REVIVAL MEETING TO CLOSE SUNDAY

Large congregations have attended the revival services at the Methodist Church, and Rev.
John M. Neal, Evangelist, has been bringing great messages.
He hews to the line and is very plain.

The meeting is scheduled to close next Sunday night.

Last Sunday was a great day with us, but let us make next Sunday even greater.

Sunday School, 10 a. m.

League, 7:30 p. m.

Rev. Neal will preach each day at 10 a. m. (excepting Saturday) and 8:30 p. m.

Give attention to your soul.

DONLEY COUNTY STATE BANK ROBBED MONDAY

Last Monday noon two young men entered the Donley County State Bank at Clarendon, and with drawn guns held up Cashier
Holman Kennedy, Vice President
J. L. McMurtry and Miss Graves and Mrs. Holloway, bookkeepers, demanding money. They got approximately $8,000, made the bank force get into the vault, left the bank and made their escape in an automobile.

It is said they had a young woman companion who remained in the car near the bank during the robbery.

So far as can be learned at the time this is being put into type, no clue has been obtained as to the identity of the robbers.

Curbing the Deadly Submarine

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Among the accomplishments of the recent London naval conference was one which, whatever may be the fate of the agreement reached as to other types of war vessels, probably will receive the indorsement of all the naval powers. That was the treaty which was signed there for "humanizing the submarine." The purpose of this treaty is to prevent murder on the high seas and to put an end to maritime assassination of noncombatants, such as took place during the World war. Hereafter there is to be no "stinking without a trace," for except in general engagements between men-of-war, ships will be warned before they are torpedoed.

If this treaty is accepted and lived up to by the nations, future conflicts will be free from at least one of the "horrors of war" which made the recent worldwide embroilment between the "civilized nations" one of almost unbelievable savagery, cruelty and terrorism. For it was not until 1914 that the world knew of the grim possibilities of the underwater boats and then it soon learned an unforgettable lesson. Important as were the other new developments in methods of warfare which came to the fore from 1914 to 1918, it is not too much to say, perhaps, that the submarine was the most important of all. Certainly few others had more far-reaching results.

Although to most people the idea of submarine warfare is symbolized in the U-boats with which Germany made her bid for victory—a bid which came so near to being a success—it is worthy of note that the first blow struck with this weapon was struck by England. Within 24 hours after Great Britain had declared war upon the German empire, H. M. S. E-9 was cruising toward Heligoland in search of an enemy ship and on September 13, 1914, she sank the German cruiser, Hela, with a single torpedo. But Germany soon avenged that with the destruction of three British cruisers, the Aboukir, the Hogue and the Cressy, by the U-9 and when, a short time later, the dreadnaught, Audacious, and the battleships, Triumph and Majestic, were sent to the bottom, England, the proverbial "mistress of the seas," knew that a new era had dawned.

Despite English efforts to combat the threat of the submarine, the next two years showed that Germany had an ace which might prove the winning card in the gigantic game and by late 1916 Germany began to realize how desperately she was going to need that ace. The great sea battle of Jutland had been fought to a draw, but the German flag had been swept from the high seas. On land it was a stalemate with the advantage, if anything, with Germany. The Allies were holding their own only because they kept open the sea lanes over which came food and supplies. But those lanes might soon be closed for the Central Powers had listened to Von Tirpitz and the U-boats were taking a terrible toll of Allied shipping.

America was still neutral, but the sinking of the Lusitania helped crystallize the feeling that sooner or later America must be drawn into the conflict. On July 3, 1916, the giant undersea merchantman, Deutschland, arrived at Baltimore and a short time later returned in safety to her home port. On November 1, 1916, she appeared again, this time at New London, Conn. In the meantime a German war vessel, the U-53, suddenly emerged without warning in the harbor at Newport, R. I., and the next day, off Nantucket, stopped six vessels, ordered their crews to their boats and then torpedoed them. These visits to our shores were veiled threats of what might happen should America join the Allies.

But the threat failed to accomplish its purpose. On February 1, 1917, Germany declared for unrestricted submarine warfare and this brought America into the war on April 6, 1917. The Central Powers in their desperation had played their ace and although for a time it looked as though it might be the winning card, later it proved to

1. The Holland No. 9 or Porpoise, the first submarine acquired by the United States navy. It was bought in the spring of 1898 but was not used in the Spanish-American war because the officials thought its use would be inhumane!
2. The Whale, the first submarine built in the United States. It was built in 1864 by C. S. Bushnell and Augustus Rice at Halstead, N. J. The Whale was about 29 feet long and had a depth of nine feet, with sides made of 12-inch boiler plate. It was designed to carry a crew of 13 men and should have averaged a speed of four knots an hour, being propelled by hand power. It cost $60,000 and was given a trial and condemned in 1872.
3. John Phillip Holland, inventor of the first modern type of submarine.
4. Submarine V 6, the latest addition to the American navy, just before its launching last spring at Mare Island navy yard in California.
5. German U-Boat, Deutschland, in Baltimore harbor. The arrival of this merchant submersible, commanded by Capt. Paul Koenig, on July 9, 1916, was regarded as an implied threat of the possibility of carrying German submarine warfare against the Atlantic coast if America should abandon her neutral attitude and join the Allies in the World war.

be the very one which lost the game for them. On July 2, 1917, General Von Hindenburg declared, "The war is won for us if we can withstand the enemy attacks until the submarine has done its work." And Admiral Sims confirmed Hindenburg's statement when he wrote, "Unless the appalling destruction of merchant tonnage which was then taking place could be materially checked, the unconditional surrender of the British empire would inevitably take place." The German U-boats were sending to the bottom more than 850,000 tons of shipping every month and at the height of this warfare, from September 1, 1917, to April 1, 1918, they sank 548 vessels, 448 of them without warning. Effective as was the work of the U-boats, however, it was not accomplished without paying a high price, for by the time the war ended, Germany had built a total of 372 submarines and 202 of these had been lost.

It was this tremendous loss of these weapons which nullified Germany's last desperate throw of her ace. Allied anti-submarine technique developed faster, especially after the United States came in, than U-boat efficiency and by November, 1918, it was demonstrated that the submarine could not win the war. At the outset it was feared that America would be unable to send her troop transports across the submarine-infested Atlantic without serious loss. But Germany soon found that it did not pay to operate her U-boats against these troopships, which were so well guarded by the destroyer escorts. The result was that not a single soldier of the 2,900,000 which we sent across lost his life from U-boat attack.

But the danger to the soldiers which she was sending to the aid of the hard-pressed Allies was not the only danger from submarines which the United States experienced from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918. There was the danger also of U-boat raids on the Atlantic coast, although at the time few realized how serious that danger was, nor did many know that such raids actually were made. For the veil of censorship was drawn over an incident of the World war which is comparatively unknown to most Americans even to this day and that veil was lifted only within recent months when the book, "When the U-boats Came to America," written by William Bell Clark and published by Little, Brown and company, was published.

As one reviewer of this latest addition to the store of "now-it-can-be-told" information about the World war has said, "the story Mr. Clark tells of this U-boat campaign will be news to 99 out of 100 readers." And even to the 99, who have only a vague recollection that German U-boats did visit our shores, it will no doubt be a surprise to learn that on July 21, 1918, when the German U-156 fired on a sea-going tug and four barges off the coast of Cape Cod, for the first time in more than 100 years a hostile shot fell upon territory of the United States; that during the submarine raids which Germany launched against our coast a total of 197,761 gross tons of shipping, was lost and that the invaders collected a toll of 435 American lives.

"While the total number of submarines sent to this shore was six, only five might be said to have conducted any serious raiding," writes Clark. "The final visitor was recalled in October, 1918, when it was gaining the proximity of the coast. This last raider, the U-152, inflicted the most serious casualties, however, as before it fell the cargo carrier, Ticonderoga, in the Naval Overseas Transportation service, sunk in midocean with the loss of two hundred sixteen lives. Actual forays on coastal shipping covered a period of about five months, from May 25 to October 17, 1918. The first raid was conducted by a single U-boat, the U-151. After its departure three others arrived and in August the trio, the U-155, U-140 and U-117, were harrying vessels simultaneously from Newfoundland to North Carolina. When, in September, the U-155 arrived, it confined its coastal operations to New England and Canadian waters. . . . If these raids are little known and less understood by the American public, it is because in their final stages the achievements of the American Expeditionary force overshadowed them in the nation's press and navy censorship permitted only the barest details to be printed."

Of the significance of these raids, Clark says: "The futile efforts of German submarines in the last six months of the World war to harass at the source the increasing supply of men, munitions and food pouring across the Atlantic to France brought actual naval hostilities by a foreign power close to the American coast for the first time in more than one hundred years. Until the summer and fall of 1918, when submarines operated in the waters between Newfoundland and Cape Hatteras and sank more than one hundred sixty-five thousand gross tons of shipping, no fighting craft of an European enemy had invaded the waters adjacent to the eastern seaboard since the War of 1812."

"The attitude of American naval authorities has been to disparage the U-boat raids in American coastal waters as minor incidents of the great conflict. Opinions so rendered are based entirely upon military values and, from this viewpoint, the submarine activities fall far below into the category of futility. Were history to be written purely from the aspect of decisive engagements, however, it would lose the brilliant and stimulating records of self-sacrifice from Thermopylae to Cradock at Cornel. Vain efforts, undertaken frequently with the pre-knowledge that they would fail, have enriched the pages of the past. The Continental cruisers that roved the English channel had little more effect upon the conclusion of the struggle for independence than the German U-boats off the Atlantic coast had upon the armistice of 1918. Yet, to forget the exploits of John Paul Jones in the Ranger and the Bonhomme Richard because of the absence of military value would be to deprive this country of a picturesque and heroic phase of its naval traditions."

"Following the same thought, to decry the submarine raids because they failed of their purpose is to belittle as well the hardihood and courage of the men of the American Merchant marine and the Naval Overseas Transportation service. They refused to be driven from the seas."

Eskimo Works of Art

of Remarkable Beauty

Scientists who have studied the reports of the finding of implements and other objects in the frozen ruins of a large Eskimo settlement on St. Lawrence Island in the Bering sea believe they contain evidence of man's prehistoric life in the Arctic. St. Lawrence and Dionmede Islands evidently have been the metropolises of the prehistoric Arctic. Three successive stages of Eskimo culture are traced in the ruins, and the oldest and most deeply buried objects show the finest and most intelligent workmanship. The age of the most ancient finds is estimated at about 1,000 years. The top layer reveals craftsmanship of Eskimos who have lived in the last 300 years. Among the finds were ivory and bone harpoons, meat picks and delicately carved instruments, possibly used for ceremonial wands, charms and personal ornaments.

Rewarded!

THIS eight year old athlete is the son of Rev. and Mrs. C. F. Jenkins, Lyndon, Kansas. Mrs. Jenkins says: "Both my boys are the very picture of health. We have been more than rewarded for our faith in California Fig Syrup."

"During babyhood we used Fig Syrup with them quite regularly. Since they have been older we have used it to regulate their bowels during colds or upsets."

All children love the rich, fruity flavor of California Fig Syrup. A pure vegetable product, it does not gripe or sicken. It always acts gently but thoroughly to cleanse the digestive system of bilious, headachy, constipated babies or children. Bad breath, coated tongue, feverishness, disappear with its use. Doctors say it strengthens weak bowels!

Look for the name California when buying. That marks the genuine.

Fresh Egg Specialist

Astonished observers rubbed their eyes and pinched each other the other day when they saw O. J. Shocum sedately walking to market with one egg in a basket.

"How come?" they queried each to each. "Wherefore and likewise why?" "You fellows wouldn't understand," explained O. J., "but the fact is just this. When I sell fresh eggs, they are strictly fresh and don't ever doubt it. I follow the hens around and as soon as an egg is deposited in a nest I carry it to the store. If a customer is particular, he can get eggs for his breakfast that are not over ten minutes old. This is an age of specializing and I am a fresh egg specialist."—Vineyard (Mass.) Gazette.

GIANT GOODYEAR TIRE IS EXHIBITED HERE

This gigantic pneumatic tire has attracted widespread attention everywhere it has been exhibited on its tour of the Nation. Towering twelve feet and measuring four feet in width, it is a standard tire in every respect except size.

Goodyear built the tire in line with its policy of pioneering and research thru which have come many of the most important developments in the tire industry. Today the massive casing is unique and something to quicken wonder. It is logical to assume that the future will find tires of this size a necessity. A prominent airplane manufacturer when shown this rubber giant expressed no surprise. He informed Goodyear officials that the day would arrive when larger airplanes would be built and use tires the size of this.

The giant all-weather tread balloon required three months to build. Something of its size can be gained by the fact that the tire and wheel it is mounted on weigh 1800 pounds. 45 minutes are required for inflation to a pressure of three pounds. The diamond treads measure sixteen inches in length and ten inches in width.

Goodyear purchased a specially constructed bus to exhibit the tire. It is attached to the rear of the bus by two shafts extending from the chassis.

Everybody's working—it's too hot to do anything else.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Congress Overrides Hoover Veto of Spanish War Pension Measure.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT HOOVER is not having a pleasant time with a congress whose mind is to a considerable extent fixed on the chances of re-election next fall. The majority in both houses is Republican but it isn't always "administration," especially when being so might cost some votes at the polls.

This condition was illustrated last week when congress overrode the President's veto of the Spanish war veterans' pension bill. In re-passing the measure the senate voted 61 to 18 against Hoover, and those for the bill included 28 Republicans, 32 Democrats and one Farmer-Labor member. Only 14 members of the lower house, all Republicans, voted to uphold the veto, with 298 against it.

Vetoing any pension bill is painful for a President, and in this case Mr. Hoover displayed courage. His three objections to the measure were held by the press of the country for the most part to be well taken. The provisions he opposed are the reduction of the service period upon which pension claims may be made for disabilities of a non-service nature from 90 to 70 days; and that venereal diseases, drug habits or alcoholism, contracted at any time in the life of the veteran, shall constitute disabilities entitling the sufferer to a pension. He also contended that need should be an element of valid claim.

The enthusiasm with which both senate and house passed the bill over the veto is strongly reminiscent of the time when the Grand Army of the Republic was strong enough numerically to obtain from congress any legislation it desired.

WHAT will happen to the London naval treaty in the senate is still a matter of conjecture. Senators Watson and Moses last week urged the President to postpone the consideration of the pact until after the autumn elections, but he insisted on his plan to call a special session of the senate immediately after the adjournment of congress. This despite the warning from the two leaders that if the discussion proved to be protracted the senate might adjourn the special session and throw the whole question over to the winter session. Next day Senator Henry J. Allen of Kansas submitted to Mr. Hoover a plan that seemed to impress him.

The Kansas senator thought that the wisest strategy would be to bring the treaty before the senate at the present session, immediately following the passage of the rivers and harbors bill, but before the veterans' legislation is taken up. There has been much talk of the difficulty of keeping a quorum of the senate on hand to discuss the treaty, but Mr. Allen opined that few senators would dare go home before the veterans' bill comes up. Altogether, the effect of the situation, thought Senator Allen, would be to expedite the disposition of the treaty.

It was disclosed at the Navy department that contracts for the construction of the new aircraft carrier and two fleet submarines slated to be let before July 1 will not be awarded until after the senate has acted on the treaty. According to Secretary of the Navy Adams, contracts for no more warships will be let this fiscal year.

CERTAIN citizens who have been badgered, embarrassed and distressed by the persistent proings of congressional investigating committees probably cheered—in private—for Bishop James Cannon, Jr., last week. That militant chairman of the board of temperance and social service of the Methodist church, South, and official of the Anti-Saloon league, challenged the authority of the senate lobby committee to investigate his political activities in the campaign of 1928, refused to reply to its questions in that connection and defied its implied threats to punish him for contempt, as others have been punished in similar circumstances.

Cannon was willing to tell a lot about his work as a lobbyist, "using the word in its legitimate sense," in behalf of prohibition legislation, but, as he stated to the press afterward, he insisted "that this singling out of myself and of the Virginia anti-Smith Democrats because we fought the wet Tammany candidate is a deliberate, intolerable infringement upon the rights of American citizens, and is a threat to independent citizens against a repetition of the independent act of 1928."

The bishop also told the press much about the disposal of money contributed by E. C. Jameson of New York for the anti-Smith campaign in Virginia—information he had refused to give the committee.

Senator Caraway, chairman of the committee, who was in Arkansas at the time, issued a statement upholding the bishop's stand and denying that the committee had a right to inquire into Cannon's political activities. The investigation was being conducted by Senators Walsh of Montana and Blaine of Wisconsin.

On Thursday Bishop Cannon repeated his refusal to answer the committee's questions, and then coolly walked out of the room without waiting to be excused. He was done, he said, unless the committee wished to subpoena him.

"If the bishop's defiance yesterday was not contempt, and I think it was, his action today is certainly a clear case of contempt," declared Walsh, whose opinion was echoed by a number of senators. The contumacy of Cannon probably will be reported to the senate with a request for contempt proceedings.

ONE more step in the President's dry enforcement program was taken when the house, by a vote of 218 to 117, passed the Wickersham bill designed to relieve congestion in the federal courts by eliminating jury trials in minor prohibition cases.

If it becomes law the measure will radically revise the federal court procedure in criminal cases extant for more than a hundred years. It provides that defendants charged with "petty offenses" shall first be given a hearing before a United States commissioner whose recommendations shall go to the District judge for final disposal. The accused will be given a jury trial only if he demands it in a specified manner and time limit.

The house also adopted bills supplemental to the juryless trial measure, one of them defining as "petty offenses" all crimes involving a jail sentence of less than six months or a fine of less than $500, and another amending the Jones act to make the manufacture, transportation or sale of less than one gallon of liquor a "petty offense."

The Democratic party of Pennsylvania is now officially wet. The state committee, which was reorganized at Harrisburg, adopted a platform that recommends the repeal of the state enforcement act and the Volstead act and removal of the Eighteenth amendment from the federal Constitution.

THE French chamber of deputies opened its summer session last week with the opposition members ready with a flock of interpellations. Among the things they wanted the government to explain were the naval treaty, the serious Red revolt against French rule in Indo-China, national security and an oil scandal that has involved prominent officials. It was predicted in Paris that the Tardieu cabinet would not survive the summer.

IF THERE is a naval building race between France and Italy, the blame must rest with France, according to Foreign Secretary Dino Grandi of Italy. In a speech before the senate Grandi said that last month in Geneva he proposed to Aristide Briand that the two nations suspend their naval construction program for 1930 and that the French foreign minister refused to consider the proposition. The senate thereupon approved the government's policy of augmenting the Italian navy. Several of the senators declared the Mediterranean would be the theater of the next European war. Recently Premier Tardieu announced that the French would expend large sums for fortifications in the Alps. In reply, Senator Ricci of Italy urged the continued strengthening of the Italian frontier defenses in that region. Three questions divide France and Italy today, continued Senator Ricci. They are, first, control of the Adriatic; second, the status of Italians in Tunis; and third, the southern frontier of Libya. He repeated the oft heard charges that France was pouring arms and military supplies into Jugo-Slav ports.

GREAT BRITAIN was called upon to defend her regime in Palestine when the mandates commission of the League of Nations met in Geneva. Numerous complaints had been made of the British regulations, especially one curbing for a time the immigration of Jews to the Holy Land. T. Drummond Shiels, under secretary of state for colonies, declared that immigration was restricted only pending the receipt of an additional report and recommendations from Sir John Hope Simpson, who is now making a new survey of Palestine.

PUTTING a stop to the raids on the salt works, the rainy season came to the aid of the British in India. But the campaign of the Nationalists, though checked, has not ceased to function. The Gandhi followers and all the rest of them are now concentrating on tax resistance, which will be more serious than salt raids.

On the northwest frontier, where the Reds and wild tribesmen are giving a lot of trouble, British troops occupied several villages and took command of the situation, shelling the positions of the rebels in the hills.

TERRIFIC fighting was reported to be going on along the Yellow river between the Chinese Nationalist armies and the northern rebels, with the final results in doubt. Dispatches told of victories claimed by first one side and then the other. The outcome of this conflict may settle the fate of the Nanking government. Late in the week messages received in Shanghai said the northern troops had crossed the Yellow river sixty miles east of Tsianfu, broken the Nationalist lines and reached the Tsian-Tsingtao railway line in the vicinity of Chowtsun. The Nationalists also lost the important city of Chanhsia, capital of Hunan province, to a crowd of rebels and bandits called the Red army.

Apparently the Russians have given up hope of results from the Moscow conference between China and Russia on the Chinese Eastern railroad and have reverted to direct action along the frontier of northern Manchuria. The Nationalist government charges the Soviets have raided the town of Taiheho in Chinese territory opposite Biagoyshchensk and carried away a number of Chinese and also a large amount of farming machinery.

CARRYING twenty-two passengers and a large cargo of freight and mail, the Graf Zeppelin left Lakehurst, N. J., Monday night for the return trip to Friedrichshafen. She had a pleasant and swift passage across the Atlantic until she neared the coast of Portugal, where a storm and heavy winds were encountered. It is hoped that the Zeppelin will be in Chicago late in August as one of the attractions at the national air races to be held there.

W. CAMERON FORBES, Boston banker and former governor general of the Philippines, has been tentatively selected as the new ambassador to Japan, according to information learned in administration circles. Mr. Forbes, a close friend of President Hoover, served as chairman of the special commission which recently completed a survey and report on the American administration of affairs in Haiti.

IN RECOGNITION of his "outstanding contributions in the many fields of human service," the Louis Livingstone Seaman gold medal was presented to President Hoover by the American Museum of Safety. The award of the medal was decided upon before Mr. Hoover's nomination for the Presidency but the formal presentation was delayed.

Why Living in Small Town Has Advantages

Prof. Walter B. Pitkin buses a prophecy as to the rosy future of the small town, which he makes in the Household Magazine on four things: The healthier living conditions in small towns, the realization that the majority of city dwellers are as poor as their country brethren, the new shift of industry away from big cities, and the better opportunities for occupying one's leisure in the country. Small towns, he says, have sunshine, quiet and freedom from smoke. Out of every thousand inhabitants of the big towns, you cannot find more than three or four who are better off in their jobs than the people you meet in Main street or around by the post office. And now comes the new American revolution! Industry begins shifting to the small towns. No man in his senses thinks of starting a factory in a metropolis nowadays unless he is making something which cannot be made elsewhere. And, finally, concludes Doctor Pitkin, "If you live far from the clamor of Broadway, you can pick and choose your leisure pursuits effectively. And, having picked them, you can hold to your course with fewer distractions. And that, I maintain, is half of happiness. To do what you like, in the way of exercise, play, rest, reading, music, inventing, dreaming, or what not, without having a mob of peddlers yelling at you to do some thing else."

Development of City Depends on Planning

It was only ten or fifteen years ago that planning, and along with it zoning, came to be regarded as absolutely necessary in the larger cities of this country. It was soon evident that only by such means could hazardous growth be replaced by orderly development in the interest of rapidly increasing numbers of urban residents. The desirability of the same protection for suburban areas and smaller centers is a product of more recent years. The spread of this enterprise is an indication of the improved conditions which are a part of the modern city.

In giving the result of a recent survey of the situation, the Department of Commerce, through its division of building and housing, notes this fact: "Cities having planning commissions are believed to be more apt than others to exercise foresight and true economy in the laying out and improvement of streets, the location of parks, playgrounds and public works, the development of transit and transportation, provision for street traffic and in the equitable regulation of private use of land through zoning ordinances."

Good Citizen Defined

Good citizenship is loyalty toward community, state and country. It begins right at home. A citizen who delights in keeping his own premises cleaned up and developed, who cooperates with each worthy cause or development that promises improvement, advancement, or uplifting of his community; who supports his home institutions and enterprises so far as economics permit; who abhors the tax, who loves order and peace; who takes pride in helping to develop and maintain these conditions, with a similar spirit and attitude prevailing for state and country, is an example of what constitutes good citizenship.—Ruth Adele Barr, in Grit.

Must Speed Up Planting

During recent years tree planting has received great stimulus in the states largely because of the help that the federal government has been able to give. In 1925 only 13 states were distributing planting stock to its citizens, says the American Tree association. Thirty-two states are now engaged in this activity. Nevertheless, it is going to be necessary to speed up America's planting program at least ten times in order to reforest our denuded lands with reasonable promptness.

Makes for Civic Good

Just as the improvement in the home influences the family, the modernization of a house does a certain amount of good for the community. In the last analysis, a city is but a collection of homes and anything that improves a part is working for the good of the whole. Modernizing lifts up a city out of its ordinary commonplace position and transforms it into a live progressive community, filled with busy individuals striving for their betterment.

Be Liberal With Paint

Paint has many virtues. Besides beautifying your home, it will increase its sale value and, in fact, the valuation and desirability of the entire neighborhood. Particularly applicable to this connection is the oft-quoted but very true Dutch proverb: "Good paint costs nothing for it saves more than its cost."

Fewer, Better Schools

Cook county (Ga.) decreased its schools from 30 to 11 in less than a decade, replacing old buildings with consolidated schools.

SUMMER STEPS OUT IN GAY PRINT; COMES NOW A "WHITE SEASON"

AND again summer "goes stepping" with a smile in gay young frocks of colorful prints. The very swafest prints silhouette their bright flower motifs against pure white backgrounds this season—an effect which is delightfully summery.

The charming little frock in the picture is decidedly new. In the first place the bemberg canton crepe of which it is made patterns crimson and green poses on white—a refreshing color scheme this and so distinctive a this-season feature. Indeed these white shoes, and as many more as her social position demands.

Long white sports coats are posed over either white or pastel frocks, and with these coats white kid shoes, either all white or delicately trimmed with pastel, black or blue are smartest. The white kid shoe trimmed with brown leads for street and spectator sports wear, and will be worn with pastel frocks and suits regardless of their tint, as was the case at Palm Beach this winter. Next to the brown-trimmed shoes comes that trimmed dainty prints are proving quite the fabric fad of the hour. Very often the print is in a single color such as a stencil effect in pale green on white, perhaps navy on white or that which is quite the thing this season—black on white.

It is plain to be seen that this demure maiden is exceedingly fashionable, for she knows what's what in accessories, wearing a white cheapeau and white kid shoes, as she does, with this color-touched white frock of hers. The importance of white gloves, white footwear, white headwear cannot be overrated. This trend to white is obvious also in the coat realm, the latest being to top one's colorful frock with an all-white coat of unusual weave, adding hat, gloves and pocketbook in immaculate white. Very often the kid shoes and the pocketbook are trimmed with a wee bit of color, repeating an outstanding tone in the print or pastel of the frock. As worn with the now-so-popular crepe sports dresses in monotone pastels, with black, and next in order the white shoe touched with navy blue.

There will, however, be an equal number of all-white shoes worn for naturally the white frock calls for the white shoe. The sweet girl graduate will doubtless require the all-white shoes, and there will be about 250,000 of them graduating from high schools and such shortly.

Best of all most of the kid of which modern shoes are made comes in wash quantities that can be easily kept clean with soap and water.

For the most part where trappings in color are used, there is very little of the color. Narrow bands, appliques, small motifs and pipings usually do the trick, except in the spectator sports types which often have toes and heels of brown, black or blue. Perforations are also much used as a trim.

In the representative group here with the white kid shoes shown at the top to the left are in a one-strap buckle model, the vamp and strap of white footwear and headwear vie with self-colored accessories.

It is well worth while keeping in mind a vogue is now far on its way, highlighting white accessories with navy or black cloth suits—not forgetting the white gardenia on the lapel of the smart tailored jacket.

Referring again to the dress in the picture, its little cape sleeves also indicate its last moment styling.

A "White Season."

White is so important this summer that the average woman cannot afford to go without at least one pair of white lizard. A pair of white kid T-strap shoes (below to left) fashion the unusual strap and trim of white lizard. In the circle white kid shoes for spectator sports wear are trimmed with black kid heels and tips, also perforations. White kid pumps with a touch of pastel trim are worn with the cunning suit of pastel pink jacquard khaki wool, pictured at the top. The bikini worn with the one-piece frock is scolloped all around as is the hem line of the dress.

Analyzing YOU... With the New Science of Syllabics By C. J. COFFMAN Dean of All the Enumerators

Rebecca "Rebecca of Sunnyside Farm," who does not remember this wonderful picture?

The first three letters of your name, REB, indicate a peculiar combination of friend and rebel, according to the ancient languages.

A friend to all who are in trouble a rebel against the established customs of society, you present a curious picture to those who do not understand you.

You seem to grow by resistance.

Like Rebecca at the well, in the Bible, you do best in seeking your own mate among those who come from a far country.

With your classic features and almost Greek profile, you could exert all the charm necessary to hold him, when once you had attracted him.

The tragedy and the happiness of your life may be formed upon one and the same event, or at least upon one combination of events. For the RE in the fore part of your name means to do again and signifies the possibility of your marrying twice.

There is one thing certain, to attain your happiness, you must make your choices, whether one or many by yourself. You are one of those for whom no one else can make a decision.

It was only in the understanding of this necessity of self-determination, this making of her own choices, that enabled one famous Rebecca to attain her success in writing.

And when you marry wealth, as you easily can do, you must immediately pick up the loose ends of your education. If there could be anything more essential to you than food for your body, it would be food for your mind, Rebecca. You can be happy only when you are thoroughly well informed.

Rosa "As we struggle on life's journey And difficulties meet, We get a thorn with every rose, But aren't the Roses sweet?"

If I paid too much attention to my ancient Greek and Latin, I could say a lot of things here, Rosa, that wouldn't be so nice.

But who wants to say bad things about a rose?

With your straight, finely chiseled nose, and your face that used to be freckled, I see an evidence of intuition that makes you able to go right to the heart of things.

So if musty old books and tomes of dead languages try to make me think that ROSA means naughty and bad, I will just have to say to myself, that they didn't know about you.

Of course, you have the ability to be bad if you want to. But you won't because you are just naturally filled with helpfulness. And this helpfulness crops out in quite peculiar ways.

For example, you do have the cutest way of making little rhymes and slogans, of painting little cards and decorations. Why don't you take that up as a profession, that painting of the little colored cards and monograms?

There is quite a field for you there, Rosa, in special designing and you can soon find out where you fit best.

The thorn in your rose-nature seems to be just a sharp little edge of jealousy or envy. You can get over this all right, especially if you become a success on your own.

Rosa Ponselle made her way through petty jealousies innumerable, and envied unbelievable, to become one of the great singers of the Metropolitan grand opera in New York.

Rosa Bonheur, famous animal painter and sculptress, made her way up from a sick bed, after falling at the trade she started to learn. There is a lot of the same determination in you, Rosa, so go ahead.

Ford Offers New De Luxe Sedan

Ford De Luxe Sedan

THE De Luxe Sedan, recently added to the Ford line, is designed for those who desire distinctiveness and unusual comfort in an automobile. The interior is inviting and roomy with wide doors to both compartments. Absence of rear quarter windows gives the car a striking individuality and affords privacy to the occupants.

Interior trimmings and appointments are luxurious. Upholstery is either in brown mohair or a deep tan Bedford cord patterned after that used in high-priced cars.

Other refinements include arm rests for the rear seats, mahogany finished garnish mouldings on the windows and beneath the windshield, flexible robe rail and hand-grips in an attractive pattern.

The front seat is adjustable within a range of four inches to suit the convenience and comfort of the driver. It is moved quickly and easily by a simple, lever-operated handle in the front corner of the seat just above the floor.

The De Luxe Sedan, like other Ford body types, can be obtained in any one of several color combinations.

The Mazaroff Mystery

by J.S. Fletcher

WNU SERVICE Copyright © 1931 by J.S. Fletcher Illustrations by I. W. Myers

THE STORY

Mervyn Holt is engaged by a man calling himself Mazaroff as a traveling companion. After a short tour they put up at the Woodcock inn on Marrasdale moor. They meet, casually, Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila Merclison. Mazaroff tells Holt they are his wife and daughter and that his real name is Merclison. That night Mazaroff fails to return to the inn and his disappearance is unexplained. Holt meets Sheila and tells her of Mazaroff's disappearance.

CHAPTER II—Continued

He pushed her before him into a room where Mrs. Elphinstone was evidently waiting breakfast for her husband and daughter. She did not see me at first, being concerned with tea-making, but she evidently recognized Mr. Elphinstone's step.

"Are you and Sheila never coming to breakfast, Malcolm?" she demanded. "The tea—" Then she turned and saw me, and I saw that she recognized me as the young man whom she had passed two days before. Mr. Elphinstone pushed me forward.

"Marion!" he exclaimed. "A truly most wonderful and fortunate thing! This young gentleman is the son of my old friend Tom Holt! Isn't it extraordinary that he should drop on me from the clouds like this? He came—let's see, how did he come?—oh, I remember now, Sheila brought him, to be sure."

"Yes," said Sheila, "and you've already forgotten why I brought him! Mother," she went on rapidly, "Mr. Holt is staying at the Woodcock with that old gentleman we saw him with the other day—they're motoring. And the old gentleman is lost, and Mr. Holt has been out all night searching for him."

Mrs. Elphinstone gave me a polite welcoming, if somewhat frigid handshake.

"Then I'm quite sure Mr. Holt will do with some breakfast," she said, in practical fashion. "Attend to him, Sheila."

"This is very kind of you," I said, "but I really ought to be looking for my missing friend."

Mr. Elphinstone sat down, helped himself to some fish, and after a few reflective sips at a cup of tea, leaned across the table toward his step-daughter.

"How would it be to inquire at High Cap lodge?" he suggested. "Verner's people might have heard something, or know something."

"Good!" said Sheila. "I'll take Mr. Holt across there presently. That," she continued, turning to me, "is my cousin, Verner Courthope's place—High Cap lodge."

We each made a hurried breakfast and set out. Our way led toward the hills and became rugged and lonely.

"My cousin has a small shooting party at his lodge," announced Sheila, as we came in sight of our destination.

"There's himself, and his manager (Courthopes are bankers, you know, in the city), a man named Armintrade, whom I loathe, and another man, a London doctor, Eccleshare, whom I detest! I suppose we shall find them at breakfast."

She was evidently well acquainted with High Cap lodge and its arrangements, for without any ceremony or delay she led me in by the front hall, down a passage, and thrust open the door of a room that looked out on a fine stretch of moor. Three men, lounging around a well-spread breakfast table, turned in astonishment at our entrance, examining me closely.

I, in my turn, took a good, close look at them, individually and collectively. For I remembered that when Mazaroff had intimated to me that he wanted to spend that first day at the Woodcock alone, he had also said that there was a man in the neighborhood whom he wanted to see on business. And for the moment it flashed upon me that as all these three men were from London, the man to whom he referred might be one of them: two, at any rate, were connected with banking and financial matters; so, also, as I knew well enough by that time, was Mazaroff.

But I got no help from my inevitably superficial examination of the three. One, obviously the host, was a youngish man of a somewhat heavy and swollen cast of countenance. The second was a sleek and sly-looking middle-aged man, with a carefully combed beard and a somewhat superior air—this I presently discovered to be Armintrade, the bank manager.

And the third was a great, shaven, heavy of feature. Sheila paid no more attention to the two guests than was represented by a curt nod; she went straight up to Courthope.

"Verner," she said, "this gentleman is Mr. Holt, whose father is an old friend of Mr. Elphinstone. Mr. Holt is staying for a day or two at the Woodcock, where he came with a friend, Mr. Mazaroff, in Mr. Mazaroff's car. Last night Mr. Mazaroff, who is an elderly man, went out on the moor, and he's never returned. Have you or your people heard or seen anything of him?"

"I'll do Verner Courthope the justice to say that he showed some polite concern in the matter. Neither he nor his two guests could tell me anything, but Courthope went out with Sheila and myself to a shed at the rear of the lodge, where two gamekeepers and some other men were waiting, and of them he made inquiries. That resulted in nothing, but he promised that in the course of the day's shooting he and his party would keep their eyes and ears open as they went about the moors."

Sheila and I presently went away in the direction of Marrasdale tower. We had walked some little distance in silence when she suddenly turned on me with a look which showed me that she felt instinctively certain that I, out of sheer youthful sympathy, would understand what she was going to say.

"If a man's known by the company he keeps," she said, almost bitterly, "what about my cousin Verner? Did you ever see two more utterly detestable men than Armintrade and Eccleshare? I loathe the sight of them! And—and yet my mother wants me to marry Verner Courthope; insists on it! Well—I just won't—won't!"

I was so much taken aback by this sudden outburst of intimate confidence that I lost my tongue, and could only stand looking at my companion. She reddened a little under my gaze, but her attitude became still more confidential and appealing.

"I daresay you think I'm an awful ass for saying things like that?" she said hurriedly. "But—you're young, and there's nobody about here who is. You wouldn't like to be forced into doing what you don't want to do, would you?"

"From what I've seen of you," I said, "I should say that nobody could make you do what you don't want to do!"

"I wish my own mother would see that," she responded quickly. "She's been trying to force Verner Courthope on me for the last twelve months! And—I won't!"

"Why is Mrs. Elphinstone so keen about it?" I inquired.

"Oh, I don't know!" she said, half impatiently. "She and his mother—my aunt, you know—sort of settled it between them. Verner, now that his father's dead, is nominal head of the bank, and he's piles of money. And I'm afraid my mother is fond of anybody and anything that's mixed up with money."

"And Mr. Elphinstone?" I suggested.

"Mr. Elphinstone is about as useful to appeal to as one of the folios in his library," she answered.

"What are you going to do, then?" I asked.

She gave me an arch glance—and, for the first time, though I had looked at her closely enough before, I saw something that gave me a start. There was the slightest, the very slightest suspicion of a cast in her left eye, just as there was—but more defined and noticeable—in Mazaroff's.

"Do?" she said. "What, to checkmate my mother and Verner? Why—I'll marry somebody else!"

We exchanged very candid glances at that.

"Is there anybody else?" I asked.

She looked at me from under her eyelashes.

"No!" she answered.

I don't know what I was going to say then. I have a vague notion that I was very near a blunt declaration that I had fallen in love with her at first sight. But at that moment we turned the corner of a plantation, and came across Mr. Elphinstone, who was mooning along with a sort of alpenstock in his hand, and obviously lost in the clouds or mists of his own reflections. He came to earth with a start on seeing us.

"Oh, ah, to be sure!" he exclaimed. "I believe I was coming to meet you. Holt—you must come and lunch with us."

I interrupted him, preemptorily; it was the only thing to do.

"It's awfully kind of you, sir," I said, "but I can't do anything until I've found out or heard of Mr. Mazaroff."

"What'll you do, now?" inquired Sheila.

"Get hold of the police and have a thorough search of the district made," I answered. "And there's no time to be lost, so you'll excuse me if I hurry away."

I went off without more ado—I knew very well that I should see her again before the day was out and in other days to come.

I went on across the moor to the Woodcock. Webster was standing on the road before the open door.

"Heard anything?" I demanded as I got near him.

"Not a word, sir," he replied. "Nothing! There's two men waiting for you inside, Mr. Holt—want some information. One's a police sergeant; the other's a newspaper reporter."

"And Yet My Mother Wants Me to Marry Verner Courthope."

"Then it's got out, Webster," I said. "That makes it all the stranger."

"Oh, it's all round the district by now, Mr. Holt," he answered. "Everybody knows he's missing. But I've neither seen nor heard anybody who saw him last night—it would seem as if he clean disappeared when he walked out of that door."

"There's no doubt of that, Webster," I said. "Truth to tell, I was already wondering if Mazaroff had made a clean disappearance on purpose. By this time he might be in London, vanished for the second time in his life, and for practically the same reason as Mr. Bownas, district representative of the leading county newspaper and one of the London press agencies. Manners was a big, military-looking man; Bownas a little, ratty chap, content to scribble in his book while the sergeant did the questioning. That quickly turned to a point which, it was very plain to see, the police mind considered all important.

"This gentleman now, sir," asked the sergeant, when I had given him the main facts of the case, "he'd be a wealthy gentleman, no doubt?"

"You may take it that Mr. Mazaroff is a wealthy man," I answered.

"And in that case likely to have wealth on him when he walked out of this house, no doubt?" continued the sergeant. "Valuables, of course."

"And brought it here," continued Webster. "It—the fact is, sir, the head's—the features, you know—gone! But the clothes, sir—they're his!"

I dressed hastily and went down with them to the outhouse wherein his finders, a local policeman and a game warden, had laid the body. I am not going into details about it here—but, as somebody muttered, there were stoats and weasels and similar carnivorous animals in hundreds on those moors. Still, those were Mazaroff's clothes, and there was the birthmark he had told me of.

The news had already spread, and Manners, the sergeant who had questioned me, came hurrying along. He examined the clothing. There was not as much as a penny piece left in the pockets; watch, chain, rings, pocketbook, papers, were all gone. He turned on me with a look that was as triumphant as it was significant.

"What did I tell you, captain?" he murmured. "Didn't I say murder and robbery? And wasn't I right? What could be plainer?"

I made no answer. I was thinking of other things. However he had come by his death, the fact remained that Mazaroff was dead. And there was I, as far as I knew, the only person in the world who knew his secret—a secret which meant that I should presently have to carry that strangest of stories to Marrasdale tower.

Later in the morning Eccleshare came to the Woodcock. He had heard of the discovery, he said, and had hurried over from High Cap lodge to offer his professional services. And just then up drove the local doctor, on the same errand. The two of them went to the room where the dead man had been laid out. They were there some time. At last Eccleshare came back alone.

"Mr. Holt," he said, as the police sergeant and I approached him, "your friend has been shot."

He made this announcement with a curious gravity. But Manners and I both let out exclamations of astonishment.

SCENIC PLAYGROUNDS OF AMERICA

By G. M. HILBOURN

An American Switzerland

A T HETCH-HETCHY dam in Yosemite National park, California, is stationed probably the only ranger-naturalist in the national park system who needs to know waterworks, hydroelectric, and earthen embankment statistics as a part of his "nature-guiding" duties.

For Hetch-Hetchy lake, in addition to being part of the park, and a magnificent part of it, is also a portion of the city water and power system of San Francisco, and the automobile road which brings most of the visitors ends abruptly at the big dam built a few years back to create the seven-mile lake. Questions, therefore, apply to the construction project as well as to the upland surrounding it.

Years ago John Muir and others found Hetch-Hetchy valley a worthy rival of the main Yosemite valley, whose granite walls and long, filmy waterfalls are world-famous. And submergence of the Hetch-Hetchy floor, while of course burying the trails and bringing traffic to a halt, has only increased the grandeur of the site by adding the charm of a lakeland to the sternness and dignity of the 3,000-foot walls. Rigid protection of the water-source of course limits the availability of the lake for sightseeing purposes; but if a scenic launch service is ever made available on Hetch-Hetchy, there'll be a boat-ride worth crossing the continent to take. And for the present, the view from the dam alone is one that's hard to leave.

The lake also acts as an ally of trail lovers and fishermen, as against the "skin-it-and-run" wanderers who help to swell the park's annual visitor count to nearly half a million, or nearly twice that of any other national playground. Almost a third of the park lies north of Hetch-Hetchy and of the Tuolumne (pronounced Toolumne) river of which it is formed. This northern upland has been a favorite camping and hiking ground of the Sierra club of the state for many years, but is still little known to the vacationing public at large. However, "It is a wilderness of wondrous charm and deserves to harbor a thousand camps," as the official park bulletin explains.

Lakes and streams of these northern canyons were stocked years ago with rainbow and eastern brook trout. Construction of the waterworks project interrupted too easy access by fisherman, and now the region has reached the "come and get us" stage where the angler who takes the trouble to get there may find himself in a fisherman's heaven as well as a scenic paradise.

The upper portion of the Tuolumne valley, at the far eastern edge of the park, is not only a favorite camping and climbing region, but is also reached by automobile, by the highly scenic Tioga road. This road climbs out of the main Yosemite valley at its western end, passes the Tuolumne grade of sequoia trees, crosses to the glacier-burnished granite domes of the eastern uplands, and winds down from Tioga pass to Mono lake and the Nevada boundary through a steep and forbidding but highly scenic canyon. The Tioga road was built in 1881, by Chinese labor, to a gold mine east of the park; the mine "went broke," but national park tourists are still riding on the road.

Not Original With Kaiser

The phrase "Place in the sun" was used by the former emperor of Germany, William II, on June 18, 1901, in an address at Hamburg while referring to Germany's acquisition of the Chinese harbor at Kiaochow and other valuable commercial concessions in "China. The idea was expressed many years before, however. Pascal, who lived from 1623 to 1662, in his "Les pensees" said: "That dog of mine, said those poor children; that place in the sun is mine; such is the beginning and type of usurpation, throughout the earth."

Texas Mother Has Healthiest Child

Mrs. Lena Rolling is perhaps the happiest mother in Houston, and it is all because her little son Royce Lee finally got over a spell of sickness which pulled him down terribly.

"His blood must have gotten very thin because he broke out so badly all over his little legs," said Mrs. Rolling in her home at 3011 Harrisburg Blvd. "From the time I started giving him Nature's Remedy Juniors it so thoroughly cleaned out his system that all the broken out places healed and others did not come back as they did before. Now he is in no much better health than I wish every mother could see him and see what those little chocolate candy NR Js can do for ailing children."

All drug stores which sell Nature's Remedy, the safe dependable laxative and corrective, also have NR Js. They are just $5.

Water Filtration Has Curbed Disease Spread

About 1887 it was announced by Percy Frankland and others that sand filtration removed nearly all the bacteria in water. Five years later came the outbreak of cholera in Hamburg, and a striking demonstration was afforded of protection through filtration. Hamburg and Altona, two cities on the Elbe river, both used the river as a source of water supply. Hamburg used unfiltered water; Altona filtered its supply. When cholera infection of the river water occurred, Altona escaped with only a few cases. Hamburg, on the other hand, had an enormous number.

Following the rapid advance of the science of bacteriology in the '80s and '90s, it was natural to consider the possibility of purifying drinking water by the addition of chemical disinfectants. The first systematic use of chlorine in water is credited to Houston and McGovern in England in 1904 and 1905. The present world-wide use of chlorine disinfectant of public water supplies, however, is due largely to the work of George A. Johnson, who, in 1908, used bleaching powder ("chloride of lime") for the purification of Jersey City's water supply.—New York Times.

A Fair Cop

For years and years and years—no, let us start again: For weary hours the angler sat watching his float. It never moved, save when a ripple of the river made it tremble and raised false hopes in his heart. Then, with the snort of an enraged bull and the foot-tread to match, the village constable came to him.

"Fishing ain't allowed in this pond," he snapped. "Beat it!"

The fisherman turned bored eyes to him and jerked the hook out of the water.

"I'm not fishing," he replied, with weary sarcasm in his voice. "I'm teaching this worm to swim."

"A—ah!" snorted the policeman triumphantly. "Then come along with me. Bathing ain't allowed in the pond without costume, and he ain't got one on!"

NEIGHBORS VISIT AT THE KEASLER HOME

Again the hearts of Hedley people have been moved to brighten the lives of the aged, when a number of neighbors and friends gathered at the home of Grandpa and Grandma Keasler Saturday and brought a lot of good things to eat. There were about thirty present and all had a good time.

These old people were surprised and glad, and expressed their appreciation in words and tears. The day was one never to be forgotten. The table was laden with good things to eat and all seemed to enjoy it. After dinner was served, Bro Hutto conducted a religious service of prayer, testimony, and songs of the long ago. All hearts were lifted up. Those present were: Rev. Geo. C. Hutto, Rev. Jno. M. Neal, R. R. Mobley and wife, F. P. Hilburn and wife, Mrs. Ben Harris, Mrs. J. A. ## BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION AT THE HILBUN HOME

Another delightful event was enjoyed the past week when a number of friends of Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Hilburn surprised them by arriving at their home last Thursday morning to spend the day in honor of "Daddy" Hilburn's 76th birthday.

A great feast, composed of good things brought in by the guests, was spread—and it was a birthday dinner fit for a king.

After dinner the time was fittingly spent in pleasant conversation, songs and thanksgiving. It was a great and happy event, and much appreciated by Mr. and Mrs. Hilburn.

The following, ages as noted, were present: Rev. Geo. C. Hutto 41, W. T. Hall 62, A. G. Nipper 74, C. B. Dickson 85, F. P. Hilburn 76, G. M. Hilburn 71, Mrs. W. E. Luttrell 66, Mrs. Geo.
