Liberal Prize Offer Spurs Contest Interest

$3,500.00 Divided into 97 Prizes to be Distributed to Contest Winners

Interest runs high and competition is keen among local women for the honor of receiving national recognition and reward for their ingenuity and skill in home dressmaking. This interest is spurred by the ninety-seven prizes totaling $3,500.00 which are being offered to participants in the 1929 Borden Fabrics Dressmaking Contest now open to local women. The only entry requirement for this contest is the purchase at the TIMS & TIDROW STORE of a sufficient amount of this attractive material to make one or more dresses. Children's dresses are eligible for prizes, and many local women are seizing this extraordinary opportunity to create for themselves and their families attractive wardrobes at an extremely moderate cost. Particularly enthusiastic is the management of the TIMS & TIDROW STORE who say that these new cotton prints represent the finest quality at the price that it has been their experience to handle.

The contest is conducted in the interest of Borden Fabrics and also to encourage and promote home dressmaking as an art and an economy.

As an added feature the Universal Pictures Corporation is co-operating and Universal stars will wear the winning dresses in coming productions and in a Cotton Pageant to be staged in the beautiful Imperial Valley in California at the conclusion of the contest. These stars, often called the best dressed women in America, have been quick to realize the style possibilities embodied in these new cotton prints and are rapidly adopting frocks of these dainty materials and patterns as essential features of their wardrobes.

Also of interest is the fact that these Borden Fabrics are guaranteed fast to washing, and should any Borden Fabric fade after proper washing the garment will be replaced or the cost of making same refunded.

GRAND JURY MAKES RECOMMENDATIONS

The Grand Jury for the recent term of District Court adjourned some days ago after having returned thirteen indictments—one misdemeanor and twelve felonies, we understand. W. H. Patrick was foreman.

The jury recommended that some repairs be made in the jail and in the third story of the court house.

A recommendation was also made that a competent and expert accountant be employed to audit all books, records and accounts of Donley county, giving it as their opinion that "an imperative public necessity" demands that this be done.

Another paragraph in their report is deserving of special attention. It is as follows:

We wish to call attention to the fact that a grand jury is handicapped in its investigations by reason of the fact that good citizens oftentimes do not trouble themselves to learn of particular violations of the law and that those engaged in violating the law and assisting others who violate the law are very reluctant to tell the facts, and we respectfully call upon the good citizenship of Donley county to learn all they can of law violations in the county and to sincerely co-operate with the next succeeding grand jury and other succeeding grand juries of Donley county, in order that law violation may be reduced to a minimum in this county.

Cadet U. S. Grant
West Point, N. Y. 1841.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE May day in the year 1830 there walked into the old frame hotel, which had been built to provide accommodations for visitors to the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., a freckled-faced, undersized, awkward youth of seventeen years. He wore a suit of butter-colored jeans woven on a backwoods hand loom. On his feet were a pair of coarse shoes, rough and heavy-soled, also evidently homemade. In a halting bashful manner he made known his desire for a room and when the proprietor of the hotel pushed across the desk the ruled sheet of paper which served as a register, the awkward youth scrawled on it the name "U. H. Grant, Georgetown, Ohio."

It is doubtful if the hotel proprietor gave him a second glance as he assigned him to a room D-32, for the arrival of such youngsters at his hotel, preparatory to their entrance into the military academy, was no novelty to him. If anything he must have remarked in his own mind that this rustic lad was even more unpromising material from which an "officer and gentleman" was to be made than the average youth who came to the Point. Certainly he could not have realized that he was a witness to the beginning of a military career of a man who was to be the victor in the greatest civil war the world had ever known and whom future generations were to hail as one of the great captains of all times. For this shy youth was the future Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, whose memory Americans honor on April 27 of each year, the anniversary of his birth.

"Cadet U. H. Grant" and "Gen. Ulysses S. Grant"—how did one become the other? This inconsistency in his name is one of the many in the paradoxical career of the man. From the beginning it seemed there were to be many mixups in his name. On April 27, 1822, a son the first-born of Jesse Grant and Hannah Simpson Grant, arrived in their home at Point Pleasant, a small town on the Ohio river, 25 miles east of Cincinnati. History has recorded that for six weeks this first born was without a name because his parents could not agree upon one. Finally it was decided to let chance decide the question, so the assembled relatives and friends took slips of paper, wrote their choices upon them and somebody drew one. That name was Ulysses and the person who had written it was Grandmother Simpson. Later—nobody knows who—tacked Hiram on in front of Ulysses, evidently believing that this virile Biblical name (it means "most noble") was more appropriate for the son of a pioneer than was the Greek Ulysses (it means "a hater"). But little Hiram Ulysses' mother preferred the second part of the name, which she called "Lyss" for short and as Lyss Grant he started out in life.

When Lyss was a year old the family moved to Georgetown, Ohio, and there the boy grew up into a bashful youth who was looked upon by the other boys as something of a dullard and a weakling. So perhaps it was inevitable that he was to be known in Georgetown as "Useless" Grant. When he reached the age of seventeen his father, finding that the boy had no desire to follow in his footsteps as a tanner, decided to try to get him appointed to West Point. He took the matter up with the congressman of his district, Thomas L. Hamer, and Hamer made the appointment. At this point another name was tacked on to the unfortunate Grant. Hamer knew his name was Ulysses but could not remember what his other name was. Remembering, however, that Jesse Grant had married Hannah Simpson, he wrote out the name Ulysses Simpson Grant and sent it to the War Department as his choice for a vacancy at West Point.

When young Grant got ready to start for West Point the village carpenter made a trunk for him and as a finishing touch put on it in brass tacks the initials H. U. G. (for Hiram Ulysses Grant). When Grant saw this he immediately visualized the nickname which the cadets would be certain to bestow upon him. "Useless" was bad enough, but "Hug" would be worse, so he pulled out the tacks, and in order to avoid any possibility of a repetition of that embarrassment he transposed his two given names. So we find him registering at the hotel as U. H. Grant (they will show you that page from the register if you go there today).

When on May 29, 1830, he presented himself to the adjutant of the military academy and signed his name in full on the adjutant's register as Ulysses Hiram Grant another difficulty arose. The adjutant said that he was expecting a "Ulysses Simpson" Grant (that was the work of Congressman Hamer) and here was "Ulysses Hiram" Grant applying for admission. It was such things as this which produced the endless yards of red tape which have characterized the work of the War department from its beginning and the adjutant declared that the papers would have to go back to Washington to have the name changed. But the young cadet, with the simple directness which was to characterize his future career, cut through the red tape without the slightest hesitation. He decided then and there to take the name "Ulysses Simpson" and be done with it.

Pictures, Courtesy United States Military Academy

Grant's life as a cadet forms one of the most interesting parts of a new biography of the great Civil War leader. It is "Meet General Grant," by W. E. Woodward, published by Horace Liveright of New York, and in the chapter headed "The Unwilling Soldier," Woodward tells how Grant came to West Point as follows:

Gray-coated cadets loiter about the bulletin board of the academy guard room. Slim young fellows, their movements graceful and fluid, they are living in a time-dimension that contains neither age nor youth. Their fresh contours have not been eroded to sharpness by the disillusion of life. Though they have ceased to be boys they have not yet become men. Their existence is happily suspended between ambition and achievement. They laugh a lot, for they are still to learn that ambition and achievement never meet.

In the throng is a vivacious youth named Sherman, slender, red-haired and blue-eyed. The world is to hear of him; and, after he has departed, his image in bronze will sit on a bronze horse and stare pensively through the changing years at the flood of new generations in New York's Fifth avenue.

But on that day his metal steed was far away in the incredible future. He was simply young Sherman—called Bill—full of good nature and likeable traits. He had queer ideas and a whimsical mind. His finger runs down the list of new cadets on the bulletin board and stops at "U. S. Grant."

"Here's U. S. Grant," he calls out. "U. S. yes, that's what it says. What do you suppose the U. S. part of it stands for?"

"For United States!" somebody shouts. "That's what U. S. stands for. We're going to have a fellow here named after this great big United States."

"No, it doesn't," comes another voice from the crowd. "There isn't anybody named United States. It can't be."

"Well, it's Uncle Sam," another cadet insists. "Uncle Sam Grant. That's what he is—the grandson of our good old Uncle Sam."

When Grant arrived at the academy he found himself already named. He was "Sam" Grant. No matter how he protested; and he did not protest much. The name "Ulysses" was never heard at West Point and does not appear when Grant is mentioned in the reminiscences of his classmates. They all knew him as Sam.

Despite Woodward's description of the scene of Grant's entrance upon his military career the apparent logical explanation of how Grant became known as "U. S." instead of "U. H.", the fact remains that two years after he had entered the academy he was signing his name U. H. Grant. At least, that is the signature on the back of a drawing made by Grant in 1841 as a part of his academic work, still preserved at West Point.

But the most interesting paradox of all is the fact that this man who was destined to become one of the greatest generals in American history had a profound distaste for military life as Woodward's chapter heading "The Unwilling Soldier" implies. In regard to this Woodward observes:

To those who attended the shrine of Mara, he seemed a very unimpressive figure, not only on his first day but for many months thereafter. His shoulders had a noticeable stoop—the result of his back-bending labor as a child; and he walked with the high-stepping clomp-clomp of a farmer on newly plowed ground. One of his fellow cadets recollected him as "unique appearing." Another said they all thought him "countryified." To many of them he seemed an obvious misfit.

They kept him in the awkward squad for months, and after a time he succeeded in adjusting himself gradually to his environment. . . . thought he continued for four years to be something of a trial to the tactical officers. The fact is that he possessed no native talent for soldiering—and he did not like the military profession. The moulding force of West Point had to struggle here with raw material that was not adapted to its processes, and the effort was somewhat like that of trying to make an automobile engineer out of a man who wants to be a physician. Near the close of his life, after he had become West Point's most distinguished son, he wrote that when he entered the academy he had little hope of ever getting through the course; and he had expected, if he did graduate, to resign from the army and try to get a place as a professor of mathematics in some small college.

Even more remarkable, in view of his latter fame as a general, is Grant's own testimony of his dislike for military life. During his first year as a cadet there was a bill in congress to abolish the academy because the opponents of military education declared that West Point was a breeding ground for snobbishness, that it was inefficient as a school and that keeping it up was simply a waste of money. Grant has told how he looked at the newspapers every day, hoping that the bill had passed. "It never passed," he adds, "and a year later, although time hung drearily with me, I would have been sorry to have seen it succeed." Woodward quotes a letter which Grant wrote to his cousin, in which he declared that he was very fond of West Point and enjoyed the life there, a statement which the biographer doubts seriously. Of this letter Woodward says, "It is wholly out of tune with Grant's direct, sledge-hammer character—and stands as a horrible example of what rhetoric may do for a simple-hearted plowboy" and adds "Poor homesick boy! Writing bravely of the delights of West Point to keep up his courage . . . and scanning the newspapers in hope that congress has put an end to the whole affair."

At the end of his first year as a cadet, no one was surprised when his name did not appear among those who were appointed as corporals. But every one was surprised when the commandant made Grant a sergeant at the beginning of his third year and the appointment was made the subject of considerable joking. The other cadets said that Sam Grant was made a sergeant because he could not keep step. As a sergeant he would march among the file closers and in that position he could not throw the column out of step with his stumbling. That their joking was more or less justified was shown by the fact that he did not make good as a sergeant. At least, he was passed over in the list of captains and lieutenants at the end of the third year and during his last year he served as a private.

Graduation from the academy meant simply another frustration, in a life of many frustrations, and an apparent failure for Grant. There was just one thing in which he had excelled all others while he was a cadet and that was in horsemanship. So when he was graduated he had hoped to get a commission in the cavalry. But he was told that there was no vacancy in that arm of the service, so "the finest horseman at West Point" had to be content with a commission in the infantry and as a second lieutenant in the Fourth infantry he went to Jefferson Barracks near St. Louis. One other frustrated hope occurred at this time. Next to his horsemanship his ability in mathematics had been about the only note of distinction in an otherwise insignificant career at the military academy. So he applied for a position as teacher of mathematics at West Point and was told that there was no opening at that time. He was promised a place when next a vacancy occurred. But it never did occur, so far as Grant was concerned.

Perhaps it was just as well, for as Woodward has said, "He would have been a failure as a teacher. Without the charm of personality which every successful teacher must possess, his work would have become before long an ineffective drudgery. Undistinguished and unpromoted, he would have gone laboring on for years—and then the world would have heard no more of him." Fate had something different in store for him than a return to "these gray walls" as a teacher of figures. It was to lead him through nearly a score of years of adversity and apparent failure before promising him any measure of success. Then his fellow cadets who had jokingly translated "U. S. Grant" as "Uncle Sam Grant" were to see a nation thrilled by its translation into "Unconditional Surrender Grant" and a few years later West Point was to welcome "Cadet U. H. Grant" back as general of the army and President of the United States, the only graduate who has ever had to hold both of those positions.

King Vidor, the movie magnate, said on embarking on the Paris in New York:

SCHOOL BOND ELECTION MAY 11, 1929

At a recent meeting of the School Board a petition was presented to the School Board asking that an election be ordered by said Board for the purpose of voting bonds to build a high school building. The voting of bonds is due to recommendations offered by Margaret Cotham, State Supervisor of Schools. The School Board hold in their possession a statement made by Margaret Cotham and the State Board of Accrediting High Schools which is as follows:

"In order that your school be properly certified it is essential that minimum requirements be met. To that end the Supervisor who recently visited your school makes the following recommendations: THAT EVERY POSSIBLE EFFORT BE MADE TO PROVIDE ADDITIONAL ROOM BEFORE THE BEGINNING OF ANOTHER SCHOOL YEAR. Further growth and expansion of curriculum will be impossible without more room. At present your class rooms are entirely too full. A larger study hall is needed, with better facilities for library service. A room is needed for the commercial department. Re-arrangement of lighting and adjustment of floor levels should be given attention in your present building."

With the continuous growth of our city and our school district, and adjacent outlying districts, the School Board unanimously has sponsored this movement, and we sincerely hope the citizens will give this your due consideration at the polls May 11th.

W. I. Rains,

President of School Board.

J. B. Masterson, Secretary.

Claude Hill and family recently visited relatives and friends at Canyon and Hereford. They report having seen some very fine wheat on the trip.

Among the men at the building. They were moving swiftly under cover of the attacking force had been seen. The majority of the rustlers took to the stockade. Four ran into the main cabin.

It was as if she gazed upon the activities of battling ants, the whole scene spread out in the field of her fuses. There came a dull in the action and she knew that the sheriff had raised his voice to summon them to come out without their guns and to back as prisoners to stand trial or every crime under the sun.

Not a shot had been fired. Inside her stockade she could see Lang's men kneeling or flattened on the ground as they gazed through cracks in the walls.

She made out Harris, crouching in a draw. A thin haze of smoke spurted from his position. Three snail-like puffs showed along the face of the stockade. Then the sounds of the shots drifted to her—faint, snappy reports. Throughout the next half-hour there was not a shot fired in the flat, no general bombardment, no wild shooting, but guerrilla warfare where every man held his fire for a definite human target. A man shifted his position in the stockade, raised a peep from a hole breast high, and he saw him pitch down on the ground before the sound of the shot reached her. One of her men had noted the darkening of the crack and had searched him out with a rifle shot. Three shots answered it from the main cabin.

She presently noted one of her men sitting under a sheltering bank.

MRS. ALBERT JOHNSON

All Hedley was grieved to learn of the death of Mrs. A. S. Johnson who passed away at her home last Thursday. She had been in poor health for several months and confined to her bed for the last two months. After a spell of pneumonia she was taken to the Wilson Sanitarium at Memphis and all was done for her that could be done, but she did not seem to improve much. Her desire was to be taken home, which desire was granted, but she was able to be up very little, and continued to grow worse until the end came.

She leaves to mourn their loss her aged mother, her husband and three sons; four brothers, Truman Mosley of Clovis, N. M., Milt Mosley, of Clarendon, Clint Mosley, of Cooper, Lawrence Mosley, of California, one sister, Mrs. Nevia Darnell of Winston, North Carolina, and a host of relatives and friends.

Mrs. Johnson was born Oct. 11, 1891, at Ekin, N. C., and came to Texas with her parents at the age of ten years. She professed religion when 18, and joined the Missionary Baptist church at Enloe; was baptized by Rev. W. W. Eaves who is now conducting a revival meeting in Hedley.

She has been twice married, the first time at the age of 18 to Mr. Calvin Harkness, to which union were born two sons, Eiba and Weldon; the second time to Mr. A. S. Johnson of Hedley; to this union was born one son, Clifford, now six years old. She had a bright, sunny disposition and was loved by all who knew her. She will be missed in our community as well as in her home. But should we grieve for death came as a relief to her, and now she is calmly resting, with no pain or sorrow, and we have that hope of meeting her someday around the Great White Throne where we will never have to say farewell. Of course the hours will seem long and lonely without her, but we must not be selfish and must be submissive to the will of the Master, who said it was enough, she must go. He is merciful and did not want her to suffer any longer.

The funeral was held at the home at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Y. F. Walker of Lockney, Rev. C. B. Brooks and Rev. E. D. Landreth of Hedley. Many were the kind words spoken to her while in life, and many were the good words spoken of her in death. Many flowers were strewn in her pathway in life, and many were placed on her casket after death. These were tokens of the esteem in which she was held. It was said of her that she lived a consistent Christian life ever since her conversion when a child. How beautiful to live the Christlike life that the memory of us will be sweet to those who are left behind, and that we have the assurance of a life eternal where there are no sorrows or tears, no pain or sickness.

Dear husband, your wife has departed, Dear children, your mother has gone, She only stayed till life was well started Then slipped away for oh, so long. You will miss her smiling face I know, You will miss her tender loving care, You will miss her footsteps many times, Your sorrows she never more can share.

But you can live so you can meet her Some sweet day, by and by, Where you will never say farewell, Where loved ones never more will die. Dear broken hearted mother, My heart goes out to you Who never more will see her, And your life will be lonely, too.

May each of you remember That Jesus suffered too, For Lazarus, He loved so tender, Passed away, as others do.

LESTER MUNCIE

Lester B. Muncie, age 27 years, 3 months and 9 days, was instantly killed Tuesday night about 9 o'clock by a bullet from a 30.80 rifle in his own hands.

According to his mother-in-law Mrs. J. L. Webb, of Amarillo, with whom he was visiting, he had gone to his car to bring the gun in the house for fear it might be stolen. No one heard the shot and it was not until several minutes later that he was discovered dead with a bullet through his abdomen. Judge J. C. Landis, Amarillo coroner, rendered a verdict of accidental death.

Funeral services were held Thursday at the McLean Church of Christ. Interment in Hillcrest cemetery, the Odd Fellows being in charge of the services at the cemetery.

Mrs. Muncie died in an Amarillo hospital just a week ago, and the community had not recovered from the shock of her death when news reached here of this further tragedy.

They are survived by three children, a son, J. A., and two daughters, Pauline and Beatrice. —McLean News, April 25.

Early Court Decision Went Against "Flyer"

Twenty-seven states have passed laws within the past few years to govern the operation of airplanes and the liability of flyers and owners. But, surprising as it may seem, this general movement comes more than a century after the first appearance in an American court of a case involving the rights of a man in the air.

It was in 1822, according to World's Work, that an aeronaut, one Charles Guille, floated over New York city and was forced to make a landing in the tenderly nurtured garden of a citizen named Swan. The balloon dragged Guille 30 feet through Swan's prize radishes and potatoes, while the excited crowd that had followed him trampled down most of the vegetables that escaped his swath.

In the suit that followed, the court held the aeronaut liable for damages, asserting that his descent and cries for assistance were equivalent to a request to the crowd to follow him.

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. ## CHAPTER XI—Continued

They rode from the devastated fields and angled southwest across the range. When some ten miles from the Three Bar Harris dismounted on a ridge and shot at him, listening with entire indifference to his optimistic plans.

"We're only scratched," he said. "It won't matter in the end."

"This is the end," she dissented. "The Three Bar is done."

"It's just the start," he returned. "It's the end for them! Don't you see? They staked everything on one big raid that would smash the Three Bar and disorganize the rest from duplicating our move. That would give Slade a new lease of life—delay the inevitable for a few more years. They made one final attempt and lost. They're through!" he asserted positively. "That's their last shot. We're only delayed—that's all. The home stead cabins are only charred. The old buildings at the ranch are gone. I'll put a crew in the hills getting out new logs and there'll be enough out-of-job peepers riding grub-line to rebuild the whole place. We've got our land. The hay is trapped flat right now but the roots aren't hurt. Next spring will show the whole flat coming up with a heavy stand of hay."

"You're a good partner, Cal," she said. "You've done your best. But the whole thing would only happen over again. Slade's too strong for us."

"Slade's through!" he asserted. "He's locked up and when he gets out his hands will be tied. Inside of a month the law will be in the saddle for the first time in years. Once Aden gets a grip on things, with folks behind him, he'll never lose it again."

He painted the future of the Three Bar as the foremost outfit within a hundred miles, but her mind was busy with a future so entirely different from the one he portrayed that she scarcely grasped his words. All ways she had heard her parents speak of the day when they should go back home; and she had always felt that the day would come when she, too, would live in the place from which they had come—with frequent trips back to the range. The love for the ranch had delayed her departure from year to year. But now the old familiar buildings were gone and there were no ties to hold her here, or even to call her back once she was gone.

Harris rose and pointed, rousing her from her abstraction. Down in the valley below them fled a long line of dusty horsemen.

"There is the law!" he said. "That's what I brought you here to see. It's what we've been waiting for. That little procession stands for organized law!"

She turned and looked behind her as her ear caught the thud of hoofs and jangle of equipment. The Three Bar men were just topping the ridge.

Harris knew that action, not inaction was the best outlet for her eager glee, temporarily smothered by the shock of the raid.

"I thought maybe you'd like to go," he said. "The jaunt will do you good."

She showed the first sign of interest she had evidenced.

"And we're going to the Breaks," she stated.

"That's where," he said. "We'll order them to give up and stand trial. They won't. Then we'll clean them out. Hunt them down like rats!"

The little band in the valley was drawing near. She recognized Carp, Bentley and another Slade man riding with the sheriff at their head.

"What's Bentley doing there?" she asked.

"One of Carp's men," Harris said. "If any of them get away from us Carp will bound them down. He wears the U. S. badge and won't be stopped by any feeling about crossing the Utah or Idaho lines. Rustling is of no interest to him. That's the sheriff's job. But Carp will round them up for obstructing the home stead laws."

The Three Bar men came up and halted. Harris and the girl changed mounts and led their men down to join the file of riders below.

It was well after sundown when they halted in a sheltered valley. Waddles cooked a meal over an open fire. Bed rolls were spread and the men were, instantly asleep. Three hours before sundown the cook was once more busy round a fire.

The meal was bolted and each man lashed a generous lunch on his saddle before riding off.

Daylight found them twenty miles from camp and the horses were breathing hard. They turned into a coulee threaded by a well-worn trail. Three miles along this Bentley turned to the right up a branching gulch with eight men. Another mile sheriff and Harris at the head of the rest, holding to the beaten trail.

Harris motioned to Billie.

"You fall back," he said. "The men had drawn their rifles from the scabbards. They never did post a guard. But there's just a chance. So for a little piece you'd better bring up the rear."

Harris turned up a side pocket and the men waited while he and the sheriff climbed a ridge on foot to investigate. Harris motioned to the girl.

"Come along up where you can see," he said and she followed them up the ridge.

"From behind a sage-stump Harris trained his glasses on the group a mile out across the shallow basin. Two men stood before a teepee near the stockade. There were two other tents inside the structure, with a number of men moving about them.

He handed his glasses to the girl.

"We'll be starting," he said. "By the time we get fixed the rest will be closing in. You stay here and watch the whole thing."

"I'm going along," she said. "I'm as good a shot as there is in the hills. And it was my ranch they burned."

The sheriff shoved back his hat and pushed his fingers through his mop of gray hair.

"Fact," he confessed. "Every word But there's swarms of men in this country—and such a d—n scattering few of girls that we just can't take the risk. That's how it is. If you don't promise to stay out of it we'll have to detail a couple of the boys to ride guard on you till it's over with."

She knew that the other men would back Harris and Aden in their verdict. She nodded and watched them turn back toward the horses.

There was nothing spectacular in the attack of Harris and the sheriff. They went about it as if hunting vermin, cautiously and systematically taking every possible advantage of the enemy with the least possible risk to their men. The advance was slow as they closed in on the stockade. There was a sudden commotion among the men at the building. They were moving swiftly under cover. Some of the attacking force had been seen. The majority of the rustlers took to the stockade. Four ran into the main cabin.

It was as if she gazed upon the activities of battling ants, the whole game spread out in the field of her glasses. There came a lull in the action and she knew that the sheriff had raised his voice to summon them to come out without their guns and go back as prisoners to stand trial for every crime under the sun.

Not a shot had been fired. Inside the stockade she could see Lang's men kneeling or flattened on the ground as they gazed through cracks in the walls.

She made out Harris, crouching in a draw. A thin haze of smoke spurted from his position. Three similar puffs showed along the face of the stockade. Then the sounds of the shots drifted to her—faint, snappy reports. Throughout the next half-hour there was not a shot fired in the flat; no general bombardment, no wild shooting, but guerilla warfare where every man held his fire for a definite human target. A man shifted his position in the stockade, raised to peer from a hole breast high, and she saw him pitch down on the ground before the sound of the shot reached her. One of her men had noted the darkening of the crack and had searched him out with a rifle shot. Three shots answered it from the main cabin.

She presently noted one of men sitting under a sheltering bank and eating his lunch. She looked at her watch; it was after three—the day more than half gone and less than a hundred shots had been fired. Five men were down in the stockade.

The shadows lengthened rapidly, and her view through the glasses was beginning to blur when the gates of the stockade swung back and five horses dashed out, running at top speed under the urge of the spurs, a wild stampede for safety, every man for himself.

She saw one man turch sideways and slip to the ground; another straightened in the saddle, swung to two jumps, and slid off backward across the rump of his mount, shooting ceased when six shots fired. Four riderless horses were rearing round the basin.

only four in the house to be accounted for. A tiny point of light attracted her eye. It grew and spread. She knew that one of her men had crawled up under cover of night and fired the house. She thought of the burning buildings on the Three Bar and rose to make her way back to the pocket where the horses had been left in the care of a deputy.

All through the day she had scarcely moved and she was tired. The hours of inactivity had proved more wearing than a day in the saddle. Harris and the sheriff came in with their detail. There were no prisoners.

A little later Bentley's men rode up and five minutes behind them came Carp with the rest, and all hands turned in. At daylight the long return journey to the Three Bar was commenced. Twenty miles out from the ranch and before noon of the next day the sheriff and the marshals had split off with their men, leaving the Three Bar crew to ride the short intervening space to the ranch alone.

As she neared the edge of the Crazy loop valley the girl dreaded the first glimpse of the pillaged ranch.

They had reached the edge of the valley and she looked down upon the ruins.

"Now I'm ready to go," she said. "I'll go and see what Judge Colton wants."

"He wanted you to get away before anything like this occurred," Harris said. "I knew that maybe we'd have tough going for a while at some critical time and wanted you to miss all of that—to come back and find the Three Bar booming along without having been through all the grief. So I wrote him to urge you to come."

"Well, I'm going now," she said. "I don't need to be urged."

Harris pointed as they rode down the slope. The little cabin that old Bill Harris had first erected on the Three Bar, and which had later sheltered the Warrens when they came into possession of the brand, stood solid and unharmed among the blackened ruins which hemmed it in on all sides.

"Look, girl!" he exclaimed triumphantly. "Look at that little house. The Three Bar was started with that! We have as much as our folks started with—and more. They even had to build that. We'll start where our folks did, and grow."

CHAPTER XII

Harris sat on a baggage truck and regarded the heap of luggage somberly. Way off in the distance a dark blot of smoke marked the location of the onrushing train which would take the Three Bar girl away.

"Some day you'll be wanting to come back, old partner," he predicted hopefully. The Three Bar isn't hurt. We're in better shape than ever before and a clear field out in front; for the country is cleaned up and the law is clamped on top."

She honestly tried to rouse a spark of interest deep within her, some ray of enthusiasm for the future of the Three Bar. But there was no response. She assured herself again that the old brand which had meant so much to her meant less than nothing now. That part of her was dead.

The trail of smoke was drawing near. Harris leaned and kissed her.

"Just once for luck," he said, and slipped from his seat on the truck as the train roared in. Good-by, little fellow. I'll see you next round-up time."

As the train slid away from the station she looked from her window and saw him riding up the single street on the big paint-horse. The train cleared the edge of the little town and passed the cattle chute. Three wagons, each drawn by four big mules, moved toward the cluster of buildings which comprised the town, the freighters on their way to haul out materials for the rebuilding of the ranch.

The work was going on but she no longer had a share in it. She was looking ahead and planning a future in which the Three Bar played no part.

Deane was with Judge Colton, her father's old friend, to meet her at the station. As they rode toward the Colton home she told the Judge she had come to stay and Deane was content. After the strenuous days she had just passed through she needed a long period of rest, he reflected; but the older man smiled when he suggested this.

"What she needs now is action," he said. "And no rest at all. Cal Warren's girl isn't the sit-around type."

Deane acted on this and no day passed without his having planned a part of it to help fill her time. And in the late winter, after having visited school friends who lived farther east, she found herself anticipating the return to the Colton home as eagerly as always in the past she had looked forward to seeing the Three Bar after a long period away from it. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

Converted by Airplane

An intelligent African was greatly shaken in his belief in Islam through recently seeing several airplanes visiting Zaria and the interior of his country. The sight of them convinced this man that the Moslem belief was indeed false, since amongst other things it teaches the solidity of the clouds above! This caused a thorough disturbance in the spectator's mind, and there is good reason to believe he will soon be turned in heart to Him who, though dwelling on high, desires to abide in every lowly believer who yields to His love.—Montevideo Herald.

SHORT-JACKET CLOTH SUIT; MANY WINSOME BONNET TYPES

Cloth Suit With Bright Scarf.

AFTER all, there's nothing can outclass a natty two-piece tailored suit, when it comes to "good style." One never makes a mistake in selecting a simple tailor like the one in the picture for general wear. It is a very late and a very youthful model of navy blue flannel—has the smart circular-cut skirt and the cardigan jacket silhouette.

And do not neglect to take note of the scarf! More and more fashion depends upon the gay scarf to add the finishing touch to any and every tailor. Speaking of scarfs, the mode has so elaborated upon the theme that "scarfology" has become a most complicated yet fascinating study of color, fabric and design. Then, too, there is the art of wearing to be mastered, which is as important as the scarf itself.

No longer is the scarf a mere triangle or square or oblong of silk. It's all that, with a thousand and one startling innovations introduced both as to the scarf itself and the new tricks in the way it is worn.

One of the swankiest ideas is the one-side scarf adjusted so as to reveal a single streamer. This idea is not only carried out with accessory scarfs, as is shown in the picture, but necklines of coats and dresses feature the one-side scarf effect in ingenious ways.

Among recent scarfs is the triangle which has a slot cut in one end, through which the other end is pulled, thus doing away with tying it in a knot. You will like this model. It is so practical.

Color contrast takes the place of printed patterns in many of the latest scarf versions. That is, half of a triangle will be navy perhaps, the other half bright red or tangerine, or the combination may be black and white or possibly purple with chartruse.

Then, too, there are many flying ends to some of the scarfs. They can direction rather than pass up a tangerine straw.

If your spring costume is navy take this tip—buy a clever hat which contrasts navy with chartruse. Two shades never looked more stunning together. To the fascinations of color and straw, a third is added—the winsomeness of the shapes themselves. This surely is a season when "bonnets is bonnets," including every type from little clothes and cunning scoop fronts with shallow crown to "baby bonnet" effects with their plaited frills at the back. The new Paris shapes remind over and over again that when it comes to bonnet brims there are contours and contours.

One also realizes that either a hat has a brim or it has none, which is to say that the fact of brims coming in does not mean that snug toques and caps are going out—which accounts for the fact of the bonnet group in the illustration concluding with the portrait (in panel below) of a very smart toque made of felt with novelty straw leaves for the crown.

Of the four bonnets shown the first is a lime-colored bangkok with matched velvet ribbon.

To the right is a natural colored trive to start from the back when worn, some tying to the front, others fluttering out from between the shoulders.

There's this about the new scarfs—they baffle description, so eccentric yet without so charming are they. It's worth while sauntering around to the neckwear department, for the modern scarf must be seen in order to appreciate the extent of its novelty and diversity.

Exotic straws, beguiling colors and perfectly charming shapes make hat shopping a real joy at this time of the year.

The new straws such as haku, ballibunt, siso and bangkok are exquisitely fine, feminine and springlike. They are dyed in colors which enthrall. Tangerine is a featured shade. A thin line-like straw in this color is irresistible. No matter the price it is worth the expense in baku straw with flowers handmade of silk in realistic colors.

A black ballibunt cloche tipped with white is pictured in the oval to the left. Fashion is especially high-lighting black and white millinery for spring. Note that one side of this brim is longer than the other, which is one of the favorite silhouettes this season.

To the right is a very charming model featuring the new shallow crowns and the widened-out-at-the-sides brim. These cunning bonnets are worn back off the face sufficiently to show a bit of the hair.

Don't sacrifice your Model T, therefore, but take it to the Ford dealer and have him estimate on the cost of putting it in A1 shape. A very small expenditure may be the means of giving you thousands of miles of additional service.

For a labor charge of $20 to $25 you can have your motor and transmission completely overhauled. This price includes new bearings, reboring cylinders and any other work necessary. Parts are extra.

Valves can be ground and carbon removed for $3 to $4. The cost of tightening all main bearings is only $6. The labor charge for overhauling the front axle is $4.50 to $5—rear axle assembly, $5.75 to $7.

New universal joint will be installed for a labor charge of $3. Brake shoes relined for $1.50. Rear spring and perches rebushed for $1.75. The cost of overhauling the starting motor is $3. A labor charge of approximately $2.50 covers the overhauling of the generator.

It will pay you, therefore, to see your Ford dealer and have him put your Model T in good running order. By doing so you will protect and maintain the investment you have in your car and get months and years of reliable transportation at a very low cost per mile.

Amarillo Man Recovers from 11 Years Suffering

Sullivan Says His Condition Was So Bad He Thought He'd Soon 'Cash In'—Orgatone Ends Troubles.

Still another comes forward and adds his voice to the thousands who have already endorsed the wonderful treatment, Orgatone. A Sullivan, formerly employed by the Public Service Company, before his illness, and who lives at 705 North Lincoln street, Amarillo, Texas, says he had suffered for eleven years and at times his condition was so bad he thought he couldn't live and would soon "cash in." He now states that while he has used only a little more than one bottle of Orgatone so far his troubles are rapidly disappearing, and that he already feels like a new man.

In describing his troubles and failure to heretofore find relief to the Orgatone representative a few days ago, Mr. Sullivan said:

"For eleven years I suffered from stomach and kidney trouble and before I took this Orgatone I was all run down in every way and about played out. Often I would suffer so badly with my stomach and get so weak and dizzy it was impossible for me to stand up. Several times I came very near falling and would have to lie down until these spells wore off. My nerves seemed to be on edge all the time, and I couldn't get a good night's sleep. I couldn't digest anything. I would eat and my food would just lay in my stomach and ferment and make gas and misery for me. My kidneys bothered me an awful lot and I had severe pains across the small of my back and was continually getting up during the night. I tried medicines and doctors but I kept going down hill and getting worse all the time and I thought I would never pull through.

"Finally I got to reading about Orgatone and what it was doing for others and my wife insisted that I try it, so I decided to take a chance on it helping me, too. Well, I've been improving ever since I took my first few doses and the change it has made in my feelings is surprising. I sleep good every night now and I'm not dizzy like I was and my nerves are almost as steady as they ever were. I can eat a good square meal and digest it and I don't have any gas on my stomach or other bad feelings afterwards and I'm getting back my lost weight right along. I haven't had any trouble with my kidneys since taking Orgatone, and I just feel better in every way and have more strength. Yes, sir, I've been trying for eleven years to get relief from my troubles and Orgatone has done the work when everything else failed. It certainly was the right medicine for me."

Genuine Orgatone may be obtained in Hedley by the Wilson Drug Co.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Mexican Rebels Beaten and Slaughtered at Reforma; Wisconsin Votes Wet.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MEXICO'S revolution, or at least a great portion of it, was drowned in an ocean of blood last week, if federal statements are reliable. The rebel army of General Escobar, commander in chief of the movement, having been driven for miles by the troops of Gen. Juan Almazan, concentrated in the city of Jimenez, Chihuahua, and for several days fought desperately to hold the place. They were well entrenched and Almazan gives them credit for extreme bravery. But the assaults of the federal infantry, artillery, cavalry and air forces were too much for them and they withdrew from the city to Reforma, 12 miles away. General Serrato's cavalry, meanwhile, was hurried to the north of Reforma and there destroyed all the bridges and culverts, and when Almazan's air scouts reported that the rebels could retreat no further, he ordered an attack in full force. Escobar and other rebel generals saw they were trapped and fled, leaving their infantry to fight alone. These men took refuge behind their troop trains and the battle there was described by Almazan as the bloodiest in years of Mexican history. Neither side asked or gave quarter and the slaughter was "tremendous." The rebel dead covered the battlefield, and many hundreds of their wounded fell into the hands of the federales.

The entire action, which began at Corralitos on March 31 and ended in the smashing victory at Reforma, was declared by the federal commander to be decisive. In his report to General Calles he praised highly the work of all branches of his army, and also paid a compliment to Escobar's military ability. In Sonora and other regions the rebels, at last accounts, were still carrying on. The aviators in raids over the federal fortifications at Naco created a lot of excitement by dropping two or three bombs on the American side of the international boundary, one of them injuring an American motion picture man. This and the possibility of similar incidents gave considerable concern to the State department in Washington. Mexican federal troops held at Fort Bliss, Texas, after their retreat across the border when the rebels captured Juarez, were ordered released by President Hoover at the request of the Mexican government.

PROHIBITION in its many ramifications insists on holding a place on the front page every day. Tuesday the voting population of Wisconsin went to the polls and by a majority of about 2 to 1 directed the state legislature to repeal the state dry enforcement laws and to remove the penalty on 2.75 per cent beer. The wets naturally were jubilant but the dry leaders were not dismayed and asserted that the referendum was "futile." They held that the dries carried a majority of the counties, and that the legislators were bound to follow the wishes of their constituents rather than of the state as a whole. Should both houses pass a repeal measure it would place Gov. Walter J. Kohler in a delicate position. He endorsed President Hoover's prescription of "concurrent enforcement of prohibition by states." If he should sign or veto the bill he would alienate either wet or dry backing.

CONGRESSMAN M. ALFRED MICHAELSON of Chicago, a professed dry, who was indicted at Jacksonville, Fla., last October on charges of bringing a trunkful of liquor into the country from Cuba, surrendered to the federal authorities in Chicago and gave bond for his appearance for trial in Key West in May. He declined to be interviewed but denied the charges.

In the case of Congressman William M. Morgan of Ohio, also a dry and likely to be especially embarrassing to the Hoover program would have his complete support.

States Attorney Tuttle of New York, investigating the story that Morgan brought four bottles of liquor from Panama, was told by the customs agents that the bottles were in his baggage but refused to open his trunks, demanding the right of free entry. This was granted him by Deputy Collector H. C. Stuart, who was not told of the presence of the booze. The agents said Morgan threatened to "raise hell in Washington" if his baggage was not passed without examination. Since the agents did not see the bottles and Mrs. Morgan, who was with her husband cannot testify against him, it may be the only persons to suffer, if any, will be certain custom officials.

STUYVESANT FISH and some of his friends are exercised over the fact that his cruiser yacht was held up in New York harbor by enforcement agents and searched for contraband liquor. Mr. Fish said the boat was fired upon. No liquor was found on the vessel. Federal officials in New York after investigation declared the action of the enforcement men was entirely proper since the boat did not stop at their signals and the shots were fired high in the air.

MYRON T. HERRICK, American ambassador to Paris, died suddenly from heart failure, and all of France was thrown into deep mourning for he was beloved by the entire nation and was considered the best friend of France ever sent there by the United States. Officials of highest rank, and representatives of all countries hastened to the embassy with their condolences, the press was filled with articles lauding the dead American, and the government at once arranged to give him an elaborate national funeral with full military honors—an unprecedented honor. After simple ceremonies in the American embassy, during which orations were delivered by Premier Poincaré, General Pershing and Quinones de Leon, Spanish ambassador to Paris, the cortege set out for the American cathedral. The pallbearers were: M. Poincaré, Foreign Minister Briand, Senor de Leon, General Pershing, J. Pierpont Morgan and Owen D. Young. The casket was accompanied by two squadrons of infantry and representatives of all the official circles and American organizations in Paris, and the line of march was lined with infantry under the command of the military governor of Paris. After brief church services the body was taken to Brest by the embassy staff and there turned over to the French government which transferred it to the light cruiser Tourville as a salvo of 19 guns was fired. The cruiser was to bring Mr. Herrick's remains to the United States, being due in New York on April 12. Following a parallel course with it was the Aquitania, bearing Mrs. Parmely Herrick, the late ambassador's daughter-in-law.

SENATE and house committees were exceedingly busy formulating farm relief legislation for the extraordinary session of congress. Among these heard, the most important was Secretary of Agriculture Hyde, who said he was giving his personal views but who, it was taken for granted, was expressing the ideas of President Hoover. He placed emphasis upon his belief that legislation should confer broad powers upon the farm board without attempting to define its exact procedure. The board, he indicated, must be depended on to provide the real solution of the agricultural problem. In response to questions Mr. Hyde expressed the opinion that a board of seven would be less unwieldy than one of twelve, that bipartisan representation on the board was acceptable, but that he objected to geographical representation. He said the board should be within the Department of Agriculture instead of an entirely independent agency.

Some members of the committee exhibited an unfriendly spirit toward the administration's proposals, but Representative Aswell of Louisiana, Democrat, declared that the Hoover program would have his complete support.

VICE PRESIDENT CURTIS put up to Secretary of State Stimson a rather embarrassing problem, rather embarrassing problem, likely to be especially embarrassing to Curtis. As every one is a widower, and he took to Washington his half-sister, Mrs. Edward E. Gann, to be the hostess of his establishment. Before Mr. Stimson assumed office his predecessor, Mr. Kellogg, after study of precedents, ruled that while Mrs. Gann might sit where she pleased at dinners given in the Vice President's home, she must be seated below the wives of ambassadors and ministers at official dinners where she and Mr. Curtis were guests. The Vice President informed the press last week that he had asked Secretary Stimson to overrule Mr. Kellogg's decision. If this request is refused, it is possible Mr. Curtis will decline to attend official dinners or other functions where Mrs. Gann is not accorded the rank he believes she should have. Of course social circles in the national capital are tremendously interested in the controversy.

FINANCIAL operations during March, according to a treasury statement, resulted in a reduction of the gross public debt by $108,980,352; and the net balance of the general fund on March 31 was more than $350,000,000 greater than a month before, funds thus being available for further retirement of government securities during April. The reduction of the public debt during the fiscal year ending June 30 next is expected to exceed $700,000,000. Treasury officials and congressional leaders are agreed that it is too early to consider tax reductions, preferring to wait until it becomes certain that income tax revenues will maintain the present high level.

EMPLOYEES of the Loray cotton mill at Gastonia, N. C., are on strike and last week they became so demonstrative that the police became alarmed and called on the governor for help. Several units of the state National Guard were ordered to the town and the disorders were quelled. A committee of strikers called on J. A. Baugh, general manager of the mill, and presented a series of demands, including a forty-hour, five-day working week, a minimum wage of $20 weekly, and changes in working conditions. Mr. Baugh rejected the demands. Half a dozen textile mills in South Carolina are closed as a result of strikes.

The Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen have started a nation-wide campaign for a six-hour day to combat unemployment. Their opening meetings were held in Faneuil hall, Boston. Timothy Shea, assistant president of the engineers, told them that they must go to congress for a bill of rights to "protect men who are being cast into the junk heap." Contemplated railway consolidation plans, he said, meant that their union alone would have at least 20,000 more men out of jobs. A series of regional meetings throughout the country was planned.

AMANULLAH KHAN, former king of Afghanistan, began last week the drive by which he hopes to regain the throne he relinquished. With 30,000 soldiers he marched on Kabul and there were vague reports of heavy fighting with the troops of Bacha Saeb, the self-made king. Amanullah's forces were said to be armed with Russian rifles and ammunition, which was taken to mean that the Soviet government had interested itself in his behalf. Prince Omar Khan, member of the Afghan royal family, who recently escaped confinement in Allahabad, is reported as likely to take the field against Amanullah, supporting his own claim to the throne.

CHANCELLOR SEIPEL, who for six years has managed the affairs of the Austrian republic, has resigned, together with his cabinet which was made up of men from the Christian Socialist party. Opposition to Doctor Seipel had been increasing since the great riots of July, 1927. He said he could have continued to resist criticism as a government official, but that he could not hold his office in the face of opposition to him personally as a priest. The church, he said, was his chief concern.

Poland also had a cabinet crisis for the government of Premier Kasimierz Celinski resigned because the government and parliament failed to co-operate. Marshal Pilsudski appeared into the situation.

SINGING CLASS

The singing drew a good six-crowd Sunday, and the interest continues to increase. Leaders were Messrs. Earthman, Ayer, Watkins, Malone and Trussell. A quartet by Messrs. Watkins, Ayer, Earthman, and Mrs. Joe Crawford was much enjoyed.

Quite a number were present from Ring. Mr. Ayer was given a chance to display the talent of his class at Ring, to the delight of all. An offering was taken to buy fifty of the new Stamps song books.

These meetings not only help us to sing, but bring the community closer together and, I trust, help us to love Jesus better.
