BUILDING ACTIVITY CONTINUES IN HEDLEY

The Hedley compress is now nearing completion and will be ready to handle the cotton crop of Hedley and vicinity. Col. C. F. Matkin, manager of the Memphis compress, will also manage the one here.

The local plant, together with the spur track connecting it with the Denver railroad, represents a considerable outlay of money, and is expected to handle from 20,000 to 25,000 bales of cotton this first season. It will employ 25 to 30 men during the peak of the season. Col. Matkin in talking with a representative of the Memphis Democrat, from which publication these excerpts are parodied, states that there is not a better built press in Texas than the new Hedley plant. And he adds that his company is deeply appreciative of the courtesies extended to them by the city of Hedley.

Contractor Provan has a good crew at work on Hedley's new high school building, and very satisfactory progress is being made. Mr. Provan is second to none in his line of business, and commendatory reports have been heard of his work at various places. With the completion and equipping of this building, the Hedley schools will rank with the best in this section.

Hedley's new City Hall is now practically completed—only a few finishing touches are yet to be made. The building will house the 'city dads,' the fire department and the public library, and will fill a long felt want in our town.

"Nolichucky Jack" and His "Bonny Kate"

John Sevier

WHERE THE KING'S MOUNTAIN MEN RALLIED SEVIER MONUMENT IN KNOXVILLE

CLOSE-UP OF SEVIER MONUMENT

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

NEAR the courthouse at Knoxville, Tenn., stands a tall white obelisk. As you walk along one of the shady paths in the courthouse yard and approach the towering stone these words meet your eye: "The First Governor of Tennessee—John Sevier, 'Nolichucky Jack,' September 23, 1744; September 24, 1815—Pioneer, Soldier, Statesman and One of the Founders of the Republic."

You've never heard of "Nolichucky Jack"? Then you've missed knowing one of the really great characters of the American frontier and one of the most picturesque figures in all our history. Walk around the monument and read this inscription: "Governor of the state of Franklin; Six terms governor of Tennessee; Four times elected to congress; A projector and hero of King's Mountain; 35 battles—35 victories; His Indian war cry was: 'Here they are! Come on, boys, come on!'"

Thrilling as is the story which these words suggest, it is not complete until you read an inscription on still another side of the monument. Here it is: "Katherine Sherrill Sevier, 'Bonny Kate,' came when a girl with her parents to Tennessee from North Carolina. Married John Sevier August 14, 1780, when she was twenty-six. She became the mother of eight children and died October 7, 1836, aged eighty-two. Moved from Russellville, Ala., and reentered here July 22, 1922."

And set in the brick walls of the courthouse nearby is a still more interesting memento of this great frontiersman and his pioneer wife. There you will see the original tombstones of Sevier and his "Bonny Kate" which were erected over their graves in Alabama and moved to their present location nearly 100 years later. One bears the simple inscription "J. Sevier Died September 24, 1815." The other reads "Katherine Sevier (Notice the difference in spelling), Wife of Governor John Sevier of Tennessee. Died October 7, 1836. Aged eighty-two years." These had been erected over their graves in Alabama, where they spent their last years. For history, you see, had not yet given their people the proper perspective of time through which to view their part in building the nation and it was not until nearly a century later that the Tennesseans reclaimed them as their own and paid to them in enduring stone the honors due their greatness.

For this John Sevier is characterized by one historian thus: "The organizer of the first, free and independent government on the continent, the leader of a great commonwealth; an Indian fighter whom few have ever equalled; a soldier who could meet the finest troops on the continent, in the field and with inferior numbers win success from adverse circumstances; an administrator who could conduct the affairs of his fellow-men under circumstances of the greatest difficulty; a statesman who takes rank not far behind those colossal men who watched the travail pains and facilitated the delivery of the new nation to be."

Of him, too, another historian has written, "The most daring spirit. . . was the young John Sevier of French Huguenot family (originally spelled Xavier) born in Augusta county, Va. It was from Millerstown in Shenandoah county where he was living the uneventful life of a small farmer that he emigrated in December, 1773, to the Watauga region (in eastern Tennessee). With his arrival there begins one of the most fascinating and romantic careers recorded in the varied and stirring annals of the old Southwest. In this daring and impetuous young fellow, fair-haired, blue-eyed, magnetic, debonaire—of powerful build, splendid proportions and athletic skill—we behold the gallant exemplar of the truly heroic life of the border. The story of his life, thrilling in the extreme, is rich in all the multi-colored elements which impart romance to the opening years of American civilization in the opening years of the Republic."

The Watauga settlement had been made in 1769, by James Robertson and a party of North Carolinians, who had climbed the mountains and built their cabins in a fertile valley on the other side. The young Virginian, who was a man of wealth in those days, soon became a leader in the settlement and for the next 43 years he was one outstanding figure in that part of his frontier country. For it was not long after his arrival that he had an opportunity to demonstrate his qualities of leadership in the troubles with the Indians which started during the outbreak of the Revolution. During the Revolution Sevier was once broke up the plans of the British to attack the savages upon the borders and averted a fatal stroke against the colonies by revolting against the mother country. . . . of the first of the British attempts was

Katherine Sherrill

"Indians! Indians! Run, Girls, Run!"
A keen-eyed lass at the fort gate cried
To the women who milked the cows outside.
They ran, a whoop and a gun's report
Spending their eyes as they fled to the fort.
Farthest of all from its sheltering wall,
Latest to catch and heed the call,
Was Katherine Sherrill, fairest of maids
In all Watauga's forest glades.
Hearing, she sprang like a startled deer
And fled on feet that were winged with fear.
But the call had come a moment late:
The redskins cut her off from the gate,
And while the rifle blazed away
Rushed yelling and gloating to seize their prey.
At the gate of the fort held John Sevier,
Statesman and warrior and pioneer,
Was grasped by a dozen hands and stayed
As he tried to rush to the fleeing maid;
Grasped, held back, and the great bar dropped—
It was certain death if he were not stopped,
And better a girl he captive led
Than the foremost man of the West lie dead.
The Indians rushed to seize their prey,
But she whistled aside and sped away—
Away from the gate, but toward the wall,
Eight feet it stood. The maid put all
Her strength in one great leap and flung
Her arms across the top and clung
One instant, trembling, out of breath;
Then over the top and away from death
Strong arms had caught and drawn her clear—
The eager arms of John Sevier.
Such is the story; so it was told
To our fathers by theirs in the days of old;
So will our children the tale repeat
To children clustered about their feet.
For as long as beauty is loved and youth,
And deeds of valor, and manhood's truth,
Will a place be left in the heart of the State
For John Sevier and his Bonny Kate,
For the hero brave and the bride he won
And the love that lived till their lives were done.
—E. E. Miller.

In 1775 when a war party attacked a rude palisaded inclosure built on the banks of the Watauga, near Sycamore Shoals. The fort was closely besieged for some 40 days and during this time there occurred the romantic episode which has made famous the story of "Nolichucky Jack" and his "Bonny Kate." Despite warning of the confinement, had gone outside the walls. A party of savages suddenly appeared and tried to cut them off. At the first alarm Sevier sent his men to the walls to cover the flight of the terror-stricken fugitives by a sharp rifle fire which would hold off the Indians until all had reached safety. One young girl, Katherine Sherrill, in her terror, leaped to the top of the palisade and fell over the walls into the arms of the commander. She seemed to have leaped into his heart also, for they were married soon after.

During this siege of the fort, Sevier and his men inflicted such heavy losses upon the Indians that Oconostota, the great war chief of the Cherokees, withdrew his warriors. But the genius of Sevier was not shown so much in defensive tactics as it was in the tactics of attack. Time and again he led the borderers on swift expeditions to surprise an Indian village and drive them into headlong rout. Then after destroying the village and the crops he withdrew to the Watauga settlement. In fact long before there was a Napoleon, "Nolichucky Jack" adopted the Napoleonic idea of a small, mobile, concentrating body, hurried swiftly upon a superior, but a terror force. And this policy of audacious speed soon broke the spirit of the Cherokees their allies and prevented their being used by the British in a rear attack on the colonies who were engaged in their desperate struggle on the Atlantic seaboard.

It was these same tactics which Sevier used in winning one of the most brilliant victories of the Revolution—the dash to trap Colonel Ferguson and his force of British at King's Mountain and overwhelm them before they could receive aid from Cornwallis. Not far from Johnson City, Tenn., stands a monument where Sevier, Campbell, Shelby, and other leaders rallied the mountain men for the march over the Great Smokies to take part in that battle which was afterwards to be known as "the turning point of the Revolution." For the loss suffered by the British on King's Mountain was one of the steps which led to the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown and the end of the Revolution.

At the close of the Revolution the North Carolina legislature, without consulting the settlers' wishes, ceded the Watauga region to the federal government with the provision that it must be accepted within two years. During the two years congress debated the matter and finally rejected the gift. While the discussion was going on in congress, North Carolina withdrew her courts and militia and the settlers awoke to the fact that they were under the protection of neither the state nor the federal government. And from neither could they gain any help in repelling the attacks of the Indians, who were again becoming troublesome. Although they were still subject to federal government taxes they were receiving nothing in return for them. Finally angered by being thus deserted by the state and nation which they had served so well during the trying times of the Revolution, the frontiersmen decided to establish a state of their own. And in 1784 there came into existence the independent state of Franklin, a commonwealth unique in American history. The leader to whom they turned was "Nolichucky Jack" Sevier and during the stormy history of that commonwealth, he, as before, was the outstanding leader of the east Tennessee frontiersmen. For North Carolina, after withdrawing the act of cession, attempted to assert her authority over that region again. As a governor of the commonwealth and a man whose forceful personality naturally made enemies for him, Sevier was singled out for punishment. He was treacherously betrayed, captured and afterwards tried at Morgantown, N. C., for high treason. Immediately 1,500 of the trans-Allegheny borderers assembled for the rescue of their beloved "Nolichucky Jack." For awhile a civil war seemed imminent. Then, aided by some of his old comrades-in-arms, Sevier made a spectacular escape, whereupon the people of the Watauga country promptly elected him to the North Carolina legislature. There was some protest about his taking his seat but eventually he was allowed to hold the office. When North Carolina ratified the Federal Constitution, and became one of the sisterhood of states, one congressman was to represent the North Carolina district beyond the mountains. It goes without saying that Sevier was unanimously elected.

When Tennessee became a territory, he was made general of the militia and when she became a state, he was chosen governor without opposition. He was elected to that position for three successive terms and then, under the constitution, being ineligible for a period of two years, he was thereafter elected for three more successive terms, after which he was sent back to congress and three times re-elected. "Nolichucky Jack" died as he had lived—bravely and in the field. The end came during an expedition by his soldiers. He was a score of years and where she died. He was sent back to Tennessee and the

HOW THE BALL FLATTENS OUT ON THE CLUB

NEW THEORY IS THAT IT REBOUNDS AND ELONGATES FOR INSTANT AFTER LEAVING CLUB

Does Ball Flatten on the Club?

WE ALL know that the clubhead stays with the ball for a certain length of time after the impact, but just how long is a debatable subject even by the best experts. It is said that a camera has been invented which shows that the ball first flattens out and then quickly rebounds and elongates like an egg. This, they say, is the reaction of the rubber. It looks as if it is one of those things which you are permitted to "believe or not." If it does elongate, it is certainly to a very slight degree and only for the smallest fraction of a second.

Whistling Club Aids Timing

A GOLF club that whistles is a late invention. An enthusiastic golfer who found that he was playing poorly, due to bad timing of his shots, devised his plan to put him right. He inserted a cartridge shell in the toe of the driver to make the whistle. He was not able to see how fast the club came around, but he knew that he could trust his ears. If the clubhead whistled at the wrong time he knew he was not swinging properly. When the club whistled the loudest it was traveling at the fastest pace. Naturally this should come just as the clubhead neared the ball. This idea may not become popular with golfers even in practice, but it is a novelty just the same. Most of us can hear the swish of the club without any whistling.

Change of Stance Will Correct Tendency to Slice

THOSE who slice can find almost immediate relief by taking a stance that will make it extremely awkward for the golfer to pull the arms in. That is what causes the club head to come across the ball, the prime reason for a slice. Advance the left foot, or if you like, pull the right foot back about 8 inches, thereby making it possible for the club head to come onto the ball from the inside of the line. Naturally the club will continue on over the line and most likely will bring about a hook which is just the opposite from a slice.

The hands, of course, can control the extent the slice, but it is not as in the case of the feet. The hands make a poor

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take. Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptive product.

HAVE YOU REGISTERED?

To All Concerned:

My attention has recently been called to a rumor to the effect that a number of businesses in Donley county are being conducted under an assumed name without having first complied with the law. The law forbids any person to carry on a business under an assumed name or designation other than his own real name, until after he has filed in the office of the county clerk a certificate setting forth the name under which he proposes to conduct his business, and the true name of all the parties interested therein.

A fine of $25 to $100 is the punishment for violation of this law, and each day's violation is a separate offense.

I am taking this opportunity to call the attention of all interested parties to the provisions of this statute, as I feel sure that if this law is being violated it is through mistake, and can and will be corrected at once.

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot put away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

CHAPTER IX

The Battle of the Falkland Islands

Through an oily sea we sailed south and west toward the Falkland Islands. Many a time had I passed this way in the old days when bound for Cape Horn. These islands of the South Atlantic have long been the base for whaling schooners. But to every German the Falklands will be forever memorable as the scene of a one-sided naval engagement in which one of our best beloved admirals was overwhelmed by a British fleet.

Had you seen our deck as we sailed south during these days, you might have wondered what we were about. Along with other plunder, we had looted captured ships of several great sheets of iron. We had ripped them from iron walls and roofs of fortresses and stowed them on our deck. Now the mechanics of the Seeadler's motor crew got busy with acetylene torches, and from those sheets of metal they weaved a great iron cross, ten feet high.

We drew near a spot on that lonely ocean just a bit to the east of the Falkland Islands. My navigation officer and I figured out the point carefully on our chart, and when our instruments told us we were there, I called all hands on deck. Somewhere far below on the floor of the ocean were the bodies of hundreds of our comrades and the battered hulks of a once proud German fleet. It was in these waters that our gallant Pacific squadron under Count von Spee sank in three thousand fathoms. For here it was that our light cruisers, the Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, Nuremberg, and Leipzig, with odds against them, fought it out with a more powerful British squadron.

With flag at half-mast, we stood at solemn attention. The sky was gray and melancholy. The sea rolled with a gentle swell. In our mind's eye we could picture that disastrous day when, outraged by the guns of the great British warships, our cruisers, two large and three small, had fought a losing and hopeless fight. One, a scout cruiser, escaped. The others went down, pounded from the distance, they trembled under the blows of the shells that rained down upon them. Exploding projectiles raked the decks and pierced the hulls of the ill-fated vessels. As if in a last struggle, trying to keep afloat for one more shot at the enemy, they staggered, lurched, and then, one after the other, plunged into the depths, entering port on their final voyage far below on the ocean floor, eighteen thousand feet beneath the surface. Every man aboard three of the ships was lost. A high sea happened to be running at the time, so the victors had little chance to rescue the men from the doomed ships. Two hundred and fifty members of the crew of the Gneisenau were picked up and got to the Falklands alive.

As if in a dream, I thought of the last time I saw my friend Count von Spee. It was in the days before the world went mad. The navy yard at Kiel was in gala mood. Every warship in the harbor had sent three hundred men. They stood at rigid attention while von Spee and his staff strode by. Then he addressed them.

"By order of the emperor, I am to take command of our cruisers in Chilean waters. My officers and men sail with me tomorrow."

The sailors all give three cheers. They think the admiral and his men are merely going for a pleasant vacation to the Orient. It is in 1913. No war is in sight. Yet a darker note intrudes: Even then military and naval men were unable to escape the thought of war:

"We are leaving home and country for two years. We who part from you tomorrow will do our duty, knowing that every man at home will do his. If war should come, we will be across the world and you will be here. We will be too far away to lend a hand to you, and there is little that you will be able to do for us."

"There is a young navy, but we have had a great teacher. When England built her mighty fleet, she taught us how to build ours. The English have great naval traditions, and both their traditions have been our traditions should come before we meet again, we along the far-off China coast may be but a few ships against many enemies, but from you of the High Sea fleet we expect great deeds."

We of the German navy knew and constantly gave expression to the thought that Britain was our guide on the sea. Her great seafaring tradition was our conscious and admitted pattern. We German naval men liked the English and were in sympathy with them. Our navies were alike in spirit. The French navy was somewhat different. Its morale was perhaps not so good. French naval officers all came up from the ranks. The British and German came from cadet schools and are recruited mostly from the first families. That is best. It provides a finer corps of officers. I, myself, came up from the forecastle, but I believe that, unless you have officers and men from different worlds your men will have little respect for their commanders. It must either be that, or your officers must inspire respect with their fists as in the old sailing-ship days. The French navy no longer has a rich tradition. It is true that the French had far greater sea fighters than we in past centuries, and they had their fine old naval traditions. But during the Revolution the old Royal navy of France was swept away and remained abolished for twenty years. At the end of that time, a new navy was formed, but by then the fine old French traditions seem to have been forgotten and new traditions had to be formed. We Germans, with a new fleet, took over the old, solid tradition of the British and made it our own. We did everything we could to implant it in our men, and make it a real, living thing ingrained in our people. Our sea leaders understood the importance of a tradition. That was why we were determined to keep a fleet after the war. When our great ships went down at Scapa Flow, our Socialists favored the total abandonment of the naval arm, but fortunately enough of our people came out of their post-war trance long enough to prevent such a fatal error. Perhaps it might be only a few small ships that we could retain, but it would serve to keep traditions alive until we could again build up a fleet as great or even greater than the one we lost.

Von Spee was a sailor's admiral. He was a seaman by temperament, open, honest, and jovial, uncomfortable on land and only himself when on the bridge of his flagship. Too many of our professional fighting men, I regret to say, were more ornamental than useful. They were good at wearing gold lace and that is about all. But not von Spee. He was at his best on a quarter-deck in a storm. I still can see him pacing back and forth with his bushy brows and piercing blue eyes.

The day after he said auf wiedersehen to us at Kiel, he and his officers and men left by transport for the Orient, there to relieve the officers and men aboard the cruisers of our small Pacific squadron at Tsing Tao. What was to have been their two-year term overseas began as commonplace, quiet routine. It ended under the salvo of British guns off the Falkland Islands.

Von Spee's plan, when the war caught him 15,000 miles from German waters, was to harass the allies in the Pacific and then try to slip back through the North sea to Kiel. Lady Luck smiled on him for a little while and then deserted him. After crossing the Pacific he caught Craddock, the British admiral, off the coast of Chile. Von Spee's star was in its ascendancy at this time and Craddock's on the wane. A German secret agent in Chile flashed a wireless to von Spee giving him the information that Craddock was waiting for the arrival of the big but old battleship Canopus that was rounding the Horn. Without the Canopus, Craddock's forces were weaker than von Spee's, and von Spee instantly dashed to the attack so as to engage Craddock before the Canopus came up. Craddock and his men met their fate like true British sailors. Outgunned, the British cruisers continued to fire until they sank. Only one, a small boat, got away. But their conqueror's days were numbered.

Von Spee now began his long race toward Kiel. Only two routes were possible, one by Cape Horn and the other by the Cape of Good Hope. Of course, he knew the British would be laying for him at both places. He knew also that they would be after him with swifter and more powerful ships than his own. His one chance was to beat them to Cape Horn, lose himself in the broad Atlantic, make a run for it, and probably fight his way through the blockade.

By now he was short of both munitions and coal. A wireless from Germany brought the good news that a supply ship had slipped through the blockade and was now on its way out to meet him. What a tremendous voyage he might now have made! What a hair-raising dash at the allied blockade line he might have made! But he never got the chance.

As he rounded the Horn, Dame Fortune tempted him, and he made what proved to be a fatal error. He stopped a British collier and took all her coal. This delayed him for three days. Meanwhile, a fleet of Britain's mightiest battle cruisers had arrived at the Falklands. He still might have run by them unnoticed had he not determined to shell and destroy the wireless station on the Falklands. Thus he stumbled into that nest of battle cruisers. He tried to run, but they caught and sank him. That day the British had their sea giants, the indefatigable, the Invincible, the Indomitable, and along with them a number of other battle cruisers, that later were to fight gallantly at Jutland, and then find their way to rest on the floor of the North Sea.

Only one of von Spee's ships, the light but fleet cruiser Dresden, showed her heels to the British leviathans and slipped back around Cape Horn. But the Fates were merely playing with the poor Dresden, and a few days later she was sunk by the more powerful British cruiser Kent off San Juan Fernandez, Robinson Crusoe's Island, in the Pacific. She was lying in neutral waters and should have been sheltered by the laws of war. Her captain signaled to the commander of the Kent:

"We are in Chilean territory."

"My orders are sink you on sight," replied the Kent, "and no matter where you are."

The captain of the Dresden blew up his ship, and with his officers and crew swam ashore. The island was not quite so deserted after this shipwreck as it was in Robinson Crusoe's day!

That in brief was the story of the plucky von Spee and his gallant men. Hence this dreary waste of waters off the Falklands was sacred to us. We have to, and from my quarter-deck I presided over a brief memorial service above the watery graves of our comrades and their ships. First I told my boys the story of my friend Count von Spee and his men, and every one of us knew that we, too, might soon be on our way to join them. But with the difference that we might not even have a chance to fight it out.

On German ships, the captain is also the chaplain. Every Sunday aboard the Seeadler we had our hour of prayer and song. When we had "guests" aboard from enemy ships, we invited them to join with us in the worship of the Great Ruler of the Waves. Our service followed the ritual of no particular creed. It was as simple as we simple seamen could make it. The table which bore the ship's Bible was draped not only with our German flag but also with the flags of all the allied nations whose ships we had captured and under whose colors our prisoners had sailed. I wanted to make our prisoners feel that the service was as much theirs as it was ours, and that we did not feel ourselves any more a chosen people before the Altar of God than any other people.

My life has not been altogether a pious one. On the contrary, it had been decidedly blasphemous. My character was then, and still is, far from saintly. However, I may not have been wholly unfit for the office of ship's chaplain. I am religious at heart, easily swayed by sentimental appeal. Had I not been a member of the Salvation Army in Australia? Those testimonial meetings in Fremantle were still vivid memories to me. So I was not exactly a greenhorn at conducting a prayer meeting.

Before concluding our little memorial service, I addressed our comrades three thousand fathoms below us. No mounds were raised over their graves, no green grass or kindly flowers had been placed to cheer them on their journey to the land from which no traveler has yet returned. Only the waves of the sea. I spoke to them as though my voice could somehow find its way to their resting place among the mountain ranges at the bottom of the South Atlantic:

"Glorious fallen comrades, we bring you a message from home. Your comrades have kept their promise to your commander. On sea and on land they are fighting for the Fatherland. We of the Seeadler salute you and solemnly swear that we, too, will endeavor to live and die as gloriously as you. We, too, are hunted on the sea, even as you were. So perhaps it will not be long ere we join you down there in Davy Jones' locker. If we do, our one hope is that we will be able to fight our last fight as gallantly as did you."

I then led the sailors in a prayer that we repeated aloud, and while the chorused invocation traveled southward on the winds that blew toward the men who were forward

ARTIE

His Adventures in Love, Life and the Pursuit of Happiness
By GEORGE ADE

Artie Needs a Bankroll

ARTIE hurried luncheon at one of the places where patrons help themselves. Miller and Artie took a walk on the sunny side of the street.

Artie was not as talkative as usual, and as Miller seldom did more than encourage a conversation once started, the two sauntered for several minutes to silence.

Then Artie spoke abruptly. "Miller," said he, "I got a hen on."

"What is it?"

"It's like this. Would you doo with politics if you thought you stood to win some easy Jack?"

"That depends. You're not going in to politics, are you?"

"They've got me entered, but I don't know whether I'll start or not. I'm leery of it; I don't mind tellin' you that."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, maybe you don't understand. I don't like to feature myself, but in that province where I hang out I'm pretty strong. I'm a good mixer and I've kind o' got next to the live ones, and if I do say it myself, I think there's a lot of the boys that'd vote my way if I went over 'em hard. Do you know Jim Landon?"

"Who is he?"

"He's the neevy boss in our ward, or anyway he used to be. He's one o' the sidemen, and he's out for it again, but good and scared that he can't win. He come to me last night at Hoover's cigar store and give me a big talk. What he wants is for me to come to the front for him strong the smoothest of 'em. And he learned it so quick, too. Ooh!"

"Artie, that kind of a man is a thief and that's all you can make out of it," said Miller, with severity.

"Maybe that ain't no lie, neither. He wouldn't go out with a rod or, do any o' that strong-arm work, but if Jimmy saw a guy puttin' dough into his pocket he wouldn't let on. You wouldn't have to feed him no knock-out drops to make him take the coin, I guess."

"But the nerve o' the boy. He won't never let on that he's handled any crooked money. When he was staked to the office he didn't have a thin dime except what was tied up in a bum little grocery store. Now he's got too strong to tend store and his brother-in-law's runnin' it. He won't do a thing in the world except travel around with some more o' them handy boys and lay for jackpots."

"And the talk he gives you! Baby! He's better 'n any shell-worker I ever saw. Why, he can set down and show you dead easy that he done all that funny votin' because it was a good thing for the workin' boys. Sure! That's why he wants to stay in, too—so the tax payers won't get the short end of it. On the square, if I had his nerve I'd start sellin' oil-heaters in Brazil."

"You don't mean to say he has any chance of being elected again?"

"Oh, he's got a chance all right. He'll have some of the bootleggers and beer runners rootin' for him, and, then, of course, there's a lot more o' people say: 'Oh, well, Jim's a good fellow and he's been white with me, and even if he does sand-bag a few o' them rich bobbies, what's the diff? I think he's got a chance, all right.'"

"Artie, if you take my advice you'll keep out of it. What do you want with a political job?"

"Well, for one thing, I want to get a bankroll as soon as I can and this place he's holdin' out pays good money."

"Yes, and even if you got it you'd be out again in a few years and worse

"He's Better 'n Any Shell-Worker I Ever Saw."

he knows I've got a drag in my precinct, and he says if I'll jump in and do what I can for him he'll see that I get a good job in the hall, where I can cop about twice what I gettin' now. Of course, I'm out for the important sugar—but I don't know about this deal."

"Does he stand a good chance of being elected?"

"That's what keeps me guessin'. Four years ago he won in a walk, but this time he had to do all kinds o' funny work to win the primary. There's a lotta o' people in the ward that's knockin' him all they can."

"What's the matter with him, anyway?"

"Oh, they kind o' think he's done too well. Four years ago he was on his uppers and now he's got money to burn. There's some o' them guys out in our ward can't make out how it is that Jimmy can afford to buy big apartment buildings when his salary wouldn't hardly pay a janitor of one. They say they can't stand for that kind o' work, and so there's a lotta 'em that boosted him two years ago that's out now to slough him. They've put up a new guy against him and he's makin' a nasty fight."

"I don't understand yet what they've got against your man."

"Why, they're crazy at him. You see four years ago he made the play that if they put him in he was goin' down to the City Hall and change the whole works. He was goin' to clean the streets and jack up the coppers and build some more school houses. Jimmy says to 'em: 'Throw things my way and I'll see that everything's on the level.' This talk was so good it went."

"Well, you know what happened to Jimmy when he got down there with those highbinders and begin to see easy money. He hadn't been in on the wheel up six weeks till he bought a bus that looked like the bridal suite on the Leclatman and sat at the City Hall waitin' for the easy marks to come along and throw up their hands."

"I see. He turned out to be a graft or, eh?"

"I don't see no way of gettin' past it. I like Jimmy. He's one o' them boys that never has cold feet and there's nothin' that can't be done a times to do a belongs with of them ever. Besides, I wouldn't help elect a man who sold his influence." Miller spoke with considerable feeling.

"As for that," resumed Artie, "you needn't think I like Jim Landon's way o' gettin' coin. It's just like this, though. He's gone out of his way two or three times to do things for me and, of course, them things count. Everybody's shakin' him down this spring and if he gets the gaff he'll be flat on his back. If I didn't know him I'd be against him hard. But you don't like to throw a man that's treated you right, do you?"

"I've never been in politics, but I should say that no young man could have any excuse for voting for a grafter."

"Say, now listen. It comes election day, see? I go in the place and vote for the stranger. Then I come out and meet Jimmy. He puts out the hand and I go and get a cigar with him and do the friendship act. Wouldn't that be purty course work?"

"It wouldn't be any worse than his promise to be honest, and then turning out to be a crook," said Miller.

"Well, I guess I'll pass up the whole thing. Come to size it up, for a man that don't want to be a rum hound, it's too much like work. I didn't think you'd O. K. the scheme. I'll just tell Jimmy that I'm out of it. That's an awful wise move, too. I guess an easier way to get that roll'd be to borrow a nice kit o' tops and go 'round blowin' safes."

Ararat

Mount Ararat is a twin-peaked mountainous area situated where Armenia and Persia meet, south of the Caucasus range. It is noteworthy for its extensiveness rather than its height, the highest peak being something under 17,000 feet. The mountain is of volcanic origin. Its lower regions are inhabited and the summits have been repeatedly ascended and thoroughly explored.

The usual statement that Noah's ark rested on Mount Ararat has no foundation in the Hebrew text, which reads "On the mountains of Ararat. In ancient times Ararat was the name of a district in eastern Armenia and sometimes also for all Armenia and the mountainous ridge in the southern part of that country

Amarillo Fireman Makes Wise Decision

Another Railroad Man Has Gained Wonderfully on Only Two Bottles of Orgatone

"I am just finishing my second bottle of Orgatone and I have gained wonderfully in health," said N. W. Worford at his home while talking to the Orgatone representative.

"For twenty years I have suffered from indigestion and my stomach was in bad shape. Everything I ate disagreed with me and I couldn't digest the food which my system really demanded. A short time after eating my food would sour, gas would form and beat me up so at times I could scarcely breathe. Many a night I would have to get up out of bed and take a dose of soda so I could get momentary relief. I would get up in the morning feeling as tired and worn as if I hadn't gone to bed.

"I decided after reading the high endorsements to try Orgatone, and it certainly was a wise decision. My stomach is now in better shape than it has been in years and my food digests properly. I am relieved of constipation and that tired aching feeling has left me as if by magic. Orgatone has certainly proven a great medicine for my case and I highly endorse to anyone suffering as I have done."

Genuine Orgatone may be obtained in Hedley by the Wilson Drug Co.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Flight of Yancey and Williams Across Atlantic—Big Postal Deficit.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
ONCE more the Atlantic ocean has been conquered by American aviators. Capt. Lewis A. Yancey and Roger Q. Williams were the heroes of this achievement, having flown from Old Orchard Beach, Maine, to the vicinity of Santander, Spain. Though they fell short of their destination—Rome—by 900 miles the flight across the ocean was considered a great feat. It was made in the Bellanca monoplane Pathfinder in 31½ hours and except for about two hours the airmen were unable to see the water because of dense fogs. Head winds exhausted their supply of gasoline and they were compelled to land on the Spanish coast just a little beyond the place where the French transatlantic plane Yellow Bird was forced down recently. Spanish officials and citizens gave them a hearty welcome and hunted up a supply of gasoline with which, next day, they completed their flight to Rome. They landed at the Littorio field there and the officials and people greeted them uproariously. Even Premier Mussolini was at the field to meet them, but as they were late in arriving he had left just before they landed and soon afterward received them at his residence. They were made the guests of the Italian government and treated royally.

The Chicago Tribune's amphibian plane 'Untin' Bowler, which started from Chicago to blaze a route to Berlin via Greenland and Iceland, was held up for days in the Hudson Bay region and on the tip of Labrador by unfavorable weather conditions. As its pilots were in no especial hurry they wisely declined to take long chances. At Port Burwell the work of refueling was exceedingly difficult, and the plane was in constant danger of being demolished by floating ice.

Two air-rail services between New York and Los Angeles were inaugurated last week. One carries passengers by the Pennsylvania railroad to Columbus, Ohio, and thence by plane to the California city. The scheduled time for the trip is 48 hours. The other route is by the New York Central to Chicago, by the Santa Fe or the Alton to Kansas City, and from there on by airplane to Los Angeles, with a scheduled time of 46 hours. The services started from both ends of the routes.

DORNIER works in Germany has just completed a seaplane so huge that it makes even the Germans gasp in amazement. It is designed to carry 100 passengers and is said to be three times the size of the big American NC-4. It has three decks and a navigating bridge for the crew. The pilots, according to Doctor Dornier, the designer, will have nothing to do with the motors, but simply sit on the glass encased bridge carrying out the captain's instructions. The mechanics will be directed by the chief engineer. Should half the motors fail simultaneously the plane can continue its flight with the crew repairing the damage while the pilot calmly remains at his post. The constructors are convinced the ship, with its 100 seats, will be able to operate in the heavy Atlantic.

Maneuvers in the British submarine small vessel, collided with the mine L-12 and sank in 300 fathoms. All but two of the crew were lost from the vessel. Of course steps to prevent such a disaster were taken.

have been submitted to the senate finance committee, which is laboring over the measure during the congressional recess.

Denmark's protest centers principally on the new rates on hides, skins, and natural flint; Belgium's on glass, cement, bricks, leathers, and chemicals; France's, on the general tariff situation and the balance of trade; Italy's, on virtually every commodity imported from that country; Netherlands', on diamonds, bulbs, strawboard; Spain's, cork and peppers; Switzerland's, watches and embroideries; Great Britain's, wool and glue; Mexico's, live stock and vegetables, and Uruguay's, meats.

"HAVE you one of these?" was the query heard all over the country on Wednesday, and the questioner would display one of the new small-sized bills, the issuance of which began on that day. Some of the recipients of these little bills objected to them, and for a time the bank employees had trouble with the currency until their fingertips became accustomed to it. Treasury officials hope the new bills will be found more convenient and will reduce the danger of counterfeiting. Of those that have been put out, the $1 bill bears the portrait of Washington; $2, Jefferson; $5, Lincoln; $10, Hamilton; $20, Jackson, and $50, Grant. In each case the back embellishment is appropriate.

PRESIDENT HOOVER is said to be considerably disturbed by a report from Postmaster General Brown indicating that the Post-Office department faces the possibility of a deficit of $137,000,000 for the year 1929. The annual losses have risen from $13,000,000 in 1924 to this huge sum, which includes $42,000,000, which the department must pay to railroads as the result of a decision of the court of claims. Mr. Hoover has ordered an exhaustive survey of the entire postal service to determine the causes of the big losses.

One step which could be taken by the President without legislation and in advance of completion of the survey would be a reduction in the contract price for transportation of air mail and a relative increase in air mail rates. In other quarters it was said he would be urged to consider the contention that modernization of the Post-Office department's accounting methods would wipe out a large portion of the deficit.

Under the present system, the Postal department is required by law to handle hundreds of thousands of tons of congressional "franked" and departmental "free" mail matter annually. All of it must be accorded first-class handling and the system does not permit the department to take credit for the free service in its accounting.

PREMIER POINCARÉ'S great battle for political life began with the opening of the debate in the French parliament over the ratification of the debt agreements with the United States and Great Britain. If the chamber of deputies refuses to ratify, as Poincaré demands, the government must resign. The premier insists there must be no reservations, but the foreign relations committee voted for the insertion of a declaration that France never should be called on to pay more than she receives in reparations from Germany. The opposition also favors a reservation providing for a moratorium whenever the capacity of France to pay is not equal to the installments due under the debt accord. The ultra-nationalist group in the chamber, the strongest foe to ratification in any form, refused to delegate Louis Marin, who has been their leader, as their representative in the discussions, and this was taken to mean that they had decided to support Poincaré. In that case, it was predicted, the premier would be able to muster a small majority and the ratification would be signed by August 1.

Poincaré's aims at the moment are to secure the ratification of the debt agreements.

cerning the plan for a conference on August 16 to put into operation the Young plan for reparations, guardedly approving the British view that there should be but one conference at which the ministers and experts could deal simultaneously with all political as well as economic and financial issues. But France still thinks the conference should not be held in London.

Hugh Gibson, American ambassador to Belgium, had another conference in London with Ambassador Dawes on the subject of naval disarmament, but no further announcements were made. The British Labor government, it was said, intends to make severe cuts in the naval program adopted by the last government, possibly discontinuing work on the construction of six submarines and other war vessels.

RUMANIAN officials uncovered a plot to overthrow the present government of that excitable country and possibly to establish a military dictatorship. Numerous arrests were made and documents were seized that, it was said, were signed "in the name of his majesty, King Carol II," indicating that the exiled prince was aware of the conspiracy and had given his consent to it.

RUPTURE between Nationalist China and Soviet Russia is seen as the certain result of a renewal of the old feud concerning control of the Manchurian unit of the Trans-Siberian railway system. The governor of the district of Harbin arrested 174 Soviet officials and employees of the Chinese Eastern railway and promptly deported 87 of them across the Siberian border. Chinese directors replaced the Russians. Among those arrested were the Russian vice director of railways and the director of the trading commission. All Russian banking and trading operations in Harbin were closed. This action by the Chinese logically follows the recent raid on the Russian consulate general at Harbin which uncovered evidence that Russian unions and other Soviet agencies in northern Manchuria were spreading Communist propaganda designed to disrupt Chinese unity.

SOMETHING of a sensation was created when customs officials in San Francisco seized and broke open the baggage of Mrs. Ying Kao, wife of the Chinese vice consul in that city, on her arrival from China, and took opium valued at a million dollars from her seven trunks and four suitcases. The search of the baggage, which Mrs. Kao's attorneys said violated diplomatic rights, was conducted by permission of the State department. At this writing it has not been decided what action to take against the woman and her husband.

Mrs. Kao said the contents of the trunks were the property of friends in China, who influenced her to use her diplomatic privileges to bring baggage into this country. She understood at the time, she declared, the baggage contained "presents" for friends of her friends in this country.

NEW ORLEANS has been struggling with a bad street car strike. In riotous clashes with the police several of the strike sympathizers have been killed and many hurt, and cars and other property have been destroyed. The street car company obtained a federal court injunction against the strikers and the United States marshal swore in and armed 250 deputies to guard the company's properties. Both government and civic conciliators were busy trying to settle the affair. The men offered to return to work if the company would recognize their union and new contracts were made, and the company said the workers could have their jobs as individuals.

GOSSIP in Washington concerning President Hoover's selections for ambassadorships is revived. The latest that of John N. Willys of Toledo, Ohio, is being considered. It is given that the man in question is being considered at the moment.

A Great War Hero

There is a story of gallantry and heroism — of Count Felix von Luckner, who disrupted Allied shipping on two oceans, gambling with his own life many times, but without taking that of any foe. Lowell Thomas, who writes his story, says he is the most romantic and mysterious figure produced by the Central Powers, in the World War; one fit to stand alongside of that other great figure of Thomas' recounting, Lawrence of Arabia. Do not miss the story, "COUNT LUCKNER, THE SEA DEVIL."
