SECURITY STATE BANK HEDLEY, TEXAS

ENJAMIN FRANKLIN discovered electricity. They call him 'Poor Richard' because he didn't know what to do with it."

Thus runs the composition of an eighth-grade student, expressing in eighteen an economic aphorism about ...ch beetle-browed professors have written forbidding volumes.

Franklin did cage the lightning; but it took men like Edison, Steinmetz and Atwater Kent to convert it into light and power and music. Franklin's memory enjoys the perspective of time. But the kaleidoscope of current history revolves so rapidly as to obscure, temporarily at least, the great accomplishments of modern geniuses.

Franklin was skilled as a press agent. He even published a magazine, outstanding in its period, that the world might know of Franklin and his ideas.

Present-day disciples of Franklin do little to raise themselves out of personal obscurity. Cloistered within walls of intensive effort, they apparently prefer to exist as forces rather than as individuals.

Charles P. Steinmetz, wizard of the electric arc, was accustomed to bury himself for long periods in his laboratories, deaf to all calls maye that of his work.

Thomas A. Edison grinds away ceaselessly at his tasks, aloof from the world except for occasional sallies to project a bit of time-silvered homely philosophy.

A. Atwater Kent, genius in the field of radio, ta another of these prodigious workers. To his associates in the great plant at Philadelphia, where Atwater Kent radios are produced, he is a living, breathing person-a dynamo of creation. But to the rest of the country he is apparently content to be known only by his works.

In the field of radio development, however, the newest and most amazing field of electrical progress. Kent has gone even beyond Steinmetz and Edison in carrying through the application of his inventions and discoveries and making them a definite force in the homes and lives of the people. To a greater extent than perhaps any other inventor in the field of electricity, he has followed the results of his research and experiments outside the laboratory walls, has supervised the manufacturing processes that have made possible at once accurate and precise production on a mass scale and then has personally directed the merchandising setup that has made his product the recognized standard in radio equipment. But all this has been done behind walls of personal anonymity. The result is that, while Atwater Kent products are known the world over. Kent himself, the man, is a virtual stranger-almost a fiction-to the public at large.

A slender, keen-faced man he is, of medium height, now in his early fifties. Thinning sandybrown hair, with a glint of red in it. Eyes that sparkle and dance as he busies himself with colls and meters and gadgets in the laboratory. Lips that curve pleasantly in a natural half smile. Direct in action, he does not experiment blindly, but knows exactly what he is trying to and out, and why. And usually he finds it.

Soft spoken, but short spoken, he is a man of more ideas than words. His stenographer has a sinecure, since he seldom writes letters. Often, his correspondence will run less than half a dozen letters a week.

But his department heads have no such snap. They must get the full scope of his orders, in a few words, and translate them into accomplishment. Their reports must be oral, not written, and the last word in brevity. He doesn't want explanations or elaborations. Either a thing is ne or it is not done. Report the facts. If a thing is done-good! If not-why! When will It be done?

This directness and simplicity, which ens Atwater Kent himself to be the directing nerve From laboratory to sales room—is reflected in his product. Efficiency, simplicity, compactness. Those are three controlling factors by which every model is measured before it is piaced in production. Efficiency first. Then the maximum simplicity possible without impairing efficiency. After this, the compact coordination of parts to make possible the least waste of space or materials. Only by such methods, he holds, can the interest of the buyer be served, which interest is to get the most radio service, in the neatest package for the least money.

From the standpoint of practical accomplishment. Atwater Kent differs from Benjamin Franklin in this: Franklin discovered electricity, but, as the school boy said, "he didn't know what to do with it."

Atwater Kent didn't discover radio, but he has known what to do with it. As a result, he is known today not only as a radio inventor and designer of first rank, and as the man who has produced more radio receiving sets than any other manufacturer, but also as a leader in the presentation of radio programs of the highest class and a man who is building radio artists for the future as well as advancing radio art for the present.

This many-sided character of Atwater Kent is perhaps due to his varied training as a young man. After attending Worcester Polytechnic Institute, he worked for a while in a factory near Lebanon, New Hampshire, making electric motors and watch tools. Here he learned lessons of accuracy and precision in factory production that have been invaluable in his radio work. A year "on the road" as salesman for an electrical concern gave him an understanding of the buyer's viewpoint-of the necessity of not merely making a product that will sell but one that will work.

In 1902 young Kent struck out for himself. First he designed and manufactured electrical novelties. Then intercommunicating house teleones. An early model automobile, which grew balky every time the viorator on the ignition stuck, turned his attention to need for more de pendable automobile ignition. He solved it, and his "Trigger Ignition" became standard equipment on the better makes of cars.

Meanwhile, from two small rooms on the second floor of an old building on a side street in Philadelphia, the Atwater Kent Manufacturing Company had expanded into one of Philadelphia's big industries. Then, after the war, during which time the government had utilized his plant and equipment in making delicate shell

Today, Kent's two plants devoted to radio cover more than seventeen acres. This year alone he will produce more than one million radio receivers, production during the peak of the season running 8,900 sets a day-or one every three seconds for an eight-hour day.

During this period radio has progressed from the old headphone sets of limited radius, with wet batteries and dry cells, a tangle of wires, numberless switches and dials, to the simple, compact, self-contained house current set of today, with a single full vision dial and a volume control, connecting directly to a light socket for power. In all this development, Kent has held the leadership in radio. But, buried in the background himself, the individuality, the personality, of Atwater Kent is little known. While the name "Atwater Kent" has become a household word, to the public at large it doesn't mean a man. It means radio.

That Kent's part in radio evolution will be a permanent one, shaping not merely the present but the future, is insured by the fact that he has been a leader in its cultural as well as its material development. As the first spousor of a continuing series of musical concerts by leading artists, he led the way in giving the American people generally an appreciation of the best in music. Through the National Radio Audition he has opened the door of opportunity for young singers to gain recognition and training to become the artists of the future.

It is to the pioneering of men like Franklin, Edison and Steinmetz, and the translation of their theories and discoveries into practical working appliances by men like Kent, that America owes not merely its industrial leadership but its leadership in those labor saving devices and household conveniences that make the American home a model of efficiency and comfort. It is primarily due to their wizardry that our homes are today not only lighted, warmed, cleaned and refrigerated by electricity but provided with the best and most varied warmed, cleaned and refrigerated by electricity but provided with the best and most varied entertainment any people has ever known. Through radio and unit power plants, these advantages are not confined to homes in towns and cities. They are enjoyed by farm families as well as city dwellers, by the moderately well-to-de as well as by the rich and prosperous.

Electricity sweeps our carpets and polishes our floors. It washes our dishes and our clothes. Its incandescence turns physical darkness into day and, by radio, it banishes the mental dark-ness that follows prolonged loneliness and monotony. It brings to our homes ease and the means to enjoy it. It gives us the debates of statesmen and the arguments of politicians; the lilt of dance tunes and the "high C's" of grand opera prima donnas. It brings us the latest news bulletins on important world events. It has in reality, turned darkness and drudgery into light

Benjamin Franklin, as wise and foreseeing as he was, could not imagine even a small part of the magic that his discovery was to bring to the world when, in June 1752, he flew a kite up into a storm cloud and, by means of a string and a key, drew down charges of electricity.

This famous experiment, proving lightning to be an electrical phenomenon, was one of the great steps in establishing the early theories of electrical energy. The first invention to grow from this experiment was the lightning rod, designed to conduct charges of electricity from housetops to the ground without damage. This was long known as "Franklin's rod," and won for its inventor international recognition. Balzac, in writing of Franklin, described him as the "man who invented the lightning rod and the republic." And in 1753 the Copley medal of the Royal society was voted to Franklin because of his valuable research into electrical phe-

Another invention by Franklin, paving the the work of Edison on storage batteries and of Steinmetz on the electric arc, was his development of the Leyden jar by introducing the use of lead for the inner armatures.

Great as Franklin was in his other lines of endeavor-as statesman, diplomat, author, publisher-it is by his experiment with kite and key that he is known to most people. And it is through that experiment that the Twentieth century is benefiting most by his labors.

Steinmetz, in spite of physical weakness and deformity, won a place of leadership in the scientific world through his development of the mathematics of electricity. Through his work we are able to tame and measure electric power with mathematical exactness. His early work along this line was in cstablishing his theory for the calculation of the alternating current, and his later work, as consulting entineer for the General Electric Company, gave the electrical world a new understanding of electrical discharges, waves and impulses.

socialist, working for the love of his work and the good of his fellow man, Steinmetz would accept no salary for his employment. All he wanted was his living-a drawing account from which he could provide for his own simple needs and which would give him freedom to buy the supplies and equipment he required for his experiments. With no desire for riches or material gain, he was mentally free to submerge himself in his studies. He died in October, 1923, a poor man. But his legacy to science has been beyond computation.

Edison, as everyone knows, gave us the incandescent light, the phonograph and the large-unit storage battery. For 50 years his name has been synonymous, in America, with electricity and its

At 15, he was a telegraph operator. Before he was 21 he had developed the "automatic repeater," by which a message could be transferred from one wire to another. An invention for duplex telegraphy, which he sold for $40,000, gave him a fund with which to retire from the key, establish a laboratory of his own and devote himself to inventive research. The carbon tele one transmitter was his next invention. Then tollowed the long line of inventions and refine ments of inventions with which Edison has held the leadership in his field.

To a greater extent than either Franklin or Steinmetz, Edison followed his discoveries and inventions through to their practical development and their establishment in American homes. But even he has not carried out this practice to the extent followed by Kent. Perhaps this is but another step in our scientific and industrial evolution, just as radio itself is a step ahead of the electric light and the phonograph.

Franklin, Steinmetz, Edison and Kent—those four lives span the whole period of electrical development. They, above all others, stand out in the popular mind as the "Wigards of Electricity,"

A DOCTOR'S ADVICE:

GO LIGHT ON LAXATIVES!

Everyone needs a laxative AT TIMES. But there's no need for making it a HABIT. If you have the habit, you can be rid of it in thirty days. Or less! And this is how:

The next time you go to take any strong cathartic-don't. Instead, take a little cascara. That's not a vicious drug, but the bark of a tree. The laxative made with cascara couldn't harm a child. It is, in fact, the one cathartic many physicians will approve for children. Gentle as it is, cascarizing is just as thorough in cleansing the colon as the more powerful purges that Instead of being clogged worse than actually sap a person's strength.

Proof that there's no habit from cascara begins the very day after taking.

Implications and Incidents of the Great Victory of Hoover Over Smith.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

OVERWHELMING victory for the Republican party in the national election is old stuff by this time, but some of the surprising, not to say startling, features of that victory will remain fruitful topics for conversa-tion for a long while. To say that Hoover captured forty states with ried only eight states with 87 electoral votes, tells only the recordbreaking triumph of Hoover. On the other hand Smith received a total popular vote in excess of that given any successful candidate for the Presidency in former elections. This is accounted for by the tremendous total vote brought out by the unprecedented interest in the election and by the fact that Smith materially reduced the normal Republican majorities in many states though he could not win those states. Despite this, the Demo-crats as a party had little of which to boast, for Hoover smashed the solid South by winning Texas, Virginia, North Carolina and Florida, while Smith carried only two Northern states-Massachusetts and Rhode Island, in both of which there is a huge foreign-born and Catholic population. The case of Virginia is interesting. The Democrats of that state never forgave Tammany for knifing the Davis-Roosevelt ticket in 1924, and this year they quietly went out to get

Smith was supposed by the wiseacres to be the popular candidate of the "urban" Americans, yet Hoover carried eight of the country's fourteen largest cities, including Chicago. The farmers of the Middle West were alleged by various prophets to be in revolt against the Republican party and led to Smith by the bolting of Senator Norris and others. But Hoover carried every state in that region without difficulty.

The prohibition and religion issues, the former declared bunk by Charles Evans Hughes and the latter ostensibly disowned by both parties, cut both ways, as was long ago predicted, but each candidate profited by one or other of these issues in certain states. It does appear to be demonstrated that the American people do not wish, at this time, to have a President who is wet and a Catholic. Sober analysis of the vote shows, above all, that Americans realize they are the most prosperous nation on the globe and believe the continuance of their prosperity is best assured by continuance of Republican rule. That prohibition as a national issue must now disappear is the view of many. Others see the prospect of a new alignment of the electorate, wet and dry, in the not far distant future since the vital differences between the Republican and Democratic parties are fast fading into nothingness.

Republican control of the next congress is assured. The party gained seven seats in the senate and made a net gain of 28 seats in the lower Unofficial returns give this as the complexion of the two houses: Senate—Republicans, 56 (including vacant Vare seat in Bennsylvania);

Many states elected governors last week, and often the result was not in accord with the state's vote on the Presidency. An outstanding instance of this was the victory of Franklin Roosevelt, who carried New York with ease though Al Smith lost it to Hoover by nearly 100,000 votes.

HERBERT HOOVER was amazed by the magnitude of his victory but displayed no unseemly exultation. In a statement to the press he said he felt there had been imposed on him a sense of solemn responsibility of the future and of complete dependence upon divine guidance for the drew from Lord Cushendun, acting task which the greatest electoral office in the world imposes. "That task is to give the best within me to interpret the common sense and the ideals of the American people," said Hoover. "I can only succeed in my part by the co-operation and unity of spirit of the leaders of opinion and of action, for the common service of our country."

While the President-elect has decided upon no details of specific plans for the future, he has stated emphatically that his induction into office will be attended by a simplicity equal to that of any inauguration that has been held. He expects to re-main in California for several weeks and to spend the Christmas holidays in Washington.

Speculation now turns on the make-up of Hoover's cabinet. He has told the public nothing about this yet, but it is believed Mellon will continue as secretary of the treasury if he so desires. Secretary of State Kellogg is said to wish to retire and Ambassa-dor Dwight Morrow is most frequently mentioned for that portfolio, though some believe it may be offered to Senator Borah ceptance or disapproval, and unofficial returns show that it was accepted by a considerable majority. Thus the fundamentalists score another victory, for the law makes illegal the teaching of the theory of evolution in schools supported by public taxes. The act will affect textbooks now in use in the various high schools as well as in the state colleges and the university. It will cause revision of the university textbooks in biology, geology, zoology, psychology, and possibly English.

Gov. Al Smith took defeat with a smile and promptly wired his congratulations to Mr. Hoover, receiving an appreciative message in reply. The governor told the reporters that he was all through with running for public office but is undecided as to his future business or professional activities. The New York Herald Tribune said he was to be offered the chairmanship of the board of directors of a new $55,000,000 Wall street bank when he retires from the governorship on January 1.

CABINET crises occurred in several countries last week. In France Premier Poincare and his ministry resigned when the Radical Socialist party adopted a resolution condemning his finance bill and especially its religious articles which provide for the return of Roman Catholic monastic orders in France. Financial drcles were dismayed and confusion reigned in parliament. Poincare resisted the demand that he form an other ministry, and it was considered probable that, if he persisted, For-eign Minister Briand would be made premier. Vintila Bratiano, premier of Rumania, and his cabinet, were forced out at the demand of the regency council, which insisted that the National Peasant party should par-ticipate freely in the celebrations of Rumania's annexation of Transylvania. Juliu Maniu, the famous peasant leader, was believed the natural successor to Bratiano and the peasants of the country prepared to be come its real rulers, but complicaprevented this consummation for the present. The South African government of Premier Hertzog resigned to get rid of one member and a new ministry was at once formed by Hert-zog. In Portugal the cabinet gave up office and its president, Col. Vincente Freitas, formed a new government.

KING GEORGE in his address open-ing parliament expressed his great satisfaction with the signing of the Kellogg pact to renounce war. In opening the debate on the address Ramsay MacDonald, Labor party leader, strongly criticized the government's estimated the stronger of the signing of the signing of the stronger of the signing of th ernment's action with regard to the now discredited Anglo-French naval compromise, charging it with hamper-ing the activities of the League of Na-tions and putting obstacles in the way of disarament. Next day this attack was resumed by others and TORAL, the confessed assassin of President-elect Obregon of Mexico, was sentenced to death by a firing squad. Mother Maria Concepcion, the nun accused of being the "intellectual author" of the crime, was sentenced to 20 years in prison. The verdicts were appealed.

UNDER the supervision of an American commission headed by General McCoy, the election in Nica-ragua passed off quietly and Gen. Jose Maria Moncada, Liberal, was chosen President, defeating Adolfo Benard, Conservative, by about 20,000 votes. The polls were guarded by American marines and bluejackets commanded by Gen. Logan Feland and there was no serious disorder anywhere. Each voter was required to dip his finger in a chemical stain as he cast his ballot, to prevent repeating, and in submitting to this regulation President Diaz, other high offi-

ETNA is in violent eruption Magain, and while it is furnishing a magnificent spectacle for tourists to Sicily, it is bringing destruction and terror to the inhabitants of cities and villages on the slopes of the volcano. Before the end of the week two or three towns had been almost completely wiped out by the rivers of molten lava flowing from the crater and the entire zone was isolated from the outside world. Volcanologists said this eruption was likely to be long continued.

VOTERS of Arkansas had something else to decide on besides candidates for office. The so-called "ape law" was on the ballot for action of the ball vember 10 in Kyoto, the ancient capital of the island empire. His progress from Tokyo to Kyoto, consuming several days, and the ceremonies of enthronement were accomplished with solemn rites so ancient that no one knows what they originally meant, and all the festivals were picturesque in the extreme. The emperor and his empress and all the dignitaries connected with the affair were attired in the old traditional costumes. Thousands of Japanese and a great throng of foreigners gathered in Kyoto to see all they could of the ceremonles and to shout "Banzai" as Hirohito mounted the throne of his ancestors.

> A $25,000 of the funds of the Loyal ALLEGED embezzlement of Order of Moose school at Mooseheart, Ill., was disclosed when warrants were issued for the arrest of Hugo Doebler, controller of the school, and Harold Cook, his assistant. E. N. Roselle, superintendent, said an audit of the books might raise the amount charged in the warrants to $100,000. Cook was arrested but Doebler is in Germany visiting his wife. The school is the national children's home of the Order of Moose, and those who know of the excellent work done there will be sorry to learn of its financial loss.

DR. FRANK CRANE, one of the best-known "inspirational" writers of the United States and formerly a prominent pastor in Chicago, died in Nice, Italy, of cerebral hemorrhage. With Mrs. Crane and a party of friends he was on a tour of the world. Doctor Crane's syndicated writings reached an estimated audience of 5,000,000. He was also editor of Current Opinion and the author of a number of books. Another author who died last week was Eliza Scidon the Far East.

TRAGIC death overtook Capt. C. B. Collyer, pilot, and Harry Tucker, passenger-owner of the monoplane "Yankee Doodle" in which they had made two record-breaking flights across the continent. While en route from Los Angeles to New York the aviators were caught in a rain and fog in the Bradshaw mountains of Arizona and struck the wall of Crook canyon 23 miles south of Prescott. The heavy load of gasoline apparently exploded with the impact and the plane

Girl at the Top in Health Test

Millions of boys and world, thousands of them right here in the West are being restored to health and strength by the purely vegetable tonand laxative known as California Fig Syrup and endorsed by physicians for over 50 years. Children need no urging to take it.

They love its rich, fruity flavor. Nothing can compete with it as a gentle, but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It gives tone and strength to the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord. It stimulates the appetite, helps digestion.

A Kansas mother, Mrs. Dana Allgire, 610 Monroe St., Topeka, says: Bonnie B. is absolutely the picture of health, now, with her ruddy cheeks, bright eyes and plump but graceful little body and she stands at the top in every health test.

Much of the credit for her perfect condition is due to California Fig Syrup. We have used it since babyood to keep her bowels active during colds or any children's ailments and she has always had an easy time with them. She always responds to its gentle urging and is quickly back

Ask your druggist for California Fig Syrup and look for the word "California" on the carton so you'll always get the genuine.

Between You and Me

"Common sense is the most uncommon kind of sense."

By HAROLD BELL WRIGHT

High Living

"I've heard tell of folks what live mebby thirty stories high—whatever that means. But I knows some common, everyday, backwoods folks what are sure enough livin' on mountains a sight higher than that."—Preachin' Bill.

BUT I do not mean what you think I mean by that common expression, "high living."

You are thinking of expensive things to eat and drink, and of the expensive things which usually go with that sort of "high living. The high living which I have in mind is different. You see, after all, one's eating habits merely indicate the level upon which one lives.

But it is worth while to observe that one may or may not serve God with knife and fo k.

It is doubtful if one can cultivate Christian spirit and develop a case of indigestion at the same time.

The devil finds it easy to make acquaintance with one whose liver is on strike.

That life is a question of food in no way belittles the companion truth that death may also be found on the dinner table.

When a man takes to dumping ham andwiches, strong coffee and mince pie into his stomach while his brain is working at eighty pounds pressure, he needs a guardian. He may now and then crawl out of the grave he is digging for himself, and take a casual look around; but it cannot in any sense be said that he is living

No, high living does not necessarily mean lobster and champagne. The lobster is not a bird that nests on the mountain tops of life. Neither is champagne the drink of the hills. High living is something more than a matter of restaurants, lunch counters, or grocery bills. Think of Henry Fabre! For forty years, "harassed by a terrible anxlety about his daily bread . . . fighting against the paltry plagues of life." And then his great wish real-

High living does not necessarily mean lobster and champagne.

High living is something more than a matter of restaurants. lunch counters, or grocery bills.

Exactly! It is easily possible to live high physically, and at the same time dwell mentally in an unhealthy morass.

And these swamp dwellers are poor unfortunate creatures -I tell you-even though they are envied by some folk without understanding.

I would have us apply here the same principles to which we hold in our homes and in our social intercourse.

ized: "A bit of abandoned, barren, sun-scorched land, favored by thistles and by wasps and bees." A labora-tory, he called it, where without fear of being troubled by the passers-by, he could carry on his explorations into the inner life of the insect world, and study that greatest of all-life's problems, instinct, in its loftiest manirestations.

Not exactly high living, as high living is generally understood. And yet few souls have ever reached the wondrous heights of life where this poverty-stricken Frenchman was so much

If you doubt this-thinking me extravagant in my remarks-read what Fabre has written about the common flies and beetles and grasshoppers and spiders, which you and I "swat" or tread underfoot with no concern,

Exactly! It is easily possible to live high physically, and at the same time dwell mentally in an unhealthy morass.

And these swamp dwellers are poor infortunate creatures—I tell you even though they are envied by some folk without understanding. In these low mental levels thought is stagnant and breeds disease and death. poisonous snakes, slimy lizards, unclean toads and every kind of loathsome creature, make their homes there. The soul sinks in black coze and filth. Hot fevers of unholy lust burn out the hearts of men.

Yes, I know that book. But is it always necessary to read book in order to know what kind of book it is? This book is much talked about, or rather, whispered about, among certain people. Several persons have drawn me aside, on occasions, to ask in low confiden-tial tones if I have read it.

Well, what I know of these people who are so interested does not make their recommendations of value except that it quite definitely fixes the character of the book. It was Lincoln, I think, who said: "For the people who like that sort of thing, that is just the sort of thing that such people would like."

No, I am not surprised that it was a woman friend who gave you the book. My observation is that there would be no market for that sort of thing if the dear sisters would let it what you have done that would justify her in thinking that you would care for it. And I certainly would not consider her judgment of your taste as a compliment. As to her being your friend: Well, I would rather think it is she, not you, who claims

Do I believe in official censors? I do not.

A system of official censorship would put an end to all artistic or intellectual development. Can't you imagine what would happen if every possible genius of the future were to be measured by the thumb rule of a politically appointed board of cen-

And, heavens above! What a humiliating confession it would be! Don't you see? To inaugurate official censorship would be to declare our very civilization a failure. It would deny all the bard wo. progress of centuries. It would proclaim the utter inadequacy of our educational systems, our home life and our religions.

If it has become necessary to make common indecency illegal, and to set a politically appointed watch over ourselves lest we give ourselves and our children over to the evils of obscene imaginings, to what a sorry end have we arrived! We must, indeed, be living on very low ground. I, for one, am not ready to concede that we have reached such a degree of rottenness. But I do believe 100 per cent in unofficial censorship.

I would have us apply here the same principles to which we hold in our iomes and in our social intercourse. If a person is too yulgar, indecent, or obscene in speech or habits, such a one is ostrucized by decent society. Certain characters, you know, are not tolerated in our best hotels. Persons of certain complexes a.e never invited to our homes, or permitted to associate with our sons and daughters.

I mean by that, that we should demand for our books, plays and motion pictures the same standards of decency which by common consent regulate our lives in all other things.

If these dirty scavangers who glean the stinking materials for their books, plays and pictures from the sewers and cesspools of life, are justified by their contention hat it is art, then why place any limit upon their exhibitions?

It is not true that the greatest art is indecent. The greatest art the world has ever known has been inspired by religion. It is not true that more money is made by these unclean books, plays, and pictures. The greatest money-makers amon, books, plays and pictures have been clean. Think it over and you will see I am right.

The plain trith is that these degenerates who live by the putrid offal which self-respecting artists reject, live that way because they like it. They are that kind of

They are procurers for the purposes of mental prostitution. They breed moral pestilence. The filth they write befouls the mind and pollutes the imagination. They are instigators of degrading immorality and these people by purchasing their wares, we are of their kind-we are in their class.

There is no law requiring you and me to support them. Then why sneak down to their level? Why not keep to the higher ground? These people may, or may not, be artists. The artistic quality of their wares-I contend-has nothing to, do with the case. Great art may be unmoral, but that is no reason for labeling obscenity art. A book, play or picture does not become art merely by violating every code of human decency. Is it not possible for art to be both great and inspiring? May not a work of genius be clean?

If this be Pollyanna thinking, make the most of it.

Yes, there are low lands, too, in human industry - occupations - business. Labor is lowly only when the laborer works on low ground.

You know what I mean. As a general proposition the man who sees in his work nothing but something for himself, is not living on a very high elevation. If you are getting nothing from your job but your pay-check you are sure enough stuck in the mud.

No matter what salary one draws such low living is not worth it. One hundred per cent profit does not .1ways signify success. It is better to conduct business on the higher levels for a 6 per cent return than to operate in the swamps for a 20 per cent profit.

Another thing. Most of us, at some time in our lives, have gone down to the bottom of the hill for a more or less protracted visit. I am not talk-ing about such secidental or occaonal very human excursions.

Between you and me, I am rather suspicious of the person who never even stepped in the mud. Who was it said: "The pr'de in never having tallen, is in itself the greatest fall"?

I em discussing the human hogs that habitually wallow in the filth. The real danger is that we make our homes, find our pleasures, conduct our business—that, in short, we live on low ground.

To live high is to see efar. It is to stand in the sunshine and watch storms in the distance. It is to sit in the cool shade of the pines and see the blazing desert below. It is to look down upon poisonous vapors and blinding fogs. It is to breathe pure air and to see clearly the stars.

But I cannot for my life imagine

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

At the Warren ranch, the "Three Bar," on the fringe of the "cow country," a stranger applies for work as a rider. Williamette Ann Warren—known to all as "Billie," is the owner of the ranch. The girl's father, Cal Warren, had been the original owner. The question whether the territory is to remain "cow country" or be opened to settlement is a troublesome one

"Because the Three Bar needs a man that has prowled this country and gathered a few points about what's going on," he returned.

"And that information is for sale to any brand that hires you!" said the girl. "Is that what you mean?"

"If it was, there would be nothing wrong with a man's schooling himself to know all points of his job before he asked for it," he said. "But it happens that wasn't exactly my rea

A shade of weariness passed over her face. During the two years that her father had been confined to the house after being caved in by a horse and in the one year that had elapsed since his death the six thousand cows that had worn the Three Bar brand on the range had decreased by almost half under her management.

"I'll put you on." she said. "But you'll probably be insulted at what I have to offer. The men start out after the horses tomorrow. I want a man to stay here and do tinkering jobs round the place till they get back."

"That'll suit me as well as any," he accepted promptly. "I'm a great little hand at tinkering round."

The clang of the sledge had ceased and a huge, fat man toomed in the door of the shop and mopped his drip ping face with a bandanna.

"I'm glad you've come," he assured the newcomer. "A man that's not above doing a little fixing up! A cowhand is the most overworked and underpaid suphead that ever lost three nights' sleep hand-running and worked seventy-two hours on end; sleep in the rain or not at all-to hold a job at forty per for six months in the year. The other six he's throwed loose like a range horse to rustle or starve. Hardest work in the world-but he don't know it, or hand. He thi.ks it's play. Not one out of ten but what prides nimself that he can't be browbeat into doing a tan of work. Ask him to cut a stick of firewood and he'll arch his back and laugh at you scornful-like. Don't that beat h-17"

"It do," said the stranger.

"I'm the best wegon cook that ever closhed dishwater over the tail-gute, and even better than that in a ranchbouse kitchen," the loquacious one modestly assured him, "But I can't do justice to the meals when I lay out to do all the chores within four miles and run myself thin collecting scraps and squaw wood to keep the store het up. Now since Bille has hired you, I trust you'll work up a pile of wood that will keep me goingand folks call me Waddles," he added as an afterthought.

"Very good, Mr. Waddles," the new comer smiled. "You shall have your

The big man grinned

"That title is derived from my shape and galt," he informed. "My regular name is Smith-if you're set on tacking a Mister on behind it."

The girl waved the talkative cook aside and turned to the new band. "You'll take it then."

"Could you spare me about ten min utes some time today?" he asked. "Yes," she said. "I'll send for you when I have time."

The man beaded back for his horses and turned them into the corral. He rambled among the outbuildings on a tour of inspection and the girl saw him stand long in one spot before the solid log cabin, now used as a store room for odds and ends, that had been the first one erected on the Three Bar and bad sheltered the Harrises before her father took over their

CHAPTER II

The Three Bar girl sat looking from the window of her own room, the living room of the ranch house, one end of which was curtained off to serve as sieeping quarters. The new man was still prowling about the place, inspecting every detail, and she wondered if he could tell her anything which would prove of benefit in her fight to stop the shrinkage of the Three Bar herds and help her to face the drastic changes that were reshaping the pol-icles of the range country.

The Three Bur home range was one of many similar isolated spots where the inhabitants held out for a con tinuance of the old order of things All through the West, from the Mex ican border to the Canadian line, s score of bitter feuds were in progress the principles involved differing widely according to conditions and local ity. There were existing laws-and certain clans that denied the justice of each one, holding out against its enforcement and making laws of their own. In some spots the paramount issue was over the relative grazing rights of rows and sheep, fanning a flame of hatred between those whose occupations were in any way con cerned with these rival interests. In others the stockmen ignored the home stead laws which proclaimed that set tlers could file their rights on tand. As always before, wherever men resorted to lawlessness to protect their fancied rights, the established order of things had broken down, all laws disregarded instead of the single one originally involved

In many communities these clashes between rival interests had furnished opportunity for rustlers to build up in power and practically take the range. Each clan was outside the law in some one particular and so could not have recourse to it against those who violated it in some other respect; could not appear against neighbors in one matter lest their friends do likewise against themselves in another.

This attitude had enabled the wild bunch to saddle themselves on cer tain communities and ply their trade without restraint. Rustling had come to be a recognized occupation to be reckoned with; the identity of the thleves was often known, and they visited from ranch to ranch, whose owners possibly were honest themselves but had friends among the out laws for whom the latchstring was always out. The rustlers' toll was in the nature of a tribute levied against every brand and the various outfits expected certain losses from this source. It was good business to recoup these losses at another's expense and thus neighbor preyed on neighbor. It was a case of dog eat dog and the slogan ran: "Catch your calves in a busket or some other thief will put his iron on them first

It was to this pass that the Three Bar home range had come in the tast five years. As Billie Warren watched new hand moving slowly toward the bunk house she pondered over what manner of man this could be who had played a single-handed game in the hills for almost a year. he leagued with the wild bunch, with the law, or was he merely an eccen tric who might have some special knowledge that would help her save the Three Bar from extinction? The stranger picked up his bed roll and disappeared through the bunk house door as she watched him.

The lean man who had first greeted him jerked a thumb toward un unoccupled bunk.

"Pay roll?" he inquired; then, as the new man nodded, "I'm most generally referred to as Lanky," he of fered tentatively. "Evans is the rest of IL"

The stranger hesitated appreciably; then:

"Harris will do all right for Cal for every day," he returned and introductions had been effected. It was up to each man to use his own individual method of making his name

There had been much speculation about the brand worn by the two torses. The hands were a drifting tot, gathered from almost as many points as there were men present, but none of them knew the brand

A dark, thin-faced man with a slen-der black mustache was the first to voice a query, not from the fact that his curiosity was large-it was perhaps less than that of any other man in the room-but for the reason that he chose to satisfy it at once. Morrow's personality was cold and bleak, inviting no close friendships or intimacies; uncommunicative to a degree that had impressed itself on his companions of the last few days and they looked up, mildly surprised at his abrupt interrogation.

"Box L." he commented. "Where does that brand run?" "Southwest Kansas and Oklahoma."

the stranger answered, "Squatter country." Morrow said.

Every third section under fence.

Harris sat looking through the door at the valley spread out below and after a moment he answered the thrust as if he had been long prepared for it.

"Yes," he said. "And that's what all range country will come to in a few more years; farm what they can and graze what they can't-and the sooner the better for all concerned." He waved an arm down the valley. "Good alfalfa dirt going to waste down there-overrun with sage and only growing enough grass to keep ten cows to the quarter. If that was ripped up and seeded to hay it would grow enough to winter five thousand

This remark led to the old debate that was never-ending in the cow country, breaking out afresh in every bunk house and exhaustively redis-

Evans regarded Harris curtoasty as he deliberately provoked the argunent, then sat back and listened to the various ideas of the others as the discussion became heated and general. "It's a settled fact that the outfits that have put in hay are better off." Evans said. "But there's a dozen localities like this, a dozen little civil wars going on right now where the inhabitants are so mulish that they lay their ears and fight their own interests by upholding a flea-bit prejudice that was good for twenty years ago but is a dead issue today.

"And why is it dead today?" Morrow demanded. "And not as good as it always was?"

"Only a hundred or so different reasons," Evans returned indifferently. "Then beef-tops brought ten dollars a head and they're worth three times that now; then you bought a brand on the boof, come as they run, for round five dollars straight through, exclusive of calves; now it's based at ten on the round-up tally. In those days a man could better afford to let part of his cows winterkill than to raise feed to winter the whole of them through-among other things. These days he can't."

"And have your water holes fenced," Morrow said. "As soon as you let the first squatter light."

"The government has prohibited fencing water holes necessary to the adjacent range," Harris cut in. "If that valley was mine I'd have in hay this long time back,"

"But it wasn't yours," Morrow pointed out.

"No; but it is now, or at least a part of it is," Harris said. "I picked up that school section that lays across the valley and filed on a home quar ter that butts up against the rims." He sat gazing indifferently out the door as if unconscious of the dead slience that followed his remark. More men had drifted in till nearly a dozen were gathered in the room.

"That's never been done out here buying school sections and filing squat-ter's rights," Morrow said at last, "This is cow country and will never be anything else."

"Good cow country," Harris agreed 'And it stands to reason It could be made better with a little help."

"Whenever you start helping a country with fence and plow you ruin it for cows." Morrow stated. "I know!" "It always toomed up in the light of good move to me." the newcomer returned. "One of us has likely read his signs wrong."

"There's some signs round here you better read," Morrow said. "They were posted for such as you."

"It appears like I'd maybe made a bad selection then. I'm sorry about that," Harris deprecated in a negligent ton: that believ his words. "It's hard to tell just how it will pan out." (TO BE CONTINUED.)

model is worth noting not only be- ! cause of its color and design, but a chief point of interest is the fact that it is made of rubberized silk, handpainted in the striking modernistic de sign which panels it from neck to hemline down the front. It is very practical, this rubberized silk.

If, perhaps, you do not quite fancy silk for kitchen wear, even if rubberized to the point of practicability, then take this hint-make a gay patchwork apron out of "leftovers" of gingham and chambray and such. That is, sew this and that gay little scrap together after the manner of 'crazy-quilt" patterning. The front panel in the apron here pictured might be used as a guide. Use patchwork made in this wise for pockets, belts, vokes and bandings and there you have it-a modernistic kitchen apron! They're new, these patchwork aprons. being so thoroughly unique they make extremely clever Christmas gifts.

tweed for, what with the winter social season sending an S. O. S. call for dressy attire, the subject of velvet becomes of paramount interest.

In proof of the lure of velvet we take pleasure in calling attention to the charmin, ensemble here pictured. Such a captivating three-piece costume can scarcely be other than a case of "love at first sight." The coat and skirt are of Brazilian brown transparent velvet. The blouse is of sheer silk with metal threads of beige, copper and gold woven into a conven tionalized floral patterning. Note the cascaded fullness of the skirt and the shirred velvet motif which helps unify the blouse with the skirt at the hipline. There's a scarf of the velvet, of course, for most of the velvet coats are made that way this season. Stylists point out the advantage of the coat with the scarf neckline as it perthing, a fur neckerchief with a matching muff would add still another note

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there, are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleep-less, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday allments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fret-ful, or restless. Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.
