2350 BALES GINNED UP TO WEDNESDAY

Wednesday night of this week a total of 2350 bales of cotton had been ginned by the four Hedley ginning plants—counting round bales half bales.

This is an increase of 1080 bales the past week, an average of 180 bales per day.

With a continuance of clear weather this average will be maintained, and increased, for some time to come.

It has been impossible for the crop prognosticators to settle on the season's probable total here. There are wide differences in opinion on the subject.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

Friday, Sept. 27, Mrs. F. M. Acord and a number of other friends gave Mrs. C. L. Goin a surprise Birthday Party at Mrs. Acord's home. After the plans had all been made, and the feast prepared (including the birthday cake with ? ? candles) Mrs. Acord called Mrs. Goin and asked that she come to her home and help her make some tomato relish. She consented, and upon arrival was greeted by a number of friends and a lovely dinner.

1.—"Sail on! Sail on!"—The three caravels of Columbus pushing westward across the Atlantic ocean on his historic voyage of discovery. In the lead is the Santa Maria, the largest of the three, measuring about 80 feet in length, 25 feet in breadth and 15 feet in depth, with a capacity of 200 tons. It was commanded by its owner, the cosmographer, Juan de la Cosa. It carried two pilots, a grand constable, a physician, an archivist, an interpreter versed in several tongues, a large number of the 90 seamen and the commander of the expedition, Christopher Columbus. Second in line is the Pinta, commanded by Martin Alonso Pinzon and piloted by his brother, Francisco Pinzon. The third ship is the Nina, named for its owner and pilot, Pero Alonso Nino, and commanded by Vincent Yanes Pinzon, brother of Martin and Francisco.

2.—"The Landing of Columbus" (from the famous painting by H. R. Hall in the United States Capitol in Washington, D. C.). On Friday, October 12, 1492, seventy days after the date of their sailing, Columbus and his men, after having traveled 3,250 nautical miles across the ocean, reached an island in the West Indies, off the coast of North America. Clad in armor, over which he had thrown the crimson robe of an admiral of Castile, Columbus threw himself on his knees, kissed the earth and returned thanks to God for the successful end of his journey. Then rising, he drew his sword, unfurled the royal standard and assembling around him the two captains, the notary and the other officials, he solemnly took possession of the land in the name of the Castilian monarchs, Ferdinand and Isabella. "I gave the name of San Salvador in commemoration of his Divine Majesty who has wonderfully granted all this. The Indians call it Guasahan," wrote Columbus.

3.—"Departure of Columbus" (from De Bry's "Voyages," 1690). At sunrise on August 3, 1492, Columbus set sail from Palos, Spain, for his great adventure. Recently there was unveiled at Palos a gigantic monument, the work of an American sculptress, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, which commemorates the embarkation of the expedition. The monument consists of a 70-foot statue of Columbus surmounting a 44-foot base and shows the great navigator standing with arms resting on the traverse of a great cross, his eyes directed westward, just as he stood on the deck of the Santa Maria 437 years ago.

4.—"Columbus Pleads His Cause Before King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella." Early in his career Columbus conceived the idea of reaching India by sailing directly westward across the Atlantic ocean. He appealed in vain to the kings of Portugal, Spain, England and France to fit him out with the ships necessary for an expedition, but in spite of all his rebuffs he persisted in his attempts. In January, 1492, he appeared again at the court of Spain and was given a hearing by Ferdinand and Isabella. But again he was dismissed from the court and departed sorrowing over what seemed to be the end of his great dream. Two leagues from Granada, however, he was overtaken by a messenger from Isabella with orders for overcome with joy, he hastened back and was told that the Castilian monarchs would comply with all his demands.

5.—"The Tomb of Columbus in the Seville Cathedral." Columbus died in Valladolid, Spain, May 20, 1506, and was buried in a monastery near Seville. In 1536 his body and that of his son were removed to Santo Domingo and buried in the cathedral there. When Haiti was ceded to France in 1796 the bodies were removed to Havana, Cuba, and remained there until the Spanish-American war of 1898. At the close of that war, which ended Spanish dominion in the New World, the remains of the great explorer were carried back to Spain and placed in the magnificent tomb in the Seville cathedral which has become a shrine for visitors from all parts of the world.

6.—"Columbus as a Boy" (from the statue in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston). Although there is much dispute as to the nativity of Columbus, the best authorities state that he was born in Genoa, Italy, about 1446. He was the son of a wool-comber, but he wished to become a sailor and the statue depicts him as he set sail at Genoa, dreaming of the day when he would go to sea as captain.

SUB ROSA By MIMI

Kitchen Policemen
MAYBE you think I'm going to refer to the cop who comes around to the back door to make love to the cook and the apple pie. But that isn't the only kind of man you may stumble on in the kitchen.

Nor do I mean those poor dough boys who were set to the sink and made to clean the kitchen when they misbehaved in the army. The officers put them on kitchen police duty, but they couldn't make them love the frying pan or dishpan.

My idea of the man who does real duty in the kitchen is that of the fellow who does his share of house-keeping, as far as cooking is concerned. There are lots of men who have come to the realization that kitchen work is no picnic for a woman, and these enlightened men have begun to share the responsibilities of the gas range and dishpan.

With the old-style marriage, which is rapidly growing extinct, there was a "division of labor," whereby the man worked from sun to sun, or from whistle to whistle, while woman's work was never done, because she wasn't running on scheduled time.

With the new marriage, the man finds it both possible and agreeable to do a certain amount of work in the shadow of the gas range. His wife may be doing her part in meeting household expenses with the L-I pay envelope, so it's only fair for him to match her work with his. If she's in an office, he can be in a kitchen.

This arrangement changes the meaning of the rolling pin. Time was when this kitchen implement was only a sign of the wives' disapproval. Now it means that men, too, have some interest in the place where their food is prepared.

Do you think that kitchen duty makes a man effeminate? I don't. It doesn't change a man when he does woman's work any more than it changes a woman when she does man's work. It's just a case of turn about is fair play.

I know of a man who is about as far from being effeminate as a man can be, judged by his body and brain. And yet that man takes his place at the sink, and isn't half bad when it comes to performing on the kitchen range.

He says he learned the trick in camp, where it was his job to get the breakfast. The family used to have strong coffee, soggy cereals, and robust muffins when he got the meal, but they liked the fun of seeing him play cook. Hall to the Chef!

Sweetheart Snatchers
A GIRL friend of mine is almost heart broken because another girl, one with dark hair and ruddy complexion, has taken a man away from her. Gentlemen do not always prefer peroxide.

Of course, my girl friend was not engaged to the man, still less married, so she has no comeback in the courts. She has nothing but tears. Now the experience which jolted the girl's heart gave me a little tap on the brain. It made me ask—Why?

Then, too, a man I know, and detest, was boasting the other evening how he had cut another guy out. Man number one didn't really care for the girl he'd snatched, but he thought it was such fun to rob his pal of his sweet patootie. Such a world, and—Why?

I suppose it's the way of the world, and it means that to have is not to hold. To be held in the back seat of the auto doesn't mean that you'll remain as the life of that petting party. Now, why do men and women, who wouldn't think of shoplifting, indulge in this little crime of heart-picking?

Who steals my purse, as Shakespeare says, steals nothing but an old powderpuff, the fare home, and bargain counter nanky. But who steals my sweetie lifts something that I may not be able to get back at the next dance. For men are hard to grab in these days.

But, why? That's the question that bothers my bob and knocks the permanent out of a wave which isn't a week old yet. I can understand a girl's motives when she swipes the other Jane's Steady, for girls have been taught to grab men, just as kittens are taught to hunt mice.

Nature keeps telling the girl that she must find a mate. Well, here's a man who is holding some other girl's hand. What of it? They aren't handcuffed together, are they? So grab that guy, and maybe there'll be a home in it for you. That's the way of the world where women are concerned.

You see, women are economic and practical. They are bound to think of themselves and the race. So they keep their eyes open for the Visible Means of Support, which is men. That's their excuse for sweetie-snatching, love-lifting, and heart-picking.

Men are not just the name, but they are naturally hunters who are waiting for the open season to roll around. A man shoots a deer for the fun of it, not for venison. He likes to show his power, his superiority over other men, and he snatches because

Great Geyser Exhibit

The most comprehensive geyser exhibit in the world has been placed in the new Yellowstone Park museum building at Old Faithful, under the supervision of Dorr C. Yeager, park naturalist. It consists of specimens of the various types of geyser and hot springs deposits and of diagrammatic paintings showing how a geyser works, and of the evolution of a geyser through the geological ages. The museum has been located at Old Faithful because that is the geyser capital of the earth. More active geysers of the first order are to be found within a ten mile radius of this spot than in all the rest of the world put together.

Gold Stream Reduced

It has been a long time since the "forty-niners" made their rush for the gold fields of California, but still the mines continue to pour out a stream of precious metal, though the stream is lessening somewhat, judging from the 1928 figures.

The production of gold, silver, copper and lead for the year reached a total of value $15,381,788, a decline of about 9 per cent from the preceding year. This does not take into consideration the stream of gold pouring into Hollywood.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Powers Are Busy With Plans for Limiting Armaments and Insuring Peace

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

REDUCTION of armaments and other plans for insuring the peace of the world and so saving the lives and money of its inhabitants are occupying the international mind these days largely to the exclusion of other matters. Chief of the week's developments in this line was the virtual conclusion of the conversations between Ambassador Dawes and Prime Minister MacDonald of Great Britain with enough agreement reached to make certain the calling of a five-power conference on naval reduction. England will issue the invitation, it was announced, to the United States, France, Italy and Japan, and the meeting probably will be held in London, starting in the second week in January. Mr. MacDonald completed his arrangements to sail for the United States on September 28 to confer with President Hoover and Secretary of State Stimson, and it was assumed that this consultation would result only in furthering the plans for the big meeting.

Dispatches from Washington asserted that President Hoover already had agreed to accept a limitation of the number of 10,000-ton cruisers the United States may build, in addition to a limitation of aggregate cruiser tonnage, which is the point for which the British contended in the futile Geneva conference of 1927. Whether America's big cruisers shall number 18 or 21 is to be decided later. It may be, too, the British will put over their former proposition that there shall be no replacements of capital ships before 1936, when the Washington treaties expire. The extremists in the matter of national defense are rather worried by these reported concessions, and cannot see how the United States is to attain naval parity with Great Britain, but Americans in general probably regard the negotiations with complacency.

President Hoover in a radio address sought to reassure those who might be apprehensive for their country's safety. He declared that naval and land armaments should be held down to the bare necessities for defense purposes, in the interests of peace, and that unless this policy is adhered to, preparedness may become a threat of aggression and a cause of fear and animosity throughout the world. The proposals now under discussion by the great powers, he said, "would preserve our national defenses and yet would relieve the backs of those who toll from gigantic expenditures and the world from the hate and fear which flows from the rivalry in building warships."

Dealing with the troubles that may confront the five-power conference, the London Daily Telegraph says: "It is from France and Italy, rather than from Japan, that the greatest difficulties are feared. These two powers may draw together temporarily for the purpose of objecting to holding the conference in London and of weaving causes for delay, but they have been engaged since 1920 in a naval race of a very strenuous and severe character with one another."

"It is not generally appreciated that France has been working on a building scheme which does not reach its maturity until 1942 and which comprises 18 cruisers, 80 destroyers, 67 ocean-going submarines and 45 coastal submarines. Italy's building program was further increased only last year by the addition of 13 ships to cost an additional $45,000,000, but its principal strength lies in its fast destroyers and motor torpedo craft."

LORD ROBERT CECIL, presented to the disarmament committee of the League of Nations the British plan calling for reopening of the question of retained army reserves in any scheme for world disarmament, and was supported by the German delegation. The French, Italian and Japanese argued that this question had been definitely laid aside last spring and that the present time was inopportune for reopening it.

Since the great powers in the League of Nations have rejected France's proposal for an international standing army, and Great Britain refused to help form an international navy, the league is now thinking of forming an international air force to help in compelling the world to be peaceful. Col. Clifford Harmon of America, president of the International League of Aviators, suggested the scheme last December and was sharply rebuked by Lord Cushendun of England; but he did not give up, and seems to have gained some support from Premier Briand of France and other diplomats. Last week both the French and the Germans introduced before the disarmament committee resolutions defining the juridical status of the planes of such an international force over various countries. The French measure said that the international commission for aerial navigation is preparing plans and urges the freedom of flying over all states, granted that they are the league's machines.

The German resolution said that, having learned that the international commission for aerial navigation is studying the legal position of league aircraft, the question must give rise to an important issue that the various governments will require an opportunity to study after they have received complete information on the project. Count von Bernstorff for Germany thought the French viewpoint could not be accepted. Harmon's plan provides for a fleet of bombing planes to attack and break up mobilization in an aggressive country by smashing bridges, tunnels, railways, and other lines of transportation in order to prevent the attacker from invading a neighbor country.

The league assembly shelved until next year a proposal to assist nations threatened by war with international loans guaranteed by all powers in the league. One of its committees also carried toward completion plans for lowering of customs barriers and reductions of economic impediments to trade, an essential preliminary being a world tariff treaty of three or four years.

BRITISH and Belgian troops quietly began the evacuation of the Rhineland, and some of the French troops were withdrawn, though it is expected France will maintain a rather large force there up to the last minute. Wiesbaden is to be made the headquarters of the interallied Rhineland commission, whose staff will be greatly reduced.

CHINA says it is getting tired of the Soviet Russian raids on Manchurian border towns and that unless they cease the Nationalist government will drop its defensive tactics and adopt other measures, confident that it will receive the support of world opinion. The Chinese troops are enraged by the tales of atrocities practiced by the Russians, as brought to Harbin by fugitive Chinese merchants from the border regions and cannot be restrained much longer. Foreign Minister C. T. Wang has protested through the German government against the internment by the Russians of Chinese who are not Communists or members of Russian trade unions and demanded their immediate release. While gathering large bodies of troops and quantities of munitions on the Manchurian frontiers, the Chinese are collecting a mass of evidence to prove to the world that Russia has been violating the Kellogg pact. Details of this by Moscow do not have great weight with those who are aware of the Russian propensity to misrepresent—to put it mildly.

SOON after Col. R. W. Stewart was ousted by the Rockefeller from the chairmanship of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana there were rumors that he was going to form a combine to fight the American oil flag. These have been revived now, for the colonel called for Europe last week and it was admitted he would visit Sir Henri Deterding, oil magnate of Europe and director general of the Royal Dutch Shell company whose products already are sold all over America. If a combine of Standard's competitors does result, it may bring the Royal Dutch Shell and its ramifications, the Sinclair companies, the Prairie Oil and Gas and subsidiary pipe line company and the Continental Oil company all under a unified control. Rumors in American financial circles were that Stewart had enlisted the Morgan interests. It looks as if a merry oil war were in the offing.

Harry M. Blackmer, the American oil magnate who fled to France to avoid testifying in the Teapot Dome cases and is still over there, was fined $30,000 for contempt of court by Justice Siddons of the District of Columbia Supreme court. His lawyer gave notice of appeal, and Blackmer's $100,000 in Liberty bonds, seized some time ago, remains in the custody of the federal marshal in Washington.

CAPT. JOHN McLEOD brought his motor vessel Shawnee of Nova Scotia into Halifax with two shell holes in its hull, and declared these were caused by two of four shells fired at close range by the U. S. coast guard cutter No. 145 when the Shawnee was 26 miles off New York, bound from Bermuda to Halifax in ballast. He said the No. 145 had all its lights doused and that after the firing it called the coast guard Gresham, which later was relieved by another vessel, and that he finally outdistanced his convoy. McLeod said he would make formal protest through Ottawa. The Shawnee is alleged to have been engaged in rum running.

DOWN in the Carolinas the inhabitants apparently are determined not to have Communists from other regions interfering with their labor troubles. The radicals from New York who went down there to aid the striking textile workers are having a rough time, what with kidnapers and whippers, and in a mob attack on persons on the way to a strikers' rally at Gastonia, N. C., one woman was shot to death. For this murder and for various floggings numerous arrests have been made, and the state authorities seem to be doing all in their power to restore order; but the Carolinians are in an ugly mood and further bloodshed is expected.

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S appointment of Henry F. Guggenheim as ambassador to Cuba to succeed Noble B. Judah, resigned, meets with general approval. The new ambassador is one of the leading figures in American aviation, being president of the Guggenheim fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics. During the war he served in the naval aviation forces in both France and Italy and rose to the rank of lieutenant commander.

BRIG. GEN. LYTLE BROWN, one of the greatest of American engineers, was appointed chief of army engineers with rank of major general to succeed Major General Jadwin, retired, and simultaneously with making known this selection, President Hoover announced plans for the reorganization of the office Brown takes. High ranking officers will be placed in entire charge of important projects and held definitely responsible for the successful completion of these special assignments.

General Brown is fifty-seven years old and was born at Nashville, Tenn.

NEW YORK is to have a lively majority campaign with five candidates. Congressman F. H. LaGuardia, extreme wet, won the Republican nomination, but the dry Republicans began laying plans to put up a dry candidate. The Democrats renominated Jimmy Walker, and Richard Knight, former police commissioner, was put up by the Square Deal party, attacking Tammany control of the police department. The 28th candidate is Norman Thomas, running as a Socialist, and he is expected to be stronger than his party because of dissatisfaction with both LaGuardia and Walker.

MERGER of two of New York's biggest banks, the National City and the Corn Exchange, was arranged and approved by the directors. The consolidation brings together total resources of $2,268,000,401, making it the largest bank in the world.

NEW IDEAS IN COAT TWEEDLIKE SILKS

A SPIRIT to ring out the old, ring in the new, pervades the entire coat-styling realm. The whole atmosphere is fairly surcharged with a sense of change. Flares instead of straight silhouettes, sleeves which have developed a complex; high waistlines which compete with Princess fitted effects; these details and more bespeak a revolution in "lines."

Even the all-silk weaves are yielding to tweed persuasion. And what wearable, likable suits for fall these tweedlike silks do promise! They're the two-piece ensemble in the lower picture, per example. From the standpoint of both fabric and styling, likewise in coloring it classes as a suit—ideal for autumn. It is just such as women love to "have and to hold" and to wear on mild pre-winter days. This much-to-be admired costume is made of a new fabric, "just out" this

WOMAN SICK THREE YEARS

Little Rock, Ark.—"I was sick for three years after my last baby came. I could hardly walk and could not eat nor sleep as I should because I was so nervous. I took seven bottles of the Vegetable Compound and used that number of bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Sensitive Wash and I am feeling just fine. I have a large family and do the work for all. Your Compound made me a well woman, and I have a happy home now. NEARBY AND YONDER

By T. T. MAXEY

The First White House
ALTHOUGH George Washington selected the site for the present White House and every President since him has lived in it, fate denied him that privilege—he passed away before it was completed.

Prior to his inauguration in New York, congress requested the then postmaster general to fit up, for Presidential use, a suitable mansion. The house at No. 1 Cherry street, built in 1770, on what was known as "Cherry hill, because a cherry orchard once stood there, was selected. It was "five windows wide," three stories high and not overly spacious or suitably located.

Every room was fitted up in the most lavish style of the day. The seeming extravagance startled the frugal folk of the times. An account, written by an eyewitness at the time, declared that "The whole of the first and second story is papered and the floors covered with the richest kind of Turkish and Wilton carpets." The first congratulatory visitors which the first President received here were the members of the New York Chamber of Commerce.

In after years this house was used as a music store and also as a bank. It was demolished in 1856 and the chair used by the president of the New York Historical society was built from material taken out of it.

The western approach to the Brooklyn bridge now passes over the site and one of the abutments carries a tablet which reads: "The first presidential mansion, No. 1 Cherry Street, occupied by George Washington from April 24, 1789, to February 23, 1794. Erected by Mary Washington Colonial Chapter, April 30, 1890."

"Home, Sweet Home"

HOME, SWEET HOME," that most endearing song which has touched countless hearts, first sung in Covent Garden theater, London, in 1823, was written by an actor-playwright-author, who, at the time, had neither home nor wife, apparently was homeless during most of his life, never married and thus attempted to instill into the minds of those fortunate folk who were privileged to enjoy that which fate had denied him a full appreciation of the blessing that was theirs. And while it earned a rather princely sum for its publishers, the author appears to have gained little financial reward for its production.

John Howard Payne, who was born in 1791, lived for a time during his early years, in a sturdy, simple, homey house in the little community of East Hampton on the southern shore of Long Island, the memory of which etched itself deeply into his sensitive being.

In later life, Payne was appointed consul of the United States at Tunis, Africa. He died on that far-off continent in 1852, in his sixtieth year. Many years later his remains were brought to this country and re-interred under broad-spreading trees in peaceful Oak Hill cemetery in Washington, D. C.

Meanwhile the quaint "home"—more than 200 years old—single clad, weather-beaten, vine festooned, standing with one end facing the street, has been carefully preserved as a memorial to its author.

Lafayette Square

AFAYETTE square, that seven-acre, park-like place just across "The Avenue" from the home of the resident of the United States, was so named by the Father of His Country and first used as a parade ground for troops. Today it is an ideal spot in which to sit and dream on a summer day.

An assortment of trees mottle the sunshine on the lawn, winding walks vire, benches lure; trusting pigeons and squirrels beg; five noteworthy monuments bid for attention—one to General Lafayette, another to Kosciusko—the hero of Saratoga; a third to Rochambeau, who came to America with an army to assist Washington; a fourth to Von Steuben—who offered his services to congress and came instructor general of the Continental army; the fifth—a huge bronze casting affair, said to be the most successfully made in America, to Andrew Jackson.

Such of the history of the past century was made in the mansions which have surrounded this plot. Among these—the home and office of Chief Executive; a former social situation which includes the famous Madison house; the former Britton house where the Ashburton treaty was framed; a venerable home worship—the Presidents' church; the home of John Hay, secretary of state under Roosevelt, Daniel Webster, George Bancroft—the historian, Commander Stephen Decatur—hero of Tripoli war, where, subsequently, a Russian minister and three secretaries of state are said to have dined and another where three secretaries of the navy have resided. Truly, Lafayette square is a historic spot.

High Praise Conveyed in Three Short Words

Dr. William A. Muhlenberg, who founded the Church of the Holy Communion in New York, is claimed by a correspondent of the Churchman to be the author of the world's shortest sermon.

The occasion was the burial service for one of his trustees. He gave out his text, Micah 6:8, which reads "He hath shewed thee, Oh, man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" His sermon was, "He did this." Recently the Churchman expressed the belief that a sermon by a Catholic priest in Toronto during the hot weather this summer was the record holder for brevity. That sermon, however, ran to 100 words.

See End of Tsetse Fly

As the result of experiments being conducted in the tsetse belt of Natal, the South African government is hopeful that an effective means of combating the ravages of the deadly tsetse fly has been at last discovered. A special poison in powdered form has been sprayed over donkeys. The tsetse fly, when it alights on the animal, absorbs the poison through its feet and dies. Reports so far received show that the experiments have been successful, giving hope that one of the worst plagues with which the farmer of South Africa has to contend is doomed.

Amarillo Conductor's Wife Declares Husband's Recovery Since Taking Orgatone Makes Her Rejoice—Suffered Four Years.

"I believe in giving everything its due, and I want to tell you right now I sure rejoice over what Orgatone has done for my husband," said Mrs. W. F. Dale, wife of a well known conductor on the Rock Island and who lives at 714 N. Mirror St., Amarillo, Texas.

"Four years ago," she continued, "he began to suffer with sour stomach before and after meals. Most everything he would eat disagreed with him and gave him no end of trouble. Constipation bothered him a whole lot and he had a lazy liver and always felt tired and worn out, from one day's end to another.

"He read in the papers where several people have taken Orgatone and that caused him to buy his first bottle, and I want to say right now that he has got hold of the right medicine for his case at last. He says he feels like a different person since he started on Orgatone. Why he thinks so much of it he has bought a second bottle of it to carry with him on his run, so that he will not miss a single dose. I have so much faith in Orgatone, for what it has done for my husband, that I expect to keep it in the house all the time."

Men like these are testing your car

Types of the engines at General Motors Proving Ground who are working for you. Drawn from a photograph. They are shown examining a specially devised instrument for measuring clutch pedal pressure.

It used to be the custom for a man who wanted to buy a car to take a mechanic with him.

Today, General Motors itself employs skilled automotive engineers to make it easy for you to select your new car. These men are working for you at its Proving Ground—the 1268-acre outdoor laboratory in Michigan where every kind of car is tested.

Before any General Motors car goes into production, a fleet of advance models is constructed and sent to the Proving Ground. There these advance cars must meet every test—tests far harder than you would make. Sometimes they are rebuilt, redesigned, retested many times until they are pronounced right, and ready to be put into production.

The tests involve speed, power, endurance, braking, riding comfort, handling ease; fuel and oil economy; body strength and safety—every phase of car construction and performance.

Buying a car is easy today—because these men at the Proving Ground are working for you to assure you of value when you select a General Motors car.

COUNT LUCKNER THE SEA DEVIL

By Lotcel Thomas

Copyright by Doubleday, Doran & Co.

Luckner and his companions take passage on a vessel at Wakaya with the idea of capturing it when it got to sea. They were arrested by the British before the vessel sailed and jailed at Suva, Fiji islands. A Japanese admiral tries to get information from Luckner.

"Tell me, count, where your Seeadler is."

"I was in a tight hole. I must strike a blow for my comrades out there on Mopelia. The elements I had to work upon lay in the fact that the diary which had been found mentioned merely that we had put stores aboard at Mopelia and told of the capture of the Manila and said nothing of the fact that we had sunk that ship. Then, also, the truth is rarely believed. I proceeded to skate very near the truth.

"The Seeadler," I replied, "was lost."

"How was it lost?"

"We got on the coral reef at Mopelia. We tried our best to get off, but it was no use."

"What did you do then?"

"We went aboard the Manila."

"The four-masted schooner Manila?"

"Yes, we captured her and took her along with us."

"Where is the Manila now?"

"She is waiting for me off Mopelia. My men are having a good vacation on the island until I come back."

"I say, Count, we Japanese are not such fools. You had the four-master Manila, and you sailed from Mopelia to the Fijis in a small boat."

"Yes," I replied. "There was no room enough for all of us aboard the Manila."

"The admiral looked at me with a sly Oriental smile.

"Fine, I thought. I had figured out their minds correctly. They had not set straight out for Mopelia, in spite of their knowing that we had landed stores there, because it seemed wildly impossible that I with my five men had sailed from Mopelia to the Fijis in an open boat.

"Count," exclaimed the admiral, "I will tell you where your crew is. You did not leave a four-master schooner and sail twenty-three hundred miles in a lifeboat. You sailed here in the Manila, and having got here, you put out in your lifeboat to capture another ship in a nearby harbor. You tell me your crew is at Mopelia, hoping I will get up steam immediately, go hurrying away for a few thousand miles on a wild-goose chase, and leave them in peace. The Manila is in these waters. In four days your crew will be my prisoners."

"He respected me too much to think that I would ever give my crew away. He knew I would try to throw him off the scent. His object was to outwit me, to get my story and read between the lines.

"Very good, admiral," I thought, "let me see how it will work out."

We parted the best of friends. He was an excellent fellow. Our meeting had been one of mutual deceit with lies that no gentleman would tell in ordinary times. Now they were quite respectable, as ruses of war.

The ironical thing was that my men, who under the command of Lieutenant Kling were still living like lords at Mopelia, were destined to have much better luck in getting a ship than my little party had had through all our terrible hardships.

They caught a wireless message one day telling of our capture. So, fearing that their own whereabouts might soon be discovered, they hastily began to build a boat to sail away in, but with the materials at their disposal, they were unable to construct anything like a seaworthy craft, capable of carrying that whole crowd. Then Dame Fortune smiled on them.

A French square-rigged schooner sighted the island and the wreck of the Seeadler.

"By Joe," exclaimed the captain. "We passed here six months ago and there was no wreck here! We may find castaways on the island. It looks as though we may find a good profit, too."

You see, a captain gets a third of the value of any wreck, ship, or cargo, that he saves. The schooner quickly moved toward the island.

It was a Sunday morning. On the island the men were sitting around, washing clothes, writing diaries, and so on. The chef was shooting snipe for dinner. Then the cry:

"Ship ahoy."

Kling took out a lifeboat with a boarding party, the strongest men he had, some of them the champion wrestlers. As they approached the schooner, the captain leaned over the rail and shouted down to them:

"Don't row so hard, boys. We will come for you."

Our sailors swarmed aboard. Pistols out.

"Hands up!"

The Frenchmen recognized the German uniform.

"Mou Dieu—des Allemands. I turn off my course to save castaways and I am captured by the Boches! Mon Dieu!"

The schooner was not big enough, nor had aboard provisions enough, for both the Germans and the prisoners. Kling decided to leave the prisoners, including the crew of the schooner, on the island, where they or so out, he would send a wireless that would bring ships to their rescue. So, the whole of Seeadertown was given over to the prisoners, and the schooner sailed away. She was named the Lutece, but my men discovered that she had been the German ship, the Fortuna. She had been seized by the French during the war. So she got her old name back. She was German again—a German auxiliary cruiser. For Kling fully intended to go right on buccaneering.

Three days after the Fortuna sailed our former prisoners saw a cloud of smoke on the horizon. Steaming at full speed, her funnels belching smoke, the Japanese cruiser, Usuna, steered to the island. On her bridge the admiral swore in Japanese.

"By Joe, the count fooled me all right. He told me the truth. There is the wreck, and there are his men. Everything except the Manila. He tricked me with the tale about the Manila."

The Japanese found only men of the allied nations.

"Where are the German?"

"I'm sorry," replied the French captain, "but they sailed away three days ago in my ship, the Lutece."

The Japanese admiral was thoroughly disgusted at that, but of course he took the whole crowd aboard and took them back to the Fijis. It was of no use to go racing about the immense spaces of the Pacific looking for a solitary sailing square-rigged schooner.

Kling's plan was to sail around the Horn into the Atlantic, sink a few ships there, and then try to steal through the blockade and get back home. His course took him to Easter Island, a small, remote possession of Chile, where there was no wireless station. There he intended to overhaul the ship, which was in bad condition, and take aboard supplies and fresh water. On October 4, they sighted the island, but while sailing into the harbor struck an uncharted, sunken rock. The Fortuna was old and worn-out. The rock crushed right through her planks. The ship pounded and quickly broke up. The men had to swim for it.

The lives of some of them, at least, were saved in a curious way—by two pigs. These animals we had brought from Germany aboard the Seeadler to serve as fresh pork. They soon became pets, however, and we kept them. They were quite companionable and romped around the decks with the men. Kling had them aboard the Fortuna. When the ship sank, the swimmers, including the two pigs, found themselves among sharks. These seemed to prefer pork to human flesh. They seized the two pigs and began to fight over them among themselves. You bet the men in the water swam as hard as they could. They were quickly picked up by native canoes that had put out as soon as the wrecking of the ship had been seen from shore.

The cargo of the Fortuna consisted of Parisian fineries, silk stockings and underclothing, handkerchiefs, parasols, tennis shoes, brilliantine, scented soaps, perfumes, and such. It had been destined for the natives of the South Seas, to whom the French bring a truly Parisian elegance in the breaking up of the ship, many cases filled with these swanky trappings of civilization remained afloat. The natives salvaged them, and pretty soon it seemed as if the whole island had been on a shopping tour through Paris, and had visited the women's shops, chiefly, or the Galeries Lafayette. Men and women alike arrayed their dusky selves in all manner of silk and lingerie! The population was delighted. Kling and his men were the bringers of this treasure. They graciously told the natives they could have anything they found, and in return they were granted all the hospitality the island could muster. The Chilean governor, an excellent fellow, placed a house at the disposal of the officers, while the sailors were sought after by the natives as guests in their huts.

They remained on the island for nearly two months enjoying life and surveying the strange monuments there, huge monoliths that tell of an ancient, forgotten civilization of people who long since have passed into oblivion. On November 25, a Chilean steamer that made regular trips to the island hove in sight. When it raised steam for its return voyage, our men were aboard. The Chilean authorities on the mainland received them with friendly hospitality, regarding them as shipwrecked sailors and therefore not interfering them. They lived as guests of German colonists in Chile from then on until the end of the war.

CHAPTER XVII

The Escape From New Zealand

The thought of every prisoner is—escape! That was what we thought about, by Joe, and what we dreamed about. Occasionally, I'd wake up with a start, dreaming we were still in our small boat and about to be dashed against that coral reef. Usually my sleep was not troubled with such nightmares. But I often dreamed of getting away, capturing another ship, and continuing our cruise. This did finally come about, but not for many months.

No opportunity of escape presented itself during our stay at Suva, which was not long. Kirchels and I were

FLYING OVER HISTORY

Looking Down on Constantinople.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THERE are few opportunities anywhere in the world to see so many historic sites in half a dozen hours as during the brief airplane trip from Constantinople to Athens.

The route is paved with geography; with history, which is geography interacting with mankind; and with mythology, in which elemental geographic forces are given childishly human characteristics.

Poets and historians, ladies and their leanders, Argonauts and Amazons, have so mosicked with meaning this aerial route that the air traveler, competing it between breakfast and luncheon, would need that last-minute-before-drowning clairvoyance to take in even the broad outlines of the picture on the rift between West and East, Europe and Asia, sailor andomad, Greek and barbarian, between that was known and what was off the map.

The battleship Agamemnon, leading the allied fleet into the Dardanelles, in D. 1915, churned the very waters that bore to the siege of Troy Agamemnon's thousand ships, launched by a woman's face, almost as many years before the Christian era. Xerxes, Alexander, and the Turks, their exploits separated by centuries, all crossed the Hellespont at the same point. The ortheaters that cool or chill both Sopor and Gallipoli, and the treacherous currents which inspire gruesome gossip are the same that Strabo and Herodotus described.

The plane is fitted with pontoons and rises from the Bosphorus. Behind, the Genoese castle of Anatoli Kavak, only a moment ago outlined against the Black sea, has flattened out against a northern tip of Asia Minor, as a point is rounded, with the palaces and embassy gardens of Therapia below, the view extends to the Golden Horn.

By the time the strait between Ruppell and Anatoli Hissar is reached the lane is so high above Mohammed the conqueror's "Outthroat Castle" that the ground plan, said to be a photograph of his Arabic name, is just a comfortable eyeful.

The ground plan of Robert College takes on rare symmetry. In its center football game is being played by two tribes of vari-colored ants. Now the Constantinople Woman's college is reached, its buildings aligned into an imposing facade.

The coal-pockets that smudge the low below Arnaut Koi sweep south toward the glittering Jewel-box mosque of Orta Koi and the roofless ruin of Theragan—palace, prison, and parliament house.

Looking Down on Stamboul.

There is a slight haze above Stamboul, the Seraglio palaces are visibly isolated from the teeming city; and the cornucopia curve of the Golden Horn—despite its name, a mere nick in the eastern edge of Europe, is clearly cut between close-rooted slopes, black-marked by fire and mournful with cypresses rising above marble-skeletoned cemeteries. The curved seven hills unite into one main, fabled ridge.

Now the plane is almost over fat-domed Sancta Sophia; and the six minarets of the Sultan Ahmed mosque, so needlelike from the ground, seem squat towers. The obelisks in the Hippodrome, Byzantium's antique pleasure center, have no height, but their shadows stretch wide across a park the perfection of which was never before so evident. One wonders when architects will begin to design structures to be beautiful from the air, as landscape gardening already is.

Outside the left windows the Prince Islands bathe in sun-spread quicksilver and the Gulf of Ismid loses itself beyond.

Off the right wing the landward wall of Byzantium, starting impossibly with the Seven Towers, dwindles away until its battlements are lost behind a hill overlooking the Sweet Waters of Europe.

Now one looks straight down on the Island of Maronra, unexpectedly large and full of valley. Around a tiny bay in the north edge, marble cliffs or slag dumps, white as chalk, describe a curve.

Europe edges in from the right, a ridge of Tekir Dagh, emphasis cumuli, stretching down to the Aegean at Gallipoli. What a most famous straits of olden times, where Helle drowned and Io, Hera's rival, forded the Bosphorus.

Now the upper entrance to the Hellespont has been reached, with Gallipoli on the opposite shore. Just under the hull is a level hill where there used to be a Turkish fort.

A little farther on Lapsaki comes into view. It used to be Lamposcus and was famous for its wine and Priapic worship. The town, being made of mud and stone, may have moved about a bit, but the name has hovered right there since the days when Themistocles was its monarchos and the idea of hereditary monarchy was new.

Lapsaki has its own little marina, but the main town stands back from the water, its reddish-brown roofs arranged in seemingly perfect squares. The junction of land and water here is of extreme beauty, the shoreline edged with a greenish blue breaking away to the royal purple of the deeper water.

The ship seemingly increases its speed over the narrows where Leander swam to see Hero and set an example for Lord Byron and others. On a bridge of boats Xerxes crossed here to invade Europe. A century and a half later Alexander returned the compliment.

Beyond the Gallipoli peninsula one can see Suvia Bay and below is the old tower of Chanak Kalassi, until recently ringed with modern forts. Across the narrow neck of water is the trefoil fort of Kild Bahr, a stakless ace of clubs spiked down with a tall central tower.

And here is Troy, immortalized by Homer and Vergil, described by Strabo, a rain soaked, soggy plain, cut by mere brooks and utterly without dramatic quality.

The whole outline of Tenedos may be seen as one flies along, its central portion cultivated, its shoreline notched by ways to which the Greeks withdrew, leaving the wooden horse outside the Trojan walls.

The Isles of Greece.

There are pitch-black clouds ahead, their lower sides festooned with wavy washes of rain like Spanish moss. The plane swoops down to 2,000 feet. The long line of Lemnos fills the horizon at the right, and through the opposite window Lesbos (Mytilene) detaches itself from the flank of Asia Minor. Only indistinct suggestions of land lie ahead.

Skyros shoulders her blood-red, craggy cliffs toward the ship's path. When the flight has lasted three hours an Acropolislike plateau on Euboea shows itself. For the first time the plane dives directly toward the land to find a low, narrow pass above cultivated fields, salmon pink amid gray rock and lush green and dotted with circular stone threshing floors near the Gulf of Petali.

Then comes the supreme thrill; for there, sweeping round in a perfect curve like a gold-edged scimitar laid against the blue, is the Plain of Marathon. Hoary-headed Parnes looms beyond, and Pentelcus, neighbor of Athens and mother of her marbles, suggests how short a flight remains; yet how long that run for Philippiades, bringing news that the Medes and Persians were in flight and that Miltiades had won!

A wheel of spokelike roads, cutting the fertile Mesogalia, centers in Markopoulon. At least a dozen peasant villages are in sight at once, pearl gray, amid crop and plow-stippled fields pushed to the limit of man's endurance against the dull skeleton of Attica.

Now the Saronic Gulf is below, opalescent tints showing on an oyster-shell-shaped beach. What seems to be the mainland to the left is really the island of Salamis. From Marathon to Salamis, a ten-year struggle for the Persians, and the flyer can cover it in the sweep of an eye!

A brightly tinted new town, its landscape gardening reduced to the proportions of a painting, grows below as the plane descends. Little Lykabettos spears up to the right, and the Acropolis begins to assume a fraction of its wonted dignity, as the very heart and center of Greek life.

There is a bus terminus, and down the plane comes, flashing past new villas and deserted piers. One final glance for the flyers at that historic plain between Parnes and Hymettos, and down their ship splashes like a duck, in Phaleron Bay, to the east of Piraeus.

villians. Are we to be judged by civilians? I will answer only to naval men."

Just then Sir Hall Thompson, British naval commander in New Zealand waters, came down the stairway. I turned to him.

Dyers Making Use of Tree Once Condemned

Every country or section of a country as it grows casts about for more and more resources that can be converted into marketable finished products. The American Southwest has taken the common hedge apple tree otherwise known as the Osage orange, the bow wood or the bois d'arc tree. A row of these trees compose what farmers call a hedge fence.

In the old days its roots were smoked by boys to whom tobacco was forbidden. Otherwise, the hedge tree, with its manifold fruit of large green balls, was unpopular. Farmers condemned it because, when used as a hedge, it would not hold their cows and hogs. Motorists cursed it because it shut off their view at crossings where the hedge tree appeared. A it to make wagon spokes and felloes.

A new day, however, is dawning for the hedge apple tree. It is being turned into the hoppers of some of the country's large dye factories. This is developing into a real industry in Texas and Oklahoma.

The hedge apple tree is also excellent material for telephone cross-arms and insulator pins. What is left of the tree is utilized in the making of fertilizer. Long ago the Indian made bows of this wood.
