THE SCHOOL BONDS SATURDAY, MAY 11th

23, from the State Department, just off the press, shows that the following schools have lost classsification and affiliation: Brookshire, Charco, Cooper, Carring ton, Glen Rose Harvood, Oakwood, Pleasant Grove, Ranger. Melvin, London, South Houston, Valley View. Wildorade. Woden, Wgie, and Dimmitt. The last named school since losing classi fication and affiliation has voted $150 000 bonds for the erection of a new school building in order that they may begin at the bottom and build their school up to affiliation and classification were cancelled.

May we not profit by their mistake by voting the school bond? The following telegram was sent to S. M N Marrs, State Superintendent, which reads:

Acidity

culties is excess acid. Soda cannot elter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonfut of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take. One of the leaders in this movement have been the Daughters of the American Revolution who began some two years ago to mark the National Old Trails route from the Atlantic to the Pacific with heroic statues of the women who followed that trail across the country. The design of a St. Louis sculptor, A. Leimbach, known as the "Madonna of the Trail," was accepted and twelve of these statues, each eighteen feet tall, are today standing along the trail in the states of Maryland, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Ulinois Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, rizon and California. In nearly every case these statues were unveiled on Mother's day and special interest was attached to the ceremonies in Caliornia because one of the women who participated n them was Mrs. Caroline Cook (who is shown in the picture above), an eighty-three-year-old mioneer mother who crossed the plains in a cov-

The state of Kansas is also planning to honor its pioneer woman and has accepted another design by the same sculptor for that purpose. In January of this year one of the features of the celebration of the sixty-eighth birthday of Kansas was the dedication of the site on the state house ds in Topeka where this statue is to stand. The Pioneer Women's Memorial Association of Kansas, which is sponsoring the movement, is raising a fund of $25,000 for this memorial. In both the Kansas and Oklahoma pioneer mother statues, the sculptor has emphasized the qualities of teacher and worker as well as mother in the women who first came to those states and helped make them the abode of civilization.

When the town of Elmwood, Ill., commissioned its most famous son, Lorado Taft, to model a statue which would typify the pioneer spirit, the sculptor did portray that idea with the figure of a pioneer man. Today the statue which stands in the park square of Elmwood and which was unveiled last year shows a stalwart frontiersman standing, gun in hand, defiantly braving the dan-

* A Woman Homesteader

I walked with quick steps up the coulee trail;
I had to hurry lest the creeping dark
Would catch me and my nervous hands would fall
To find the wire gate that closed the park
Against stray cattle. Here my cabin stood,
In a small wilderness of quaking asp;
Here I "homesteaded." No one thought I could
Two years ago, but now I calmiy pass
A bristling porcupine, a rattlesnake.
The watching eyes of some wild, hidden thing—
A coyote sneaking near the dried-up lake,
A row of stunted pines where finches sing,
The mule-eared deer that often come to sup,
And nuzzle one another at my spring
(Which, after cleaning, is but just a cup),
And yet, tonight, how glad I was to bring
My hands in contact with the wire hight
That held my gate. I thought, "Real homesteading!
I hate the dark; I only love the light!"
Qudckly I shut the door and slid the draw
Across the iron latch, and dropped the clamp,
Firmly in place, but not before I saw
Near Tiger Butte the glimmer of a lamp.
I stood a moment puzzled by the light—
Startled, perhaps, and curious as a deer
That lifts its bead to catch the rushing flight
Of a young grouse And then my silly fear
Vanished like mountain mist. My lamp! A match!
To cheer that other soul I knew had come
To slough and fence; to have a garden patch;
To live with Ged as I and build a Lome.

How worthy the ploneer mother is of having her memory perpetuated in enduring stone or bronze is forcibly impressed upon anyone who reads the history of the American frontier. "It is an Odyssey without parallel in the annals of Tennessee, if indeed it can be matched anywhere, "Here is that story as Emerson Hough tells it in his book "The Way to

"In 1779, one James Robertson of the Watauga-settlements of North Carolina, a steadfast man, heard certain voices that called him to the West. James Robertson, the steadfast, forming his comthis uncertain, perilous enterprise, said "We are the advance guard of a civilization, and our way is across the centinent." Simple words yet that was in 1779!

Now, for the building of this one town, the town that is now the city of Nashville, and the capital of Tennessee, this leader had gathered three hun-dred and eighty persons, men, women, and children. All the women and children, one hundred and thirty in number, in charge of a few men, went by boat, scow, pirogue, and canoe, in the winter time, down the bold waters of the Holston and Tennessee rivers. The rest traveled as best they might over the five hundred miles of "trace" across Kentucky.

Of this whole party two hundred and twenty-six got through alive.

The boat party had many hundreds of miles of unknown and dangerous waters to travel, and the journey took them three months, a time longer than it now requires to travel around the world. They ran thirty miles of rapids on the shoals of the Tennessee, pursued and fired upon by Cherokees. Of this division of the party only ninety-seven got through alive, and nine of these were wounded. One was drowned, one died of several wounded. One was drowned, one died of satural causes and was buried, and the rest were killed by the Indians. Their voyage was indeed "without a parallel in modern history." Among those who survived the hardships of the journey was Rachel Donelson, later the wife of Andrew Jackson.

Donelson, later the wife of Andrew Jackson.

The path of empire in America, the path of corn and venison, was a highway that never ran backward. These men would never leave this country now that they had taken it. But what a tax was this that the barbaric land demanded of them! In November of 1780, less than a year after the party was first organized, there were only one hundred and thirty-four persons left alive out of the original three hundred and eighty, but in the settlement itself there had not been a natural death. The Indians killed these rettlers, and the settlers killed the Indians. Death and wounds meant nothkilled the Indians. Death and wounds meant

The spring of 1781 found only seventy persons left alive. But when the vote was cast whether to stay or return, not one man voted to give up the fight. In that West corn was worth one hundred and sixty-five dollars a bushel, and in its raising the riffe was as essential as the plow. Powder and lead were priceless. er, fearless, changeless, they held the land, giving back not one inch of the west-bound distance they had gained!

In 1791 there were only fifteen persons left alive out of the three hundred and eighty that made this American migration. There had been only one natural death among them. In such a settlement there was no such thing as a hero, because all were heroes. Each man was a master of weapons and incapable of fear. No fiction ever painted a hero like to any one of these. One man, after having been shot and stabbed many times, was scalped alive, and jested about it. A little girl was scalped alive, and lived to forget it. An army of Indians assaulted the settlement, and fifteen men and thirty women beat them off. Mrs. Sally Buchanan, a forgotten heroine, molded bullets all one night during an Indian attack, and on the next morning gave birth to a son

Examples of Higher Criticism WHENEVER actors get together it is almost inevitable that sooner or later the subject of dramatic criticism will come up and that some one present will quote a notice favorable or unfavorable-but generally favorable-touching on his own work.

No symposium of this sort is complete without reference to the instance of tact displayed in print by a local reporter on a certain historic occasion in a small middle-western city when ambitious nonprofessionals gave a classic drama. The newspaper man who had been detailed to cover the performance was wishful to avoid giving offense to the members of the cast yet, in honesty, he could say nothing complimentary. So he merely

"For the benefit of the new hospital fund, our leading amateurs presented 'Lady Audley's Secret' at the theater last night before a large audience of our best townspeople. The orchestra rendered several pleasing selections and the acoustics of the hall were never better."

Then there is the famous criticism done by an editor in Rising Sun, Ind., when a certain native-born prodigy essayed the role of the melancholy Dane. The criticism ran something like this:

"Among scholars there has long been a dispute as to whether the works attributed to Shakespeare were written by Shakespeare or by Bacon. The editor of this paper has hit upon a satisfactory way of settling for all time 'his ancient question. Let the tombs of both be opened. The one who turned over in his grave last night was the author of Hamlet!"

I am reminded also of what Kin Hubbard, better known as "Abe Martin," had to say years ago of a certain theatrical entertainment. For brevity and yet for completeness 1 think it would be hard to beat this:

"Al Jeffrey's Uncle Tom's Cabin company played at the opera house last night. The Siberian bloodhound was badly supported."

For the first time in her life she was glad to be sheltered and painpered as were other girls. But there was a growing restlessness within her -a vague dissatisfaction for which she could not account. She groped for an answer but the analysis could not be expressed or definitely cleared in her mind.

Deane planned with her of evenings but the planning was all of play. No word of work crept into it. If only he would accept her as wholly into that part of his life as he did into the rest.

And suddenly she longed to sit for just one evening before the fire and plan real work with Cal Harris. He had been the one man she had known who had asked that she work with him-or that he should work for her. She had drifted along, expecting that that same state of affairs would go on indefinitely, believing that he filled the vold left by old Cal Warren. But now she knew he held that place he had created for himself. They had worked together and she had deserted the sinking ship to play the part of the tinsel queen.

She was conscious of a flare-half of resentment, half of apprehension -toward Harris for not having sent a word of affairs at the ranch.

Judge Colton entered the room and interrupted her reverie by hamiling her a paper. In the first black head line she saw Slade's name and Har ris': an announcement of the last chapter of the Three Bar war.

The first line of the article stated that Slade, the cattle king, had been released. There was insufficient proof to convict on any count. She felt a curious little shiver of fear for Harris with Slade once more at large. The article retold the old tale of the fight and portrayed Slade, on his re lease, viewing the range which he had once controlled and finding a squatter family on every available

She had a flash of sympathy for Slade as she thought his sensations anust have been similar to her own when she had looked upon the ruins of the Three Bar. But this was but ted out by the knowledge that he had only met the same treatment be bad handed to so many others; that he had dropped into the trap he had built for her. She found no real sympathy for Slade-only fear for Harris since Slade was freed. The old sense of responsibility for her brand had been worn too long to be shed at will. She knew that now.

"I suppose you'll be surprised to hear that I'm going back," she said. Her father's old friend smiled across at her and puffed his pipe. "Surprised!" he said. "Why, I've known all along you'd be going back before long. I could have told you that when you stepped off the train.

He left her alone with Deane when the younger man arrived. She plunged into her subject at once,

"I'm sorry," she said. "But 'Im going home. I'm not cut out for this -not for long at one time. I want to smell the round-up fire and slip my twine on a Three Bar caif; to throw my leg across a horse and ride, and feel the wind tearing past. It will always be like that with me. So this is good-by.'

ning, the stage pulled into Coldriver with a single passenger. The boys were in from a hundred miles around for one last spree before round-up time. As the stage rolled down the single street the festivities were in full swing. From one lighted doorway came the blare of a mechanical plano accompanied by the scrape of feet; the sound of drunken voices raised in song issued from the next; the shrill laughter of a dance-hall girl, the purr of the ivory ball and the soft clatter of chips, the ponles drowsing at the hitch rails the full length of the street, the pealing yelp of some overenthusiastic citizen whose night It was to howl; all these were evidences of the wide difference between her present surroundings and those of the last eight months. She gazed eagerly out of the stage window. It was good to get back.

As the stage neared the rambitng log hotel where she would put up for the night a compact group of riders seemed to stop as she recognized the blg paint-horse at their head. She had not fully realized how much she longed to see Cal Harris.

Instead of dismounting in a group they suddenly split up, as if at a given signal, scattering the length of the block and dismounting singly There was something purposeful in this act and a vague apprehension superseded the rush of gladness she ad experienced with the first unex cted view of the Three Bar crew who stood on the board side ks turned hastly inside the open as they glimpsed the riders.

Her answer informed him of the fact that she was no casual visitor but one who knew the signs and would insist on seeing it through. He nodded and shut the door.

Harris had dismounted at the far end of the block and was strolling slowly down the board sidewalk on the opposite side. Groups of men packed the doorways, each one striving to appear unconcerned, as if his presence there was an accident instead of being occasioned by knowledge that something of interest would soon transpire. A man she knew for a Slade rider moved out to the edge of the sidewalk across the street from Harris. She saw the lumbering form of Waddles edging up beside him

He Met Her at the Mouth of the Lane.

Other Three Bar boys were watching every man who showed a disposition to detach himself from the groups in the doors. The blare of the piano and all sounds of revelry had hushed.

The girl felt the clutch of stark fear at her heart. She had come too late. Harris was to meet Slade. It seemed that she must die with him if he should pass out before she could speak to him again and tell him she was back. She had a wild desire to run to him, at least to lean from the window and call out to him to mount Calico and ride away. But she knew he would not. She was frontier bred. Even the knowledge that she was town might unsteady him now. She sat without a move and the driver and guard outside supposed her mere ly a curious on-looker interested in the scene

"A hundred on Harris," the driver offered.

The guard grunted a refusal.

"I'd bet that way myself," he said. From this she knew that the two men were hoping Harris would be the one to survive; but the fact that their proffered bets backed their sentiments was no proof that they felt the conviction of their desire. knew the men of their breed. No matter how small the chance, their money would inevitably be laid on the side of their wishes, never against them, as if the wagering of a long shot was proof of their confidence and might in some way exercise a favorable influence on the outcome. No man had ever stood against Slade. She noted Harris' gun. He carried it with the same awkward sling as of old, on the left side in front with the butt to the right.

"Fifty on Slade," a voice offered from the doorway of the hotel. The guard started for the spot but the bet was snapped up by another. Wild fighting rage swept through her at the thought that to all these men it was but a sporting event.

Her eyes never once left Harris as he came down the street. When aimost abreast of the stage Slade stepped from the doorway twenty feet before him and stopped in his tracks. Harris turned on one heel and stood with his left side quartering toward Slade, the old pose she remembered so well. There was a tense quiet the length of the street, "Those you hire do poor work from behind," Harris said. "Maybe you sometimes take a charee yourself and work from in front." His thumb was pooked in the opening of his shirt just above the butt of his gun.

Slade held a cigarette in his right hand and raised it slowly to his tips. He removed it and flicked the ush from the end, then inspected the re-sults and snapped it again—and the downward move of his wrist was carried through in a smooth sweep for his gun. It flashed into his hand but his knees sagged under him as a forty-five slug struck him an inch above the buckle of his belt. Even Three Bar men were vaulting to haddles. Evans careened de creet, leading the paint-be-

Before the spectators had time to realize that it was over, the Three thar men were gone. Slade had many friends in town.

The girl had seen Harris' draw merely a single pull from left to right and by his quartering pose the gun had been trained on Slade at the instant it cleared the holster; not one superfluous move, even to the straightening of his wrist. The driver's voice reached her.

"Fastest draw in the world for the few that can use it." he said.

The guard opened the door. The girl was sitting with her head bowed in her hands.

"Don't take it that way, ma'am," he counseled. "He was a hard one -Slade."

But he had misread his signs, She felt no regret for Slade, only a wave of thankfulness, so powerful as almost to unnerve her, over Harris' escape, untouched. She accused herself of callousness but the spring of her sympathy, usually so ready, seemed dry as dust when she would have wasted a few drops on Slade.

The next day, in the late afternoon, Harris looked up and saw a chap-clad rider on the edge of the valley. She had ridden over unannounced on a horse she had borrowed from Brill. She answered the wave of his hat and urged the horse down the slope. He met her at the mouth of the lane and together they walked back to the new buildings of the ranch. The men breaking horses in the new corrals' were the same old hands. The same old Waddles presided over the new cook shack. Her old things, rescued from the fire, were arranged in the living room of the new house. A row of new storerooms and the shop stood on the site of the old. And in the midst of all the improvements the old cabin first erected on the Three Bar stood protected by a picket fence on which a few vines were already beginning to climb.

After the men had quit work to greet the returning Three Bar boss she went over every detail of the new house. The big living room and fireplace were modeled closely along the lines of her old quarters; heads and furs were on the walls, pelts and Indian rugs on the floors. Running water had been piped down from a sidehill spring. The new house was modernized. Then Harris saddled Calico and Papoose and they rode down to the fields.

As they turned into the lane they heard the twang of Waddles' guitac from the cook shack, the booming voice raised in song in midafternoon, a thing heretofore unheard of in the annals of Three Bar life.

"There'll be one real feast tonight." Harris prophesied. "Waddles will spread himself."

They rode past the meadow, cov ered with a knee-deep stand of al falfa hay.

"It was only trampled down," he said. "She came up in fine shape this spring. We'll put up a thou sand tons of hay."

He held straight on past the meadow, turned off below the lower fence and angled southwest across the range. The calves and yearlings along their route gave proof that the grading-up of the Three Bar herds was already having its effect. Ninety per cent were straight red stock with only a few throwbacks to off-color strains. The two spoke but little and near sunset they rode out and dis-mounted on the ridge from which, aimost a year before, they had viewed the first move of organized law in the Coldriver strip.

A white-topped wagon came toward them up the valley along the same route followed by the file of dusty riders on that other day. A woman held the reins over the team and a curly-haired youngster jostled about on the seat by her side. A man wren gled a nondescript drove of horses and cows in the rear.

this country-first, you and I," Harris said. "Just like that little shaver on the seat."

"Will they find a place to settle?" she asked, with a sudden hope that the newcomers would find a sultable site for a home.

Maybe not close around here," he said. "Most of the good sites you can get water on are picked up. But they'll find a place either here or somewhere else a little further on." He slipped an arm about her shoul-

"It's been right lonesome planning without a little partner to talk it all over with at night," he said. "Have you come back for keeps to help me make the Three Bar the best outfit in three states? I can't hold down that job alone."

She nodded and leaned against
