The Savior of the States

WASHINGTON AT VALLEY FORGE

GENERAL WASHINGTON

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

It is common knowledge to most Americans that the greater part of the credit for winning the War of the Revolution and the independence of the Thirteen Colonies belongs to one man—George Washington. But how many Americans, except possibly a few historians, know that Washington won, not so much because of the aid given him by the majority of the people in those colonies, but rather in spite of them? Yet that is the simple fact. And it is a fact which is presented so convincingly in a new book that to deny it or attempt to conceal the fact that Washington's gigantic task was made all the more difficult by the "corruption, treachery, and cowardice" of the very people he was trying to save is to shamefully deny him the honor and reverence due him for accomplishing his task. That book is the third volume of Rupert Hughes' biography, published recently by William Morrow and company and bearing the appropriate title of "The Savior of the States."

"The graft and profligating of the times was stupendous, and it is unjust to Washington as well as to the generation of Americans which coincided with the Revolution was far from being the supremely virtuous race its descendants have been pleased to pretend," says Mr. Hughes. "I had either to suppress Washington's innumerable denunciations or do something to justify them. Offensive as this material will perhaps appear to certain types of patriots, I regret that I could publish only a slight skimming of the vast cauldron of corruption, greed and selfishness." He then continues:

If the Americans of that time had been what their posterity imagines, or anything like it, they would have driven the British into the sea in a few weeks and set up a government of ideal beauty immediately. Because they were what they were and were not what they were not, poor Washington was never able to give his military abilities a real test, but was compelled to spend most of his time running away from a lazy enemy or keeping a safe distance while he sent out heart-breaking vain appeals for food, money, old clothes, soldiers, helpful legislation, the deferment of mutual jealousies, some unity of action.

The reader of this volume will feel that the author of it has a very low opinion of the majority of Americans contemporary with Washington. This is true, and if there were room for more evidence there would be evidence of a still lower opinion—an opinion almost as low as Washington's own.

A few soldiers, a few statesmen, a few devoted men did all the work, suffered all the hardships, and saved the country in spite of itself, while the majority ran away or kept aloof, grew fat and looked on. That was Washington's infinitely repeated declaration, and it is an insult to his memory to conceal it longer.

The more I read of the American Revolution the more difficult I find it to understand how it ever could have succeeded. I can hardly believe that it did. As a matter of fact it never did succeed in the way it was meant at the beginning; and its results were not at all what they were expected to be at the end of it.

Insofar as the writer of those lines has been listed among the "detractors of Washington" and the publication of the first volume of his biography four years ago resulted in a lengthy controversy in which he was misquoted, misinterpreted and attacked by many who had not even read his book and depended upon hearsay for their views on the subject, the following lines in the new volume are significant:

The more I study Washington the greater and better I think him, yet I am not trying to prove him great or good. I am trying solely to describe him as he was and let him speak for himself. He was a man of such tremendous undeniable achievement that he does not need to be bolstered with propaganda, protected by a priestcraft of suppression, or celebrated by any more Fourth of July oratory.

Since in this book George Washington "speaks for himself" it would be a truly patriotic duty for Americans to read in Washington's own words of the agonies of mind and body which he suffered in their behalf and to realize, perhaps for the first time, the wisdom, the valor and the unselfish devotion of the man whose birthday we celebrate on February 22. If they did that, perhaps the celebration of that day would have a new meaning for them.

This new volume in Hughes' biography begins with "The Dawn of '77." For Washington it was a cheerless dawn for "the year 1776 ended for him as a twelvemonth of almost unrelieved heart-breaks for which he could blame only his fellow-citizens." Written on its pages were the plot to assassinate him in New York, the failure of the expedition against Canada, the defeat and slaughter on Long Island, the shameful panic and stampede of his troops at Harlem, the defeat at White Plains, the loss of Fort Mifflin and Fort Mifflin and his flight across New Jersey with his army melting away so that he crossed the Delaware with only 3,000 of the 18,000 men he had had before the battle of Long Island.

His brilliant victory at Trenton the day after Christmas was one bright spot in the whole dismal year and when he would follow up that victory he found himself balked. For the term of enlistment of the Continental troops would soon end and the only way to hold them was by offering a bounty. He could expect no help from congress which had fled from Philadelphia at the approach of General Howe. However, as he wrote to congress on January 1, 1777, "After much persuasion, and the exertions of their officers, half or a greater proportion of those from the eastward have consented to stay six weeks on a bounty of ten dollars." But nearly half of those who promised to stay changed their minds and left for home—taking the bounty with them! So when he crossed the Delaware again on New Year's day he had 1,600 men, as compared to 2,500 with which he had crossed for the attack on Trenton.

With this slender force he conceived the audacious idea of an attack on the British at Princeton. The story of that expedition is a familiar one—how he outwitted Cornwallis, who thought he had the "old fox" in a trap, how he defeated the British force at Princeton, killed 100 and took 200 prisoners and then retreated safely to Morristown, while "Cornwallis went puffing on to Brunswick expecting to find Washington ahead of him."

But this was the last triumph which he was to enjoy for a long time. Before him during that year of the "three sevens" were the failures at Brandywine and Germantown, failures on the part of his officers but charged up against him because he was the commander. And in the north his rival, Gates, who aspired to succeed him as commander-in-chief, was triumphing over Burgoyne at Saratoga. Before him, too, was the threat of the conspiracy to supplant him, inaccurately known as the "Conway cabal" since, as Hughes shows, General Conway was in reality the catspaw for others, and the terrible winter at Valley Forge.

Nor was 1778 much better. Against the recovery of Philadelphia, the success at Monmouth and the arrival of a French fleet to aid the patriots, must be checked the steady decline in men and money which threatened a total collapse of the fight for freedom. The same can be said of 1779 which ended in starvation and stagnation in the winter camp at Morristown. "Though it never supplanted Valley Forge in popular memory," says Hughes, "Morristown was the scene of far more cruel hardships for the army."

But if these years had been bad, 1780 was to prove the year of crowning disaster. There was the defeat of Gates at Camden and the loss of nearly all of the South to the British. There was the treason of Benedict Arnold and the failure of the French aid to bring any decisive result. And then at the beginning of 1781 came the mutiny of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey troops. But if the new year opened with despair it was destined to close with a triumph, the greatest in Washington's career as a military leader. For October brought Yorktown, the surrender of Cornwallis and the victory which assured the success of the fight for liberty.

This brief and necessarily inadequate epitome of those four fateful years can only hint at what the "Savior of the States" endured during that time. The full story of it cannot even be told in Hughes' thick volume of 700 pages, although it tells enough to justify his declaration that he cannot understand how the Revolution ever could have succeeded. Here is an amazing story of all the worst in human nature from which could be drawn up a terrific indictment of our forefathers. But depressing as that story is it but serves to throw into higher relief the gigantic figure of the man whom Americans ever since he suffered so deeply and strove so mightily in their behalf have come to honor as the "Father of His Country." If for no other reason than to show by contrast the greatness that was George Washington's that story should become a familiar one to Americans of the present day and of generations yet to come.

The First Million

By JACK WOODFORD

(Copyright.)

FUNNY about people who seem shiftless. Sometimes I think they're just laughing at the world. That they see, perhaps, something that the rest of us don't see. I always used to think that the shiftless people were that way because they couldn't be any other way, even if they wanted to. But there was Archie McDonald.

We went to school together. Grammar school, high school. . . Archie never seemed to care a whoop whether he made his grades or not. Usually, in fact, he didn't. A big, lumbering blond fellow. You'd have gotten irritated at him, except for that grin of his. . . And the twinkle back of his blue eyes which always made you feel, a little vaguely, that he must have a joke on you. . . Though you didn't mind his having the joke—whatever it was.

He didn't go on to college, and I didn't see much of him for four years. . . and then, one day, he dropped into the office where I had gone to work a year after leaving college. He didn't look the same. He'd come up, he said, on account of a girl. She had left home and gone to the city. He had followed. He was persuaded that she cared a little for him, and he was mad about her. He asked me out to dinner with them that evening. Asked me to suggest a good place.

I picked out a quiet little cabaret not far from the hotel where he was stopping.

Vera, the girl, was sufficient excuse for a mild case of insanity. Tiny little thing, with snapping brown eyes and blond hair. I could see that she did care something for him from the way she looked at him. Probably, I reasoned, she had refused him because of his shiftlessness.

At the cabaret there was a fairly good male voice. Because of the size of the place, perhaps, the man sang through a megaphone. I saw Vera watching the man closely. Singing evidently was a thing that got to her. I saw Archie watching her closely, and for the first time I saw that he was looking utterly sober and solemn. I wondered what he was thinking about when, later, he transferred all of his attention to the singer. I made a guess . . . but as I found out afterward I was just ten million miles away.

I didn't see anything of the pair for about a month, and then one day I got a call from Vera. She had the strangest request to make that I ever heard.

"Would you mind, awfully," she asked, "escorting me to that same cabaret tonight . . . Archie told me to 'phone you . . . he was too busy to—don't know what he's doing. At any rate, he will be singing there tonight."

Of course, after that, wild horses couldn't hold me back. Archie! Singing! Archie who had a voice like a combined fog horn and file . . . the most awful singing voice anyone ever heard.

I picked up Vera in a taxi at half-past nine and we went to the cabaret. Got a seat near the front. We were just in time. The announcer was giving a spiel.

"The only voice that equals Caruso," he was prattling, "will favor us with several selections tonight." There was a general laugh. And then Archie came out upon the stage. He didn't look at all bad in full dress. There was even a distinguished air about him. This, I thought, would be rich! Vera, seated next to me, was watching, with mouth agape.

Archie put up his megaphone and started to sing. The room quieted down. I could feel the hairs on my head grow prickly. Never, since hearing Caruso himself, had I heard such a voice.

There was encore after encore. And always the same perfect command, the same flawless tones. There was only one explanation, I told myself: I was going insane. Vera looked as though she were positively sure she had Archie, at last, walked off the stage. We met him at the rear door and all bundled into a cab.

"Archie," I began, "you're—"

"Wait," he broke in. "It wouldn't be good sportsmanship to fool an old pal. It will all be in the papers tomorrow."

"Of course it will . . . your voice—"

"I haven't got any more voice than a rabbit. But Vera here is worth a million, so I had to make a million to get her."

"And you learned to sing that well, in so short—"

"Don't be absurd. That was Caruso singing. Records, off stage; reproducer inserted in the megaphone. Contact points on the heels of my shoes . . . tiny wires along my hand, running down my sleeve. Plates in the floor for contact with my heels . . . but the special device for purifying and clarifying the stepped-up records is my own. That's where the million comes in. Tomorrow . . . you'll see, in the paper. Now that that's over, Vera and I can get married and loaf for the rest of our lives, can't we, Vera?"

"It wasn't fair," she objected, "to make a million so easily. Think of all the fun we've missed making it."

"Can you beat a woman!" mourned Archie. "That's why Americans all work themselves to death . . . the women."

HOW TO LONGER

By JOHN CLARENCE FUNK

A. M. S. D.

Director of Public Health Education, State of Pennsylvania.

Super-Heat Versus Health

DOWN in little America the Byrd exploration party was compelled for many months to "dig in." With the thermometer forty degrees below zero, cold was a real enemy that had to be met with vigorous opposition.

But winter weather on the North American continent, except in a comparatively few localities, seldom calls for the necessity of taking drastic measures against it.

In spite of this fact, there are thousands who seem to think that freezing weather justifies stepping up indoor temperature to a mid-summer torridity and then follow this action by complaining about the "nasty cold weather" outside.

In the first place, winter cold is anything else but "nasty." Quite otherwise, it is extremely invigorating and healthy. However, only the persons who daily make it their practice to walk in it for a mile or two or are compelled to work outside, will ever appreciate this fact. One thing is certain. Winter's outdoor advantages will be entirely lost to the person who coddles himself in a super-heated office or home.

Then, too, colds, which are oftentimes the forerunners of that first-class slayer pneumonia, can frequently be traced to the hothouse temperatures habitually maintained indoors during the more severe months.

Those sensible persons who keep their dwelling and business places at seventy degrees and use humidifiers so that the atmosphere does not become too dry, will, in all likelihood, not be receiving many flowers that are sent to the foolish summer-winter heat type of individuals. But if the prerequisite for receiving a bouquet is a serious illness or a funeral, who wants flowers anyway?

The issue is a clean cut one. Super-heat versus health. Which do you choose?

"Service" and the Colon

OLD-fashioned muscle-developing and sweat-producing energy no longer occupies the prominence in daily existence as it formerly did. It is quite plain that so-called "service" has had something to do with the situation. Laundries or electric machines do the washing and ironing, the restaurants and food products manufacturers do the cooking, the taxicabs do the walking and the telephone takes an immobile army almost anywhere without moving it from the spot. All very wonderful, very grand, very progressive—and very soft!

However, if people better understood the inner workings of their anatomy, they might perhaps develop a more energetic attitude toward it.

Many, many years ago the human body was constructed on a certain plan. And since that time there has been no change either in its form or its requirements. Exercise was one of the original essentials and therefore still is exceedingly important.

One of the penalties of bottling activity is a lazy colon. And one of the most popular methods of relieving this unhealthy situation is by means of the laxative pill—a poor substitute indeed for muscle activity.

No person can positively object to modern "service." It takes the sting of drudgery out of life and makes the day just that more enjoyable. But to become so enamored of "service" as to eliminate daily exercise and to use laxative pills in its place, is one of the most effective ways of shortening one's days.

With roughage such as greens, cereals and other "ash" producing foods acting as brushes upon the intestines, and a regular shaking up of the body by exercising it, "service" and the colon will serve you splendidly.

Scot Had Traditional Inclination to Thrift

A Brockton doctor brings this one sack from Rhode Island where he attended a conference at which there was a discussion on financing hospitals as regards the amounts contiguous towns should pay.

One of the towns bordering Providence seems to have solved its financial problems, it was pointed out, by having a Scotsman on its board of selectmen. His eyes for thrift was shown to the assembled doctors in an interesting report.

The Scotch selectman received a call from a woman who sought town aid for part payment of a bill incurred at Rhode Island hospital when she was obliged to submit to an emergency operation.

The canny Scot let his eyes roam over her apparel. Then he turned and asked:

"Did you buy those — overshoes?" mentioning a make on which a patented slide is used.

"Yes, I did; I can't take any chances after such an ordeal," the woman replied.

"You could have bought ordinary overshoes with clasps, or even a pair of rubbers and saved half the amount."

Surprised by such a comment the woman left in a huff. Until she returns the requested aid is being held in abeyance.—Brockton Enterprise.

Today Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative. Millions of people never think of using anything else when they're constipated, head achy, bilious, feverish or weak; when breath is bad, tongue coated, or they're suffering from nausea, gas, or lack of appetite or energy.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made today according to the original formula, from herbs and other pure ingredients. It is pleasant-tasting; thorough in the most obstinate cases; gently effective for women and children. Above all, it represents a doctor's choice of what is safe for the bowels.

Girl at the Top in Health Test

Millions of boys and girls all over the world, thousands of them right here in the West are being restored to health and strength by the purely vegetable tonic and laxative known as California Fig Syrup and endorsed by physicians for over 50 years.

Children need no urging to take it. They love its rich, fruity flavor. Nothing can compete with it as a gentle, but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It gives tone and strength to the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord. It stimulates the appetite, helps digestion.

A Kansas mother, Mrs. Dana Allgire, 610 Monroe St., Topeka, says: "Bonnie B. is absolutely the picture of health, now, with her ruddy cheeks, bright eyes and plump but graceful little body and she stands at the top in every health test."

Much of the credit for her perfect condition is due to California Fig Syrup. We have used it since babyhood to keep her bowels active during colds or any children's ailments and she has always had an easy time with them. She always responds to its gentle urging and is quickly back to normal.

Ask your druggist for California Fig Syrup and look for the word "California" on the carton so you'll always get the genuine.

Might Have Continued Talking "On Other Hand"

The Jews and Irish are targets for many a joke, with the Scotch a close second. Or maybe it's vice versa.

Cliff Edwards and I simply couldn't decide the question at luncheon recently, says the Hollywoodian in Film Fun. While on the subject we swapped many a story about all the nationalities concerned. One of Cliff's, which I believe too good to pass up, is the one about Jackie, a young Jewish lad, who was courting Rosie, a beautiful belle.

Jackie had one arm about her and with the other was gesticulating as was his custom.

"Rosie, I love you! I love you!"

And wishing to further impress her with his sincerity, he added, "I love you even better than my business!"

But even so gallant a statement as that apparently did not satisfy Rosie, for she asked, "Is that all, Jackie?"

"Oh, no," he insisted, with a befitting gesture, "on the other hand, there's a lot more I could say."

Super Locomotive

An experimental locomotive designed to work at a pressure of 900 lbs. to the square inch—compared with a previous maximum for the British Isles of 350 lbs.—and to draw expresses of nearly double the weight of the present trains from London to Scotland, is being built at Glasgow for the L. M. S. Railway company. Steam, superheated in a drum, which is really a boiler inside another boiler, will be used in one cylinder at 900 lbs. pressure, then mixed with steam from a low pressure boiler working at a pressure of 250 lbs. The engine is of the three-cylinder compound type.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Naval Parley Getting Down to Business—Spain's Dictator Resigns.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MOVING slowly and not very surely toward their goal, the delegates to the five power naval conference in London spent another week mainly in private conversations designed to develop national programs, some radio addresses and one plenary session. The correspondents made such a fuss about being excluded that room was provided for a number of them at the session and the others "listened in" by microphone.

At the meeting on Thursday the delegates told something about the progress they had made toward an agreement on preliminaries. Prime Minister MacDonald had had talks with the French, Italian and Japanese, and Dino Grandi of Italy had been pressed to agree that Mussolini's proposal for the immediate establishment of ratios should be examined later. Explanation was given by Mr. Gibson of the Franco-American compromise between global tonnage and category theories of measurement of fleet strengths which was alluded to in these columns last week. The agreement is based on a maximum of transfer tonnage yearly from one category to another, and it was understood that a percentage of one-sixth of the total of any category might be accepted as the amount of tonnage possible to transfer. The matter was referred to a steering committee on motion of Mr. Stimson.

Mr. MacDonald opened the session by stating that its main purpose was to consider the agenda. He explained that there had been wide exchanges of opinions and declared "gratifying progress" had been made.

The questions proposed by the French were: First, the system of global tonnage and the French transactional proposal; second, what classifications are to be adopted; and, third, the transfer of tonnage and the conditions to be applied to such a transfer under the British system of limitation by categories.

Italy proposed that the determination of ratios should be the first step and that the determination of levels of total tonnages of the various nations should then follow.

After adjournment Mr. MacDonald, who is chairman, told the correspondents: "I think we are now within measurable distance of solving the problem which up to now has not been solvable. Mind, I do not say that we are agreed as yet, but I think the steering committee will report agreement. The differences between us are small that were you to put a candle to them, you could see through the wall of controversy." MacDonald emphasized, however, that Great Britain could not accept the global tonnage theory as now presented, saying: "There would be continued competition within categories."

IN A radio address to British and American hearers Mr. Stimson indicated that the American delegation had decided that the five-year extension of the present battleship building holiday would be the principal result of the conference. It seemed as if he had abandoned the program for cruiser reduction which was desired by President Hoover. The objectives of the United States, as outlined by Mr. Stimson, were summarized thus:

1. Parity between the British and American navies in "power and efficiency."
  2. A reduction of the battleship building programs of all naval powers by postponing the five-year replacement of present capital ships, provided for by the Washington treaty.
  3. Ending the rivalry in cruiser and destroyer building by limitation of the number and tonnage of these classes of surface craft.
  4. Abolition of submarines, or, in any event, the reduction of their number, and prohibition of their ruthless use against merchant ships.
- Reassuring his countrymen who might be alarmed by stories of crises and of the danger that the interests of the United States were being sacrificed, the secretary of state concluded: "The members of the American delegation here in one capacity or another went through the great war. Most of us have had to study national defense in the course of our official duties. We are united in believing that our national defense, our national interests, and our prospects will continue; peace and prosperity can best be served by naval limitation and its consequent good will.

"In the belief that the same agreement, which holds out such prospects for us holds equal prospects for the other nations here, we go at our task with the assurance of the support of the people of these five great nations."

ONE of the interesting points brought out by conversations among the experts attached to the various delegations is that France and Italy must have warships large enough to store wine casks for the crews, and the extra displacement and greater tonnage required for this purpose is something to be considered, especially in regard to the smaller submarines and the torpedo boats.

There were many social entertainments for the delegates during the week, and these were never without their diplomatic importance. Some of the Americans spent the week-end at Warren house, Stanmore, the handsome country place leased by Mr. Stimson. It was announced that all the delegates would meet the duke and duchess of York at a banquet and reception on February 19, to be given by the marquis and marchioness of Londonderry. Tiaras and full evening dress will be worn by the women, and court dress of black satin knee breeches and silk stockings will adorn the gentlemen.

GEN. PRIMO DE RIVERA, for six years premier and dictator of Spain, resigned last week under virtual compulsion, and the country at once went into spasms that, it was thought, might ultimately result in the abolition of the monarchy. The dictator had put up to the chief officers of the army and navy the question of his resignation and their decision being against him, he stepped down. King Alfonso gave the job of premier to Gen. Damaso Berenguer, chief of his military household and inveterate enemy of de Rivera, and two days later Berenguer announced his cabinet, in which he took the portfolio of minister of war as well as premier.

Even before he had formed the new government the forces in opposition to Berenguer were gathering in Madrid. De Rivera, evidently, believing a dictator might be down without being out, took the leadership of the Patriotic Union against his successor, and there were indications that the old charges against Berenguer in connection with the Moroccan disaster of eight years ago would be revived. There were riotous demonstrations by students and republicans which were suppressed by the troops. It was made plain that General Berenguer would rule with an iron hand until the government is firmly established. One of his first acts was the establishment of strict censorship. He announced that parliament by elections and the constitution of 1876 would be re-established. Dispatches from Madrid said it was certain Berenguer had the support of King Alfonso and the conservative leaders, but that the danger of a revolution was not exaggerated. Primo de Rivera was quoted as saying Spain still needed a dictator and that he would "continue to serve the country and give my life if necessary."

CARL BEN EIELSON, arctic aviator, and Earl Bortland, his mechanic, perished on the coast of Siberia about ninety miles east of North Cape. The wreckage of their plane was found by Pilots Crosson and Gilliam and was easily identified. At this writing searching parties are still trying to find the bodies of the unfortunate flyers. Eielson and Bortland were engaged in transporting passengers and furs from an icebound steamer. Their plane evidently crashed when traveling at high speed and the disaster was believed to be due to a faulty altimeter on which Eielson relied when a snowstorm wiped out his visibility.

SENATOR ROBINSON of Indiana, the only regular Republican on the senate's lobbying committee, was foiled in his attempt to show a connection between Senator King of Utah, Democrat, and the German dye trust. It was brought out before the committee that contributions to King's campaign fund were made by Herman A. Metz, American agent of the German monopoly, but when put on the stand Metz developed a conveniently faulty memory and said he had kept no record of those contributions. He admitted he sent a check for $1,000 to King in 1928 because he was interested in the campaign of his friend Al Smith. This check, King had asserted, was not cashed and was torn up by him. Metz is an official of the American L. G., a subsidiary of the German concern. He denounced as nonsensical the idea that the American company was organized to control the dye and chemical industry here until American competition could be smothered and the German interests come into the open. The low tariff members of the committee treated the dyestuff man with great consideration, but Chairman Caraway was so rough with A. L. Faubel, secretary of the American Tariff league, that they almost came to blows.

WET members of congress were elated by the announcement that the house judiciary committee would hold public hearings on measures to repeal the Eighteenth amendment, starting February 12. There isn't the slightest chance that any of the bills for repeal or modification will get through the house, which is overwhelmingly dry, but the opponents of prohibition in its present form will have a chance to present their arguments and facts and figures. The drys will have the same opportunity.

The wet measures before the committee include the Cochran resolution to repeal the Eighteenth amendment; the La Guardia resolution proposing an amendment to restore liquor control to the states; the Sabath, Igoe and Clancy resolutions to repeal the Volstead act; the Cochran resolution to permit 3 per cent wine and beer; and the Norton resolution calling for a national referendum on the Eighteenth amendment.

Attorney General Mitchell, in a letter to the expenditure committee of the house, gave notice that the employees of the Department of Justice must be dry by practice and profession, and that candidates for appointment must measure up to this. "I believe," he wrote, "that no man who makes a practice of drinking intoxicating liquor, or who has definite or pronounced views in opposition to prohibition, belongs in any post having directly to do with the prosecution of cases under the national prohibition act. It seems to me that such men had better seek positions in some other branch of the government or a private occupation."

CHAIRMAN LEGGE of the federal farm board and Secretary of Agriculture Hyde, speaking over the radio, strongly urged farmers to hold down the production of surplus crops in order to help in the work of restoring their prosperity. Both speakers called attention to the outlook report of the Department of Agriculture, just issued, predicting little if any increase in farm commodity prices during 1930 if overproduction continues.

Messrs. Hyde and Legge then called on President Hoover and told him that Eastern life insurance companies are complicating the farm situation by curtailing purchase of farm mortgages in the Mississippi valley states. Unless this policy on the part of life insurance companies is changed, Mr. Hyde told the President, large scale foreclosures of farm land are certain to result.

NOTABLES taken by death during the week included Bishop Charles P. Anderson of Chicago, primate of the Episcopal church of America; Mme. Emmy Destinn, Hungarian grand opera prima donna; Dr. Harry B. Hutchins, president emeritus of the University of Michigan; Mrs. Rebecca L. Felton of Georgia, the only woman ever to hold a seat in the United States senate; Rear Admirals W. W. Kimball and Thomas Snowden and Gen. David B. Gordon and Harry Taylor.

Those aches and pains you felt coming on will soon subside. Relief is almost instantaneous! Even if your cold has gained headway, and your temples throb and your very bones ache, these tablets will bring prompt relief. It is better, of course, to take Bayer Aspirin at the very first sneeze or cough—it will head-off the cold and spare you much discomfort. Get the genuine, with proven directions for colds and headaches; neuralgia, neuritis, sore throat, and many important uses.

Restless Children

Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Some nations are fatuous enough to think they can get ahead without good public schools. Animals are such agreeable friends—they ask no questions, they pass no criticisms.—George Eliot.

5218 Happy People Give up Their Secret

Suppose, strangely enough, that all of them had discovered the same way to be happy. You would feel that here, if anywhere in the world, was the secret of how to get joy out of life.

This is just what has happened during the last few weeks. We knew there were millions of people who had found the secret of happiness in the same way, and we asked them in one or two small announcements in the magazines and newspapers to tell us their story. Letters came to us from practically all over the globe.

All of them said "The secret of happiness is health."

They have found the way to Buoyant, Zestful Health, and the Joy that goes with it that it is only the internal lubrication your body needs, just like any other machine.

It sounds like a fairy tale, doesn't it, to be well and happy so easily? Well, all you need to do to find out if these people have made a real discovery is to get a bottle of Nujol today at any drug store and take it for two weeks. It costs but a few cents and it makes you feel like a million dollars. The sure way to happiness is through health.

THE DEATH ANGEL

W. C. (Daddy) Hess died suddenly while visiting his children in Oklahoma, according to a message received here Monday. His son, Oscar, and daughter, Mrs. W. H. Huffman, with their families, left immediately for Oklahoma and have not returned at the time this is written.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. M. Lowry and little daughter were called to McLean Sunday by the illness of Mrs. Lowry's father, Mr. Cousins. He was thought to be much improved Monday, but the news came Tuesday that he had passed away.

Wednesday at 8 p. m. the summons came for O. B. Everett, one of our most highly esteemed citizens, after an illness extending over a period of several months. Funeral services will be held this afternoon (Thursday) at 2 p. m. at the Church of Christ, R. R. Price officiating.

Because we are unable to get the necessary data in time for this issue, more extended articles will be published next week.

Z. T. BEATY

His family and friends suffered a distressing shock last Saturday morning when Z. T. Beaty passed away suddenly at his home in west Hedley.

Mr. Beaty had returned the evening before from a trip to Oklahoma, and seemed in his usual health. During the night he became slightly ill, apparently, but there seemed to be no cause for alarm. A little after five o'clock Saturday morning he arose and had just taken a dose of medicine when he fell and expired in a few minutes.

Mr. Beaty was born March 8, 1877, at Fayetteville, Ark. He came to Hedley from Memphis, four years ago, and has since operated the Beaty, Nail & Beaty Gin here, bought cotton, and also had farm interests. He was a good business man and shared largely the credit for making Hedley the excellent cotton market it has been the past several years. He was interested in the welfare of Hedley community, gained and held the friendship of those with whom he came in contact, and was recognized here and elsewhere as one of the leading citizens of this section.

Funeral services were held at the First Baptist Church Sunday afternoon, conducted by Revs. George C. Hutto, E. D. Landreth and E. H. Kennedy. The esteem in which he was held was attested by the great throng that gathered, many from out of town, and the profusion of beautiful flowers. A delegation from the Masonic Lodge served as escort at the service, and conducted the burial service which took place later at the Citizens Cemetery in Clarendon.

Surviving him are his widow, one daughter, Miss Irene, one son Jack, a brother, W. W. Beaty of Memphis, and three sisters, Mrs. H. E. Watson of Stephenville, Mrs. J. R. Hillman and Mrs. J. A. Sewell of this county.

The B. & B. Variety Store, under the management of Miss Laura Brinson, is a new business in Hedley, located next door to the Farmers Equity Union. The opening day is Saturday, Feb. 22nd. Read their advertisement in this paper.
