COMERCIAL CLUB TO HOLD A COMMUNITY MEET AT McKNIGHT

At the regular meeting of the Hedley Commercial Club, held Tuesday evening at the Cooper Hotel, sixteen members and one visitor were present. The attendance was good, in view of the other attractions for that evening. The visitor, Frank Simmons, was elected to membership in the Club.

Possibly the most important thing discussed was the meeting with the people of the McKnight community, to be held at McKnight Friday evening, May 16. This is a get-together affair for the purpose of discussing general problems and needs—the first of a series of such meetings to be held, in line with the Club's program of promoting community cooperation.

Geo. C. Hutto, Frank Kendall and Rainey Westberry were appointed as a committee to arrange for a program. Fifteen of the members present agreed to attend. Every one interested is cordially invited to be there.

MEMORIAL DAY PLANS OUTLINED BY LEGION

Plans for the observance of Memorial Day in Hedley by the local Post of the American Legion are being outlined by committees recently appointed, says Commander B. G. Clifton. This is to be done in cooperation with every other post in Texas in the greatest demonstration ever undertaken by the Legion in Texas as a tribute to the memory of the departed veterans of all wars who lie at rest in the cemetery of this city.

The observance of Memorial Day locally will consist of a meeting of Adamson-Lane Post at 9 a. m. at the City Hall, to which all Veterans of the World War are invited, regardless of affiliation with the Legion, as well as all Veterans of the Spanish American War, and Confederate Veterans. At 9:30 the Post members will go to the cemetery to decorate the graves of all veterans.

Since the recent rains have caused a number of graves to settle, and weeds and grass to grow, there will be plenty of work to do. The general public, and especially those interested in the upkeep and beautifying of the cemetery, are urgently requested to be present and cooperate with the Legion boys Friday, May 30.

A call meeting of the local Post will be held at the City Hall at 8 p. m. Friday, May 16 to perfect plans. Every member be there.

REV. J. W. BLANKENSHIP LAID AWAY WEDNESDAY

On Wednesday of last week the relatives and friends laid away Rev. J. W. (Uncle Billie) Blankenship, who was one of the Lord's choice spirits. The dear old man passed away at Goodnight May 5th, where he had stayed with his son, George, and family.

The funeral service was conducted at First Baptist Church of Hedley, with Pastor Geo. C. Hutto and Pastor J. M. Dyar of Goodnight in charge, after which the body was laid away in the Rowe Cemetery.

Brother Blankenship lived in the Hedley community for a number of years, and some of his friends here have been intimately acquainted with him for forty or fifty years. The common expression concerning him was "he was a good man." Some of those who have known him longest say they have never heard anyone speak a harmful word of him. Some thirty years of his life was spent in preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ. For a number of years before his death he did not preach because of broken health. But never did he fail to reflect the life of Christ whom he loved supremely. His life was such as to gain the abundant entrance into the Heavenly Home to which he has gone.

James William Blankenship

was born in Georgia March 25, 1849, and passed out of this life May 5, 1930. He leaves behind four sons, all of whom are splendid Christian men, and one daughter by his first wife. Their loss is Heaven's gain. Though having passed on, his life will continue to bear fruit in the lives of relatives and acquaintances. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Geo. C. Hutto, Pastor.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Mr. Stimson Returning With Naval Treaty—Fight on It Due in Senate.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
SECRETARY OF STATE STIMSON and his colleagues in the London naval conference sailed for the United States Wednesday bringing with them a certified copy of the naval treaty which the senate will soon be asked to accept or reject. The treaty was signed on Tuesday by the representatives of the five powers concerned, the ceremony taking place at the final plenary session of the conference in the Queen Anne drawing room of St. James' palace. Prime Minister MacDonald, Mr. Stimson, Aristide Briand, Reijiro Wakasuki and Admiral Soriani all spoke at some length and then affixed their signatures to the momentous document. The conference then was adjourned, with the way left open for its resumption when and if France and Italy can be brought into the full treaty by diplomatic negotiations.

Though the results of the three months of work in London fell far short of the hopes of those who sponsored the parley, they are by no means small. The treaty, though signed by all five powers, is in the main a three power pact between the United States, Great Britain and Japan by which those nations agree to limit the tonnage of all classes of fighting ships, America is to scrap three battleships, England five, and Japan one. The sections of the treaty adhered to by France and Italy provide for a five-year holiday in battleship building, prescribe rules of submarine warfare and relate to less important phases of disarmament. The compromise reached between the French global and the British and American categorical methods of limiting tonnage was omitted from the document but will be transmitted to the League of Nations for use by its preparatory committee on disarmament.

That the treaty would not have an easy time getting through the senate was assured when the plans of Senator Hale of Maine, chairman of the naval affairs committee, became known. He is leading the opposition and in his first attack on the pact will charge that its ratification will not give the United States parity in naval ships with Great Britain during the life of the pact. He also will attack the treaty on the ground that its provisions allowing Japan an increase in cruiser, submarine, and destroyer ratio will weaken the American naval position in the Far East and lower this country's prestige in the Orient.

It was said Mr. Hale found many admirals of the navy were hostile to the treaty mainly because of limitations placed on American building of 8-inch gun cruisers and the increase in the Japanese ratio. Senator Borah, chairman of the foreign relations committee, and Senators Reed of Pennsylvania and Robinson of Arkansas, are expected to lead the fight in behalf of ratification of the pact.

REBUTTAL evidence by the wets was heard by the house judiciary committee, the principal witnesses being Pierre S. du Pont, millionaire chemical and munitions manufacturer; Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, commander of the Twenty-sixth division, A. E. F.; Miss Elizabeth Harris, representing the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform, and Dr. Clarence F. Buck, secretary of the Federal Dispensary-Tax Reduction League. Mr. du Pont presented arguments and statements designed to refute the claims of the dries that the country's prosperity in recent years has been due mainly or in any marked degree to prohibition. General Edwards bitterly attacked the prohibitionists for putting through the Eighteenth amendment while the soldiers were overseas, told the bad results of drying up the military reservations as a preliminary experiment and gave facts and figures showing the excellent behavior of the American troops in France where they were permitted to drink wines and beer. Declaring that "temperance" was his objective in coming from his farm in Westwood, Mass., to talk to the committee, he described prohibition as "the most intemperate thing that exists."

BEFORE another committee, that of the senate on lobbying, the liquor issue also was dominant. Henry H. Curran, president of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, had been summoned to tell of the activities of the officials of that organization, and he proved a very lively witness. In his first day's testimony he predicted the development of a new national party made up of the wet elements of both the Republican and Democratic parties, the platform for which already has been written by Dr. Samuel H. Church, president of the Carnegie Institute of Technology. He said Pierre du Pont has endorsed the proposal and has said the new party will be successful. As for lobbying, Mr. Curran freely admitted his association took part in the campaigns in Wisconsin and Illinois for repeal of the state liquor laws, but said he didn't see what that had to do with "lobbying in and around Washington," which is the subject of the committee's inquiry and of which he declared the association had not been guilty.

Next day Senator Robinson of Indiana came to bat with sensational charges that Curran's association had "lobbied with members of the United States Supreme Court." He produced letters written by T. W. Phillips, Jr., Republican gubernatorial aspirant in Pennsylvania and a director of the association, to Justice Stone and the late Justice Sanford, and denounced them as "the most amazing thing I ever heard of."

Three hundred delegates representing the hundred thousand members of the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform held a conference in Cleveland, Ohio. A platform calling for repeal of the Eighteenth amendment was adopted, and Mrs. Charles Sabin of New York, founder of the organization, was elected its first president.

POSTAL substitution leases are about to be investigated by a special senate committee, and at least one of them already is being probed by the federal trade commission. It is predicted that the inquiries will turn up a scandal rivaling the Teapot Dome affair. Rumors involve the names of high post office and other government officials in an alleged conspiracy that is said to have netted the government of millions of dollars and taken the life savings of thousands of innocent investors throughout the country.

NOMINATION of Judge Parker of North Carolina to be an associate justice of the supreme court was rejected by the senate judiciary committee, and the matter goes to the floor of the senate. The vote to report adversely on the nomination was 10 to 6. The negro issue caused the defection of three administration Republicans and the opposition of organized labor accounted for the votes of the radicals on the committee.

THREE hundred and eighteen inmates of the Ohio state penitentiary at Columbus lost their lives in one of the worst holocausts of recent years, and the pity of it is that not one of them need have died if the cell doors had been unlocked promptly. At least, that is the statement of A. E. Nice, fire chief of Columbus. Where the blame is to be placed will be determined by an official inquiry.

The fire started, apparently, from a short circuited wire and spread with great rapidity, and most of the victims perished in locked cells. The other prisoners, numbering many hundreds, being freed, helped the firemen and guards in rescue work and some of them performed notable acts of heroism. Warden P. E. Thomas said at the investigation of the disaster that he did not provide general fire protection at the prison because the Columbus fire companies could reach there in two minutes, and that he did not go inside the walls to the scene of the fire because he had given orders and expected them to be carried out. The penitentiary, like most others in the country, was terribly overcrowded; in addition, the buildings were poorly constructed and not fire-proofed.

COLONEL LINDBERGH, accompanied by his wife, put himself on the front page again by a record-breaking flight from Los Angeles to New York in his new Lockheed Sirius low wing monoplane. With one stop at Wichita for refueling, the Lindberghs made the trip in 14 hours, 45 minutes and 32 seconds. The flight was unique in that it was made at altitudes ranging from 14,000 to 15,500 feet, the colonel's idea being to demonstrate that express and passenger plane service can be greatly speeded up if the planes fly in the higher reaches where the air is thinner and the resistance less. Mrs. Lindbergh shared the honors with her husband, for she acted as navigator throughout the flight and at times handled the controls.

AMONG the victims of airplane accidents were two noted men. Count Henri de la Vaulx de Paris, president of the International Aeronautical federation, and three companions were electrocuted at Jersey City when their plane ran into a power cable in a fog. Maj. Lionel M. Woolson, army air reserve, chief aeronautical engineer of the Packard Motor company and inventor of the Packard Diesel aircraft engine, and two companions were killed near Attica when their Diesel motored plane crashed into a hillside during a blinding snowstorm. They were taking the plane to New York for exhibition in the aircraft show. Major Woolson designed the motor used by Commander Rogers in his flight to Honolulu, the X-type motor for Lieut. Al Williams' racing plane two years ago and the engines of the navy dirigible Shenandoah.

WITH Gates W. McGarrath of New York as president, Leon Fraser as deputy president and Pierre Quenay as general manager, the bank for international settlements at Basel, Switzerland, was fully organized and ready for work. The directorate decided that the issue of shares of stock of the bank should take place on the eighth day after ratification of the Young plan by Great Britain and Italy. On that day the new scheme of handling German reparations becomes officially operative. The directors decided to enter into trust agreements with Hungary, Bulgaria, and Czechoslovakia to handle the collection of their reparations. Mr. McGarrath was empowered to open banking accounts whenever he pleases if the local and central banks do not object.

CHICAGO is really trying to rid itself of the gangsters who infest the city and who have given it such a malodorous reputation. Last week the Chicago-crime commission listed the 25 men whom it considers the worst of the lot, labeling them "public enemies" and asking the police to treat them accordingly. Police Commissioner Russell promised that he would co-operate in harassing them and that they would be arrested whenever they appeared on the streets. There was no news in the list. Every one of the men named is notorious and his misdeeds well known to all readers of the Chicago newspapers. If the crime commission could see its way to printing the names of the corrupt politicians and disreputable lawyers with whose protection and aid the gangsters operate, the crime situation in Chicago might be cleared up more speedily.

REVOLT of the Nationalists of India against British rule is becoming more serious daily, and has passed beyond the "passive resistance" advocated by Mahatma Gandhi. There have been bloody riots in various quarters, and at Chittagong the insurgents raided the arsenal. The authorities now are making free use of the military forces and many natives have been killed as well as some soldiers. The revolt has spread over the entire Indian peninsula, outbreaks being reported in Karachi, on the Arabian sea; Chittagong, near Burma; Bombay, a thousand miles southwest; Calcutta and Madras, and late last week at Peshawar, on the northwest frontier.

DILLARD FOR ATTORNEY

The Informer is authorized to announce R. J. Dillard as a candidate for the office of County Attorney of Donley county, subject to the action of the Democratic primaries in July.

Mr. Dillard has been a resident of Donley county for the past eleven years. He is a graduate of Washington and Lee University of the Class of 1904 and actively engaged in the practice of the profession for eighteen years. This is the first time he has ever offered for any office. He is fully qualified to discharge the duties of the office, has no political debts to pay to anyone, and believes in a just and impartial enforcement of the law. Mr. Dillard invites investigation of his fitness for the office, and will appreciate your support of his candidacy.

W. B. Morgan of Windy Valley was in town Monday after some garden seed. He says the valley lived up to its name Saturday, the wind blowing the seed he had planted clear out of the ground. And what made him mad was that the same wind blew a perfectly good chew of tobacco out of his mouth. He also reports a freak at the O. S. Lyons home in the form of a four legged chicken. He denies that he swallowed that chew of tobacco and got "addled," so we're printing this as facts.

A TRIBUTE TO UNCLE BILLIE BLANKENSHIP

I deem it a genuine pleasure to have intimately known J. W. Blankenship for some fifty years. I knew him during prosperity, and knew him when poverty-stricken. More than once he was put to the real test in life, but always proved himself to be true.

For many years Uncle Billie and I were associated together in the Lord's work in Wise and Jack counties. Before he became a preacher he was one of those old time New Testament exhorters, and did some effective work. Then for a number of years he was a faithful preacher of the Gospel. He had a compassionate heart, and was very effective in soul winning. He made many sacrifices in the Lord's work because he loved it. Time and again he rode horseback long distances to meet an appointment or be at a meeting. On one occasion he and I rode horseback eighty miles to be at an associational meeting. As pastor and missionary he was untiring and a hard worker. I was while missionary of Jackboro Association that while working very hard in a meeting, he had a physical breakdown.

The outstanding thing about our beloved Brother Blankenship was his life. No one, whether saved or unsaved, ever questioned his life, and everyone who knew him loved and admired him. I want in these closing words to appeal to all who knew "Uncle Billie" to pattern after the life he has lived among us. Let his God be your God. Give yourself over into the Lord's hands that your life may be, as was his, a blessing wherever you go.

A. G. Nipper.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Beginning next Sunday morning the Sunday school will begin at 9:45 instead of 10:00 o'clock. These long days should enable everyone to be there on time. If necessary get up just fifteen minutes earlier in order to be on time. Let's have a great attendance at the appointed time. Every teacher is urged to remember the change in time of meeting.

The pastor will have as his morning theme "Breaking New Land for the Lord."

All B. Y. P. U. s will meet in the basement Sunday evening, at 7:15. All like the new arrangement much better than it has been heretofore. We have two Junior, one Intermediate, and one Senior Union now, led by the following: Mrs. Miller, Miss Faye Cooper, Mrs. E. T. Watkins and Miss Loretta Moore. Let's have a great company in the Unions next Sunday.

Preaching Sunday evening at 8:15. Pray for a great evangelistic service.

Mid week service Wednesday evening at 8:15.

Famous AMERICAN MOTHERS

Sarah Bush Lincoln

Nancy Hanks Lincoln Monument

Mary, the Mother of Washington

Mary Ball Washington Monument

"Mother Town" Tablet Harrodsburg, Ky.

ON MAY 11 of this year is Mother's day, a day for honoring our mothers, not only those who are here to receive our love but also those who are no longer with us. It is also a day for paying tribute to those mothers of the past who gave to a nation its great men. In virtually every case the fame of their sons has so far transcended their own that they are but little known, even though those sons have been the first to acknowledge their indebtedness to their mothers for whatever elements of greatness they themselves possessed.

Such was the case with the first great American, George Washington, and his mother, Mary Ball Washington. In an address to "the Worshipful Mayor and Commonalty of the Corporation of Fredericksburg" in 1790 he thanked them for the "honorable mention which is made of my revered mother, by whose maternal hand (early deprived of a Father) I was led to manhood." When she died in 1789 and Congress passed resolutions of sympathy, his reply contained this tribute to her: "I attribute all of my success in life to the moral, intellectual and physical education which I received from my mother."

Even though that statement is closely akin to Lincoln's famous tribute to his mother, "God bless my mother. All that I am or hope to be I owe to her." It is doubtful if there was the warmth of feeling in Washington's words that there were in Lincoln's. For the truth of the matter is that there was never the close mother-and-son attachment between George Washington and Mary Ball Washington that there was between Abraham Lincoln and Nancy Hanks Lincoln, or even between the Great Emancipator and his stepmother, Sarah Bush Johnston Lincoln.

Left motherless at the age of thirteen, Mary Ball was married to Augustine Washington at twenty-two and gave the name of George to her first-born in honor of her guardian and girlhood benefactor, Maj. George Eskridge. That she was a stern parent seems to be the unanimous verdict of all of the early Washington biographers. Of her, Lawrence Washington of Chotank, once said: "I was often there with George—his playmate, schoolmate and young man's companion. Of the mother I was ten times more afraid than I ever was of my own parents. She awed me in the midst of her kindness, for she was indeed truly kind. I have often been present with her sons, proper tall fellows, too, and we were all as mute as mice; and even now, when time has whitened my locks, and I am the grandparent of a second generation, I could not behold that remarkable woman without feelings it is impossible to describe. Whoever has seen that awe-inspiring air and manner, so characteristic in the Father of His Country, will remember the matron, as she appeared when the presiding genius of her well-ordered household, commanding and being obeyed."

Because she was a stern parent, it has pleased some biographers of Washington to paint her as a Spartan mother. But this role did not include sending him forth to war with the classical injunction about "returning home with your shield or upon it." For we have the evidence of George Washington Parke Custis that she had two great fears, one of war and the other of lightning, and the evidence of contemporary documents that she persistently discouraged Washington in his military ambitions. Much of the latter has been brought to light by a modern biographer, Rupert Hughes, whose honest effort to learn and present the whole truth about Washington has brought down upon him so many accusations of being a deliberate idol-smasher since the first volume of his life of Washington was published by William Morrow and company four years ago.

In that volume he says of Mary Ball Washington, "While she has been the victim of almost as much defecation as George—she has been set next to the mother of Christ—she seems to have been a terrifyingly strict mother, and not to have shared George's ideas of rebellion. . . . Few women have ever had such rhetoric of adulation heaped upon them, and Washington is quoted as saying that he owed all he was to his mother. But it is a cruel truth that she was chiefly remarkable as a very human, cantankerous old lady who, from being a fond taskmaster in her early motherhood, evolved into a trial for everybody.

"These are the abundantly supported facts, and there is no excuse for the maudlin perversion of the truth; yet the picturesque little old woman struggling with unusual hardships and her own traits should have all the sympathy in the world. It cannot be comfortable to be the mother of an arch-rebel."

In a later volume he says of her: "She was a difficult mother, though he was a devoted son. . . . Mary's name appears incessantly in Washington's account books and diaries. He took good care of her business for her, visited her with filial regularity, and paid her profound respect, saying at the last: 'I attribute all of my success in life to the moral, intellectual and physical education which I received from my mother.'" So, even though we cannot think of Washington's mother as an outstanding example of the warm, gentle mother-love which we associate with the idea back of Mother's day, surely the result of the "moral, intellectual and physical education" which she contributed to the making of the great character that was the Father of His Country should be enough to insure for Mary Ball Washington the lasting gratitude of this nation.

While there do not exist, and probably never have, any such contemporary records, as in the case of Washington and his mother, to show the closeness of the bond between Nancy Hanks Lincoln and the son that was born to her on February 12, 1809, yet there is a wealth of tradition, reliable enough to warrant its acceptance, about the tender and deep love that was theirs. One of the leading Lincoln scholars, Dr. William E. Barton, has aptly called her "a backwoods madonna" and in his book, "The Women Lincoln Loved," published by the Bobbs-Merrill company, he presents these glimpses of mother and son:

Southern Indiana was then a wild region, and the settlements back of the Ohio river were few and sparse. There were at first no regular church services, no physicians, no schools. Perhaps Thomas Lincoln did not regret the absence of schools so much as Nancy did. There is no reason to believe that he opposed such education as his children were able to secure, but apparently the mother was more intent on the securing of an education for her children than was the father.

Abraham Lincoln was old enough now to look with more possibility of appreciation on this mother of his, and to estimate somewhat her qualities. She was now approaching the age of thirty-five. She was above medium height and had a slight stoop as though predisposed to consumption. She weighed about a hundred and thirty pounds. Her complexion was dark, and her face was thin and sallow. Her forehead was unusually high, and all her relatives commented on this feature of her appearance as belonging to and exhibiting her intellectual nature. She was usually cheerful, but her face in repose was sad. At times she displayed a marked tendency to mirth, but she had moods of melancholy.

Abraham had a boy's limitation of judgment; perhaps he did not appreciate these qualities so fully in his youth as he did later, but we have no reason to suppose that he was wholly blind to them. She was a good mother to him, and he knew it. She was ambitious for him, and desired that he should have the opportunities which both she and her husband had missed.

He loved his mother while she lived, and he loved her memory afterward. It was a pathetic memory, and had in it elements concerning which he was properly reticent; but as to his inheritance through her of the qualities which he deemed to be some of the best within him, he spoke with deep feeling. "God bless my mother. All that I am or hope to be I owe to her." Although in this utterance, her son spoke of the mental traits he thought himself to have inherited from her, rather than her direct influence over him, it was of her mind and character he spoke when he said that however unpromising her early surroundings might have been "she was highly intellectual by nature, had a strong memory, accurate judgment, and was cool and heroic."

If Abraham Lincoln received from his mother a rich heritage of qualities which contributed to his greatness, that greatness also owes much to another woman who bore the name of Lincoln. She was Sarah Bush Johnston, widow of a Daniel Johnston, a Kentucky pioneer, whom Thomas Lincoln married in 1819. Already the mother of three children, marriage added to her responsibilities that of the rearing of Tom Lincoln's motherless son and daughter. Of her Barton writes:

Sally Bush was not slow to discover in her new son qualities which were not present in the son who was of her own flesh and blood. With no word of disparagement of her own boy, she never failed to praise and encourage Abraham. The time had come when Thomas Lincoln and his son did not understand each other any too well. The boy had shot up marvelously in stature, and the changes of adolescence wrought in him unaccountable transformations. He became dreamy and at times unsocial. There were within him the stirrings of strange ambitions which did not please his father. . . . Thomas Lincoln now and then became angry at his boy's perverseness.

In this situation the mother often understands the boy when the father does not. This fact is the basis of much silly sentimentality, and has become the occasion of a most unjust disparagement of fatherhood and a flabby and half-hypocritical adulation of motherhood. But the experience of the Lincoln household is not unique. Blessed is the boy who at such a time has a mother who understands him and is able to express a sympathy which the father perhaps does not know how to define or perhaps even to think necessary.

Such sympathy Abraham Lincoln found in his new mother. She encouraged his reading, and persuaded Thomas Lincoln to look upon it with favor. Sally Lincoln saw this raw-boned lad outstrip her own son, and was not jealous, but encouraged Abraham to persevere. So far as we have any data to serve as the basis of correct judgment, her influence on him was wholly good.

Year in and year out, through the long period of his late boyhood and young manhood, Abraham Lincoln saw and admired and loved this handsome, curly-haired new mother of his, and he carried into life a finer ideal of womanhood for what he discovered in her.

But great as was the contribution of these two pioneer mothers, who bore the name of Lincoln to the building of the nation, they were by no means the only ones of their type who had a hand in that. In a little park in the city of Harrodsburg, Ky., stands a massive granite boulder upon which is a bronze tablet bearing these words: "Erected by the Woman's Club of Harrodsburg, honoring the Mother Town of Kentucky, founded June 16, 1774, and remembering the First Mothers of the West to enter the wilderness: Mrs. Daniel Boone, Mrs. Richard Fagan, Mrs. Hugh McGary, Mrs. Thomas Denton. A tribute from womanhood of the present to womanhood of the past. June 16, 1926."

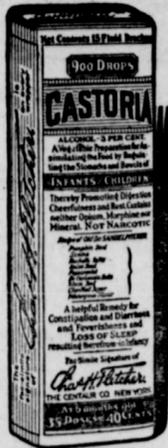

The erecting of monuments to the pioneer mother has become a frequent occurrence in recent years in many parts of the country. Some of them are great statues which show what manner of women were these who pushed the frontier ever westward. But there are those who say that no more appropriate monument to the pioneer mother was ever erected than that which stands in Harrodsburg—its severe simplicity telling of the simplicity of their lives, its rugged granite and enduring bronze bespeaking those qualities which only the wives of a race of wilderness-breakers and the mothers of a race of nation-builders have.

When BABIES are upset

Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

Tree Freak
Howard L. Cox, of Tulare, Calif., has discovered a phenomenon of nature in a locust tree in the Tulare city park. Growing out of the tree is an almond sapling. The shoot apparently was started by an almond being tossed into the crotch of the tree and the seed later taking root. The sapling is about eight feet above the ground.

Household oil must do 3 things, say experts

Household oils that merely lubricate do only half the job, say lubrication experts. Locks and hinges, sewing machines, electric fans, vacuum cleaners, lawn mowers, washers—all household devices are constantly gathering dirt and rust when not in service. To get best results one should use an oil that cleans and protects as well as lubricates. Unlike ordinary oil, 3-in-One is a blend of high grade animal, mineral and vegetable oils, so it does these three things as no other oil can. 3-in-One Oil costs more to make than ordinary oil, but it costs much less to use. It is cheapest in the long run, for it will save you many dollars on repairs and replacements of expensive household equipment.

Don't be satisfied with anything but the best. Get the old reliable 3-in-One Oil. At good stores everywhere, in 15c and 30c cans and bottles. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

Fox's Nickname Old
"Renard" designating the fox, as well as "renard," the modern French word for a fox, are taken from a celebrated medieval animal allegory called the Roman de Renard or Reynard, in which proper names were given to each beast.

Retain Your Good Looks

How frequently a woman thinks, "Am I still attractive?" How much thought and study she devotes to her looks! That's natural. The Mutiny of the Albatross

On deck, early in the evening, they heard sounds of scuffling and shouting. The voices were too far off for any of the prisoners to hear what was said. But they knew some dreadful scenes of violence were being enacted, some such scene, perhaps, as that which had ended in Hallett's murder. Mrs. Radway spoke in a level, hard voice. She addressed her remarks to Crosby Todd.

"I suppose you realize by this time, what chance we stand if Doctor Waite has been killed?"

The thought that he had gone bravely to a doom which could not be averted, and had gone from a group of people who plainly did not trust him, was horrible to her. She had always esteemed ingratitude among the blacker sins, and now she was forced to accuse herself of it. It was strange, she thought, that the only thing he had ever given her was a loaded automatic pistol. But there was no other gift so welcome to her. Images of Metzger's grinning face came unbidden. She took the weapon from a drawer and counted its six cartridges.

Bettington was alone on the upper deck. He had plenty of steam. Drunk or sober, Kenzie was a good engineer and would have no shirkers. His history was curious. He had been an engineer on many ships, plying in many seas; but always he had been obliged to serve on vessels whose engines were worn out, whose machinery would invariably be on the point of giving way. Never in all his service had he shipped on a vessel whose engines were even passably good. Then, almost miraculously, he had been picked up by a man who knew his past misfortunes, held them club-like over his head, and brought to the engine room of the Albatross. It was not drink which made Kenzie weep when he saw the vertical, inverted, compound condensing engines, which took their steam from an Almy water-tube boiler. It was unbelievable joy. His dreams were realized. He was glad that Metzger, who knew next to nothing about marine engines, left him alone. No priest in the Gothic cathedral was more reverent than Kenzie before his charge.

Sam and Metzger, flinging all care aside, started gambling. Each knew the other had money. Metzger was the better player, but he was handicapped by a certain fear of any tricky play. Sam interspersed his games with anecdotes of men he had punished dreadfully for cheating. Interruptions such as these cramped Metzger's style of play. Sam was not going to be such good picking as he hoped. Sam's favorite form of punishment, it seemed, was semi-strangulation. It was a risky punishment, Sam confessed, because in the heat of the moment one might go too far. "An' you know it in a minute," Sam said. "There's something about a guy's face whose been squeezed a bit too hard, you won't never forget."

"Dio mio!" Metzger said petulantly. "Let us talk of something else."

"Anything you say," Sam returned. "Not about?"

"There is only one subject," Metzger said; he kissed his hand airily and raised his black eyes to heaven: "Women!"

Sam reflected on this for a minute. It was not easily he shifted his base. This woman business had been settled hours ago, and he told Metzger so. They were to be kept in the fore part of the ship until Limon came in sight. It was only then that the services of the surgeon would be no longer indispensable. He chuckled heavily as he thought of the doctor's surprise.

"All in good time," Sam declared. "No use hurrying."

Metzger was annoyed when Antonio Pereira, the cook whose name was enshrined in literature, came in with a plate of the same sort of caviare sandwiches he had been used to make for Radway.

Pereira was in the mood to talk of his conquests which had ranged through many seas. Metzger, usually interested in such matters, wished only to be left alone with Sam. It was almost midnight before the cook turned in.

"There is a man like me," Metzger said. "He has no use for caution. I tell you women love that kind. He has lived, while you—" Metzger shrugged his shoulders. "Poor Sam!"

"What do you mean, 'poor Sam'?" said the other irritably. Sam was stirred to indignation. He poured forth accounts of his amours. He grew almost eloquent. But he still told his friend that his agreement with the navigator must be observed for safety's sake.

Sam allowed Metzger to lure him on deck where they sprawled luxuriously on two great wicker chairs. Metzger set out to tempt his companion. Deliberately he sought to evoke images which should banish prudence. He pointed to the silhouette of Bettington's figure against the sky-line in the distance.

"It doesn't worry me," said Metzger. "I'm all right, Sam. It's you I'm sorry for."

"Not the h—l is it?" Sam said pettishly. By this time he understood that Metzger considered him one to be pitied. The idea revolted him.

"While he's up there—and he'll be there many hours—I know my woman is all right. But what do you know about the pretty little girl with dark flashing eyes? I'll tell you. She loves Hallett's nephew. They are young. You, my Sam, are old; you are cautious, you are slow. Is she going to wait for you when younger men offer themselves? How long will it take to get to Limon? I will ask. Wait."

He came hurrying back from the bridge.

"Seven days if the steam pressure is kept up. Let us say eight days. Eight nights like this to sit up here and think about her, Sam. Dio mio! If it were for her I longed, do you think I would sit waiting, waiting?"

Sam still fought for strength to resist this tempter. But Metzger's words were firing his blood.

"You've got to wait yourself," he retorted. "I ain't the only one."

Metzger laughed in scorn. He pointed again to the man on the bridge.

"I can afford to wait," he said. "There my rival stays. There he sleeps. But you! How 'Sparks' must laugh at you, Sam!"

"I'll break his neck," Sam said, licking his thick, dry lips.

"In eight days' time. Do you hear me? That is your revenge. Is it, to give him eight days down there with her, while you wait for Costa Rica to come in sight?"

Metzger burst into a peal of contemptuous laughter. The visions that were summoned by the tempter's suggestions awoke in Sam the desire to kill.

"The door's locked," he said. "It's steel and hard to get through."

"Why give yourself that trouble? The doctor there has the key in his pocket. He'll do well enough in the chain locker." Metzger saw that his words had fired Sam at last. "Of course, if you're afraid," he added, "well, then wait till we see Limon."

For a moment Metzger feared he was to be victim to Sam's sudden flaming anger.

"Afraid of what?" he snarled.

"Of the doctor's pretending he hasn't got the key."

When Sam scrambled to his feet Metzger chuckled. His careful plans seemed likely to work out. Metzger knew Sam's strength and brutal rages. Probably the doctor had no key; this Sam would not believe; inevitably there would come a fight and he did not think any man on board had a chance against Sam. And with the doctor removed his path would be easier. For the moment he concerned himself nothing with the ultimate destiny of the vessel. Petty precautions were nothing to him in such a moment as this.

Sam wasted no time in explanations. Like Metzger, he had forgotten caution and future dangers in his rage and jealousy. Bettington knew the intruder was dangerous.

"Give me the key," Sam commanded.

"What key?" Bettington asked.

"You know d—n well. I want the key to where the women are."

"I have no key," Bettington said. Sam struck him across the mouth with the back of his monstrous hand. "You lie," he cried. "I'll have it, if I kill you."

Then, suddenly, without any preparation, Bettington struggling on deck with the enraged Sam. In a nearby chair Metzger in the moonlight watched eagerly.

Bettington dared not allow Sam to get those long simian arms about him. It was only the doctor's clever footwork and greater speed which enabled him to stem those savage rushes with continual jabs. He knew they would not win the battle for him.

He decided to change his tactics suddenly. There was a wrestling throw known as the "flying mare," which he had been shown by a Cornish miner in the Klondike years before. For its execution not only considerable strength was needed, but accurate timing was equally an essential. Sam could not have weighed less than two hundred and fifty pounds, while Bettington was some sixty pounds less.

The ferocity of Sam's attacks was astounding. When the first burst of the assault did not bring him victory, the sailor, sobering a little under the increasing pain of his bruised face, became more methodical. He saw that he must abandon this desire to beat Bettington to the deck with his flying fists and get a body hold.

It was while one of his accustomed habit channels was dammed for a moment by alcohol, and he paused for the fraction of a moment to think of a forgotten hold, that Bettington recognized his opportunity. With his right hand he seized Sam's left wrist, swung him around a little and then grabbed the sailor's right wrist while they were back to back, and then, with a mighty strain, leaned forward and flung him clear over his shoulder.

Sam fell with terrific violence, his head striking a rail. He lay there motionless, his head twisted queerly on its thick and snowy pillar. The fate he had promised others was his own.

Metzger walked quickly over and looked down at the dead man.

"He forced it on me," Bettington exclaimed. "You are witness of that. I had no key."

Metzger looked at the doctor with a singular satisfaction.

"I saw you kill him," said he, "and I shall tell the others what I witnessed." He wondered how he could turn this to his own advantage. Accustomed to lying and suspecting others of dishonesty, he did not believe Bettington's words. Of course, he had the keys and would go below to be caressed and praised by Evelyn Radway for his victory. The thought was unbearable, enraging.

Metzger's knife flashed out. Nothing should keep the key from him. But as he raised the knife Bettington's fist caught him on the temple and knocked him down. Before he could regain his weapon the doctor had tossed it into the ocean. Metzger sat up on his haunches for a few seconds; he cursed himself for leaving the revolver below.

"Your life is worth nothing," he cried angrily, clambering to his feet. "In two minutes you will be as Sam is and I shall go down and console her for your loss."

Bettington watched him race down the companion calling loudly for help. Obviously two minutes seemed a liberal computation as an estimate of the doctor's life span.

He made what haste he could to the barred door and called for instant admission. To remain outside was to be killed. To join the imprisoned four offered immediate respite, even though it might be a brief one.

Mrs. Radway opened the door; he darted inside and barred it. She looked at him in horror. He had forgotten that his face was bruised and bleeding.

A moment later there was a confused sound of shouting and a fusillade of bullets struck the steel bulkhead.

"You see how perfectly they trust me," he commented.

He turned his head to see Crosby Todd hurrying toward him.

"They were after the doctor," Mrs. Radway said.

"I should feel happier if I thought that I was the only one needed," Bettington said soberly. He lowered his voice as he saw Mary and her brother. "They are outside ravening like wolves."

"Can they get in?" Evelyn Radway asked.

"I doubt it," he said, with an air of cheerfulness. "Not tonight, anyway."

To the four he was confronting the weather seemed suddenly to have become rough. There was a perceptible difference in the motion of the Albatross.

"She isn't steering," Bettington explained. "She's wallowing in the trough of the sea, but there's no danger yet."

"Why did you leave the wheel if you are the only man capable of taking charge?" Todd demanded.

"Because a dead steersman would have been equally useless. Don't you understand that they want to kill me? I confess I don't see why, unless it is they have discovered I'm bent on helping you. First Sam came at me and then Metzger tried to knife me. I don't think they knew I had changed the course."

He saw that Mary shivered at the mention of Sam. The thought of him had given her nightmare terrors.

"What reason did they give?" Todd asked. He was still convinced that there was an effort to dupe him.

"That they wanted the keys to this part of the yacht."

Bettington turned to Mary and smiled. He had been able, after all, to do something for Tubby Uwin's girl. Not again would Sam menace her.

"Sam is dead," he told her. "Metzger is in command and swore to get help and have me killed. That's why I had to burst in here. There was something a little wistful in his tone. 'I wish I could feel I was more welcome.'"

"You don't doubt my welcome, I hope," Mrs. Radway said gently.

He looked into her eyes with something of adoration. Surely no man had ever so grievous a prospect ahead of him. Her friendship heartened him.

"Thank God," he said, "I am sure of you."

The sight stirred Crosby Todd to indignation.

"You say Sam is dead," he remarked.

"How do you know that?"

"Because I killed him," said Bettington.

CHAPTER X

Slivers to the Rescue

Of all those who made up the crew of the Albatross, none had been so thrilled with the day's happenings as Slivers. He possessed a boy's appetite for adventure. His earliest ambitions were directed toward a career of piracy, and in this, his fifth voyage, they seemed about to be realized.

Slivers had seen men die. He had crept on deck and looked, fascinated, at Sam, whose red face was white at last, and whose stubborn neck was bent at a horrifying angle. But Slivers had his doubts as to the final outcome of the struggle. Of all these men of blood and violence, he esteemed the prowess of the tall doctor most highly. Anyone who could have killed Sam with his bare hands, "he," said Slivers, thinking it over, "he's the guy for my money!"

If the amazing doctor should sally forth and overwhelm the rest, where exactly would Augustus Condon stand? That was Slivers' problem. Pirates, he had read, invariably met their doom swinging from a yard-arm over yawning black waters.

Slivers stole quietly from the door of Metzger's room and came stealthily to the one which had been so recently assaulted. Just the other side Bettington was trying to snatch some sleep; continuous tapping awoke him. Listening intently, he could hear his name spoken in a shrill treble. He threw the door open, pistol in hand, and saw Slivers.

"Ain't got nuttin' to eat, have yer?" Slivers demanded.

"No," Bettington whispered.

"I'll get some," said the boy jauntily. "Cook's in with the chief, talkin' about the skirts. Crazy about 'em. The rest is soused. They'll never get me."

He brought a ham already cooked, an Eden cheese and quantities of canned fruit and milk.

"Slivers," said Bettington, when he saw the loot, "what's the idea of helping us like this? What do you expect to get for it?"

The yard-arm, with its dangling victim, recurred. He was inspired with sudden cunning.

"If they knew, they'd kill me," he whispered. He cast about for a word.

"I'm a neutral," said Slivers.

"You're the best little neutral I ever knew," Bettington said heartily, as he looked at the provender. "Where are you going now?" He had some idea of adding the boy to his company.

"Back to hear what they're saying." He shook his head wisely. "I'll come around agen tomorrow night."

Mennonite Colony in America in Year 1662

Mennonites first appeared in America about 1662, when a band of 24, led by Pieter Cornelius Plockhoy, organized a settlement, but it was not until a century later that the cult became firmly established.

The settlement, which was one of the early plans for the occupation of the Delaware by any of the European sectarians, did not last. Plockhoy, with his 24 followers, made a contract with the Burgomasters and Regents of Amsterdam, for the founding of a colony "in any part of the district of this Colonie wherever it may please to lie, as they shall be willing to cultivate and pasture."

After adopting various rules and regulations, the colony was broken up by the English under Sir Robert Carr in 1664, and nothing whatever is known of the fate of members of the colony. It is stated that Plockhoy, the leader, and his wife, arrived at Germantown in 1694, after having wandered in the wilderness for 30 years, and were given a home by the Mennonites at that place.

To "Turn State's Evidence?" State's evidence is the evidence produced by the government in criminal prosecution. The term also applies to a person who gives such evidence.

When a person implicated in a crime voluntarily confesses his share and gives testimony that will incriminate his accomplices he is said to "turn state's evidence," namely, he becomes a witness for the state. In such cases there is generally an express or implied promise on the part of the authorities that they will not prosecute the witness who thus testifies, or that he will at least be dealt with leniently. Prosecutors do not usually promise such immunity unless there is insufficient evidence to convict the defendant without the testimony in question.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Odor After Rainfall Rain has no odor, but in falling purifies the air. Often rain is produced by electrical charges in the air, and these charges produce a gas called ozone which has a delightful fresh odor.

Crosby Todd was the first to rise. He looked with astonishment at the provisions. In his first flush of gratitude he forgot that Bettington must have opened the door and been in communication with the enemy; this was soon to seem a very suspicious action.

At the same time, in the after part of the ship Metzger and Pereira faced one another. They had fallen asleep after hours of splendid planning. They had decided with enthusiasm to slay the doctor, the wireless operator and Bob Uwin as soon as morning came.

The morning came too soon; they had been scarcely two hours asleep when Kenzie awoke them. Already they were paying the penalty of the reckless mixing of drinks. Kenzie brought an enormous pot of coffee; he wanted to talk business. "What's going to be done?" he asked.

Pereira waved an arm impatiently. He did not realize that the Albatross was rolling gently in the trough of the

"A Letter for the Doc!" Said Slivers. summer sea. He was anxious for those delights which had been assured in Limon.

"We waste time," he declared with dignity; "go as fast as you can."

Metzger sobered, saw things in a less happy light. In his mad anger toward Bettington he had forgotten that unless a competent navigator were discovered the Albatross must drift until another boat had seen her and reported her condition or proffered the help that would not be accepted. Mike could steer a course if it were set, but who was to set it?

Kenzie delivered an ultimatum. "I want to know if I'm to let my fires out or keep up steam."

"Go below," Metzger commanded. "I will let you know what is to be done."

Metzger convicted himself of gross stupidity. Why had he not applauded the surgeon for the death of Sam and so gained his whole confidence? Instead of this, his insane jealousy had cropped out. It had driven the doctor to the side of the woman he longed for. It had left the yacht without the one man who could find where shoals were and watch the charts for hidden dangers. When Slivers appeared with the omelette Metzger had decided on his course. The boy would do as a messenger to Bettington and the rest. They would hardly shoot him; if they did, little harm would be done.

He took a piece of the ship's monogrammed paper and scribbled a note. Pereira approved it and Slivers was used as the messenger.

When the cook's helper rapped at the door and, since was on a legitimate errand, dared to shout, it was Crosby Todd who cautiously peered through. Bettington was rigging up an electric stove in what had been Radway's room.

"A letter for the Doc," said Slivers. Todd drew him in and shut the door.

"Where is it?" Todd demanded.

"It's for the Doc."

"I'll give it to him," Todd snatched it from him roughly. Instinctively he felt there must be something here which would give color to his suspicions. "It's all right," he said to Slivers.

Todd did not read it until he was out of sight. His eyes grew bright. Here was the evidence he needed to convince Mrs. Radway. Now she must abandon this stubbornly held faith. Allowing a few minutes to elapse he went back to the waiting boy.

"Doctor Waite will write an answer in half-an-hour. He says he must consider the proposition. Now run away for thirty minutes, son."

Slivers' message was received in the silence of deep gloom.

"What's he mean by that?" Metzger demanded when the boy had gone.

"She will not let him leave her," Pereira said. "What else should it be?"

So busted was Bettington in wiring the little unconnected stove, that he did not notice the others were gathered in Mrs. Radway's room. Evelyn Radway knew from the triumph on Todd's face that he had some new winged barb for the doctor. She felt she had never detested anyone so much as this self-assured young man, upon whose words Mary and her brother hung.

"Mrs. Radway," Todd began, "you know our interests all lie in the same direction. In justice to us as well as yourself you wouldn't want to put confidence in anyone you knew positively was unworthy, would you?"

"Certainly not."

Texas Lady's Life Takes New Turn

"When I think of how I used to wake up morning after morning with a headache, I feel like I have just started living," says Mrs. Lawca Clooney, popular manager of the Telephone Exchange Cafeteria in San Antonio.

"I did not know what it was to be without a headache, the kind which make you weak and nervous until you tremble all over, until I heard my brother's family telling about how good Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) is. I took the first one and liked it. I have been taking them ever since. Everyone wants to know what I have taken because I am so well now."

Results like that is what makes Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) so popular. More than three million are used a day. Any druggist will tell you to use them if you suffer from sour stomach, biliousness, tight bowels, sick headaches, indigestion or rheumatism. They are like a box.

Notice of Execution Sale

The State of Texas,
County of Donley.

By virtue of an execution issued out of the District Court of Donley county, Texas, on a judgment rendered in said court on the 21st day of April, 1930, in favor of W. M. Murrell and against the said T. W. Smith, in the case of W. M. Murrell against T. W. Smith, No. 1683 in such court, I did on the 6th day of May, 1930, at 5:30 o'clock p. m., levy upon the following described tracts and parcels of land situate in the county of Donley, State of Texas, as the property of the said T. W. Smith, to wit: All that certain lot, tract or parcel of land situated in Donley county, Texas, and being a part of Section No. 44, Block C 6 Certificate No. 4 694 issued to the G. C. & S. P. Ry. Co., and being the South fifty (50) acres off the tract of land conveyed by B. L. Jenkins and wife, Maggie Jenkins, by deed of date of November 13, 1918, shown of record in Vol. 87, page 565 of the Deed Records of Donley county, Texas, and which land is more fully described by metes and bounds by deed of August 13, 1926, from Polly P. Smith and husband, T. W. Smith, to J. Sid O'Keefe, which is as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a point in the South line of said Section No. 44, 1149 4 vrs east of the S. W. corner of said Section No. 44, for the S. W. corner of this tract;

Thence North parallel with the south line of said Section No. 44, 1635 vrs to a point for the N. W. corner of this tract;

Thence East parallel with the south line of said Section No. 44, 272 6 vrs to a point for the N. E. corner of this tract;

Thence South parallel with the west line of said Section No. 44, 1085 vrs to a point in the S. line of said Section No. 44, for the S. corner of this tract;

Thence West along the S. line of said Section No. 44 272 6 vrs to the place of beginning, and containing 50 acres of land.

And on the 3rd day of June, 1930, being the first Tuesday of said month, between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m. on said day, at the courthouse door of said county, I will offer for sale and sell at public auction, for cash, all the right, title and interest of the said T. W. Smith in and to said property herein above described.

Dated at Clarendon, Texas, this 6th day of May, 1930.

Tax Payer or Tax Burden

Out of every dollar taken in for service during 1929, the utilities companies of the United States paid approximately 10 cents for local, state and federal taxes.

The utility company pays taxes on its physical properties, it pays taxes on its revenue and the right to do business. It is required to bear a very heavy burden of the cost of government in every community.

The West Texas Utilities Company is listed among the heaviest taxpayers in every city, town and community in which it operates. It is one of the largest contributors to civic progress.

SOMETHING TO EAT

A good sandwich to give the children for their luncheon is the following:

Bacon Peanut Sandwich.— Fry crisp several slices of bacon. Grind half a pound of freshly roasted peanuts, mix with a good salad dressing. Spread the bread with butter or margarine, lay on the bacon and spread one slice with the ground peanuts mixed with the salad dressing. Put together in pairs.

Fudge Shortcake.—Take one-third of a cupful of shortening, two-thirds of a cupful of sugar, one egg two-thirds of a cupful of milk, one and two-thirds cupfuls of flour, three and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Mix in the order given and bake in muffin tins twenty minutes. Serve with:

Fudge.—Take two cupfuls of sugar, four teaspoonfuls of cocoa, one cupful of milk, one-third of a cupful of sirup, one tablespoonful of butter; cook to the soft ball stage, cool and stir. Serve on the cake with a spoonful of whipped cream on top.

Orange Tea Biscuits.—Take two cupfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, four tablespoonfuls of shortening, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, three-fourths of a cupful of milk. Mix as usual, roll out and cut with a small cutter. Meanwhile allow a small cube of sugar to soak in orange juice. Press half a loaf in each biscuit before putting into the oven. Some may like the addition of a little of the grated rind to the biscuit mixture; it adds flavor.

Salmon Fritters.—Take three-fourths of a cupful of salmon, drained and flaked; to this add one beaten egg, the juice of half a lemon, one and one-half cupfuls of flour sifted with one teaspoonful of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Add a dash of cayenne. Fry by spoonfuls in deep fat and serve with tartar sauce.

When serving sliced cold chicken for luncheon or a supper dish, accompany it with sandwiches prepared with:

Chives Butter.—Take one-half cupful of butter, celery salt, paprika, onion juice, using a tablespoonful of lemon juice and two tablespoonfuls of chopped chives. Mix to a smooth paste, adding some chopped pickle or olives for further flavor if desired.

Water cress finely chopped, a teaspoonful of french dressing and one of Worcestershire sauce, a tablespoonful of onion juice, mixed with softened butter, makes a most delicious spread for sandwiches to serve with any kind of cold sliced meat.

VEGETABLES AND THINGS

When one realizes what a wealth of healthful qualities are grown in our gardens, what a comfort it is to step into them and pull a few fresh radishes or an onion or two for flavor, it would seem that everybody with a five-foot plot would try to grow some of the fresh green things. Did you ever hear anybody complain of a meal having too many vegetables? One may begin a meal with a vegetable cocktail and end it with a salad dessert. The main dishes may be vegetables, the entree and the drink if so desired.

Tomato Juice Cocktail.—Strain canned tomatoes—you know the vitamins in tomatoes are still active in the cooked vegetable. Press the pulp lightly to extract all the juice. To three cupfuls of the pulp add the juice of half a lemon, one tablespoonful of sugar, a whiff of celery salt and paprika to taste, a little pepper and salt. Put into a shaker with half as much ice and shake vigorously. Serve in cocktail glasses with tiny sandwiches of whole wheat bread.

Scalloped Egg Plant.—Cut a large egg plant into half-inch slices, pare them and place in salt water for a few minutes, then rinse and cut into cubes. Cover with boiling salted water and cook until tender. Drain well, add one small onion chopped and fried in butter, a tablespoonful each of chopped parsley and flour; cook, stirring for a few moments. Pour in a cupful of rich milk, add salt and paprika; when thick add the egg plant and turn into a buttered baking dish. Cover with buttered crumbs or dot with butter and bake to a nice brown.

Minted Carrots.—In every garden, even small ones, a bed of mint is treasured. A small root will live from year to year and it will always be ready for mint sauce or to add to juleps or punches as well as to garnish dishes. Boil young tender carrots until tender, in very little water. Add butter, sugar, a little vinegar and two sprigs of mint.

INTRIGUING HATS NOW ON VIEW; JUNIOR IS HAVING HIS DAY

Group of the Latest Hats.

OF COURSE every one of us is pleased at the revival of the vogue for wide, flattering brims, but oh, you little hat! So snug fitting, so correct, so in good taste, and so chic, so piquant, so demure, so everything that is what it would be, never will you pass out of the style picture.

Anyway, since nowadays a whole wardrobe of hats becomes a necessary luxury, come brims wide, wider, widest, or molded to the head types which fit as snugly as paper on the wall, each have their time, place and occasion in the mode.

As to le petit chapeau, about every type ever known in the history of headgear is represented in the current spring and summer displays—to be sure with variations to modernize them. Such intriguing straws, such novel fabrics as enter into their make-up! And their tones and tints—every color in the rainbow and then some!

When it comes to their styling, genius must have laid awake nights trying to think up novel ways of draping, tucking, folding and other of the multitudinous maneuverings involved in the creating of the cunning hats which are making such a fascinating showing this season.

The straws employed are of infinite variety. In this illustration, for instance, the five hats pictured register five kinds of straw.

At the top is one of those little lace straw cap-toques which flaunts a big bow at the back—just such as Paris adores. This one is gray in color. Quantities of black straw lace, also navy, beige and other colors likewise go to make up the new hats.

Horsehair braid made its advent unusually early this spring. The off-the-face brim of the hat to the left is of deed being taken seriously this season. So much so that stylists have gone so far as to stage novel fashion shows, the entire program of which is given over to exhibiting correct clothes for boys for every occasion.

For master three to eight, mother learns she can buy the cleverest jersey suits, some with berets to match. These are wonderfully practical, for the entire outfit will wash, and the colors are ever so attractive.

Of course, as the weather shows a rising temperature, fancy will turn to cool linens and cottons and rayon fabrics and make 'em or buy 'em the styles were never so cunning. Little two-piece outfits consisting of blouse and trousers which "button on" use such fetching combinations as gay printed shirtings for the waist with solid colored cotton broadcloth for the wee trousers. Ready and off for play is junior in his little suit of chambray, or perhaps printed cotton. The chief virtue of these weaves, aside from their attractiveness, being that they fancy black lace horsehair; the crown is black satin.

The modish tricorne to the right is fashioned of a tweedlike silky straw. 'Tres chic!

Centered in the group is a subtly draped toque of tricot-knit straw. Last in this collection is a charming hat of lemon-yellow silk straw. It's artfully draped-off-the-face brim is caught up at one side with a black and a yellow tassel.

Just because so much time and attention is being given nowadays to the styling of clothes for little boys, is no reason why fashions for little boys should be neglected. As a matter of fact, the sentiment is increasing among stylists to dress junior up to sister's smartness.

The matter of modes for boys in la-cunning suit like the young lad to the left in the picture is wearing. A replica in miniature, this, of the grow-up sailor suit, and there's not a little boy in the land but whose heart would beat faster and eyes shine brighter at the prospect of owning such a masterpiece in navy flannel.

Oh! it is a gay life junior will be living in the clothes for every occasion, which fashion is promoting this season. For sports wear he will be sauntering forth in a typical English blazer, such as the boy to the right is wearing. Please to take note of the gay knit tuck-in blouse, which buttons in surplice fashion. A swanky combination is this of blazer and sweater blouse. Yes, indeed, junior is surely having his day when it comes to smart fashions.

Girl at the Top in Health Test

Millions of boys and girls all over the world, thousands of them right here in the West, are being restored to health and strength by the purely vegetable tonic and laxative known as California Fig Syrup and endorsed by physicians for over 50 years.

Children need no urging to take it. They love its rich, fruity flavor. Nothing can compete with it as a gentle, but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It gives tone and strength to the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord. It stimulates the appetite, helps digestion.

A Kansas mother, Mrs. Dana Allgire, 610 Monroe St., Topeka, says: "Bonnie B. is absolutely the picture of health, now, with her ruddy cheeks, bright eyes and plump but graceful little body and she stands at the top in every health test."

Much of the credit for her perfect condition is due to California Fig Syrup. We have used it since babyhood to keep her bowels active during colds or any children's ailments and she has always had an easy time with them. She always responds to its gentle urging and is quickly back to normal."

Ask your druggist for California Fig Syrup and look for the word "California" on the carton so you'll always get the genuine.

Road to Prosperity

All the way from New York comes a new story concerning John D. Rockefeller, the multi-millionaire.

A young man asked his advice as to how best to get on in the world. "Work hard and set yourself to buy a gold watch," was the reply. "Yes," queried the listener; "and when you've bought the gold watch?" "You don't buy a gold watch," replied Mr. Rockefeller, "you buy a gemstone one and start all over again for a motor car."

"And when you've got the money for a motor car?" "Well, you remember the watch. If you're not a fool, and go on walking to business."

Qualities That Make Garden

We have seen a garden as full of interest and charm as any elsewhere, and nothing went into it but seeds and good sense and patience. Only one of these commodities can be purchased in the open market. The others come of caring enough for living beauty, for the companionship of growing things and for honest grubbing in the friendly earth. If you have the gift for these things you may also have a garden, and the neighbors will come from near and far to envy it.—Philadelphia Record.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things so often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescription product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

Notice of Sale of Real Estate

To All to Whom These Presents Shall Come, Know Ye:

That whereas on the 7th day of May 1930, there was issued out of the District Court of Donley county, Texas, in cause No. 1861, an order of sale directed to me as Sheriff of Donley county, Texas, requiring me to seize and sell all of the interests of C. J. Reed and W. S. Dyer, subject to the rental contract of Tom Bradshaw for the year 1930 all of the Northeast quarter of Section No. 115, in Block C6, in Donley county, Texas, lying about 10 miles east of Clarendon to satisfy a judgment in favor of Mollie E. Gray against C. J. Reed and W. S. Dyer for the sum of Three Thousand Fifty Six and 90/100 Dollars ($3 656 90), together with court costs in the sum of Twenty Dollars and Twenty Cents ($20 20).

And whereas I did on the 7th day of May, 1930, seize said lands and shall, pursuant to said judgment, sell the same as the law in such cases provides.

Now, therefore, know ye: That I, as Sheriff of Donley county, Texas, shall, between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m., on the first Tuesday in June, 1930, the same being the 3rd day of said month, at the court house door of Donley county, Texas, in Clarendon, at public vendue, sell all the interests of the said Dyer and Reid in and to said premises, to the highest bidder for cash.

These are therefore to require you to be each then and there present to make such bid upon said premises as you may desire so to do.

Witness my hand at Clarendon, Texas, this 7th day of May, 1930.
M. W. Mosley, Sheriff,
Donley County, Texas.
