The Fable of the Crow

OF COURSE YOU KNOW THE FABLE OF THE CROW AND THE FOX. The fox made many complimentary remarks about Mr. Crow, finally suggesting he must have a fine voice and ask ng him to sing. Mr. Crow, very much flattered, opened his bill to sing, and plunk-the cheese he had been holding fell into the waiting paws of Mr Fox. Just what he wanted!

That's how smooth-tongued investment salesmen work. They flatter their prospects and in a short time walk off with hard-earned money.

The moral is, don't patronize these strangers. Keep your savings in a good bank like this. Or, if you desire to invest, call on us for advice. But don't fall prey to the foxy promoter.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Capt. Lindbergh Is Recipient of Unprecedented Honors in France.

Ing May 27 was the completion of Capt. Charles Lindbergh's successful crossing by airplane from New York to Paris at 10:21. Paris time, Saturday night, May 21, after 33 hours 29 minutes in the air.

Paris gave the intrepld American flyer a wildly enthusiastic reception, in which there was no evidence of the reported enmity for American contestants in this transoceanic air race that had resulted in the loss of two French flyers, Captains Nungesser and Coll. From the moment his plane came to a stop on Le Bourget flying field, just outside the French capital, he became the acclaimed hero of the civilized world. In Paris no such tumultuous scenes have been witnessed since the signing of the armistice at the close of the World war, and for the week following the landing he has been sought for and feted by all classes. The king of Belgium wired him an invitation to be his guest at Brussels, King George of England extended him an invitation to visit him kinds contended for the honor of being host to him; the French government conferred upon him the medal of the Legion of Honor. From Captain Lindbergh's own countrymen came hundreds of offers of employment at fabulous salaries. Motion picture producers, vaudeville theater managers, managers of lecture courses, offered large sums for his services, and if he wishes, it is estimated that he could within the next twelve months easily make a million dollars as a result of his heroic exploit. So far he has refused to consider any of the offers, asserting that he had no idea of commercializing the flight which he made solely for the purpose of advancing the science of aviation.

It is not known at this writing when he will return to America. Before doing so he will accept the invitation from the kings of Belgium and England and will visit Stockholm and other European cities. The United States government has offered to bring him back on board a battleship as the guest of the American people and it is probable that he will accept this invi-

Captain Lindbergh covered the disance from San Diego, Calif., to Paris -6,725 miles-in actual flying time of 56 hours and 46 minutes. He left San Diego, Calif., on the afternoon of May 10 and arrived in St. Louis-1,600 miles-the next day. After a rest there he hopped to New York-900 milescrossing the American continent in an actual flying time of 23 hours and 15 minutes. After a few days' rest he started from New York to Parls-3,660 miles. This is a new world's record for nonstop straight line distance, the previous record being 3,400 miles.

NOTHER event of importance in A the field of aviation was the attempted flight of the Italian aviator, Francesco de Pinedo, from Newfoundland to the Azores Islands, a distance of 1,200 miles. He left Trepassey Bay, N. F., Monday morning, May 23, but became lost in the fog and landed on the ocean some 300 miles from his objective point and his plane was towed into port by a sailing vessel that had picked him up.

MOVE of unusual importance in A move of unusual implementations the field of international relations was the break between Great Britain and Soviet Russia following the revlations resulting from the raiding by he British government of Arcos, Ltd., he Russian trading company operatng in England, and the official Soviet rade delegation. In the house of comnons Prime Minister Baldwin ancounced that on the basis of Sir Windam Child's findings in documents eized in the raid on May 12 the Britsh government had decided to break of diplomatic relations with Russia.

referred at length to the documentary evidence of the Soviet internationale's network of Bolshevist plots in England, the United States, Canada, New Zealand, and said:

"In the face of these breaches of the trade agreement and international comity, his majesty's government has shown patience and forbearance which is probably without parallel.

"Diplomatic relations when thus de liberately and systematically abused are in themselves a danger to peace. and his majesty's government therefore has decided that unless the house expresses disapproval on Thursday, the government will terminate the trade agreement, require the withdrawal of the trade delegation and Soviet mission from London, and recall the British mission from Moscow."

"The Soviet government itself cannot escape the responsibility for the action of the trade delegation and the abuse of the facilities afforded it," the prime minister continued, "but the matter does not rest there, because it is difficult to believe that, while one organ of the Soviet government was breaking its solemn undertaking, the Soviet mission and Soviet government did not pass on these proceedings."

The prime minister explained that the police for months had been watch ing the activities of the Soviet secret agents who had arranged for photographing secret documents in the Soviet house. Their suspicions were confirmed early this year when two British subjects employed by the air force were discovered stealing two iments for the Reds, he said.

Mr. Baldwin then referred to a "further document of an official and highly confidential character," which turned up missing and which was discovered by the police to have been photographed on the Arcos premises. Armed with this knowledge, the police staged a raid, going straight to the subterranean photostat room, where they found a cipher clerk known to be connected with the secret agents.

Documents found in another room showed that this clerk's chief function was the carrying out of secret communications abroad. In his possession were found codes in envelopes addressed to well-known Communist individuals and organizations in England and the United States. The envelopes contained directions from the Red internationale to Communists and organizations in both countries.

"The investigation shows," said Mr. Baldwin, "that both Arcos and the trade delegation habitually used subversive propaganda. The correspondence dealt with the Communist seamen's club, the 'hands off' China movement, the anti-trade union bill, the disribution of Communist propaganda and industrial affairs in America."

This action on the part of the British government means again outlawing Russia in the family of nations, and the lining up of England with the United States in its attitude toward the Soviet government. The American government has consistently refused to recognize in any way the Soviet government of Russia on the basis that that government was engaging in propaganda with the purpose of undermining other governments with which friendly relations had been perfected. This government has refused to permit any official representative of the Soviets to land in the United States, and this investigation on the part of England has demonstrated the wisdom of the officials at Washington.

SECRETARY of the Treasury Mellon has announced the resignation of Assistant Secretary L. C. Andrews, effective August 1. At the same time announcement was made of the appointment of Dr. James M. Doran as prohibition commissioner to succeed Roy A. Haynes. The resignation of Mr. Andrews was unexpected. Secretary Mellon announced that he has recommended to President Coolidge the appointment of Seymour Lowman, former lieutenant governor of New York, to succeed him.

It was indicated by Mr. Mellon that while the new assistant secretary of the treasury will have supervisory authority over the bureau of prohibition. as well as over the bureau of customs and the coast guard, he will not have such broad powers as Mr. Andrews.

Doctor Doran, it was stated, will have full authority as prohibition com-

> GERMANY claims that with the redugouts on its frontier at Koenigsberg it has completed the disarmament provided for by the Versailles treaty, and is now demanding that the allied troops evacuate the Rhineland provinces. The allies are insisting that the interallied military commission must inspect the work of dismantling the fortresses, but Germany holds that the interallied military control commission expired on February 1, as promised by the allies, and that for reasons of prestige, Germany cannot permit a renewal of the interailled control, There the matter stands with nothing definite as to when the remaining French troops will march out of Germany.

> FLOODS continue to ravage Louisi-ana parishes. Five additional parishes, with an area of 1,100,000 acres, and the homes of 80,000 people were thrown open to invasion by the inland sea when the river tore aside the protection barriers at McCrea and spread over the low lands of Pointe Coupee parish. Before the flood waters have vanished into the Gulf of Mexico they will have cut a path 50 miles wide and 200 miles long from the Arkansas border to the gulf.

> millionaire oil operator, to serve three months in jail and to pay a fine of $500 for contempt of the United States senate in refusing to answer questions in connection with the investigation of the Teapot Dome lease scandal in 1924. The sentence was more severe than had been generally expected by those who have followed the case and who did not believe that the term of imprisonment would exceed the minimum of one month which had been imposed, in an earlier case, on Elverton R. Chapman, a New York stock broker, in 1896. In sentencing Sinclair, Justice Hitz declared that he believed the decision of the United States Supreme court in the Mal Daugherty ase was binding on him.

Pending an appeal to the United States Supreme court Sinclair was released on $5,000 bail.

PAYNE WHITNEY, prominent sportsman, one of the richest of Americans, son of the late William C. Whitney and brother of Harry Payne Whitney, died suddenly May 26 on the tennis court of his country home at Manhasset, L. I., of acute indigestion.

Payne Whitney was born in New York 51 years ago, the second son of William C. Whitney. Like his father and elder brother, he went to Yale, where he was graduated in 1898. While there he achieved fame as an oarsman and was captain of his college crew.

After leaving Yale he took a law course at Harvard, and in 1902 he married Miss Helen Hay, daughter of the late John Hay, secretary of state and at one time ambassador to Great Britain.

Mr. Whitney was for many years a power in financial circles, although comparatively little was heard of him in that field. He was an active philanthropist in a generous but unostentatious way, so that almost nothing was known of his benefactions.

Wall street estimates his wealth as more than $300,000,000, basing the estimate on the income-tax payments that Mr. Whitney made for the years 1924 and 1925.

S OME progress was made at Phila-delphia in the efforts of the union miners and operators to negotiate a new wage agreement.

After two days of discussion of conditions in the Pennsylvania soft coal fields and in the bituminous territory generally a sub scale committee of six members each was appointed to get down to work and attempt to arrive at a basis for negotiations.

It was made clear by both sides, however, that no concrete proposition had yet been advanced. The miners said the joint conference was called by the operators and any proposition must come from them

PARENT-TEACHERS TREASURER'S REPORT

On account of my absence the a t month of school, the Treasurer's report of the Parent-Teachers Association has been delayed for publication as voted until now, and as I have no definite information from the present Treasurer of last receipts, I will only give a report in brief of receipts and amount expended in full for the past three terms that I have on record.

In totaling them, I find the eccipts to be $1175 36, and with the exception of $48.42 present bank balance, shown on last statement, this has all been ex pended for necessary equipment for the school building and play grounds, and for the advance ment of education in every way. Till a voice, as bad as Conscience, rang interminable changes On one everlasting Whisper day and night repeated-so: "Something hidden. Go and find it. Go and look behind the Ranges-"Something lost behind the Ranges. Lost and waiting for you. Go!"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

O SANG Mr. Kipling once upon a time. In both poems he was talking about the same type of man, the man who through all the ages since history began has felt the urge to find out what was "lost behind the Ranges," the urge to "Go! For to admire and for to see"-the Explorer.

The world owes much to its explorers of every nation and every age. Drop their names out of American history, especially, and how comparatively lifeless and unromantic that history would be! Call the roll of the men who have ventured into the unknown, who have been the advance guards of civilization, and see what manner of men are these who answer-Norseman, Italian, Portuguese, Spanlard, Frenchman, Dutchman, Englishman and American. How many years of history and splendid achievement are written in these names: Bjarni Herjulfson, Eric the Red, Leif Ericson, Marco Polo, Henry the Navigator, Christopher Columbus, John and Sebastian Cabot, Americus Vespucius, Ferdinand Magellan, Ponce de Leon, Balboa, Pineda, Hernando De Soto, Francisco de Coronado, Cabeca de Vaca, Governor Onate, Jacques Cartier, Verrazano, Sir Francis Drake, Frobisher and Davis and Hawkins, Capt. John Smith, Hendrik Hudson, Samuel de Champlain, Jean Nicollet, St. Lusson, Marquette and Joliet and La Salle, Sieur de la Verendrye, Hennepinl. D'Lhut. Radisson and Groseillers, Samuel Hearne Alexander Mackenzie and Robert Cook!

Those are the names which should be written large in the annals of what has been called the "Golden Age of Exploration" when the Old world was sending out its bravest and best to find out all that could be learned about this New world which opened up to mankind on the day when the caravels of Columbus dropped anchor in the West Indies. Then followed the era of colonization, a period of fierce wars during which the nations of the Old world strove to determine which was to dominate the new and out of it all came the birth of a new nation in the New world, the United States of America.

And it was the Explorer, too, the man who wanted to see what fertile valleys were "hidden behind the Ranges" of the Appalachians where he could satisfy the land hunger of a westwardpushing race, who helped bring on that conflict 150 years ago which made possible a new nation. Long before the Revolution the new breed of American frontlersman was crossing over the Blue Ridge and the Great Smoky mountains, and Abram Wood, Thomas Batts, Robert Fallam and James Needham, whatever the motive, whether for trade or homeseeking, which led them there, won for themselves the right to be called "Explorers." Hard on their heels came the Long Hunters of Kentucky, such men as James Finley, Daniel Boone, Richard Henderson, James Robertson and John Sevier. Under the flag of the new republic the westward push continued. In 1803 the two young Virginians, Lewis and Clark, set out upon their "magnificent adventure" and two years later Zebulon M. Pike began the explorations which were to make him famous and give him the mighty monument in the Colorado mountain peak which bears his name. Army officers, hunters, fur traders, trappers, scientists, engineers-they all sought to dispel the mystery of what lay "behind the Ranges" and when their work was done there was written on the roll of Explorers such names as Stephen Long, James Pursley, John C. Fremont, Kit Carson, Jedediah Smith, John Colter, Jim Bridger, Hugh Glenn, R. B. Marcy, John Wesley Powell, John W. Gunnison, Edwin James Becknell, Mc-Knight, Beard, Chambers, Wyeth, Meek, Jenney, Reynolds, Ashley, Lisa, Bonneville, Jackson, Fitzpatrick and Sublette. When the furthermost reaches of the last great the mystery of Africa, the Dark continent, so a new race of explorers was born and it added to the long roll the names of DuChaillu, Chinese

Gordon and David Livingston, the greatest of them all. The story of this Englishman who gave his life to the work is one of the most romantic in all history. No less romantic is the story of the young American newspaper correspondent, Henry

M. Stanley, who set out to find Livingston, lost somewhere in the wilds of Africa and persisted until he was successful. The world has particular reason to remember Stanley at this time because there was recently erected in St. Bride's church in London a memorial tablet to the memory of this man who not only rescued a fellow explorer, but who made other expeditions, as a result of which the term "Darkest Africa" disappeared to be substituted by the knowledge of one of the most interesting continents on the face of the story of these thirty-five expeditions to Sumatra, to China, to Algeria, to Beloochistan, to southwest Africa and to Alaska for the purpose of capturing live wild game, unearthing buried villages which flourished in prehistoric times, collecting fossil footprints, and fossil elephants and shells and gathering ferns in West Indian mountains and minerals in Mexico.

During the same year the American Museum of Natural History sent out thirty-four expeditions and the Field museum of Chicago had twelve out at one time. In fact, there is scarcely a place on the face of the earth where you can go now without finding some of these modern explorers at work or stumbling upon evidence that they have been there before you. Last summer there was something of a "traffic congestion" of explorers in the Arctic. Byrd and Amundsen flew over the North pole in an airplane. The Greenland expedition of the American Museum of Natural History, under the direction of George Palmer Putnam, made an $,500-mile trip in the schooner Effie Morrisey, went within 700 miles of the pole, picked up the University of Michigan expedition, commanded by Prof. William Herbert Hobbs, at Nova Scotia, took it to South Greenland, brought it back in October and finally arrived in New York harbor with a cargo of specimens for the museum's hall of ocean life. The Field museum expedition, headed by Commander Donald B. MacMillan, spent two and one-half months in the frozen North trailing the footsteps of the ancient Norsemen. But Americans have no monopoly on polar exploration. The French have two such excursions planned or under way, to search for the magnetic pole and explore that region. Up in Alaska the United States navy, the geological survey, the bureau of ethnology and about a dozen other government bureaus have been or are now carrying on their explorations in that territory. One of the most adventurous of these is the exploit of Lieut. Ben Wyatt. aviator, who has set out to map an area of 40,000 square miles, a job that will take him at least four years. In the interior of Alaska Dr. Ales Hrdlicka of the bureau of ethnology is mapping the probable route by which primitive man first found his way to this continent and in the Bering sea John Treadwell Nichols of the American Museum of Natural History is making a similar study of the Asiatic fish which have invaded American waters.

It is in the Old World, however, that some of the most interesting expeditions which are turning back the pages' of history are under way. The Faunthrope-Vernay expedition of the American museum has been exploring in northern India and went through the dangerous passes of the Himalayas to Chinese Turkestan, visiting a number of regions never before penetrated by scientists. In central Asia a Russian expedition has announced discoveries so extraordinary that they sound more like fairy tales than sober facts of the present time. In the "Dead City" of Khara Khota in the Gobl desert they report the discovery of a library of 25,000 volumes in an extinct language, and in the tombs of the "Seven Kings of Tartary" treasures as perfect as the day they were placed there, at least 6,000 years ago. Similar treasures are being found by expeditions sent out by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, by the oriental institute of the University of Chicago, by the University of Michigan, by Harvard university, and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, all of which are working in various parts of Egypt.

In Mesopotamia there is a Field museum-Oxford university joint expedition, one financed by the British museum and another by the University of Pennsylvania, all of which have announced important discoveries which throw new light on the ancient civilization of that region. Pennsylvania also has an expedition in Palestine which has already discovered the Temple of Ashtorath and predicts further remarkable discoveries before its work is finished.

Nor is the Old world the only place where the secrets of forgotten peoples are being sought. In the jungles of Central America, Mexico, Ecuador, Peru and Brazil, scientists working under the direction of a number of institutions are bringing to light more information about the Mayas and the other Indian or pre-Indian races. There include the American Museum of Natural history. the Peabody Museum of Harvard, the Carnegle institute, the British museum, the National Geographic society, the Field museum, and the British Royal Geographical society.

These are some of the expeditions that are already in the field. Add to them the expeditions that are constantly going forth and it is easy to believe that within a short time not a spot upon the face of the giobe will remain unvisited by men.

ARRANGEMENT OF FOOD

One might write many chapters on food garnishing and color blending of foods. Most housekeepers are too busy to spend much time or thought on the elaborate garnishing of food; but all food may be carefully served in a dainty manner and with some sort of symmetry which enhances its appeal to the appetite and adds to its appearance.

When serving pork or mutton chops, place on the platter one overlapping the other. Around the edge, if it is lamb being served, put a border of watercress and serve some with each chop. If it is pork being served, a border of overlapping sliced fried apples, which have been cored before slicing.

If boiled rice is to be served with any meat, butter a small cup, press the hot rice into it and unmold on the platter around the meat. Mashed potatoes seasoned and put through a ricer make a most attractive garnish to any meat platter.

For a supper dish, creamed salmon in the center of a hot platter, riced potatoes around as a border and a spray of greens on the edge, will make a most appetizing dish.

We all know that the more pleasing food is to the eye the more quickly it is digested, as the fluids in the mouth are started more freely.

Small croquettes of rice served with a cube of jelly on each are delicious with fowl or a roast.

When serving creamed meat, or fish a vegetable border or combination of vegetables whose color and flavor blend may be used. Peas and carrots, beans and beets and other vegetables will be found to add to the appearance of a dish.

Fried bananas served with a hamburger steak is not only an attractive but a tasty dish.

Fruit and vegetable fritters are a good food and a fine garnish. One often finds it necessary to extend the amount of meat, when unprepared; with a few fritters, the meal is made sufficiently satisfying.

Slices of hard cooked eggs as a garnish around a platter of seasoned spinach is well known and always enjoyed.

For more elaborate garnishing a pastry bag and tubes will be required. Mayonnaise, whipped cream, mashed potato, cheese, and various combinations of any of these in a pastry bag. will afford many ways of decorating foods. The red and green pepper, cut into various forms or minced, added to lettuce will make brilliant color to add to various dishes.

Relishes of different kinds such as pickles, horseradish, chutney, all make tasty garnishment. Sliced radishes, fringed celery, nuts, all are effectively

CHAPTER XI-Continued --16-

I hastened at once, and in no uncertain terms, to inform him of my contempt and loathing for this precious pair. He heard me with the air of some skillful player who has calculated a move in a game, and beholds it come to pass precisely as foreseen. "Good!" he exclaimed. "I counted on that, if nothing else. And now, Richard," he added, as he refilled my glass. "the whole story, please, from the moment you set foot on shore up to this very night."

Forthwith I told him all that had occurred; in particular, of the night when I had seen McAllister creeping out to the mangroves. Only one thing. as yet, I kept secret: I made no mention of Helen, or of our mutual love

At last I had finished. I felt as though I had been speaking for hours. so vividly had it all come back to me, as I lived through the past again. And all this time the captain had sat listening in silence, leaning slightly forward his dark and handsome face supported by his hand, gazing at me as if he would read my very soul. Only once In the course of my narrative did he display emotion, and that was when I spoke of McAllister's nocturnal visit to his treasure. Then indeed his somber eyes gleamed with eagerness, and he made as if to speak, but checked himself and continued to listen as before. And even when I had finished. he seemed in no hurry to break silence, but sat as if deliberating over all that I had said. I imagined that he was weighing in his mind the importance of various details, passing over this, stopping to consider that; but when at last he spoke, it became evident that It was something else which lay uppermost in his mind. "Dick," he cried, "it's all plain sailing-now. Within three days I attack. You have told me all that I wished to know, and you'll find I'm not ungrateful. You will stay with me, help me in the fight, and I'll see to it that you get your fair share of the treasure."

I could feel my heart thumping against my ribs. Clearly the time had come when I must make matters plain to him. And thus I braced myself for the ordeal and answered. "Thank you for your offer. And I promise that I'll do nothing to thwart your plans. But something has happened since I left you; and much as I hate McAllister. I want to return to the island and take my chances there."

He stared at me as if in doubt whether I was crazed or jesting; then suddenly his keen brain glimpsed the truth, his face cleared, and he struck the table a mighty blow with his fist. "It's the wench," he cried. "I had forgotten all about her. From her picture she was a goddess. So that's the trouble. Richard Lindsay in love!"

My cheeks, I am sure, reddened, but I stood to my guns. "Yes. Captain." I admitted "that is the trouble."

He continued to stare. "So she is beautiful?" he asked at length; and unconscious that others, before me, had used the selfsame words, I answered fervently, "She is the lovellest girl in the whole world."

I was quite prepared for ridicule, but instead his whole expression gradually changed and saddened, and I made no doubt that torturing memories of his past came back to him. So that when he spoke his voice was gentler than I had ever heard it. "Yes," he answered. "I'm sure she is. And now we must consider."

There was a long silence. And once more, when he did speak, I was unprepared for his words:

"Go now back to the island. Tomorrow night put the girl in a skiff and row her downstream. I'll be waiting for you in the longboat, off the month of the river. I can take you up the coast to a place where she will be safe, and then you can help me run the old fox to earth."

I have never, I think, in my life felt such a thrill as I did at that moment. I seemed to hold the whole world in my grasp. "Captain," I cried, "do this for me, and I'll remember it as long as I live."

He waved aside my thanks. "You'll spend the night here," he said, and I realized, with pride, that we seemed to be no longer on the footing of captor and captive, but of equals. "I'll send for Burford," he went on, "and we'll have a bite to eat, and a talk over old times."

But cheerful as this sounded, suddenly Quashy's veiled warning came to my mind. "I was advised," I said, "by a friendly negro to get back to the Island tonight. Perhaps I had better push on. What do you think?"

But the captain made light of it. "Nonsense!" he declared. "There are always mutterings of a rising of the slaves. That's what he meant, of course, but they never take place. It's nothing but talk. And anyway it's far manner made me feel that a revolt safer to travel by daylight than by might actually be near. His first

"Slaves make rising," he said. At the words a great fear darted through my mind. "Then I must get to the island at once," I cried.

Quashy laid a restraining hand on my arm. "You try to go island now." he said, "you killed quick." That why I hurry. Make rising at twelve o'clock. White folks tired, hot, eating, resting-black folks s'prise 'em."

I glanced at my watch; the slender minute hand and the hour hand made but a single line. And at the instant the boom of a gong rang out, sounding the hour of noon, and filling my mind with premonitions of tragedy.

Even had I wished it, I was powerless to act; but as a matter of fact I had no desire to interfere. What I had seen of the cruelty of Shively and his associates had filled me with wrath; anything they were now to receive as punishment I felt they richly deserved. And so, like a spectator at a drama, I seated myself and waited for the curtain to rise,

There was no delay. Perhaps five minutes intervened the absolute hush of drowsy noon brooding over the fields. Then from the barracks of the slaves I saw a swarm of black figures stealthily emerge and quickly cross the space between their abode and the little cluster of buildings where dwelt the overseer and his assistants. Evidently everything had been carefully planned and rehearsed, for they divided quickly and methodically into smaller groups, which entered the various houses at almost the same moment of time. There was no tumult or outery. In almost every instance the slaves emerged a few minutes later, with one or more bound captives in their midst; from one cottage young bookkeeper with whom I had talked on the previous morning, leaped from a window and dashed straight for the boat landing, but the next second his dusky pursuers were after him like a pack of hounds in full cry, and he was soon sent sprawling to the ground and bound like the rest. It was only, indeed, as might have been expected, in Shively's quarters that anything occurred which could be dignified by the name of a struggle. Here there came to my ears, faint and distant, the "crack! crack! crack" of pistols; then all was silent; and when the blacks again emerged from the blg house it was with Shively's tall figure in their midst, still striving desperately to burst the bonds which held him. while behind him followed a group of rebels bearing two or three motionless bodies, mute witnesses to the fact that the overseer had fought to the That such care was taken to bind the prisoners made me hope that they were merely to be held as hostages. and were not to be tortured and put to death. And indeed for a time I believed myself correct in this supposition, for the little knot of whites were led to the shelter of the wood, guarded by a ring of blacks armed with weapons which only a few moments before had belonged to their masters. The rest of the negroes dispersed, apparently to search systematically through the different dwellings, and when they emerged it was easy to see for what they had been hunting-liquor. And the moment I saw this I realized what would inevitably happen. Yet it did not take place at once. For perhaps an hour the blacks caroused, the fiery Hquor continually rousing their passions to a higher and higher pitch; while on their native drums they beat melodies, if such they may be termed. which doubtless woke in their hearts memories of the land from which they had been torn, and of all the long chain of ensuing cruelty and abuse.

All this time, however, my thoughts had been but partly on the scene before me, for I was thinking of the island and of the fate of those who dwelt there. I had no doubt that after the blacks had tortured and slain their victims they would turn their attention to McAllister, who was, in reality, the chief object of their revenge. If Cudjo and Caesar had still been among his garrison, the outcome would have been at least hard to predict; and indeed, even as it was, the protection of the house and the good aim of its defenders might prevail against overwhelming numbers, and the possible danger and terror of a night attack. Surely I felt that I was needed there as never before; some way of reaching Helen I must devise. It might be possible, while the rebels were enjoying the barbaric delights of the torture, for me to slip down the hill to the river, strap my rifle on my back. and float down with the current, unobserved. Yet I had to confess that this, at best, could only be regarded in the light of a desperate and wellnigh foolhardy undertaking; for if they once caught a glimpse of me. they would launch a boat from the shore and overtake me in no time. No, galling as it was, there seemed nothing for me to do but to lie quiet and watch events below.

Nor had I long to wait, for the passions of the blacks, long pent up, now burst their barriers as a river in flood time surges beyond its banks. And I could not but reflect, as I sat there on the brow of that wooded hill on this November day, that there is nothing in the world more terrible than a just revenge. Surely these men, lying bound and helpless, were only encounering their just reward.

Yet, just though it might be, it was not less horrible to witness, for these blacks, following their native custom, did not kill at once, but first subjected their victims to every refinement of torture. The laying on of the whip was but the beginning, and indeed I cannot set down here the details of the butcher work that followed. Shively and Evans, as the ringleaders, were reserved until the last, and their passing furnished a frightful climax to this ghastly scene. And then, as I had feared, with these subordinate persecutors out of the way, the thoughts of the vengeful blacks turned toward the man who stood at the head of the hateful system which oppressed them -the man to whom they had appealed in vain against the despotic crueltie of the overseer. I saw them gather in groups, saw them point to the island with much talking and gesticulating, and then go to the landing where the boats were kept, evidently carefully investigating their means of transportation. After which they returned to their search of the houses and shops, and I saw them bring out a number of ladders, and, evidently dissatisfied with the supply, start at once, with axes and with the tools of the carpenter, to cut down saplings and manufacture more. This was enough. Whether they meant to make an immediate attack. or intended to wait for darkness, I could not guess; in fact, any attempt to foretell the actions of these rebels newly liberated from the oppressor's yoke, half-crazed with liquor, and with their flercest passions roused by their revenge upon their persecutors, would have been a hopeless task. And though it was a greater risk than I cared to take. I felt that the only course open to me was to try to gain the island at once, . Accordingly I explained, in as few words as possible, that I should make the attempt, and although Quashy's expression showed grave fears for my safety, he saw, I think, that it would be useless to try to dissuade me, and therefore announced that he would come with me as far as the bank of the stream; whereupon. without further loss of time, we hastened down the steep and wooded hillside toward the river. Her bronco flercely resented this sight, and absolutely refused to pass the car, which, owing to the great roughness of the road, was traveling at a very low speed.

Seeing with what difficulty the rider was retaining her seat as the horse reared, plunged and backed, and realizing that he could not get by the frightened animal on so extremely narrow a highway, the motorist stopped his car, jumped out, caught the bridle and led the horse past it with soothing words.

MELENIUM IS HERE

Much interest has been aroused locally and thruout the United States by a new process of rub ber treatment called The Melen ium Cure. It is said this process is making tire treads wear proof and age proof-toughening them beyond belief and preserving them indefinitely.

Mr. M. J. Smith, newly ap pointed representative of the Mellinger Tire & Rubber Co, is showing motorists samples of Melenium Cared rubber. These samples are strips about four inches long and a little thicker than a match, cut from Melenium Cared tire treads.
