NO COTTON REPORT; EVERYTHING ALL WET

Cotton picking and ginning the past week has been approximately nil, account of rain, and more rain. So we'll make this week's cotton report next week, maybe. As this is put into type, the sky is clear—but that'll be all we have to say about the weather just now.

Train schedules have been a series of guessing contests for some days, owing to severe wash outs beyond Amarillo on the Canadian river, and lesser ones at various places. Clarendon suffered some damage from heavy rainfall, as did a number of other places.

No particular damage done in this community, so far as we know, but the editor, speaking for himself, rises to remark that all his present needs in the rain line have been fully supplied, and any more would be a plain case of overproduction.

INSIGNIA OF OUR WAR BIRDS

1st Pursuit Group

13th Attack of 3rd Attack Group

95th Pursuit 7th Bomb Group

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
THE next time you hear the drone of an airplane motor in the distance, run and get your field glasses and see if it is a United States army plane. (You will recognize it as an army plane, of course, by the familiar circle and star on the lower side of the wings.) If it is, look on the fuselage and see what the design is there. For all of our "war birds" now carry distinctive insignia and back of every one of them is an interesting story.

As everybody knows, the use of airplanes attained a swift development during the World war. At first there were no distinctive markings so that the aviators, winging their way through the clouds, had no means of knowing whether the airplane which they might encounter up there was friend or foe. There were a few exceptions to this rule, however. Baron Von Richtofen, the German ace, chose to paint his entire plane a brilliant red and no one could possibly have mistaken his plane for any other. Similarly the "Stork" squadron, led by the famous Frenchman, Capt. Charles Guynemyer, was easily recognized and when the Ninety-fourth squadron, United States Air service, appeared on the western front with the symbol of "Uncle Sam's Hat in the Ring," it meant that the United States was really in the war at last.

Later the planes of the Central Powers were decorated with an Iron Cross, and the Allied Powers with three concentric rings of red, white and blue. All insignia which were strictly national had been dropped and all of the Allied aircraft carried the same general identification so that the enemy plane could not tell whether one bearing the red, white and blue rings was French, English, American or Belgian. From the lessons learned during the World war, and also to perpetuate some of its history, there has evolved the distinctive markings of our army aircraft. So when you see these symbols on the sides of our army planes you are looking at the very latest development in "heraldry" and you are seeing emblematic history in the making.

It dates from as recent as September 19, 1923, when an air corps order authorized the various organizations in the corps to submit designs of coats-of-arms and other insignia for approval. Since then each aviation unit, including some which are organized as yet only on paper, has chosen its symbol and has had it approved. In order to understand clearly the symbolism of these insignia, it should be explained first that the air corps is made up of groups, each of which in turn is made up of two or more squadrons. The groups are designated by numbers and by description of their chief function—whether pursuit, attack, bombardment or observation. The squadrons are also designated by number and description of their functions, but in addition to the pursuit, attack, bombardment and observation squadrons, there are also service squadrons, those hard-working units, charged with engineering and repair work for the group of which they are a part.

In the air corps at the present time there are only four theoretically complete tactical units. They are: the First Pursuit group, stationed at Selfridge field, Mich., and composed of the Seventeenth, Twenty-seventh and Ninety-fourth Pursuit squadrons and the Fifty-seventh Service squadron; the Second Bombardment group, stationed at Langley field, Va., and composed of the Twentieth, Forty-ninth and Ninety-sixth Bombardment squadrons and the Fifty-ninth Service squadron; the Third Attack group, stationed at Fort Crockett, Galveston, Texas, and composed of the Eighth, Thirteenth and Ninetieth Attack squadrons and the Sixtieth Service squadron; and the Ninth Observation group, stationed at Mitchell field, Long Island, N. Y., and composed of the Ninety-ninth Observation squadron, the Sixty-first Service squadron and the Fourteenth Photo section.

Each group has its own coat of arms and in addition to this coat of arms, each squadron has its own insignia. Under the order of September 19, 1923, all insignia must conform to the following general regulations: they must be of "real value" to the service, simple and yet possess some historic significance. They must be dignified and in good taste. They should tell a picture story significant of the organization. And of course they should be distinguishable in the air. On the other hand, the same order sets forth what they should or should not be. Insignia may not contain numerals, the letters U. S., the air corps insignia, the American flag, the United States coat-of-arms or any part of it, the complete arms of any state or country, outlines of geographic maps, foreign decorations, etc. It was this prohibition of using "the United States flag or any part of it" which brought about the passing of the famous "hat-in-the-ring" symbol.

The coat-of-arms of the First Pursuit group has a shield of green with five diagonal black stripes, representing the five organizations of the group when it was in active service. Green and black were the original colors of the air corps. Under the stripes are five Iron Crosses, representing the five major engagements of the World war in which this group participated. Most significant of the mission of this group is the crest—a bird of prey, representing the high altitudes at which pursuit planes work. In this field a winged arrow darts downward, as does the pursuit plane in its attack. And over all is the motto "Aut Vincere Aut Mori" (Conquer or Die), which is exactly what pursuit craft must do. Having no defensive armament to their rear, these planes must fight it out to the end, for to turn tail would be to perish.

The coat-of-arms of the Second Bombardment group is very simple but it tells a story in a striking manner. The shield is a cloudy blue (significant of the sky) surmounted by five "palets" (or scallops) of alternate green and black, representing the five major engagements—Cantigny, Aisne-Marne, St. Mihiel, Chateau Thierry and Meuse-Argonne—in which the group fought. In the center of the five palets is a fleur de lis, symbolical of the organization's service in France. In the lower half of the shield four blue and gold bombs plunge downward and in the crest is a patch of blue sky, ringed with clouds, across which darts a jagged streak of lightning, denoting the suddenness and deadliness with which the bombs strike. The motto is self-explanatory: "Mors et Destructio" (Death and Destruction).

The Third Attack group is the baby of the air corps and the group as such has no war history, although its various squadrons has, as indicated by the 19 Iron Crosses in the border of the shield on the coat-of-arms, representing the number of enemy planes which members of these squadrons shot down during the World war. The crest is a knight's helmet and a pair of wings, symbolical of the knight errantry of an army aviator in an attack plane. The motto is "Non Solum Armis" (Not by Arms Alone).

Observation pilots are not primarily fighters, in the sense that pursuit, attack and bombardment pilots are, for their job is to fly over the lines and learn the disposition of the enemy forces. But they must also fight off attack in order to get back to their hangars safely. So the coat-of-arms of the Ninth Observation group proves that its members have been fighters, for across the shield is a line of four Iron Crosses which have a double symbolism—that the group participated in four major engagements in France and that it brought down the greatest number of enemy planes, four, in any one engagement. The crest of this outfit carries evidence of the fact that one of its squadrons was the first ever organized in the United States army, that it was the first ever to take part in an American military expedition and that it was living up to its motto of "Semper Paratus" (Always Ready) before the World war. The crest is a branch of cactus around which a rattlesnake is coiled. This represents the service of the First Aero squadron with Pershing's expedition into Mexico. Downward across the black and green shield runs a wavy white line which represents the Rio Grande.

The coat-of-arms usually is carried on only one plane in a group—the plane flown by the group commander. But the squadron insignia is worn by all the planes in that squadron and it is in the squadron symbols that you will see the greatest variety of emblems—the bizarre, the unusual, the humorous, the sinister and the patriotic—but all significant.

From the character of the pursuit squadrons' duties, one would naturally expect these units to use symbols indicating the idea of the chase. So the Seventeenth Pursuit squadron of the First Pursuit group has for its insignia a snowy owl swooping down upon its prey—this bird also symbolizing the Arctic weather experienced five miles aloft at which elevation pursuit aviation fights. The Twenty-seventh Pursuit squadron of this same group has a hawk diving down to attack and the Ninety-fourth Pursuit squadron (the old "Hat-in-the-Ring" outfit) has the Indian uttering his war-whoop as he pursues the enemy. But the element of the chase is not evident in the symbols of all the pursuit outfits, as witness the insignia of the Ninety-fifth Pursuit squadron of the Seventh Bombardment group, now stationed at Rockwell field in California. It is a white mule doubled up, ready to give a mighty wallop to an enemy. The natural interpretation, of course, is that this is an army mule and every one knows the danger that lies in the heels of this long-eared equine.

Closely akin to the idea expressed in the insignia of the pursuit squadrons is that of the attack units. One of the most striking of these is the "grim reaper" which tells of the work of the Thirtieth Attack squadron of the Third Attack group. This white skeleton strides across a dark background, moving as he goes with a yellow scythe, the blade of which is dripping with red, thus indicating vividly how an attack plane destroys troops and supply trains on the ground with machine gun fire and light bombardment.

The Ninetieth Attack squadron of the Third Attack group has an insignia which is more humorous than indicative of its war record. It consists of two red dice, showing two "naturals" which are indicative of the seven enemy planes which members of the squadron brought down during the World war. It served as a corps observation squadron in the 70th sector, at St. Mihiel and in both battles of the Meuse-Argonne and as an observation unit its job was to avoid fights. But as a matter of fact, it engaged in 23 aerial battles, winning seven victories and suffering three casualties, two killed and one wounded.

One of the best known of all the squadron insignia is that of the Twentieth Bombardment squadron of the Second Bombardment group. It is a sweeping-mustached, vicious-grinning pirate flashing to attack with a grenade in hand. He trends upon a horizontal aerial bomb with two bands and eleven Iron Crosses, recalling the major offensives in which the squadron participated during the World war and the eleven enemy planes which it brought down while defending itself on its bombing raids over the lines. A red devil thumbing his nose at his target (whatever that target may be) on the ground and holding an aerial bomb is the insignia of the Ninety-sixth Bombardment squadron of the Second Bombardment group.

The fact that Observation squadrons sometimes fight, although that is not primarily their duty, is reflected in the insignia of the Ninety-first Observation squadron, stationed at San Francisco. It shows an armored knight on his richly-caparisoned horse, bearing a shield upon which appears a doublecross, in pursuit of a red devil and prodding him in the rear with his lance. Not so grim as the insignia of the other three branches of an air corps group are the symbols of the Service squadrons, whose hard-working members "keep the fighters in the air." A beaver, symbol of their busy life, is worn by the Fifty-ninth Service squadron of the Second Bombardment group. The emblem of the Fifty-seventh Service squadron of the First Pursuit group is a hawk with a broken wing, perched on a post, while that of the Sixty-sixth Service squadron shows a large gear wheel, with four smaller gears radiating from the master gear at 90 degree intervals. This latter squadron is part of the Composite group in the Philippine islands and the four smaller gears represent the four squadrons of a well-balanced Composite group—Pursuit, Attack, Bombardment and Observation.

Trace Negro Spirituals to Christian Teaching

For several years Prof. N. G. J. Balanta, a native of West Africa, has been engaged in an effort to trace the sources and history of negro spirituals. His findings were recently published by the commission on interracial co-operation. The spiritual now in vogue is based on primitive African rhythm, but its present form and development are due largely to Christianity. "Christianity," says Professor Balanta, "was the force that breathed life into the innate musical talent of the African in his new environment. Far from his native land, despised by those among whom he lived, knowing the hard taskmaster, feeling the lash, the negro seized Christianity, the religion of compensations in the life to come for the ills suffered in the present existence. The result was a body of songs voicing all the cardinal virtues of Christianity—patience, forbearance, love, faith and hope—through a modified form of primitive African music."—Pathfinder Magazine.

Swiftest, Easiest Way to End Bilious Spell

When you neglect those first symptoms of constipation—bad breath, coated tongue, listlessness, the whole system soon suffers. Appetite lags. Digestion slows up. You become headachy, dizzy, bilious. It's easy to correct sluggish bowel action! Take a candy Cascaret tonight. See how quickly—and pleasantly—the bowels are activated. All the souring waste is gently propelled from the system. Regular and complete bowel action is restored. Cascarets are made from pure cascara, a substance which doctors agree actually strengthens bowel muscles. All drug stores have Cascarets. 10c.

Island May Be Abandoned

Lanzarote, the most easterly of the Canary islands, may be abandoned because of the drought which has prevailed there for more than six years. No rain has fallen in that time, and all the water supply on the island has been exhausted. Many farmers are preparing to leave. Cereals and white wine are the chief products of Lanzarote, which is said to have been named in honor of Lancelot Malocello, who re-discovered it in 1270, and is one of the "Islands of the Blessed" of the ancient Greeks.

What the automobile has taught women about household lubrication

Experience with motor cars has taught women that moving parts must be protected against wear by a film of oil. Many of them haven't learned, however, that moving parts of sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, lawn mowers, washers, and other mechanical devices must also be protected against dirt and rust. 3-in-One Oil not only lubricates; it also cleans and protects. It is different from all others, because it is a scientific blend of three high grade oils—animal, mineral and vegetable. 3-in-One is the oil you should use on mechanical equipment if you want best results. Don't risk your expensive household devices by using oil that does only half the job. Insist on the old reliable 3-in-One. It costs little more to buy and much less to use. At good stores everywhere, in 15c and 30c sizes. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

Go ahead and quote your statistics. Nobody can answer you.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"

---METHODISTS

Here is a tremendously important announcement, of special interest to members of the Methodist Church. Some of you will be shocked by this unbelievable news, but it is absolutely true. If you don't believe it, come and see and hear for yourself. Well, here it is:

We are still having preaching services at 11 and 7:30 o'clock each Sunday. We have quite a good roof over the building that does not leak, so that even when there is a little mist people may keep dry during the service. Furthermore—if you don't believe this, come and see—we have gas stoves in the Church so that it is about as comfortable as the average home, and say, we have good comfortable pews to sit on. And we want you to be on hand and see for yourself next Sunday.

Every Methodist was in his place in the Church last Sunday, except about one hundred and seventy-five. The fact is that there is entirely too much uncovered wood facing the preacher these Sundays, so if you Methodists mean business, let's get in the harness and quit layin' out and leaving it to somebody else.

The Electric Man Presents His Low-Cost Burglary Insurance

"Police records show that sufficiently lighted houses rarely suffer depredations from prowlers or thieves. For this reason, many people make it a practice to leave lights burning when they spend a part of the evening away from home. On their return, they feel secure in the knowledge that their possessions have been safe in the keeping of protective lighting.

"Normal household necessities utilize the first two steps, so with the new Home Comfort rate, this burglary insurance is even more economical, for it is billed on the low rate of 4c per kilowatt-hour—3c where service is also used for heating or cooking.

"The next time you spend an evening out—leave lights burning in one or two of your rooms. Notice the sense of security with which you enter your home—then check your light bill. You will be surprised at the extreme economy of this efficient Burglary Insurance. Watch for me next week, I'll have some more ideas for you."

Rulers of Soviet Russia Demoralize Wheat Markets of the World.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SOVIET Russia does with her might what her hands find to do, especially if it is something that may annoy and embarrass the "capitalistic" nations—meaning all that are not Soviets. Of late the Communist dictators in Moscow have been devoting much attention to wheat, selling short on the Chicago Board of Trade and dumping grain on the European markets at cut prices, resulting in the lowest prices for wheat in many years and much indignation and alarm in various countries.

The Russian operations on the Chicago board were made public by Secretary of Agriculture Hyde, who asked the officials of that organization to do something about it. Those gentlemen, while instituting an investigation, intimated that as the board was open to the world for trading they might not be able to do much to prevent such hedging in the future. Anyhow, these operations were in themselves far less important and portentous than the dumping of Russian wheat and the evident fact that Russia was becoming a serious competitor in the grain markets of the world with the United States, Canada, Argentina and other wheat-growing countries. The Soviet rulers absolutely control the production and marketing of grain in Russia, and though that country is not yet producing enough for its own needs, they are keeping the inhabitants on short rations and selling the grain abroad because they need the money. Soon, maybe by next year, their system of mass production aided by the use of American farm machinery will be in full effect, and apparently the farmers of other countries will have to meet the situation by similar mass production methods, or go under.

DURING the week many suggestions for relief were made in many quarters. A Rumanian in the League of Nations assembly pleaded for a European preferential tariff to protect the farmers of eastern Europe. The Swedish head of a great Argentine wheat firm said the best method would be for the world to boycott Russian wheat. In the Baltic states there were demands for government action against the Russian dumping that threatened the ruin of local industries and traders. Four representatives of the Canadian grain trade sailed for London with the dominion premier and other cabinet members to attend the imperial conference opening October 1, making it likely that the grain situation would be considered by the conference.

Officials of the American Farm Bureau federation, the National Grange and the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative union announced they had been investigating the disastrous wheat slump situation and would report their findings soon. The farm federation, Secretary Winder states, has had under consideration for some time legislation designed to more thoroughly regulate the boards of trade to "prevent just such manipulation as has occurred during the last few months." Congressman Fish of New York, chairman of the house committee on Communist activities, summoned the members of the committee to Chicago for a hearing on the Russian short selling on the Chicago board.

Toward the close of the week wheat prices recovered somewhat in the United States and Canada, due to liberal buying and to reports that the Russian interests were covering their short deals. In Chicago the Russian scare was regarded as about passed, but from London came a dispatch saying that Canadian and Russian grain was competing for sales and that American hard winter wheat was in small demand.

PROSPECTS for early disarmament of Europe, or even a reduction of it, were put on the slide when recently announced at Geneva that negotiations between France and Italy for settlement of their naval problems had been discontinued. The only point of agreement between the two governments, said one of the Italian experts, was on the naval building holiday to last until the end of the year. Some of the League of Nations delegates, including the British, seemed to think it would be at least advisable to postpone the conference of the League preparatory disarmament commission, scheduled for November 3.

The French and the Italians blame each other for the failure of the conversations, but at this distance the Italians appear to have the better of the argument. After France refused the Italian suggestion that British experts aid in the conferences, Italy, still insisting that her right to naval parity with France be nominally admitted, proposed a new yardstick whereby the number of units as well as tonnage would be considered. The plan would give France a big advantage in actual tonnage between 1930 and 1936. France rejected the offer and made a counter proposal which Italy considered so drastically unfavorable to her that it could not be considered.

THIS Franco-Italian situation, in the opinion of some observers, may imperil the three-power London agreement, because England depends on a satisfactory reduction of the French and Italian naval programs in order to maintain the two-power standard which she insists upon for the British navy. It may well mean, too, the renewal next year of the naval building race among the powers, and it is likely to have effect on the debates in the next congress of the United States.

J. J. Loudon of Holland, chairman of the League preparatory disarmament commission, outlined before the assembly commission the status of the general question, and despite the Italo-French deadlock pledged the commission would meet November 3.

"Apart from naval questions, there are the questions of available man power, war material and budgetary expenditures and the matter of creating a permanent disarmament committee as well as dealing with arbitration and security," he said. "We are determined to reach a conclusion in November and the January council can then fix the date for a general disarmament conference."

CHANG, dictator of Manchuria, has moved emphatically to put an end to the civil war in China. His armies marched to Peiping, occupying Tientsin on the way, and taking possession of the old capital city posted proclamations demanding that the fighting cease and assuring peace to northern China. Chang gained complete control of Chihli province without the firing of a single shot, and his troops settled down for a long stay. The leaders of the northern rebel alliance withdrew to the mountains of Shansi province and their future movements were uncertain.

The collapse of the rebellion and the action of the Manchurian warlord lead the Soviet Russian government to consent to the opening of the Chinese-Russian conference in Moscow on October 11. Russia had been holding up this meeting in the hope that the Nationalist government would fall.

SENATOR NYE'S campaign investigating committee went to Lincoln, Neb., and learned a lot about the Republican senatorial primary campaign in that state that is pleasing to the insurgent Republicans and correspondingly annoying to the Republican national senatorial committee. It appears from the evidence that George W. Norris, young grocer of Broken Bow, was induced to enter the primary in order to force Senator George W. Norris to run as an independent, and that the scheme was engineered by Victor Seymour, now assistant vice chairman of the above mentioned senatorial committee. Witnesses said Grocer Norris received a $500 bond after completing his filing.

NICHOLAS ROOSEVELT as vice governor of the Philippines was decidedly obnoxious to the natives, who asserted he was against independence for the islands and also was out of sympathy with and prejudiced against the Filipino people and Orientals in general. Therefore Mr. Roosevelt wrote to President Hoover last week that his usefulness there was impaired and it was best for him to retire. The President accepted the resignation "reluctantly" and immediately announced the appointment of Mr. Roosevelt as minister to Hungary. In that post he will succeed J. Butler Wright, who will be made minister to Uruguay to succeed Leland Harrison, resigned. Who will be vice governor of the Philippines was not announced.

NEW YORK Republicans went wet in their state convention and nominated for governor Charles H. Tuttle, who recently resigned as federal prosecutor in New York city. The liquor plank, adopted over the strenuous objections of the dries, favors repeal of the Eighteenth amendment and restoration to each state of the right to deal with the liquor problem as its citizens see fit, but with the proviso that the saloon system and private traffic in intoxicating beverages be outlawed everywhere by the Constitution.

KENNETH MACKINTOSH, a member of President Hoover's law enforcement commission, says that when that body reconvenes on October 8 he will insist that it "go to the guts of the prohibition question." He regards the issue as one of the most important economic and social problems since the question of slavery, and wants the commission to say whether or not the dry law is enforceable, and if not, what can be done about it. Former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, who is being boomed by his admirers for the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1932, has just returned from Europe and in the interviews he granted he made it evident that if he is a candidate it will be on a wringing wet platform.

CHILE'S government frustrated an attempt at military revolution which was started at Concepcion. Five Chilean exiles landed there in an airplane and tried to induce the garrison to revolt. They were at once arrested by military authorities, as were later a number of others, officers in the army. The plane used by the exiles was piloted by two Americans, Edward O. De Lorin and Reed S. Doyle.

A DOLF HITLER, head of the rampant Fascists of Germany, declares his party intends to destroy the treaty of Versailles, by legal means if possible, otherwise by means looked upon by the world as illegal. Hitler made this assertion when he was called as a witness at the trial of three reichswehr officers accused of treason. "The National Socialists do not regard the international agreement as law, but as something forced upon us," he said. "Germany is gagged by the peace treaties. We do not acknowledge our guilt in the war, especially not the guilt of future generations. When we shall oppose these treaties by every possible means we shall find ourselves in the midst of revolution."

"We shall oppose these treaties both diplomatically and by completely evading them. That may be looked upon by the world as an illegal method, but we will not employ it until the party has been victorious. After two or three more elections our party will be in the majority."

Again and again he stated with emphasis and emotion that he was planning no armed revolt. "We don't need an armed revolt," he said, "all we need is another election."

Encouraged by the success of the Hitlerites in Germany, the Fascists of Austria brought about the downfall of the Schober cabinet.

DEATHS of the week included those of Representative Charles M. Stedman of North Carolina, last of the Civil war veterans in congress; Henry Phipps, retired steel magnate; Dr. J. T. Torrance, originator of condensed soup; Frederick L. Mandel, leading Chicago merchant; Mrs. Emma Ashford of Nashville, Tenn., composer of "Abide With Me" and other sacred music; Philo A. Otis, a civic leader in Chicago, and Gen. Sir Bryan Mahon, eminent soldier who commanded the British troops in Gallipoli.

Can I Learn to Fly?

by William R. Nelson

With Stick and Rudder

TURNING an airplane requires coordination of hands, feet and eyes, and sense of balance in a manner so new to me that, after several pretty bad attempts, I felt certain I would never be able to learn. Thirty minutes of practice proved my fears unfounded.

"Today I want you to make turns using both stick and rudder," my instructor said just before we started. "To turn right, lean the stick to the right and at the same time, push forward on the right foot pedal. When the plane has banked as much as you think necessary for the turn, bring the stick back to neutral and hold the turn with the rudder."

I tried it in the air and felt clumsy when the plane wallowed suddenly. For a moment I could not tell where we were nor in what direction we were headed. Before I could become frightened I felt the controls move and my instructor spoke through the phones in my ears.

"Make both movements fairly slow and firm. Don't hold the stick over so long or we will continue banking into a roll. Now try it again, the other direction."

I let the nose climb in several succeeding turns. In fact, in 15 or 20 minutes of right and left turns I unknowingly climbed 1,000 feet. My instructor had been teaching me another lesson—to watch horizon and my instruments.

He took charge and spiraled down 1,000 feet after which I resumed practice of turns.

"If your turn is too shallow the ship will skid," he said next. "In a skid, note that your body sways toward the outside of the turn and the wind strikes that side of your face."

With that he turned in a shallow bank and I felt the blast of air and my body hug the side of the plane.

"If you bank too sharply the plane will slip toward the inside of the turn and you will feel the blast of air on that side of your face."

We banked almost vertically and turned to the right. I felt the blast of air on my right cheek and my body swayed to that side. We were slipping earthward as we turned. My instructor brought the ship back to level and turned around to look at me—studying my face to make certain his "examples" had made the impression he desired.

Flying a Pattern

HOW to fly a "pattern"—a square course about the field that starts from the ground, into the wind, and ends in a glide to earth, also into the wind, putting down approximately where the take-off started—is next taught. It starts "take-off and landing" practice.

My instructor taxied out to the starting point, zigzagging constantly to "clear" the blind spot caused by the motor ahead of us. After the two steps for "a look around" for other planes, he "blasted" the motor and we headed into the wind.

"Stay on the controls with me but be light on them," he instructed through the speaking tube connected to my helmet. "Notice that I push the throttle open slowly but steadily and as the ship starts forward I also push the stick forward."

"As I do that the tail will come up to flying position. I'll hold the stick forward for a few seconds as we run along the ground, then allow it to come back slowly, finally pulling it toward me slightly to increase the angle of climb."

With that he "gave 'er the gun" and we were off. At 1,000 feet we leveled off, he cut the motor's speed to "cruising" or 1,450 r. p. m. and signaled for me to make a right turn.

I made the turn, after a fashion, leveled out again, flew a quarter of a mile straight, then, at his command, turned right again. A mile straight ahead he called for another right turn and after I made it, cut the motor to idling and signaled for a glide.

"About every 15 seconds open the throttle until all cylinders 'bit,' then cut it again," he said through the tube. "We 'clear' the motor to make certain it will function properly when we need it."

About opposite our starting point I turned right again, still gliding—with his frequent assistance—and headed for the field. About 20 feet from the ground, measured perpendicularly, he spoke again.

"Now begin to work the stick back slowly. Not too fast. Feel the tail going down? Don't let the nose climb. Feel that settling?"

The next instant we touched the ground. We were soon away again on another trip around the "pattern." Eight times we went around the same. Each time I seemed to "mess things up" and was greatly relieved when I felt my mistakes corrected.

German Rulers of England

The man who was said to have ruled England, but did not speak English was George I. He was not the nearest heir to the throne, but succeeded by an act of parliament. He was duke of Brunswick, elector of Hanover. His son, George II, spoke only very broken English. George III was the first of the line to be born on English soil.

SATIN MORE POPULAR THAN EVER; GAY PLAIDS FOR SPORTS WEAR

YOU never can tell as to fickle fashion's moves. There's this matter of satin, for instance. One would have thought that it would have been granted a leave of absence this season, seeing that it has been so continuously appearing on the style program. On the contrary, satin is more popular than ever. The chic of satin for immediate wear is asserted not only for the frock, but the suit tailored of this material is one of the outstanding items for fall.

The interesting thing about this vogue is that all sorts of satin are ap-answered most gaily in terms of bright handsome plaids. Just such stunning outfits as the plaid jumper dress with wrap to match as shown in the lower picture promise a season or colorful modes for the sportswoman and the schoolgirl.

Paris proclaims the smartness of plaid throughout daytime fashions, showing no partiality between cotton, rayon, silk or woolen weaves for the blouse to be worn with the autumn suit or for the town, travel, school or sports frock. French couturiers are even making the blouse to be worn proved by stylists. That is, both shir- and dull satin is favored. Black is most important. The stunning gown in the picture bespeaks the handsome styling being given to satin for afternoon wear. The dainty yoke and the puffs at the wrist are beaded, for beadwork is recognized as a leading trimming touch this season.

Many of the new satin dresses sound the black-and-white note in that they are detailed with white satin trimmings worked with that air of newness which immediately attracts the eye. Much of the charm of the "last minute" frocks is right at the sleeve, in that it usually displays novel treatment in answer to the call of the 1930 mode. When not black with white for the satin gown, then turquoise and black is almost sure to be the alternat.

An occasional midnight blue or a deep brown sometimes varies the program of black satin for the daytime frock, either in crepe-back weave, or of highly lustrous heavy texture.

As to the tailored jacket-and-skirt suit of black satin, the smart set has adopted it as the costume ideal for practical daytime wear. Women who pride themselves on being style-wise with the cloth suit of plaid gingham.

All signs point to a predominance of plaid costumes at forthcoming fall outdoor events. The sports enthusiast at the golf tournament or in the grandstand at the ball game will be dressed to the occasion in just such attractive plaid as is here shown. This jumper dress is made of blue and yellow plaid ratine, a material being particularly practical for hard usage in that it is sturdy of weave and, best of all, washes to look like new. Black buttons on this frock emphasize by way contrast the bright colors of the plaid. The pockets are bound in black patent leather, which is also the material of the narrow belt.

The long-sleeved shirt-bouse is of yellow wool jersey. When topped with the little fitted plaid jacket this are wearing these natty lustrous trillieurs with handsome fur neckpieces and intriguing blouses and the effect is stunning.

Then, too, most every Paris cable stresses the smartness of satin for evening wear. Panned satin, which is very lustrous, evokes considerable interest.

Gay Plaids in Favor.

As far as the golf field, the tennis court and the campus are concerned the what-to-wear question is ensemble becomes a striking outfit for the shopper. The college girl seeking a fetching suit to wear here and there will make no mistake in selecting a model fashioned along these lines.

Considerable importance is attached to the jumper frock in the autumn style forecast. Especially does it promise to flourish in the classroom not only at high school and at college, but for all ages.

Few Insect Fighters

Able to Defeat Spider

The wasp and the hornet may be reckoned as formidable foes, but it would appear that the spider, for his size and weight, at least, is equal to anything he may come across. In a recent experiment a spider was pitted against a wasp in an inverted tumbler. The wasp scored the first point, biting off one of its opponent's legs; but in the next round the spider got in an inflexible bite, and the wasp died in a few minutes. Two other contests followed, and in each the spider came off victorious. The strong feature of the spider is its agility, and even in the uncongenial environment of a tumbler it evades attack with apparent ease. With the added advantage of a web, which provides not only lines of retreat and attack, but also serves to entangle and embarrass the enemy, the spider is a foeman whom even the boldest spirits in the insect world hesitate to attack.

Odd insomnia Cure

One of the most amusing cures for insomnia is that discovered by Percival Boyd. He is a member of the Society of Genealogists and, finding that he could not sleep, he embarked upon the task of compiling a complete index of the marriages that took place in England between 1538 and 1837.

He has already compiled a list of 1,400,000 in 139 volumes. So good is the index that the record of any marriage can be found in five minutes.

Boyd calculates that at the present rate of progress the work will take 100 years to complete. He can not go on any faster, because his task makes him so sleepy. He has found his cure.—Los Angeles Times.

Cheap Ice for City

A natural ice well, 172 feet underground from which crystal clear blocks of ice can be cut in hottest weather, is occasioning much interest at Rapid City, S. D. The well is located at the gypsum plaster mill at Black Hawk, seven miles north of Rapid City. In digging for gypsum at the plant, workmen sunk a shaft at the end of which a large hole was excavated in taking out gypsum. This filled with water to a depth of eight feet which freezes in summer and is coated with thick ice.

Inert Weight

Dead weight is the unrelieved weight of anything inert. It is supposed that the phrase was suggested by the popular notion that a dead body is heavier than a living one.

We Have Changed All That

By Herbert Quick and Elena Stepanoff Mac Mahon

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Co. WNU Service

Herbert Quick's visit to Vladivostok in 1920 on behalf of the Red Cross and his meeting with Elena Stepanoff led to this story. It came as an interlude in the composition of his epic of the Iowa soil—the three famous novels, "Vandemark's Polly," "The Hawkeye" and "The Invisible Woman," and the personal record of his early years, "One Man's Life." He desired to have its publication deferred till the last mentioned work—his autobiography—was finished. Then came his untimely death.

The reader familiar with his style will find its impress everywhere in "We Have Changed All That," and nowhere else perhaps does it appear to better advantage. Yet he was anxious that his collaborator, a woman of the untitled nobility, "a monarchist of the extreme right, but with the true Russian instinct for the virtues," should have a full share of credit.

"I am trying to make it," he said, "a real study of the life of the victims, the nobility, in the most striking dissolution of social values in history. The facts, the nuances of the life, and the plot in large measure, are furnished by my collaborator."

This brilliant and unique work gives new evidence of his power and sympathy. It is a masterly etching of the end of a great epoch, an etching in which the force of imagination is equalled by the skill of execution.

CHAPTER I

Kazan and the House of Krassin

The man wore a peasant's smock; but he was very terrible to the great lady who was showing him over her house. But that group of men who followed him—they were more terrible still. Yet, she could not conceal from him the feeling of contempt that she felt for him and for them as she opened one room after another for their inspection.

"That is one of the rooms," said she with that little half-contemptuous smile, as if at his ignorance of great houses, "into which we looked at first. Across here are the last rooms on this side. Enter, please!"

The man in the peasant's smock, followed by that terrible squad of armed men, felt the sting of her contempt. For he had been in great houses before. This peasant's smock—he wished that he could somehow make her understand that he had never worn it until liberty came to Russia in the dictatorship of the proletariat. He was confused and exasperated. Just as she had hoped he would be. So he turned from the door through which she had said they had been before—just as, with held breath, she had hoped he would do; and he entered the room across the hall when the strong, plain, distinguished old lady of the palace swung the door open for him.

The squad paused outside. The man in the peasant's smock entered—entered the luxurious boudoir of a lady! He strode across to the other end of the room, and threw aside a beautiful Persian hanging. He pressed rudely through into a bedroom. As he entered, a young girl rose from a chaise-longue on which she had been reclining, and stood before him in filmy negligee, her eyes wide with astonishment.

"Mother," gasped the girl, "what is the meaning of this?"

"It is an officer of the government," said the old lady, still breathing quickly, but more easily, as does the hen-pheasant when the search has passed her nest; "he is looking at the house. They thought we might have unoccupied rooms. I have explained to this gentleman."

"No gentleman!" he shouted with needless emphasis. "I am Tovarisch Vilinsky of the local government of the dictatorship of the proletariat! We are considering whether you ladies will not go out into the street and leave these rooms to the officers of the government!"

"Musia," said the old woman, "you may retire, my daughter, while we are busy here."

"Nothing doing!" said Vilinsky. "I don't feel so much in a hurry as I did before I came in here. This room," said he to his clerk, but looking meaningfully at the girl, "will remain just as it is. I like the furniture. I like everything in it. Come, my dear, play us some music. I feel like enjoying myself today!"

Does the reader comprehend the situation?

Scarcely, unless he or she was in Kazan in those times—or at least, in Russia. Perhaps we may make it easier to understand.

To the eyes of travelers pressing eastward that day from Moscow or Petrograd, either by railway or by boat on the Volga, the ancient city of Kazan lay sprawled abroad shimmering in the hot sun of midsummer.

It is, if one may guess that anything but chaos and famine in the Volga basin still "is," the center of Mohammedan culture in eastern Russia, and of Christian culture, too, for it is the site of the great cathedral of the Annunciation.

In its still sands, one may suppose, the old Bogoroditsky convent in which the miracle-working Black Virgin of Kazan once had her home, before she was ravished away by higher powers which cared for religious relics, first, centuries ago to Moscow, and then, centuries later, to St. Petersburg—where, it appears, her miracles have been less frequent than they were formerly.

With her oriental eye Kazan looked away across the Admiralty suburb, where Peter the Great built his river fleet for his campaigns against Persia, down her pretty little river the Kazanka, to where the Volga, the Russian Mississippi, flowed, almost dry on this day in comparison with the floods that sometimes roll into the purlieus of Kazan; looked on across the Volga, over mysterious distances to mysterious eastern places, to Perm, to Ufa, down to Saratov, and on to Astrakhan.

But Kazan had an eye of the occident, too. With this she contemplated her railway line from Moscow, her factories of soap—of which her population just now seemed much in need; her other factories of leather goods, military boots, munitions of war; and—to go with the munitions—of sacred images and candles; of cotton cloth, woollens and bells.

There were many travelers who sought for a first glance of it, and thought it only a little dirtier than of yore. They were of all sorts; but those who thought of the dirt are worth noting. They talked among themselves of the house of Krassin, where at this moment Tovarisch Vilinsky is asking Musia Krassin to play for him.

Such travelers were all sorts of clothes, and a few were in uniform. All their clothes were or had once been of good quality. Some of these men had never seen Kazan, or had seen her rarely; but they were crowding into the city because most of them were, under the laws of the old empire, legal residents of the town, because their ancestors had been registered there. They were of the caste of the plain, proud old woman who had fluttered away from her secret with Tovarisch Vilinsky down there in the Krassin house—a part of the history of Great Russia, with authority, great estates, immense power and wealth, and back a few decades, with the serf and the knout in their systems.

They were going down to Kazan for another sitting of the great Court of Fate in which went on the trial of their souls; a court in which were also on trial the souls of Tovarisch Vilinsky, of the squad of armed men with him, and the soul of Mrs. Krassin with her secret room, and her blond-haired daughter, Musia. Russia was a great wine-press in which the grapes were being crushed—and the grapes were the souls of men and women.

Gulls Which Keep to Shore

The black-head gulls of Europe, unlike the ordinary seagulls common along the coast of this country, are not sea-going birds. They will not follow ships day after day, but keep themselves well within reach of land. In fact, they are not adverse to flying inland and feeding in new-plowed land, on insects, worms and larvae.

The gulls breed from the British Isles east through Europe, as far as Turkestan. In winter they range all the way from the Azores to Japan, living largely along the shores, on crustaceans, small fish and any food which finds its way into the waters along the shores.

Citrus

One evening Mr. Brown was seated in the living room reading the paper when his little son John, age five, approached him, and asked:

"Papa, what is a lemon?"

"Why, a lemon is a citrus fruit. It's something that causes a bitter taste in your mouth," his father replied.

"Well, papa, if mother gives me that bad medicine tonight, will she be a lemon," Johnny inquired.

No in Either Case

Richard Brinsley Sheridan (1751-1816), Irish dramatist and politician, and Edmund Burke (1729-1797), English statesman and orator, are both credited with the pun which follows. When asked to pay at least the interest on a sum owed, the impatient but witty reply was:

"It is not to my interest to pay the principal, nor is it my principle to pay any interest."

Where Andree Perished

Wellman's Map, Showing Frithjof Nansen Land, Where Andree's Body Was Found.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

FRITHJOF NANSEN LAND (formerly Franz Josef Land) has, after a third of a century, given up the body of August Andree, believed to have been lost forever in the Arctic ice.

The Swedish explorer disappeared in his balloon in 1897, north of Spitzbergen close to the place at which Noble's dirigible later disappeared. Explorers were at first hopeful that he had drifted eastward to Franz Josef Land. Walter Wellman, assisted by the National Geographic Society, led an expedition to Franz Josef Land the following year and thought it likely that he would find Andree at Cape Flora, on one of the southernmost of the islands which was known by Andree to be a headquarters and a frequent point of call for explorers. Andree was not at Cape Flora, however, and no trace of him or his balloon was ever found in Franz Josef Land until a few weeks ago.

Although the islands are desolate and ice-mantled and have never been inhabited, it is possible for men to exist there, even through the winter, as the history of Arctic exploration proves. The land was discovered accidentally in 1873 by an Austro-Hungarian expedition bent on finding the northeast passage. Their ship, caught in the ice, drifted to the southern extremity of the island group, and the crew wintered in her fast in the ice.

In 1881 a British party of 25, its ship crushed, wintered on shore, living partly on bear and walrus meat. Wellman and his companions spent the winter of 1898-99 on shore, and the Zeigler expedition wintered over in 1904-5.

Group of Many Islands.

Its Austro-Hungarian discoverer named the land "Franz Josef Land" under the impression that it was a large land mass, perhaps even of continental size. Later exploration disclosed that it is a group of many islands. Thirty of these are ten miles or more in length and the remainder—scores of them—are small. Several of the islands are as much as 50 miles long. The group lies slightly farther north than Spitzbergen, and its center is as far east of King's bay as New York is east of Detroit. It is as far north of the Murman coast of Russia and the northern coast of Norway as Chicago is north of New Orleans. It is about the same distance from the North pole.

The land's name was recently changed to Frithjof Nansen Land by a vote of the Russian Association of Science. The island group's new name is appropriate because the islands were the scene of one of the most dramatic episodes in the life of the late Frithjof Nansen. The land which has been named for him literally saved his life and preserved him for the valuable humanitarian career that reached a climax when he, in cooperation with Herbert Hoover, saved the lives of millions of famine-stricken Russians.

Nansen took a small party on board the specially constructed vessel Fram and entered the ice floes of northern Siberia in 1893 with the hope of drifting with the ice across the North pole. They drifted for 35 months, locked in the ice, without sighting land and without a single contact with the world. Nansen and his crew were believed to be lost.

When Nansen found that the Fram was not drifting toward the pole, he determined to dash, with a single companion, over the ice to the top of the world. Johansen was picked to go with him. They took three sledges, 22 dogs and two kayaks ( Eskimo canoes). They did not attain their objective, but they made a new "farthest north," 86 degrees and 12 minutes, just 225 miles south of the pole. From their northernmost point the two men turned south and began one of the longest marches ever made over Arctic ice. Finally they were reduced to two dogs.

After many days they reached Eva

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

What Became of William Turner?

AMONG the many interesting and curious facts connected with the history of individuals or nations there are few which possess the grim, compelling qualities of the "disappearance cases"—the instances in which human beings have apparently vanished from the face of the earth, never to be heard from again. But if, in addition, the affair is complicated by the identification of a body which is supposed to be that of the missing person, the matter becomes one of national and sometimes international prominence.

But the apparent impossibility of identifying even near relatives is well illustrated by a case decided in the English vice-chancellor's court in connection with a suit in which the plaintiff wished to establish the fact that a certain William Turner had come to his death.

Turner had last been seen on May 7, while he was being entertained at Guildford. He then presented an emaciated appearance, he was unkempt and unshaven and there were many who were of the opinion that his mind was unsettled and weak. Ten days later a body was found in the River Wey, and at the inquest which was summoned on the same day, two men named Etherington swore that the corpse was that of their father, who was missing at the time.

The friends who had entertained Turner at Guildford, on the other hand, declared their belief that the body was that of William Turner, but it was nevertheless interred as that of Philip Etherington. A colored handkerchief was found around the neck of the body and this article assisted in the ultimate identification of the corpse some months later when Philip Etherington, supposedly drowned and buried, walked calmly into his daughter's house and told a rambling story of why he had not previously appeared.

The question as to the identity of the drowned man was then revived in earnest. The proofs were, to the minds of most people, clearly brought out at last, for William Turner had left behind him at Guildford a fragment of a handkerchief which was found to correspond with the one discovered around the neck of the drowned man. To the vice-chancellor's mind the chain of evidence was complete and satisfactory and judgment was given that William Turner had come to this death by drowning. Yet the two sons of Philip Etherington had positively identified this same body as that of their father, whom they had seen every day for more than thirty years, and with whose facial and bodily characteristics they would be supposed to be as familiar as with their own.

Moreover, in spite of the fact that Turner was quite prominent in the community, most of those who knew him agreed with the Etheringtons as to the identity of the body, despite the fact that they also claimed that there was little similarity between the appearance of Turner and Etherington during life. Nor did decomposition of the features enter into the matter in the least, for the common notion that the human body decomposes rapidly in water is contrary to the fact for, especially during winter or in the months when the water is cold and if the body remains below the surface, the features were often remarkably well preserved. Identification may therefore be comparatively easy, because of—rather than in spite of—the fact that the body has been immersed in water.

No case of a similar character ever created the sensation in England that the Turner affair did, for the reason that the body was not long enough in the water to distort the features in any way, yet neither the Turners, the Etheringtons nor their friends were able positively to identify the drowned man. At first he was buried as Etherington and later the stone above his grave was altered to read "Turner"—yet the latter's family and friends have never been wholly satisfied that it was his body that was interred there.

His Advice

The dean of a certain English cathedral was one day walking through the precincts when he came upon a laborer at work. The man looked up at him, and went on with his work without touching his cap. The dean was annoyed, and stopped.

"My man," he said, reprovingly, "do you know who I am? I am the dean of this cathedral."

The laborer looked at the dean, and then glanced up at the magnificent building.

"Darned good place, too," he said, "Mind you keep it!"

Noise Lowers Efficiency

Complete sleep and rest is impossible in many parts of New York city and a state of emergency exists, declares the noise abatement committee in its first report. Noise in that city is increasing each year. "The continual pressure of strident sound to which New Yorkers are subjected," it is asserted in the report, "tends to produce impairment of hearing, to introduce harmful strain upon the nervous system leading to neurasthenic and psychasthenic states and to cause loss of efficiency of workers and thinkers."

Amazes Mother

"Bobbie's stomach was often upset and he suffered a lot from colds," says Mrs. P. S. Fletcher, Jr., 4410 W. 30th St., Los Angeles, Cal. "We found he was constipated."

"Mother used California Fig Syrup, so we gave Bobbie some. He amazed me by the quick way he became strong, energetic, well again. His bowels act freely now, and his digestion is splendid."

The quick, safe way to cleanse and regulate the bowels of bilious, headachy, constipated children is with California Fig Syrup. Every child loves it. It has the full endorsement of doctors. Appetite is increased by its use; digestion is assisted; weak stomach and bowels are given tone and strength.

Look for the word California on the carton. That marks the genuine, famous for 50 years.

Italian "Rescue Train"

The Italian government has equipped a special rescue train to serve in emergencies, such as earthquakes, volcanic eruptions and landslides. It is designed to give first aid, establish radio or telegraph communication and to reopen damaged railroad lines.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—
