"ABIE'S IRISH ROSE" HERE OCT. 30 AND 31

Anne Nichols' "Abie's Irish Rose" is one of the greatest motion pictures ever made.

A broad statement that, but it is a statement of fact, and can be proven by any who attend the premier of the Paramount screen version of Anne Nichols' play at the Dreamland Theatre October 30 and 31.

As a screen play, Abie is even more entertaining than it was behind the footlights. It has been made into a sweeping, amusing broadside against intolerance, racial hatred and bigotry; but at no time does it preach. It is always entertaining.

In short, "Abie's Irish Rose" is the story of a Jewish lad, Abie Levy, who meets, woos and weds an Irish girl, Rosemary Murphy. Their parents object to the match but their complaints come too late, for they were first married by a Methodist minister, then to please the Jewish father, a rabbi joined them. The third ceremony was performed by a Catholic priest, but still the parents objected and disowned their children. Christmas comes around, and twins are born. The twins, one with a Jewish name and the other with an Irish, bring the two families together in a bond of happiness.

A great theme is that. Its greatness should not be told this briefly, nor can the beautiful touches of the picture be described in so few words. To see the picture is to realize that such a topic has never before been so finely translated to the screen.

SENIOR CLASS PLAY

"STEP ON IT, STAN"

The Senior Class of Hedley High School presented the play, "Step On It, Stan," in the school auditorium Friday evening of last week, to the delight of a large audience. The players reflected credit upon themselves and their directors. In fact, those who saw it pronounce it one of the very best plays ever put on in Hedley. The proceeds of the play amounted to more than $80, which will be used in the furtherance of some department of the school work.

The Class will present this play at the College auditorium in Clarendon tonight (Thursday).

And the Story of One Who Didn't—But Who Rose to World-Wide Fame as a Painter.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

EVERY time you visit the United States Military Academy you are sure to ask that they take you to the classrooms where the cadets receive their instruction in drawing, for a thrill awaits you there. Hung upon the walls of those classrooms is a remarkable collection of pen sketches, water colors, crayon drawings and wash drawings. The subjects of these pictures may not interest you very much but if you step closer to one of them to see who was the artist who made it you will have a surprise in store.

For instance, there is the one which pictures a Greek warrior of the ancient days. Down in one corner of the picture is a barely decipherable signature—"J. Davis." Perhaps this doesn't mean anything to you especially until you see a typewritten sheet inserted in the other corner which reads as follows: "This picture, drawn by Jefferson Davis while a cadet at the U. S. M. A., was presented to me on August 13, 1824, by Sergeant Starr, retired, formerly of the service detachment, now on the police force of the State, War and Navy building at Washington. He informed me that when the old academic building (the one that stood on the site of the present west academic building) was torn down that the drawing fell in the hands of some friend of his from whom he afterwards obtained it and that he, Douglas Newton Starr, made the frame from a part of a banister railing of one of the staircases in the old academic building. (Signed) Fred W. Sladen, Major General, Superintendent."

So more than a hundred years ago this Greek warrior's portrait came from the pencil of a slender young Kentuckian, appointed to the military academy from Mississippi in 1824 and graduated in 1828, who had his first military experience as a second lieutenant of infantry in the Black Hawk war in 1832 and who, as a colonel of Mississippi volunteers in the Mexican war, distinguished himself at the battle of Buena Vista by an exploit which was to have much to do with his future career. For Jefferson Davis's greatest fame lies not in his career as a soldier but as a statesman. He was successively a member of the United States house of representatives, United States senator and secretary of war. And later, in 1861, the Confederate congress, remembering the hero of Buena Vista and Davis's services in the war portfolio in President Franklin Pierce's cabinet, selected him for the position of president of the Confederate States of America.

But the portrait of the Greek warrior made by Jefferson Davis is not the only one made by a cadet destined for future fame. Near it is a scene in an Indian camp of the old days. In the foreground a chief squats holding his gayly decorated pipe as he dickers with the white trader whose wares of blankets, knives and other trinkets are spread out before him. Standing to one side is an Indian woman, papoose in arms, who seems much interested in the bargaining. The artist who depicted this scene was Cadet U. H. Grant, a graduate from the academy in 1841. Perhaps most Americans know him as U. S. Grant, those initials standing both for Ulysses S. Grant and "Unconditional Surrender" but he was at West Point he signed his name J. H. Grant for Ulysses S. Grant was the name his mother had given him.

The drawing made by the future chief of the Union forces in the war was a man who

By Cadet Jefferson Davis

Grant, was the greatest leader of the boys in blue. It is a classical subject, a Greek warrior staying a centaur, and it is signed by Cadet William Tecumseh Sherman, a graduate in the class of 1838. Not far away is a painting of a different sort—a water color picturing a riverside city, perhaps an ancient walled town somewhere in Italy. It is a painting of rare beauty and one which might well have come from the brush of a dream-eyed artist. Looking at its soft coloring it is difficult to realize that the hand which held the brush that put this scene on canvas was the same hand which directed the movements of thousands of armed men on the bloody battlefield of Gettysburg, those hot days of July 1, 2, and 3, 1863. For this painting was made by Cadet George C. Meade of the class of '33, whose victory over the great Robert E. Lee, a fellow West Pointer, was still thirty years in the future.

But these drawings by "artists who became great generals" are not the only artistic treasures which adorn the walls of this West Point classroom. There, too, are examples of work by one artist who never became even so much as a "shavetail" (lieutenant) but who did become one of the greatest American artists of all time. Once upon a time James Abbott McNeill Whistler humorously remarked: "Had silicon been a noxious gas I would have been a general today." Back of this remark is the history of a brief career at West Point. In 1852 Whistler was appointed to West Point. He was there for two years. Then came the fatal day when he and his classmates were taking an examination in chemistry. Was silicon a noxious gas or wasn't it? That was one of the questions confronting the future generals. Young Whistler guessed that it was. And he guessed wrong. It is probable that it was only one of several mistakes which he made in the examination. At any rate, he was "found"—that is, discharged from the academy for deficiency in chemistry.

Today a "Whistler" is one of the most prized possessions of public art galleries and private collectors, and the United States Military Academy is the possessor of not only one but five genuine "Whistlers," and what makes them even more valuable is the fact that they are "early Whistlers." They are all copies of drawings and paintings which Whistler made from the work of recognized masters. One of them shows a group before the door of a manor house, the lord of the manor distant in the background, the poor. Even more interesting is a drawing showing two pretty Italian girls in a doorway. Although this drawing was made by Whistler in copying the work of another artist, the girls from the original drawing give variety to the scene.

that the great American painter was once a West Point cadet it might not be so surprising perhaps if they knew of the military background of Whistler's family. In 1758 there was born in Ireland an old English family of Whistlers a boy to whom was given the name of John. During the American Revolution he ran away from home and joined the army, coming to America with the troops under Burgoyne in 1777. He was thus one of the members of "Gentleman Johnny's" ill-fated army which was captured by the Americans at Saratoga. Returning to England, Whistler was discharged from the army and soon afterwards eloped with the daughter of one of his father's friends. Believing that life in America offered greater opportunities for him, he brought his bride to this country and settled at Hagerstown, Md. In 1791 he entered the American army and served continuously on the frontier of the old northwest under St. Clair, Wayne and others. In 1803 the secretary of war ordered Colonel Hamtramck of the First Infantry, commander at Detroit, to send an officer and six men to establish a military post where the Chicago river flows into Lake Michigan. Colonel Hamtramck selected for this duty Capt. John Whistler and made him commander of the new post which was to be built there.

Whistler arrived at the site of the present city of Chicago in August, 1803, and began building the stockaded structure to which was given the name of Fort Dearborn, in honor of the secretary of war. Thus he became the founder of the first permanent settlement on the site of the metropolis of the Middle West and to him historians have given the title of the "Father of Chicago." Whistler was accompanied to Chicago by his family. One of them was a daughter, Sarah, who on November 1, 1804, married James Abbott, a Detroit merchant. The wedding which was performed by John Kinzie was the first marriage of white people in Chicago. Another member of his family was a son, George Washington Whistler, then a toddling child three years old. When this boy grew up he was sent to West Point and was graduated from the academy at the age of nineteen. He was assigned to the artillery branch of the service and after his resignation from the army in 1833 he rose to eminence as an engineer. A year after Whistler's resignation from the army, a son was born to him at Lowell, Mass.

To this son was given the name of James Abbott Whistler, and it was this boy who remained of art an even greater name than his father in engineering. The connection of Whistler, the artist, with Fort Dearborn and Chicago is shown, one historian has said: "The boy who served constantly to the part of it was honored as the first bridge over the river." The artist's first bridge over the river was the first bridge over the river.

To Identify Genuine Aspirin

THE increasing use of Bayer Aspirin every year is proof that it has no ill effects. It is the accepted antidote for pain. It always helps; it never harms. Quick relief when you've a headache, or cold; or are suffering from neuralgia or neuritis. Rheumatic pains yield, too, if you'll only give these tablets a chance. But you want genuine Aspirin, so look for the Bayer Cross on every tablet. The box always bears the name Bayer and the word "genuine" printed in red. Proven directions inside.

Aspirin is the trade mark Monocetioacidester of Bayer Manufacture of Salicylicacid

Is rattlesnake meat good to eat? Of course the uninitiated will answer in the negative, says the Pathfinder Magazine. But not so with the fair students of the nature study camp of the Pennsylvania State college summer session. Some 200 students at the camp in the valley of the Seven Sisters mountains sampled fried rattlesnake and all declare "it tastes just like chicken or frogs' legs, and once you try it you're sure to come back for more."

When Babies CRY

Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like. It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition, Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

One of the most exciting football games of the season was played between Clarendon and Hedley Wednesday, Oct 16th, at Hedley. At the completion of the first half of the game the score 13 and 0 in Clarendon's favor. At the beginning of the second half the Hedley Owls came back with "real football spirit" and a real game was played. The final score was 20 to 13 in Hedley's favor.

This makes the third game the Owls have won this season.

Donations to Hedley School

The Hedley Rural Demonstration Club at a recent meeting voted to donate $20.00 to the High School for the purpose of purchasing magazines for the various departments. The high school teachers certainly appreciate the magazines, for it is necessary that the current literature be purchased in order that our standard be raised.

Barnes & Hastings, L Spalding and J B Pickett have donated pencils, tablets and other school supplies for small children that are unable to purchase them for themselves. This is indeed appreciated by the grade teachers.

Mrs R Priestly, who is running a school supply shop near the school building, has presented the high school library a book containing all the works of Shakespeare. This will be a valuable book for the English Department.

THE electric light and power system in many towns represents the heaviest industrial investment in the town.

Present day utilities of electricity in domestic and commercial life calls for great power generating stations and costly distribution systems. When selecting factory locations, big industries first ascertain if uninterrupted electric service is available.

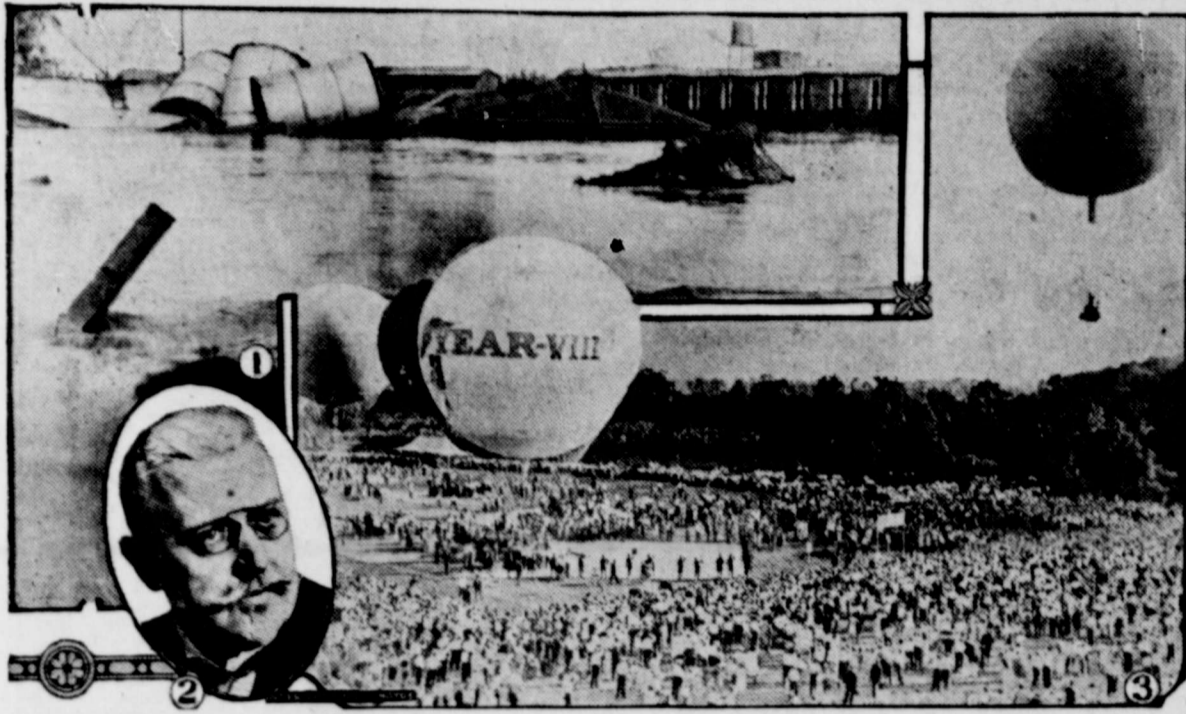

When a company invests millions in generating stations to serve a group of cities and towns it is certainly a concrete indication of the company's confidence and faith in the towns.

The West Texas Utilities Company has built three major generating stations, and maintains 15 auxiliary power plants, to give unfailing service to the 110 prosperous cities, towns and communities on its properties.

This company is vitally interested in the progress and development of every community it serves. Your success is its success therefore it is one of your most active civic boosters and one of your most substantial citizens.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Democrats and Radicals of Senate Defeat Hoover on Flexible Tariff.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THIRTEEN Republican senators, nearly all classed as "radicals," united with the Democrats last week to administer a decisive defeat to President Hoover in the tariff bill battle. By a vote of 47 to 42 the senate adopted the Simmons amendment to the measure taking away from the President the power to make changes in the duties under the so-called flexible tariff provision which has been in effect for seven years. Mr. Hoover had urged that this feature of the bill be retained, but the majority of the senators decided that it represents a delegation of the taxing power by congress to the executive and might lead to further usurpation of the powers of the legislative branch of the government. Anyhow, that was their story and they stuck to it, although unbiased observers thought their action had more of a political basis. The President's position in the matter had the approval of nearly all the big farm organizations, but the radical Republicans, most of whom claim to represent agricultural states, disregarded this fact and took advantage of the opportunity to hit Mr. Hoover. The Democrats are not at all sure of keeping a solid front on the rate schedule, so they made this showing on an administrative feature, only four of their members voting against the Simmons amendment.

Under the amendment adopted, the President would be required to transmit promptly tariff commission reports to congress, adding his own recommendation if desired. Sole authority to make changes in duties would be vested in congress. To prevent the opening up of other tariff matters congress would be prevented from considering any amendments to bills embodying tariff commission recommendations which were not germane to the particular item. Senator Johnson said the tariff would be "infinitely more flexible" under the amendment than under the present law. Of course the house may reject the amendment.

ONE hundred and seventy-five convicts in the Colorado state penitentiary at Canon City mutinied, murdered half a dozen guards and barricaded themselves in one of the cell houses, defying the warden's forces and a detachment of National Guardsmen. The convicts had few guns but plenty of ammunition, and before they were conquered it was found necessary to use machine guns, dynamite and finally a .75-millimeter field piece from the rifle range at Golden. During the fierce battle Warden F. E. Crawford himself was badly wounded. The mutineers, who were led by one Danny Daniels, demanded unrestricted freedom, threatening the death of guards they had captured if this were refused. The state forces would not listen to any such proposals. The warden's men were reinforced not only by the militia but also by police from Denver and other cities and hundreds of armed citizens.

WILLIAM B. SHEARER, the "observer" for American ship building concerns at the Geneva naval conference of 1927, was a voluble and sensational witness before the senate committee that is investigating propagandist activities, and after hearing him the committee adjourned its sessions until the visit of Prime Minister MacDonald is concluded. This probably was wise, for Shearer had brought into the record and handed to the committee a document which would be internationally startling if it were genuine. This purports to be addressed to David Lloyd George and is said to be "reeking with hostility to the United States." Shearer told it to Sir William Wiseman, called the chief British spy in the United States during the war, and now with Kuhn, Loeb & Co. He said it was written by W. S. Summers of Los Angeles, who received it from a Mr. Wheeler, who got it from Ben McLenden, who extracted it from the files of the British consulate in New York during the war; and that he showed it to navy officers and to the then Senator Reed of Missouri, and it played an important part in shaping the naval policy of the senate.

Sir William Wiseman denounces the document as a "clumsy, absurd forgery." W. S. Summers of Los Angeles says he knows Shearer but knows nothing of the letter. L. E. Wheeler, formerly a federal secret service operative, says he never knew Shearer; and A. C. Merrill, a Navy department expert, has given an opinion that the document is spurious. All of which did not seem to abash Shearer. Several well-known newspaper correspondents who were at the Geneva conference and whose names were dragged into his story by Shearer, have declared that gentleman's statements to be lies.

BRIG. GEN. F. P. CROZIER of England, right hand man of Lord Robert Cecil in disarmament efforts, sent to Ambassador Daves a letter stating that in 1927 a man calling himself "Sherman" offered him large sums of money to cease his advocacy of a reduction of the British army and navy, and that in the newspaper portraits of Shearer he recognized likenesses of that man. Shearer denies having approached General Crozier, saying he had not been in England since 1918 and never heard of the general.

When the committee resumes its hearings it will call Sir William Wiseman, former Secretary of State Kellogg and others whose names have come up in the inquiry. Under a resolution introduced by Senator Caraway the senate, through its judiciary committee, also will start an investigation of all lobbies operating in congress.

GERMANY lost its foremost statesman last week when Dr. Gustav Stresemann, foreign minister, died of a heart attack following a stroke of paralysis. He had been in poor health for months but recently had so far recovered as to be able to take part in the reparations conference at The Hague and the session of the League of Nations assembly in Geneva. Doctor Stresemann, who was born in Berlin in 1878, was president of the German People's party, a member of the reichstag and was several times chancellor of both the empire and the republic. It was he who put into effect the policy of reconciliation with Germany's former foes and who brought his country into the League of Nations. He was looked upon as the backbone of the present Mueller cabinet and Berlin politicians doubted whether the coalition government could be held together without him.

THAT tropical hurricane that swept westward from the West Indies, after killing some twenty persons and doing great damage in the Bahamas, struck Florida with devastating force, tearing its way upward from Key West to Pensacola and then veering over to the Atlantic coast region and dissipating itself in furious rain storms. The Floridians, being forewarned, had taken all possible precautions, but the property losses were considerable though the deaths were few. The rains in the Carolinas and Georgia added to the already serious flood situation there, the Savannah and other rivers having risen to stages unequalled in many years. All the way up to New England the storm crippled land and water transportation and wire service.

RAMSAY MACDONALD must have been gratified with the reception accorded him by the officials and people of the United States. The prime minister's ship, the Berengaria, was escorted into New York harbor Friday morning by the cruisers Memphis and Trenton, and at quarantine he and his party were taken in hand by Mayor Walker's welcoming committee and landed at Battery Point. There they were met by Secretary of State Stimson and British Ambassador Sir Esme Howard and then a procession was formed to the city hall, where MacDonald was granted the honor of a city of the city. Soon thereafter he took train for Washington to meet the prime minister and his went first to the British embassy. On Saturday Mr. MacDonald became the guest of President Hoover at the White House and the conversations on Anglo-British relations and naval reduction, the purpose of the visit, began. The social program arranged in the National Capital included functions at which Lassel was the central figure.

While the prime minister was on the high seas, Arthur Henderson, minister for foreign affairs, and Valerian Doygalevsky, Soviet ambassador to France, got together and signed an agreement for full resumption of diplomatic relations between Great Britain and Russia, including an exchange of ambassadors, and for the settlement of questions outstanding between the two governments. This agreement is subject to the approval of parliament.

QUESTIONING of the members of the federal farm board was continued by the senate committee on agriculture and the board was subjected to further criticism for not using huge sums of money to force up the prices of this season's wheat crop. Samuel R. McKelvie, of Nebraska, the wheat member of the board, had a sharp clash with Senator Brookhart on the question of whether or not the board was authorized to fix prices, the Iowa senator insisting it was.

Mr. McKelvie said that the board members hope that the new grain marketing corporation which is in process of organization at Chicago, will be ready to operate in such a manner as to stabilize wheat prices next year. It was the opinion of the board, he said, that it was not feasible to commence stabilization operations this year. In Chicago William H. Settle, chairman of the organization committee, said the grain marketing corporation would be completed within a week. At the call of the farm board the wool growers of the nation held a meeting in Chicago to discuss plans for a similar central marketing and financing agency for their industry.

THE American Legion, in annual session in Louisville, held the greatest parade in its history and then got down to business, adopting a lot of resolutions most of which concerned the care of disabled veterans and like matters. Woodlawn post of Chicago won first place in the drill team competition and Electric post of Milwaukee won the band contest. Boston and Los Angeles sought next year's convention and it was awarded to the Massachusetts city on the first ballot.

O. L. Bodenhamer of El Dorado, Ark., was elected commander unanimously. He was a school teacher who enlisted as a private in 1917 and was discharged two years later as a major. Mrs. Donald Macrea of Council Bluffs, Iowa, was chosen national president of the American Legion auxiliary.

LEADERS in the prohibition cause to the number of a score met in Washington and organized the "co-operative committee for prohibition enforcement" which is intended to coordinate the activities of the country's numerous dry organizations. The headquarters will be in Washington and the chairman is Patrick H. Callahan of Louisville. The committee proposes to lay a scientific groundwork for a campaign of education as to the benefits of prohibition.

President Hoover appointed John R. McNab of San Francisco as head of a special body which will study and formulate changes in federal administration and judicial machinery. In announcing the appointment the President said the recommendations of this group would be submitted to congress for the more effective enforcement of the laws under the Eighteenth amendment.

FRITZ VON OPEL of Germany, wealthy automobile builder and race driver, made the fastest time in a plane propelled by a few foot speed motor, came the first in the race.

ONE PRESCRIPTION
MADE FAMILY DOCTOR FAMOUS

Seldom has any single act been of greater benefit to mankind than that of Dr. Caldwell in 1885, when he wrote the prescription which has carried his fame to the four corners of the earth.

Over and over, Dr. Caldwell wrote the prescription as he found men, women and children suffering from those common symptoms of constipation, such as coated tongue, bad breath, headaches, gas, nausea, biliousness, no energy, lack of appetite, and similar things.

Demand for this prescription grew so fast, because of the pleasant, quick way it relieved such symptoms of constipation, that by 1888 Dr. Caldwell was forced to have it put up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is always ready at any drugstore.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, pre-reptional product.

CHESTNUTTING TIME

Those who are fortunate enough to live near chestnut trees have a happy time gathering the glossy, brown nuts after Jack Frost has opened their burrs. This delicious nut is more and more appreciated and it is now found in markets all over the United States.

Chestnuts cooked until soft, then peeled of their brown skins are most tasty added to the waldorf salad, using celery, apple and the chestnuts in place of other nuts.

Chestnut Soup.—Shell and blanch six or seven dozen chestnuts and put them on to simmer in a quart of good chicken stock. When soft rub through a sieve, add to the stock, season well, adding milk and cream with a beaten egg. Serve with croutons. French cooks often brown the chestnuts in a little fat before cooking them in the broth; this gives a richer flavor.

Chestnut Sauce.—To three table-spoonfuls of fat left from a roasting turkey or other fowl, add two table-spoonfuls of flour, stir until foamy scraping the glaze from the pan. Add a cupful of potato water from the dish after cooking potatoes, as this is rich in mineral salts; stir and cook until thick. Season with salt, pepper, and add a pint of mashed chestnuts, a teaspoonful of chili sauce. Pour into a sauceboat and serve with the fowl.

When these nuts are plentiful cook, mash and season with butter, pepper and salt and serve as a vegetable. This is a real treat and when served with meat will take the place of potatoes.

Chestnut Custard.—To one cupful of chestnut pulp add the yolks of three eggs, one beaten white, one cupful of rich milk, a little flavoring and sugar to taste. Pour into a buttered dish and bake slowly. Make a meringue with the other two whites of eggs, two table-spoonfuls of sugar, and spread over the custard. Brown in the oven.

Chestnuts boiled, skinned and cooked in a lemon sirup make a most delicious confection which is called Marron Glace by the French who use them as a great delicacy. One may purchase them in bottles if the cost is no hindrance.

Helpful Hints.

The baby whose mother knows nothing of the laws of food is "out of luck," to use a current expression. When one sees a three-month-old baby swallowing its portion of coffee or banana, one knows if the baby survives it is in spite of its bad treatment. Fevers and rashes are the first result and nerves and shocking temper the second. The mother wonders where the child got its dreadful disposition. The physician who keeps pace with the modern ideas in dietetics, strikes out meat until the child is seven years old and only then he advises its use but once a day.

For tired feet a teaspoonful of formaldehyde in a bowlful of water is recommended to rest and remove pain. Keep the flashlight in order to use in dark corners and save the risk of using matches.

Those who enjoy rocks or oatmeal cookies will find them much more wholesome if the oatmeal is browned first.

A cool bed for a fever patient may be made with a sheet or strip of matting placed under the sheet and a cold water bottle under the pillow. If there is no way of cooling the room by a good draft, hang old sheets wet in water around the room. The evaporation will cool the air.

Bruised, fresh catnip applied to poison ivy burns will relieve the pain in a short time.

Add a half teaspoonful of glycerine to a pint of grape jelly if troubled with tartaric crystals forming.

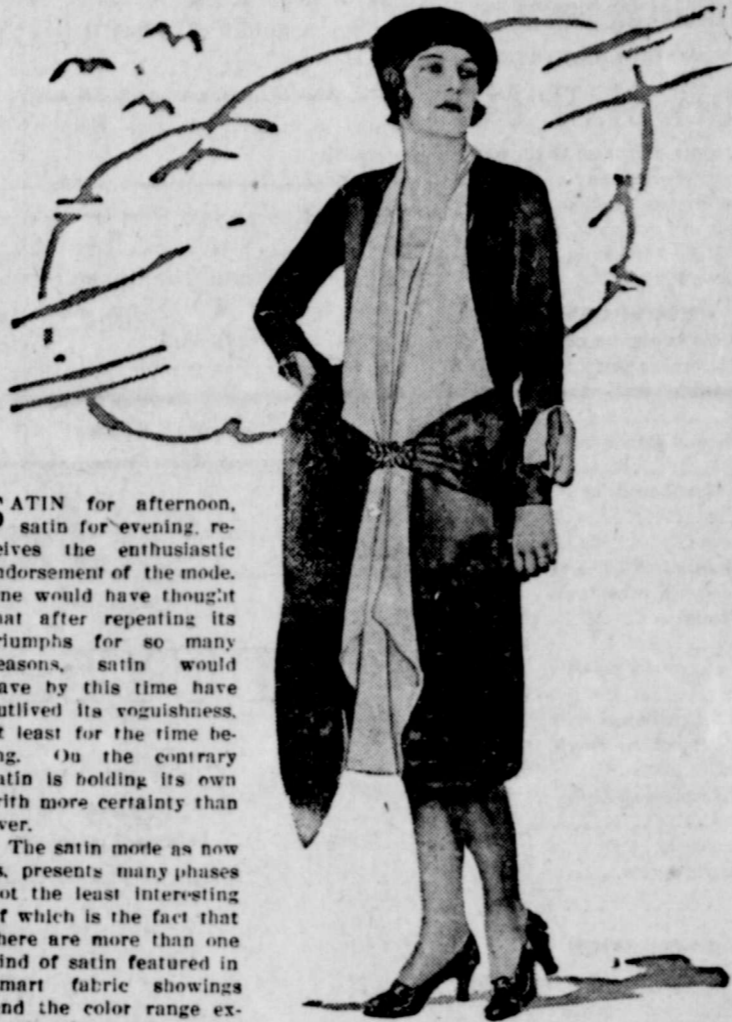

Give a half cupful of olive or any sweet oil to neutralize any vegetable or mineral poison taken.

Wash cloths made of a few thicknesses of cheese cloth, are fine for traveling as they dry so quickly.

A cupful of cooked rice or cereal of any kind improves a meat loaf.

A turkish towel wrung out of hot water and placed on the back of the neck, relieves with sick headaches.

BLACK-AND-WHITE NOW FEATURED; EVENING GOWNS ARE LENGTHENED

SATIN for afternoon, satin for evening, receives the enthusiastic endorsement of the mode. One would have thought that after repeating its triumphs for so many seasons, satin would have by this time have outlived its vogue. On the contrary satin is holding its own with more certainty than ever.

The satin mode as now is, presents many phases not the least interesting of which is the fact that there are more than one kind of satin featured in smart fabric showings and the color range extends from the most delicate evening tints to all the rich dark afternoon hues now in vogue. Speaking of the various satin types, there's everything from the ever popular soft crepe-back satin to the very new and much exploited, highly lustrous panne satin which is really of the rayon family. Frocks of the new panne satin both in black or colors number among outstanding successes of the evening mode.

For early autumn wear the satin afternoon and the satin street frock, also short jacket suit are making an excellent showing among new fashions. The smartest of these daytime modes are carried out in black and white as is the one-piece dress in the picture above. One sees any number of launty black satin suits the skirts of which flare fashionably sometimes via the circular-cut method, and just as often through use of plaits and godets. With these a white or egg-shell satin blouse is inevitable. Of course there must be a handsome fur neckpiece about the neck.

If black-and-white does not tune to your individuality, then choose for your "first" suit to wear on sunny fall days, heavy brown satin, tailored the sides. But now! behold the frankly long all-around hemline. The light green moire evening gown in picture below shows the new length. Two huge bows make this gown distinctive. There never was such a season for bows as this.

Just what we are coming to in matter of hemlines, who can tell? In fact the entire silhouette is undergoing a revolution. Especially is this true of daytime modes, the longer hemlines, the fitted bodices, the higher waistlines, the sash tie-backs which timidly hint at the bustle types of 1830 influence, these and other details of fussy shirtings and puffings and "dressmaker touches" in general, are causing nothing less than a sensation in fashion circles.

But why talk of such impending events as hidden knees and curves at the waistline for daytime frocks, when such fascinating themes await discussion as the new colorings which are enhancing the formal evening picture with their glamorous beauty.

If you like turquoise blue, wear it, for it is one of the favored shades for

to a nicety, for brown is the very quintessence of color chic this season.

Satin pique is another smart fabric item making its recent debut, and printed satins, too, are receiving considerable attention. Many of the newest satina emphasize the smart dahlia and blackberry shades.

Well, like it or not, we are, for long skirts, so we may as well "be game" and accept fashion's verdict gracefully. It is the long-limbed goddess which fashion enthroned this season.

under the arc light. So, also, are light blues. Green is especially enjoying many triumphs, notably such esthetic shades as sage and other subtle tones, particularly a new "frosted green," which is among the loveliest of pale evening tints—also, if you are in a mood for general green. Exaggerated and in profusion, green shades are in vogue. Sweetly feminine shades. Come in red which

Los Angeles Boy Needed Help

Leroy Young, 1116 Georgia St., Los Angeles, is a "regular fellow," active in sports, and at the top in his classes at school. To look at him now, you'd think he never had a day's sickness but his mother says: "When Leroy was just a little fellow, we found his stomach and bowels were weak. We kept suffering from constipation. Nothing he ate agreed with him. He was fretful, feverish and puny."

"When we started giving him California Fig Syrup his condition improved quickly. His constipation and biliousness stopped and he has had no more trouble of that kind. I have since used California Fig Syrup with him for colds and upset spells. He likes it because it tastes so good and I like it because it helps him so wonderfully!"

California Fig Syrup has been the trusted standby of mothers for over 50 years. Leading physicians recommend it. It is purely vegetable and works with Nature to regulate, tone and strengthen the stomach and bowels of children so they get full nourishment from their food and waste is eliminated in a normal way.

Four million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it. Always look for the word "California" on the carton to be sure of getting the genuine.

Found Out

The late Governor Strong of the Federal Reserve bank condemned shirkers on a Y. M. C. A. address in Toledo last year.

"Don't shirk," he said. "Shirkers always get found out."

"There was a shirking lieutenant in the World war. Whenever he got news of a coming attack illness would overtake him, and he'd ask permission to go to the rear."

"Well, one day when he applied again for permission to retire on account of illness his colonel said to him:

"Lieutenant, if this keeps on I'll have to send in your name for a decoration—for a wreath of leaves of absence."

Amarillo House Mover Suffered with Kidney Trouble Six Years—Gains on Organtone—Health Is Being Restored.

"I have gained wonderfully and if you had seen me the day I began taking Organtone you would not recognize me as the same man now," said Mr. W. G. Street of 1207 Lincoln, Amarillo, Texas. Mr. Street is a house mover and is well known throughout the whole countryside.

"About six years ago," continued Mr. Street, I commenced to have trouble with my stomach and kidneys, and I certainly had an awful hard time. Although my work was very hard I had to cut out eating heavy meals and got to the point where I did not eat food enough to properly nourish me so that I could keep up with my work. I had awful headaches and bloating spells and naturally with the condition of my kidneys my sleep was very broken. No kind of medicine, including the doctors prescriptions, did me any good.

"I have taken one bottle of Organtone and have never felt better in a good many years than I do right now, and I wouldn't take a thousand dollars for a good this first bottle. My appetite is so good I can eat and digest. I want to tell you that I am a house mover and I am a house mover."

Important to BUYERS OF NEW CARS

FROM time to time General Motors has devoted its messages in this paper to giving facts which help the car-buyer get full value for his automobile dollar. In keeping with that policy of frankness, this message gives facts about the prices of new cars which every one should know.

This is the standard price tag used by General Motors dealers to show what makes up the delivered price of their new cars.
 List Price. The f. o. b. price advertised by the factory.
 Freight and Delivery. An authorized amount to cover the freight charges paid by the dealer and the cost of unloading, inspecting, supplying fuel and oil—preparing the car for delivery to you.
 Accessories. A charge for any additional accessories that may be purchased.

Consider the delivered price as well as the list (f. o. b.) price when comparing automobile values. General Motors dealers' delivered prices include only authorized charges for freight and delivery, and the charge for any additional accessories that may be desired.

(NAME OF CAR)	(MODEL)
(Model No.)	(Body Style)
LIST PRICE (f. o. b.)	$ 000.00
FREIGHT and DELIVERY	00.00
DELIVERED PRICE	$ 000.00
ACCESSORIES (Not included in the List Price)	00.00
TOTAL DELIVERED PRICE	$ 000.00

These prices are for cash. Payments may be financed on convenient monthly payments if desired.

WHEN you buy a new automobile, it is the delivered price that you actually pay.

The delivered price consists of the list price of the car—the f. o. b. price advertised by the manufacturers—plus certain other charges which the dealer makes.

You should know exactly what those charges are and what each one is for.

There is no mystery about the charges added by General Motors' dealers. They have adopted this standard price tag, which tells you everything. Nothing is hidden. There is no extra charge to permit a seemingly better trade-in offer. No extra charge to cover advertising or any other item. You know exactly what makes up the difference between the list price and the delivered price. Each charge made by the dealer is fair and reasonable.

Use this tag for reference. Make it your guide in comparing automobile values. For the delivered price is the price you really pay.

Below is given the range of list prices for each General Motors car. They are just as low as General Motors' vast production, centralized purchasing and reasonable profit per car can make them. General Motors dealers maintain this value in their delivered prices of these cars and show you every item on the standard price tag. Look over the General Motors line. Then clip the coupon.

COUNT LUCKNER THE SEA DEVIL

By Lowell Thomas

Luckner and his men effect their escape by seizing a motor launch and leaving in the darkness.

CHAPTER XVII—Continued

We lay off an isolated bay of Reef Mercury island, northwest of the Bay of Plenty, for two days, during which we had a couple of narrow escapes from searching boats. A government cutter had almost sighted us when she damaged her propeller on the rocks and had to limp back home. The third day we put out to sea, and as we bounced about on the waves I swore in the cadets as regular midshipmen of the Imperial navy and promoted Vice Corporal von Egidly to the rank of naval lieutenant.

Two sailing vessels came by. We decided to seize them both, sink one, and keep the other. We went after the first one, but a sudden puff of wind carried her along at a great rate, and we could not catch her. This was very unfortunate, for she reported our capture of the second boat, which she witnessed. Bombs poised, machine gun pointing, and German flag raised, we swiftly approached the Moa. She hove to. My boys and I clambered on deck. With Colonel Turner's sword in my hand, I ordered the captain and crew herded below, the captain, an excellent sailor, growling:

"You're escaped prisoners, eh? Our boys are doing their bit in France, and at home they can't even guard prisoners."

The Moa was a fine craft but as flat as a match box. Intended for coastwise trade, she had no keel and drew only three feet of water, but she had huge masts. A storm blew up, and she scudded before the wind. The Moa's captain rushed up bristling with excitement. His boat, he protested, was not adapted for sailing on the high sea, much less through a storm. We were risking our lives, he expostulated. We should take down sail.

"We are sailing for our lives, by J. e." I responded, and kept all canvas up.

The skipper stayed on deck all night and poured out oil to quiet the waves. We went on our watches, undisturbed. Ordinarily, we would have been some what worried, but the storm was taking us along swiftly—away from pursuit. The waves began to break over our stern, and the Moa bobbed up and down. She had a deckload of lumber, overboard with it. We started to work and were ably assisted by a breaker that crashed over us and in an instant swept most of the lumber into the sea. We were towing the motor boat we had taken from the commandant at Motuili. A wave swamped her, and she tore loose from the towline and sank.

We steered to the Kermadec Islands, an uninhabited group where the New Zealand government keeps a cache of provisions for castaway sailors. Curtis Island, one of the group, came in sight on December 21. It appeared in a cloud of smoke, a land of volcanoes and geysers. Presently we spied the sheet-iron shed where the provisions were stored. Kircheiss and four men landed on the inferno-like coast and in due time returned, their boat loaded deep with provisions. The New Zealand government was kind enough to provide many useful things for shipwrecked sailors and some times for escaped prisoners of war. There were tools, oars, sails, fishing tackle, blankets, bacon, butter, tinned beef—in short, everything. We had intended to leave our prisoners on Curtis Island, but that den of steam and sulphur fumes seemed unfit for anyone. So we decided to take them ashore with a supply of provisions, and send a wireless message to sum moon old for them.

"Smoke to the north, behind island," sang the lookout.

Two men were still on the island. I sent hastily for them. The Moa raised sail and ran before the wind. The steamer was in sight now. She sailed toward us. We changed our course. She, too, changed her course. The skipper of the Moa recognized her as the New Zealand government's cable steamer, Iris, an auxiliary cruiser. She had cannon, and we had none. Our goose was cooked.

We still tried hopelessly to run away. She gained on us, and signaled us to stop. We kept on. A flash, a distant roar, a hissing in the air, a splash in front of us. She was firing on us. "Heave to," I commanded, and we were prisoners once again. The Iris was manned, not by naval men, but by a nondescript crowd that put pistols to our backs as we came aboard, and searched us to the soles of our shoes. Then these gentry of us our personal possessions were wildly pillaged over their heads. From them that I had captured we had secured the capture of the

We were jailed at Mount Eden, the local prison of Auckland, as a punishment for our flight. For a clubhouse it was not bad. After twenty-one days there, we were distributed among various prison camps. Kircheiss and I went to River Island near Lyttelton on the south island of New Zealand. Even the yard of our prison in Fort Jervois was a veritable cage. It was screened not only around but also across the top with lines of barbed wire. The commander of the camp, Major Leeming of Tasmania, was one of the best fellows I have ever met. He, too, felt himself a prisoner here on this lonely island and soon became our third man at cards, which we played to while away the hours during the long evenings.

A drawbridge that had been smashed by a hurricane was being repaired, and we prisoners had access to the waterside for a while. In the yard stood a row of empty tar barrels. One of the barrels fell over, and I happened to notice that it was picked up by a small convulsive schooner that often lay at dock farther down the shore. I threw in another barrel. It floated. The boat picked it up. My plan was made. I could arrange one of these barrels so that I could float out in it. I would pick the time when the little schooner was at shore. Then I would get into the barrel and roll myself off the dock. The boat would pick the barrel up. It might seem a bit heavy, but they would think it had tar in it. The barrel once aboard, its lid would open and a man armed with a knife would step out, like a jack-in-the-box. Thus I would have a boat. I would pick up Kircheiss, who would be waiting, and we would go sailing and perhaps get to some neutral island.

Major Leeming had been so kind to me that I did not want to embarrass him by escaping under his command. He, expecting an addition to his family, was to take a furlough. I would do my jail-breaking while he was away. But soon after Major Leeming went on his furlough, Kircheiss and I were ordered back to the prison camp at Motuili. Of course, there was a new commandant at Motuili now, a Major Schofield. Most of the prisoners there received us with enthusiasm.

Even the treacherous Polish doctor brought me a bottle of champagne, hoping that I would not mention our former little business transaction in which he was to get a percentage of that $25,000.

Some of our own countrymen who had spent so many hours learning parts for that theatrical show seemed to hold it against us. But, after all, had I not treated them to a far better melodrama from the life of a sailor?

Presently, several fellows came to me and asked if I did not think something could be undertaken. They had already contrived to get a few pistols and build a folding canvas boat. We could not very well go to sea in that. But, if we could contrive to station ourselves at some other part of the island, we could wait until a sailing ship came along, put out in our flimsy little craft, and attack her. We consulted with the former governor of German Samoa, Doctor Schultz-Ewarth by name, who was a prisoner at Motuili. He with his personal servant, a giant fellow, formerly a German baker, was allowed to wander where he pleased on the island. It was his man who hit upon the idea of hiding in the interior of the island by building a cave in the side of a dry river bed that he had discovered, the cave to be so disguised that searchers would not notice it. We could easily get out of the camp and into the other parts of the island, and, at the same time, give the impression that we had escaped over a cliff to the shore and been picked up by a boat. We could keep to our retreat until the search had died down, and then we could watch for a passing sailship and attack it. The plan seemed an excellent one.

We gathered more weapons, while Doctor Schultz-Ewarth and his man, on their long rambles, began the construction of the cave. Things progressed rapidly. Then the Armistice came. If it had been delayed a week, there would have been another escape at Motuili.

Modern Coed Has Own Standard of Freedom

I have come in contact with a number of modern coeds at various institutions; and many of them have been able, not to say willing or eager, to discuss excessively delicate subjects with the utmost freedom, as long as the discussion remains on a scientific or dispassionate basis. If there is anything that many modern coeds will not talk about I don't know what it is.

I am quite unable to state, however, that they are infinitely more sophisticated than their mothers, or than the preceding generation of coeds; because I have no way of knowing how their mothers knew. I have a

After the Armistice, we were prisoners for four more months on the north island near Auckland, but were allowed visitors.

One day, a Maori chieftain's wife from the tribe of the Waikatos, a people who made a name for themselves as warriors against the English in their heroic struggle for freedom in 1840-61, called with her retinue. This lady, whose name was Kaihau, handed me a letter. It was written in Maori, and translated read as follows:

"I come to you, O illustrious chieftain, and pass on to you for the future preservation of an old tradition the name of the great chieftain 'Wa-Tete.'"

As she handed me the letter, she brought forth from under her dress a mat that she had hidden there while passing the prison guard.

My surprise was great, and I nudged Kircheiss, but he was as mystified as I. Fortunately, there was a German lady present who had been living in New Zealand for some time. She understood the customs of the handsome aborigines who once ruled in New Zealand, and explained to me that I was about to receive the highest honor that the Maoris can bestow, upon anyone.

The chieftain's wife began to dance around me with great rapidity and wild abandon. The name of this dance was the Haka haka, or something like that, and at the conclusion of it she presented me with a green stone found only in New Zealand. Again she spoke.

"O great warrior from across the seas, we greet you as a chieftain of the Waikatos, and among my people you shall be known henceforth as 'Al-Tete,' meaning 'Holy Water.' We believe that the spirit of our Maori hero Al-Tete has returned to us in you."

I accepted the stone and pressed the Maori woman's hand to express my gratitude. As she was about to take her departure, she requested that I hide the mat and stone and carry them to Germany with me, which I did. But before concealing them, I had my picture taken wearing nothing but the garb of a Maori chieftain, this simple mat. Except for the absence of full war paint and the usual tattooing, my friends said I made a perfect aborigine. Perhaps so. Even in Germany there are those who look upon me as none of an aborigine than a civilized being.

When the day on which we were to sail for home drew near, the president of the Soldiers' Mothers' league visited me and wished me a pleasant trip on behalf of the mothers of 80,000 soldiers. She said she came because New Zealand's sons who had been war prisoners in Germany had returned home in good health to their mothers. Therefore, she considered it her duty to pray God that I, too, might soon be restored to my mother's arms.

So at last we sailed away from New Zealand, "the land down under," where we had had the last of our adventures, enjoyed a few hardships, spent many weary and delightful hours, and met many hospitable and kindly people. On the whole, I have happy memories of the Antipodes.

In July of 1919, I stepped on German soil again and hurried home, just in time to pass a few more weeks with my father, who died on September 8. The old warrior held steadfast to his faith in the Fatherland to the last. But to his dying hour he was filled with regret because his government would not let him take an active part in the Great War.

On January 3, 1920 all my men returned—that is, all save one. Their clothes were faded from the tropical sun and corroded by the sea water, but they returned without a stain upon either their honor or their loyalty.

The only gap in our ranks after those long adventures was the excellent Doctor Aletsch, our ship surgeon. The news of Germany's collapse reached the remote part of Chile where he was living. When he heard it, he fell dead of heart failure.

Returned to my thoughts changed and different from what I had hoped. In this connection, there is one memory always before me. It is of my mother. I was sitting at her sick bed when even the doctors had given up hope. Only then did I realize how much I loved her, but I also realized with sorrow and regret how much more I should have done for her. Exactly the same feeling I have today when I find my country lying low. Never have I loved my homeland so much as now. [THE END.]

FAMILY WAYS

Mr. and Mrs. Emu were calling on Mr. and Mrs. Ostrich one day when Mr. Ostrich began talking of the children.

"The emu family look something like the ostrich family. They have very long legs but instead of beautiful feathers their bodies are covered with something which looks very much like gray hay.

Their necks, which are long, also have the same kind of hay covering.

"You see," said Mr. Ostrich, "we looked after our children together.

"In the daytime Mrs. Ostrich would sit on the eggs and at night I would tell her to rest and I would sit on them."

"Of course," said Mr. Emu, "it is something the way with us as it is with you.

"I help Mrs. Emu, but then I find she lets me take over all the work to do."

"To be sure," said Mrs. Emu, "and why not? I always say to myself: 'If he's willing to work, it would be foolish of me to stop him.'"

"Yes, that is what I always say."

"You certainly do," said Mr. Emu. "And you live up to your words, too."

"Don't you sit on your eggs during the day?" asked Mrs. Ostrich. "I like to have a hand in the hatching out of the eggs."

"I hardly call it having a hand in the hatching when you sit on the eggs, my love," said Mr. Ostrich, with a foolish smile. "And besides you haven't a hand."

"I know," said Mrs. Ostrich, "but it's something creatures say so I thought I would, too."

"You asked me a question," said Mrs. Emu. "Do you, or do you not, want to have it answered?"

"From the way you are going on talking it would appear that you do not wish to be informed."

"How grandly you talk, Mrs. Emu," said Mrs. Ostrich. "To be sure I do wish to have my question answered."

"She talks grandly," said Mr. Emu, "because she can spend her time thinking of words and so forth."

"She does not have to work, nor even look after her children."

"Right, my dear," said Mrs. Emu, "but as I said before you always offer to help me, so I give right up to you."

"You give work right up to me," said Mr. Emu.

"It's this way," explained Mrs. Emu. "Mr. Emu finds me sitting on the eggs, and he always says:

"Oh, can't I do that for you?"

"Now wouldn't it be extremely foolish for me to say that he could not."

"If he is so willing, I must be willing, too. Then I get used to being idle and doing nothing but wander about and I forget about Mr. Emu and the work, until I find he is looking after the children."

"I think you forget about me on purpose," said Mr. Emu, "but it makes no difference—for I do not mind hatching the eggs in the least."

"Do you hatch the eggs?" asked the ostrich.

"Yes," said Mr. Emu. "Mrs. Emu lays them. Then I hatch them out, and what is more I look after the children until they are able to care for themselves."

"Well, that is strange," said Mrs. Ostrich. "We like to divide the time."

"It simply means," said Mrs. Emu, "that you follow the ways of the ostrich family and we follow the ways of the emu family."

"We have different family ways—that's all."

The Carnival of the Cowboy

NUMEROUS local and regional celebrations are held annually in this broad land, each springing from some historic or other background and calculated to apprise the universe that its particular locality offers something worthwhile, which fate denied to all the others. It remained, however, for Wyomingites to throw their hats in the ring, let out a few whoops and produce a "going on," which is unusual in the extreme, daring and thrilling in execution—action plus, held annually in their historic capital city of Cheyenne. Started some 30 years ago, as a purely Wyoming affair, it has become a western institution.

This "Frontier Day" celebration, as it is frequently termed, has for its major motif a long program—usually requiring from three to five days to complete—of exciting contests between human skill and courage on one hand, and cunning ferocity and brute strength on the other, which run the full gamut of cowboy activities in old-time, wild-west days, from races peculiar to the open range to riding bucking bronchos, roping and riding wild steers, bull-dogging, trick and fancy riding for cowboys and cowgirls and what not.

An outstanding and attractive feature of this big time in Wyoming is a dramatic Frontier parade which, in reality, is a history of transportation, to which come the Sioux and other Indians, in their colorful costumes ornamented with elk's teeth, shells, feathers and beads, from the days of the buffalo, the prairie schooner and the stage coach to the patial transcontinental limited of today.

"The Singing Tower"
AT SO-CALLED Iron mountain, the highest land elevation in all Florida, sacred ground of former Indian tribes, Edward W. Bok has seen his dream transformed into a reality, created a sanctuary "for humans and for birds" and crowned it with a masterpiece in towers which was dedicated and presented, for visitation, to the American people, by the President of the United States.

On a 48-acre tract great numbers of splendid palms, magnolias, live oaks, azaleas, primrose, jasmine, and other rare and beautiful plants and trees have been set out, accommodations arranged to fit the varying needs of various species of the feathered tribe, with the calculation that it will become a free-for-all stopping place for both native and migratory birds, a protectorate and a sanctuary, and thereby save the lives of thousands which are lost annually in course of migration.

Rising heavenward out of this sanctuary is a 205-foot tower, 51 feet square at the base, tapering to 37 feet at the top, done in gray, pink and white stone, which promises to be "a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

Within this tower are great tanks for watering the sanctuary and the largest carillon of bells on earth—71 bells, ranging in weight from 12 to 24,000 pounds. In the hands of an experienced carillonneur, their music is positively divine. As the sound waves roll away from the structure the impression leads one to imagine that the tower itself had broken out into song, hence "The Singing Tower."

The Storm King Highway
"STORM KING"—a mountain which rises 1,289 feet out of the western edge of the Hudson near West Point, was so named "because of the clouds which gather about its summit in stormy weather."

Early Dutch skippers called it Roter Berg or Butter Hill, because its rounded outline resembled a huge hunk of butter.

To overcome the necessity of going around the mountain on the west and shorten the north-and-south highway along the west shore of the Hudson by many miles, it was decided to try the daring experiment of carving a highway in the rocky face of the eastern side of the mountain.

The first surveys were made by shooting cans of paint against the steepest points along the mountain's side. The marks thus made were located indirectly without being actually reached by the surveyors. In many places the slope was less than 30 degrees from vertical, and in the beginning the rock drillers were suspended from ropes tied to trees above the site of operations. Far below ran a railroad track which greatly complicated the job, lest rocks should fall upon the track and delay the trains.

The highway was opened to traffic in 1922. It is four miles long, 24 feet wide and at the turn around the point of the mountain is almost exactly 400 feet directly above the water in the river. Its cost, aside from the right-of-way, was $300,000. Its construction made available to the public hitherto unreachably scenic views of rare charm. The panorama up and down the river must be seen to be fully appreciated. It is a scenic drive which, in any respects, is unequalled.

Houston Lady's Skin Nice and Clear Now

"My complexion used to show how bad I felt. Now it shows that I am free from those depressing headaches and nervous spells," says Mrs. Ollie Walker, who lives at 2424 Morse St., in Houston.

"I suffered from constipation. I might say all my life, I couldn't throw off the wastes and they gave me headaches, and a very sallow complexion. Ever since I started taking Nature's Laxative, all that is gone. I reckon the real reason is that NR Tablets are so pleasant to take that I continued taking them long enough to get results."

NR Tablets are so effective because they soothe, sweeten and stimulate the stomach and bowels. Then the starch and sugar wastes from the food you eat can't remain in your system to form the acids which sour your stomach, bind your bowels and rob the blood of the red corpuscles it must have plenty of to keep you from losing weight and strength, and from becoming bilious, headachy, dyspeptic and rheumatic.
