46½	15.97
15 Lbs.	16c	$2.40	48	16.48
15 Lbs.	17c	$2.55	51	17.51

We have the Square Bale press, as well as the Round Bale, and earnestly wish you to have your choice of the method which seems to you most advisable.

Our desire is to gin your cotton and let you name the method. Service as well as to please is our motto.

Dishman & Beaty

THE motor car industry was startled when Buick presented the new Buick with an engine vibrationless beyond belief.

If you have driven this great new car, with this remarkable engine, you know why.

Its fluid smoothness makes other motor cars seem rough, harsh, noisy.

People who have driven Buicks for years and people who have owned much more expensive cars, are captivated by the luxury of this one.

First Baptist Church Notes
 We had sixteen present in the Sunday School last Sunday morning. We sang "Loyalty to Jesus." In the evening hour service we had a nice small crowd composed of the "faithful few" and several visitors. The services, morning and evening, were spiritual and helpful.

Next Sunday morning we will discuss a very important subject—Foreign Missions. The evening hour subject will be "The Pearl of Great Price." Text Matt 13:45-46. We will say some things about the cotton market and prices, and the reasons.

Everybody invited and visitors especially.
