Finally Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang decided it was better to give the Japa-nese no further excuse for carrying the warfare into North China, so he ordered all his forces to withdraw within the Great Wall, and this movement was begun immediately, accompanied by much confusion and the flight of the panic-stricken civilian population of the region. Thus the Japanese gained complete control of Manchuria and the gallant fight put up by General Ma Chan and by the troops directly under command of Marshal Chang has been in vain.

In Nanking the new coalition government was organized and a new cabinet appointed with Eugene Chen, leader of the Canton faction as minister of foreign affairs. It was thought that Chen might be able to negotiate a settlement with Japan on the basis of guarantees for fulfillment of treaties in exchange for military withdrawal of the Japa-

Moscow charges that Czecho-slovakia has been plotting to provoke war between Russia and Japan, presumably to promote the sale of war munitions. The story was that a Czech diplomat had tried to instigate the assassination of Koki Hirota, Japanese ambassador to Moscow, and the man accused turned out to be Carl Wanek, secretary of the Czech diplomatic mission to Moscow. The government at Prague recalled Wanek but itself was involved in any plot. Wanek has a reputation as a specia ist in military affairs in several large European countries, and counts among his associates the military attaches of several allied capitals.

The trouble on the northwest frontier of which Gand's spoke is giving Viceroy Lord Willingdon great concern. The anti-British red shirt organization staged violent riots near Peshawar and fought with the troops, many being killed and wounded.

Waste and extravagance in the federal government must be reduced, in the opinion of President Hoo ver, and many others as well, and is was announced at the White House that the President was preparing a special message to congress recommending the consolidation of departments and bureaus. He wants imdiate legislative action providing for grouping all construction activities of the government under one administrative head and the transfer of the shipping board and all federal merchant marine activities to the Department of Commerce.

According to a statement issued by the President, the purpose of the consolidations is to cut the cost of federal government, curtail the growth of independent bureaus, eliminate overlapping and promote efficiency. While refusing to set a definite figure indicating the savings which would follow the consolidations, Mr. Hoover said the grouping last year of all veterans' activities under the veterans' adminisBOTH federal reserve and commercial banking officials are severely criticized for their course with respect to the stock market collapse in the Acting under a resolution by Senator Glass to "make a complete survey of the national and federal reserve banking systems," the subcommittee is expected to bring in a bill to revise those systems in some particulars.

PRESIDENT HOOVER announced the appointment of the fourth member of the American delegation to the disarmament conference at Geneva, the man selected being Norman H. Davis of New York, who was undersecretary of state in the Wilson administration and chief financial adviser to the American delegation in the negotiations that resulted in the treaty of Versailles.

Later in the week the remaining delegate was appointed, he being Hugh Gibson, ambassador to Belgium, a veteran in such negotiations. As alternate in case any delegate cannot serve, Hugh Wilson, minister to Switzerland, was named. Arthur Henderson, former foreign secretary in the Labor government of Great Britain, told correspondents in Paris that he expects to preside over the arms conference, although he no longer is in office.

MEMBERS of the "progressive" group in the senate are again talking about a third party in the campaign of 1932, and are said to be considering three possible candidates-as suming, as they do, that President Hoover will be re-nominated by the Republican convention, and also assuming that the Democrats do not select a candidate to the liking of the The three the independents are talking about are Senator Borah of Idaho; Senator Hiram Johnson of California, who is sometimes too "regular" to suit a few of them, and Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, whose lightning rod is always up. Senator Norris of Nebraska will not let his name be considered.

The Republican independents, it is believed, would be satisfied with Franklin D. Roosevelt as the Democratic nominee, but his selection is no ore certain now than it has been for months. Newton D. Baker announced in Cleveland that he would not be a delegate to the Democratic convention. but neglected to say whether or not he would accept the nomination if it were offered him, Both he and Roosevelt were declared "available candidates" by Josephus Daniels in a statement given out in New York. There was a recrudescence of the story that Alfred E. Smith would again ask for the honor of leading his party, and a spokesman for "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, spectacular governor of Oklahoma, said that gentleman might be a candidate. And the chances of Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland must not be overlooked.

RAILROADS west of the Mississippi were granted authority by the interstate commerce commission to put recently authorized freight rate increases into effect on one-day notice. The increase order allowed five days for giving notice, instead of the customary thirty days.

The Southern Pacific Railroad company and its employees' organization reached a harmonious agreement on the wage reduction problem when 15,-000 shop employees accepted a 10 per cent cut in pay. The company notified the maintenance of way men that their wages would be reduced 15 per cent in thirty days.

There was a general expectation that the railway labor unions would accept a 10 per cent wage reduction effective about the middle of January as the result of conferences in Chicago and Cleveland, and that the Canadian unions would adopt the decision of the American unions.

FINLAND had a national referendum on the question of abolishing the country's prohibition laws, and on the hasis of early returns it was estimated that the 90 per cent of the Finns had voted wet. The result of the referendum will not finally decide the problem but will serve to guide the government.

A RCHBISHOP DIAZ, head of the Catholic church in Mexico, has instructed the priests and all other Catholics to disregard the new law passed by congress which limits to 25 the number of priests in the federal district. So the chances for renewed frees you from your kitchen!

FROM 1,500 to 2,000 hours annually, approximately one-fourth of the average Home-manager's time, are spent in the kitchen—cooking, preparing meals, washing dishes and tidying up.

An amazing figure? Yes, but there's an easy and modern way to transform many of these working hours into leisure hours!

Electric Cookery is the magic wand with which to effect this transformation, for with Electric Cookery you can prepare your meals at any convenient time, place them in the oven, set the automatic Time and Temperature Controls, and forget them! The cooking is done automatically, far better than by old-fashioned methods, and your meals are ready to serve, perfectly and deliciously cooked, at just the proper time! And because electric heat is clean, time spent in washing and scouring blackened pots and pens is eliminated. Save a large number of those wasted hours—install a modern Electric Range!

Service is billed on a surprisingly low rate schedule... and adds only a small amount to your total bill?

POOR MARCELLA

A Story of Persistent Love Δ

By FANNIE HURST

HEN she was eighteen, the only child of the Honorable Festus Martin had been painted by Delmar, presented at the court of St. James and introduced with formality to the official social life of Washington It was a quick transition from the busy, unremarkable life of Marcella Martin's childhood, as daughter of a prosperous manufacturer of radio parts, to the highly complex social plane achieved by Festus Martin after his growing wealth had enabled him to foster political ambitions, and after those ambitions had landed him in congress.

Undoubtedly it was the combination of Marcella's estate of only child, combined with the doting ambition of parents who could have loved her more wisely, which was accountable for the six years of rigid social disciplining which were imposed upon the protesting Marcella.

It was said of the Martins, laughingly, in certain Washington circles, that the adoring parents of this girl had actually succeeded in making over her face. A rather plain face, too long. with overhanging brow and dull brown hair entirely lacking in lights. But so often had this and that artist idealized it, and so long and arduously had schools of massage, dentistry and hairdressing, expended skill in improving it, that by the time she was eighteen, Marcella was indeed quite an improvement upon the lank, lusterless little girl of other days.

It can readily be imagined that the Martins spared neither time nor the most elaborate expenditures to launch successfully into an estate befitting her father's rank this idolized and only daughter.

The fact that she was diffident, frankly unsocial, unimpressed by wealth or station, unambitious along lines assiduously mapped out for her by her parents whose dreams of ulti-mate highest realization lay in this girl, only conspired to urge the elder Martins to maximum effort.

"Why, Marcella, another girl with your opportunities would be in her seventh heaven of delight. Doesn't it mean anything to you to have all the things your father's wealth and position can afford for you?"

"Of course it does, mother, only want them in my way. I'm no good at this social-round kind of thing. I don't like it chiefly, I guess, because I'm a failure at it. Don't force, mother. Can't you reconcile yourself to the fact that I'm not what you want me

No, neither of the parental Martins could. Festus Martin, as much as his more obvious wife, wanted this daughter a fitting complement to his achievements both official and social. His wife was that. A pretty, pamperedlooking woman with small eager ways and deep gold eyes that were brighter than, if not as profound, as her daugh-

"Emma," he confided to her once during one of their frequent contro versies about this problem of their girl, "I actually believe you still have more youth and social charm than Marcella. What is it ails the child? She's as fine a girl as you'll meet in thousand years, and yet-and yetno two ways about it-something's missing."

"It's her own fault, Festus, Marcella's heart isn't in living the life about her. That's what hurts me so. To think a girl with her opportunities doesn't appreciate them." Marcella's reaction to these implications of her doting parents was emotional and deeply sincere.

"Dears, don't you think It hurts me as much as it hurts you that I don't seem to live up to what you want of me? If only you could make up your minds that you're trying to make a silk purse out of-"

"Marcella Martin, nothing of the sort. You've ten times the sense and intelligence of the girls you compete with. Why, a man like Senator Morris wouldn't look at the swarms of silly girls who buzz around him, if you so much as took the trouble to exert yourself to interest him. That's what troubles us. dear. You have all the opportunities for success, including some very natural qualities of your own, and you won't use them."

The subject of Senator Morris was a mooted one in the Martin household. It seemed fitting to the parents of Marcella that the most eligible bachelor in Washington, one of the most outstanding members of the upper house, a man with much achieveme behind him and obviously again as much ahead, should be potential timber for Marcella. After all, the only child of a millionaire many times over, personable, probably the most all round educated young woman in the capital. traveled, informed and by no means without a certain quality of distinction, had the right to cast her eyes high. Anyway, the Martins felt that way about it, and spared neither time, ef-fort nor expense to the bringing together of these two.

It must be admitted, however, that these somewhat ingenuous and not always skilful efforts met with little

It is doubtful if in all the times he met Marcella, both in the Martin home and at public occasions, the beautifully gowned, jeweled, caparisoned little lady of longish face, bulging brow, deeply intent eyes and clear brown skin, ever more than passingly snagged his attention. Oh, yes, his reaction, if any, might have been: Martin's daughter! Said to be clever; but a solemn young lady with that dark brown look. Good enough fellow, Martin, if he knew enough to keep out of politics. Pretty little wife with soapsuds for brains.

Marcella's reactions, secret as her own sercretive-looking eyes, were not in line with the senator's. There resided in the makeup of this aggressive, massive-jawed, rough-haired member of the liberal wing of politics, qualities that were stirring within Marcella keen, new and exciting thrills.

The most interesting man in all Washington, the most interesting man in America, the most interesting man she had ever met, was the senator. Secret as were these deep-seated emotions, and imperturbable as her brown eyes continued to remain, that fact grew with the months. Secretly, Marcella was in love with Senator Morris.

That it was unrequited caused her neither bitterness nor undue pain. One just went on-alone-caring-hoping for the glimpse of him here and there, picking up crumbs of information of his comings and goings, and outwardly reconciled to defeat.

After a while, even the Martins became half reconciled to it. At twenty-four, Marcella simply had not made her dent. Her generation of debutantes had come and gone. Practically all of the girls who had made their bows the winter that the Marcella Martin coming-out ball was the crowning event of an eventful social season, were married now-rightly.

At twenty-five, something latent in Marcella rose and asserted itself.

Against the resistance of her parents, which she wore down with a highhandedness uncharacteristic of her, she enrolled in a school of social research, and after two winters of intensive work became allied with a settlement house in New York known as Mulberry Center.

Then began the happiest, most interested years of her life. When she was twenty-eight, Marcella was first assistant head of this large institution and an outstanding figure in her chosen

The Martins, in their way, were proud of this success. Of course it was miles and miles removed from what had been their dreams for her, but, well, it takes all kinds of people to make a world. Poor Marcella. Of course, one appreciated her brains and her distinction, but just the same, the heart of the mother of this daughter seemed to beat to the rhythm: poor Marcella

It was when she was thirty-two, considerably heavier, and with streaks of faint gray in her strong dark hair, that Marcella Martin, appointed by her government as first woman member of an international conference on housing conditions to be held in Geneva, again encountered Edgar Morris, now Governor Morris. He, too, gray now, heavier now, found himself sitting beside her at a political luncheon at Geneva where he was in attendance at a conference.

Life, tides, affairs, had flowed swiftly for him in the years which had intervened since his previous meeting with her. It is doubtful if he recalled her at all. He only knew that suddenly he was meeting a woman whose talk, whose point of view, whose deeply quiet eyes and a certain unworldliness, were giving him the first serious pause he had ever in his life felt where the other sex was concerned.

It occurred to him even, as he sat there beside her in the first hour of that lunch in Geneva, that he seemed to be developing symptoms of a man on the verge of falling in love.

Strong Bond Between

George V and Scotland

When the lord provest handed to King George the keys of Edinburgh, the ceremonial required his majesty to say, in returning them, that the key could not be in "better hands." The British rulers were celebrating the thirty-eighth anniversry of their wedding in Edipburgh. This was fitting, because it is due to two weddings that the keys of the city were handed to them at all.

If the Tudor princess had not mar ried a king of Scotland, James VI of that country could never have been of James I of the United Kingdom, of Ireland and the Dominions Beyond the Seas, And if his daughter had not married the elector palatine the house of Hanover, from which George V is more directly descended, could not have come to the British throne after the death of Queen Anne.

Because of their marriages George V bears the blended blood of the roya' house of England and Scotland. His Plantagenet ancestors (through John of Gaunt) were repeatedly chased out of Scotland. His Tudor ancestors didn't dare try to conquer the braw ilk of Caledon. His Stuart ancestori were the Scots' well-beloved. Because of that strain they forgive him his Hanoverian blood.—New York Times

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU Service. ALATIAL hotels and new buildings are rising above the streets of Jerusalem but architects are mindful of the city's past. One of the new hotels evokes memories of the ancient Semitic style although adapted to modern taste. It is named for a king, a famous Bible character, who reigned in Jerusalem nearly 3,000 years ago.

No city in the world has had so much written about it as the Holy City; none is more worthy of descrip-Fourteen times destroyed, each time has it raised its dignified head in triumph.

The capital of the Land of Three Faiths remains unique, maintaining its position not by towering skyscrapers, Byzantine art, or Roman architecture, but by sheer personality. Centuries of religious fervor, of pilgrimage, of historical event, of great actions, have given it distinction.

Almost as sacred in the eyes of the Moslems as are Mecca and Medina, Jerusalem is a place of pilgrimage for the Moslem world. For the Jewish people it is the City of Cities, toward which their thoughts ever turn. It is the first city Christians hear of at their mother's knee.

Jerusalem stands upon two hills, with a slope to the east, facing the sunrise and the desert. Ravines have determined the limits of the city on the east, south, and west. Northward the country is more open and the ancient city tended to sprawl in this direction.

In Palestine all roads lead to the capital. The south road, from Beersheba, Hebron and Bethlehem, joins the city at the Jaffa gate. Toward the northwest corner of the city wall runs the road from the sea at Jaffa. At the Damascus gate ends the great north highway, from Nablus, Nazareth, and Damascus. Toward the northeast corner, past the Garden of Gethse-Judean hills from Jericho and the Dead sea, attaining a height of 2,600 feet above sea level, from 1,300 feet below, in about a score of miles. What the Visitor Sees.

On alighting from a train from Egypt, Jaffa or Halfa, the first thing to arrest the attention is the name of the station, printed in the three official languages-English, Arabic, and

Next, choice must be made of trans port, as horse-drawn gharries, saddled donkeys, or, at times, aristocratic camels vie with American automobiles for patronage.

Taking a car, the traveler rides down the Bethlehem road toward the citadel. On the right, high above the Ophthalmic hospital, flies the flag of the Venerable Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. Eight hundred years ago noble knights and occasionally fair ladles set forth from England, France, Germany, Austria, and other parts of Europe to wrest the Holy Land from the Saracens, and under that flag the knights played a great part in the history of the city.

The principal fruit market is at the base of the citadel, along the moat. Here are brought luscious oranges from Jaffa, grapes from Hebron, apricots from Bethlehem and Belt Jala. nectarines and peaches from nearby villages, bananas from Jericho, and enormeus watermelons from the coast

But Jerusalem's pride is its cauliflowers, which grow in the Valley of Silwan. They would probably take a prize for size alone, but, unlike most big things, their flavor is delicious, There are few sights more picturesque than a woman walking with the grace of an empress, carrying to market on her head a dozen or more of these vegetables, which shade her like an mous umbrella.

After milk, eggs, and vegetables are sold, the women return to their vil-lages to prepare the evening meal, but the men remain behind to pass the time of day. They adjourn to nearby stalls or restaurants and, after refreshing themselves with flat cakes of bread, eggs roasted in embers, or lit-tle bits of meat fried upon skewers, they purchase a cupful of coffee and. sitting upon low stools, remain together until the cool of the evening. If sales have been good, many nowadays

Beside the gate a nondescript collection of Jewish, Armenian, Moslem, and Christian Arab boys sit in an open-air shoe-shining parlor awaiting custom. Their little boxes are ornately decorated with brass plaques and paper roses. The boy sits. The customer stands until one shoe is finished and is notified by a bell to advance his other foot.

Traffic and Shop Contrasts.

The Palestinian traffic policemen has learned that in his particular job it is necessary for the left hand to know what the right hand is doing. His problems are not simple, as, in addi-tion to a population that insists on walking in the middle of the road, he controls flocks of sheep and goats that travel at one mile an hour, laden camels at two and a half, local carts at four, and on up the scale to automo-

Rushing motor cars and heavy, springless carts cannot altogether drown the sound of the bells. Western civilization, in the hands of the Palestinian chauffeur, marks its presence by the screech of electric horns, but through the din come the more pleasing notes of goat and camel bells.

Like the traffic, the shops are in a transitional state. It is curious to see Bedouin from Beersheba or from eas of the Jordan, in his sheepskin coat or camel's-hair cloak, standing at the window of a draper's shop, staring at a wax figure of a lady dressed in a French frock. Such contrasts between the old and the new are typical of Jerusalem, where eras jostle one another as races don

The townsmen are more and more adopting the European style of clothing, but retain the red fez. Here the traveler might imagine himself walking down a southern European street, until attention is arrested by a legless grand plane advancing jerkily toward him, as if propelled by an unseen force. Closer investigation reveals that it is borne on the bent back of an Orfalian Jew or Moslem porter. partly on his shoulders and partly on kind of padded saddle; and kept in place by a leather band fastened around the forehead. The strength of these men is extraordinary.

But for cleverness of maneuver one should study the man who balances on his back 50 empty five-gallon gasoline tins bound together like a wall; no yachtsman has to show more skill, if the wind be high. Such tins supply varied needs, and after alteration be come roofs, lanterns, milk cans, plant stands, fences, coffee pots, and dust-

Our soda fountains are peripatetic. The venders wend their way along the street, extolling the virtues of their soft drinks by clanking brass saucers. The lemonade is carried in a large glass or earthenware vessel adorned with brass, with a chunk of ice thrust into its mouth.

Grain Market at Damasus Gate. For centuries the grain market for golden wheat and gray barley from the Plain of Sharon, the Jordan valley, and the far-off hills of Transjordania has been at the Damascus gate. Bargains are made by word of mouth, and few merchants break their bond. Were they to do so, public opinion would prevent them from continuing their business under the shadow of their beautiful gateway. For a time motor cars invaded this square. But the administration intervened and camels and donkeys loaded with grain sacks ousted the automobile.

In few streets of the Old Jerusalem are carts or motor cars allowed. So narrow are the covered ways that would be impossible for such vehicles to pass, even were it not for the steps by which the city streets climb steep hills, once steeper than they are today. As in the Psalmist's time, Jerusalem is "builded as a city that is compact together." In times of festival, when the streets are congest ed with traffic, the sightseers, chiefly women and children, throng the flat

David street is a series of long, shall low, greasy, cobblestone steps, and a good stick with a sharp point is not to be despised. Walking is difficult as one constantly skirts every sort of bundle borne on men's shoulders or donkeys' backs. The world is busy return home by car.

Instead of entering the old city whose gates in Turkish times were ly with the crowd bargaining amid the traffic, so it is

Early Paper Money

In Europe paper to represent money first came into use, apparently, during the Middle Ages when the Jewisn financiers of those days reinvented the bills of exchange of Babylonia and recorded them in ink on parchment and paper.

The Bank of St. George at Genoa and the Bank of Venice were the first corporations to use paper money. Their bills were bullion certificates. Because the use of these receipts were so much more convenient than carrying about heavy bags of gold and silver, they became popular with merchants and even circulated at a premium over coin .- Detroit News.

THE STORY

Six bandits hold up the steam-Six bandits hold up the steamer, Midnight Sun, on the Mackenzie, kill Jimmy Montgomery, and escape with gold 'dust and furs. At the Mounted Police post at Fort Endurance, Sergt. Alan Baker disputes with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, regarding plans for the capture of the bandits. Baker starts out in the police launch with five men. At the MacMillan trading post, Joyce MacMillan is thrilled men. At the MacMillan trading post, Joyce MacMillan is thrilled at the arrival of the police launch. She had expected to marry Baker, and had been stunned at the news that he was to marry Elizabeth Spaulding. Stolen furs are found on the MacMillan place and evidence points to Joyce's father. Joyce defends him. Alan leads his expedition up the big Allooska and catches sight of the bandits. Compelled by Haskell's foolish orders to divided the party, Alan fails to capture the bandits and returns to Fort Endurance. Haskell blames him for the failure and to Fort Endurance. Haskell blames him for the failure and Alan is allowed to buy out of the Mounted on condition that he absolve Haskell from blame.

Thinking in hard practical terms. Alan saw that so long as Haskell had power over him, he could not stir a hand. If he was ever to get those criminals, he had to be free. Several paths lay open to him. One by one he studied and rejected them, till only the last remained.

For minutes he weighed that possible act. Its cost to him was a terrible cost. It would wipe out his brilliant reputation, his whole police record. It would kill his last chance of ever bringing Haskell to account. It would uproot him and take him for good and all out of this North country. Torn by doubt and indecision, he wavered. The price seemed too stag-

Presently he heard some one come up the terrace and glide past him and go on toward his cabin. The figure was merely a moving blur in the mist, but Alan recognized that light foot-

He called softly: "Joyce! You wanted to see me?"

"Alan! I've been wondering where you . . . Your cabin was all dark, and I couldn't find you." In eager hope she asked him: "Alan, what did Haskell say about Dad? He's going release Dad on ball, as you Alan shook his head, sorry for her, sorry for all the heartache that lay ahead for her now. "Joyce, Haskell can be brutal and inhuman. He wouldn't consent even to letting your dad remain here. He intends to send him outside to Edmonton.'

It was on his lips to add, "Your father is being sacrificed to Haskell's need of a victim." But he could not bring himself to tell Joyce that. The news had stricken her cruelly enough. If only she could be near her father, if only she could visit him, the ordeal might be lightened for her. The lonely waiting weeks of suspense would be agony, if her father was a thousand miles away, among strangers, with no

He offered gently: "Joyce, if you want to go along and be near him, I'll pay-I'll see to it that you can. It'd be best for you, and for him too. if you would."

Joyce did not answer at once. As he looked down at her, Alan was struck by the sense of how young and innocent a girl Joyce was; and with bitter self-reproach he remembered those long months of the winter past when he had left her alone to her battle, because Elizabeth, protected. sheltered, kept in ease here at Endurance, had demanded it of him. He realized that in her desperate plight she needed his strength and protection far more than Elizabeth did. Except for him Joyce was alone in the world, without friends, relatives, money, and with her father in the shadow of the gallows.

Presently, with the spirited courage he had always loved in her, Joyce asserted:

"Alan, I'm going back home. The Dogribs are bringing in their furs next week. I'll send several of their men en derouine to the Hares and Loucheux and get their furs, too. I'll sacrifice all our trade goods and raise money for Dad's defense. It'll he a true way of fighting for Dad if I go back me. I don't mind being alone. I can take care of myself. It'll be lonesome, but all the time I'll be knowing that I'm doing the right thing and being a real help to Dad."

Alan acquiesced reluctantly, against his better judgment. A slender girl like her, scarcely out of her 'teens, going back to that isolated post. . . . A white girl, winsome, pretty, of lis-some body, alone there, with Indians coming and going, with half-breeds coming and going. . . .

Joyce asked him: "What happened between you and Haskell, Alan?" Briefly Alan told her what had taken place down there in the cabin.

"He can't? He's already done it! If I try to fight him, if I make the slightest insubordinate move, he's actually got the power to jail me!" "But the Inconnu patrol-he'll let you go on that, Alan?"

"And capture those men and get the credit? Not Haskell! He's too wise. Getting those bandits comes second with him. So long as he saves his face, he doesn't really care whether he gets them or not. That Inconnu patrol is dead. It was our best hope, but now it can't ever be. I could stir up trouble for him, I could bring on an investigation; but that would take months. It'd be too late then; those bandits'll be gone."

She repeated, brokenly: "Gone, gone-yes, it'll be too late then. Alan, that means-means Dad will be found guilty-and sent to prison-or worse. . . .

For the second time in the years he had known her, Joyce broke down and cried. It hurt Alan as few things in his life had ever done. As he felt her sobbing against him, as he thought of this tragedy looming over her, his last hesitancy about his plan was swept away. With those bandits safe in the watery wilderness of the Thal-Azzah, Dave MacMillan would be convicted; he would be sent up for life. It would break Joyce, break her spirited courage, her wild-born nature. When he thought of the terrible stigma upon a girl so innocent and brave, he swore silently:

"I'll never see her brought down to that. I'll get those men, I'll bring the truth into court."

He realized fully that he was starting on a long trail, a trail never to be retraced. He was committing himself to a staggering self-sacrifice. But he had to traverse that path; in honor he could do nothing else.

He rose abruptly, brushing away his last trace of hesitancy; and gave Joyce his hand to rise.

"Joyce, there's something I've got to do now. I've got to go. You mustn't stay here. Come." He took her arm, and as they went down the slope, he asked: "I want to see you again before I-some final arrange-Won't you be ments with you. . .

down at the wharf in half an hour?" Wondering at his odd tones, his stern purposive manner, Joyce promised him.

At Mrs. Drummond's house he left her and started out along the terrace to Haskell's cabin.

Across the desk he demanded, with no preliminaries: "I want to buy out. Tonight! Here!

Haskell's eyes narrowed in suspicion. He could hardly believe it. He knew how deeply Baker was rooted in his work and friendships and life in this northern country; and he could scarcely conceive of a man deliberately throwing away a long brilliant police record at one irremediable step. But there was no doubting Baker's words, no doubting his grim manner. Baker was demanding to buy outto get out for good. As he studied the sergeant, Haskell drew back warily. Baker might be laying some trap for him. He refused. "I'm too short-handed here as it is now."

"I don't give a d-n about that. I'm buying out." Haskell's confidence was returning

Haskell debated swiftly. He was not averse to Baker cutting his own head off: and he saw now there was no trap laid for him. But there were other things to be considered. His sober judgment, casting back over the last nine months, recalled the score of times Baker had corrected bad mistakes of his and kept the post running smoothly. Wisdom whispered to him that he needed the man, needed him desperately. And Elizabeth Spaulding . . . Was she going away with

Forgotten HEROES

ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Terror of the Natchez Trace In THE early thirties many a trav-eler over the Nashville and Natchez Trace, the principal highway through the Lower Mississippi valley, failed to reach his destination and to his friends came back the fearful word "The Mystic Clan has got him." The Mystic Clan was the product of the cunning brain of John Murrell, known as "the great western land pirate" and "the wickedest man in American history" who "conducted the most fearful schemes of rapine and murder from New Orieans up to Memphis, St. Louis and Cincinnati." At one time his gang numbered more than a thousand men, many of them prominent and presumably respectable citizens, who profited from his extensive operations in crime.

Not only were travelers robbed and murdered, but slaves were stolen, sold. stolen from their new owners, and then murdered to prevent their betraying the robbers. Counterfeiting was carried on as a side line and Murrell, who was a man of some education as well as considerable natural ability. used the disguise of a traveling preacher to issue the spurious currency. But his greatest scheme was for an insurrection of the slaves, or raising the blacks against the whites.

In the midst of the terror spread by the Mystic Clan there was one man who had enough courage to try to end the reign of Murrell. Virgil A. Stewart was his name and under the name of Hues he succeeded in joining the clan and, by playing upon Murrell's vanity, worked his way into his confidence. He became the leader's trusted messenger and thus was able to get full details of the plot for the slave insurrection. The uprising was to take place on Christmas day, 1835. Starting out presumably on a trip to carry the final instructions to the members of the gang scattered all over the South, Stewart took with him two trusted men and crept upon Murrell's hiding place in Arkansas across the river from Memphis early one morning. The first intimation the robber leader had of the downfall of his scheme was when he looked into the mouth of a pistol, behind which ne saw the stern face of the trusted

Although the arrest was easy, convicting Murrell was more difficult. Sheriffs, magistrates and other officers of the law, either members of the clan themselves or intimidated by Mur-rell's friends, refused to act. So Stewart marched Murrell to jail in Memphis himself and when members of the clan rallied to rescue their leader, Stewart faced the mob and told them that if a move was made to rescu Murrell he would shoot him dead. Murrell pleaded for his life and the mob dissolved. Finally Stewart succeeded in bringing the land pirate to He came out a broken man to find his clar disorganized. Stewart was repeatedly threatened by the outlaws and several attempts were made on his life. Despite the fact that he had saved the South from the horrors of a slave insurrection, he was an outers there and eventually he went to Pennsylvania where he ended his days.

He Repaid Our Pulaski Debt

SEVERAL million Americans during the years 1917-18 "repaid our debt to Lafayette" for the services of that gallant Frenchman during the Revo lution. But a century ago one tone American took it upon himself to "repay Poland for the heroic Pulaski who died during the siege of Savannah in our Revolutionary War," as he phrased it. His name was Dr. Paul Fitzsimmons Eve of Augusta, Ga., who did post-graduate work in Paris.

In 1831 when the people of northern Poland revolted against Russian rule, Doctor Eve formed a committee in Paris to aid the Poles and went to London to raise funds for them. Then he went to Warsaw "to repay the Pulaski debt," and offered his professional services to the Polish patriots. sional services to the Polish patriots.

released and returned to America.

Doctor Eve took part as a surgeon in the Mexican war and also served in the war of the French and Italians against Austria in 1850. Returning again to America he entered the Confederate army and held high medical rank under Gen. Joseph E. Johnston. At various times, until his death in Nashville, Tenn., in 1877 he held positions in medical colleges in Kentucky, Missouri and Tennessee.

Value in Health Facts

That Are Vital Truths Health teachers and those engaged in telling health facts to the public should stick to the Grade A facts, advised Dr. Donald B. Armstrong, official of a leading life insurance company at a recent meeting of the American Public Health association. "So-called health facts worth telling should be important and should be true, though truth is relative," Doctor Armstrong said.

"Every period has its health myths," he added. "Current ones include 'A Clean Tooth Never Decays' and the relationship of underweight to tuberculosis in the school child."

Some true Grade A health facts mentioned by Doctor Armstrong are certainties as to the course of infection in some communicable diseases, the value of immunization for prevention of disease, the value of minerals and vitamins in the diet, and the value of sunlight under certain

More numerous are the Grade B. near facts, which include things that are believed to be true, probably are true, but cannot be proved at present. Examples are the real value of six glasses of water a day, of eight hours' sleep at night, of fresh air for the prevention of colds, of exercise, of a full bath once a week, of teeth brushing, etc. These facts need verification, but telling them to the public probably does some good and little

Doctor Armstrong suggested that the American Public Health association might have an appraisal committee to study and classify the facts used for educational purposes .- Kansas City Star's Science Service.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

PETER RABBIT TRACKS HIS NEIGHBORS

IT WAS a perfectly glorious night. Mistress Moon flooded the Green Meadows and the Green Forest with silvery light, and the white snow which covered everything helped to make still more light. In fact it was almost as light as day, it seemed to Peter Rabbit. In spite of all little Mrs. Peter could say he had started for the Green Forest just as soon as jolly, round, red Mr. Sun had gone to bed behind the Purple Hills,

"It's just like visiting a new world." thought Peter as he reached the edge of the Green Forest. "I do wish that Fuzzy wasn't so timid." By Fuzzy he meant little Mrs. Peter, who you know,

It Was Whitefoot, the Woodmouse

was once Miss Fuzzytail. "She thinks that just because my coat is brown and everything else is white it is a great deal more dangerous here than when there isn't any snow. She doesn't know what wonderful hiding places there are everywhere now. The snow has bent down all those little hemlock trees and the lowest branches on the big hemlock trees so that under them are the most wonderful caves. Why, I can jump out of sight almost enywhere here. Hello! I wonder who made those funny tracks. I believe I'll follow them and find out."

The tracks were just the tiniest of little dots with a tiny little line between the two rows. That line puzzled Peter. You know he is not used to tracking his neighbors. Of course the double row of dots were the prints of tiny feet, but what made the line? Peter followed as fast as he could, which wasn't so very fast, because the tracks wound about so much. Presently they led to an old log covered with snow. In one side of it was a little hole, and right there the tracks

"Hello!" called Peter. "Hello yourself and see how you like it!" replied a squeaky little voice.

Peter chuckled. He knew that voice. "Why don't you come out and be polite when you have callers?" he said. "Did you say callers? Who is with you, Peter Rabbit?" asked a squeaky

"Well, a caller, if you like that better. There is no one with me," replied

Right away a pretty little head with the loveliest soft eyes appeared at the hole. It was Whitefoot, the Woodmouse. "Excuse me, Peter, if I seemed to be a little bit impolite," said he. "I have to be very careful these days. I can't afford to take any chances when there are so many hungry people about. How did you find me?"

"Easy enough," replied Peter. "I just followed your tracks, though l didn't know whose they were."

Whitefoot sighed. "That is the trouble with snow-it is a regular telltale,' said he. "One cannot move while it is soft without leaving tracks. It tells all one's secrets. Better watch out, Peter, that some of your enemies don't catch you by means of your tracks; they are very easy to follow."

"I'm not worrying," declared Peter. "If they can see my tracks I can see theirs, so it is an even thing. It is great fun to follow tracks. By the way, Whitefoot, how do you make that funny little line between your footprints?"

"With my tail, of course. How stupld of you not to know," replied White-"A long tail is rather a nuisance sometimes," he added.

Peter chuckled. "Mine doesn't both er me," said he. I'm very glad to have found out about your tracks. Next time I will know them. Now I am going to see who else I can follow. It isn't often I have such a chance, and it is great fun. I expect I shall learn a whole lot about my neighbors."

"Watch out that they don't learn some things about you that you would rather keep secret," warned Whitefoot. But Peter just laughed and went on his way.

Intricacies of Kinship

Part of Southern Life

Perhaps one of the most characteristic modes of behavior in the South is the business of kinship, in which particular the southerner surpasses even the New Englander, Howard Mumford Jones writes, in Scribner's Magazine. It sometimes seems to me that everybody in Virginia or South Carolina or Georgia is related to everybody else.

If a marriage takes place, the fact is conversationally recorded; then comment turns at once to the question of the family ramifications involved. If a political appointment is announced, it soon appears that the appointee is cousin to somebody else.

The system is so intricate that the tactful northerner, after one or two unhappy blunders, learns to preface any comment on a public character. literary, political, or what not, with the polite hope that the subject's relatives will not misunderstand his remarks.

In a day when the family is supposed to be breaking up, the businers of "claiming kin" in the South probably is less patent than it used to be; yet it is one of the most powerful forces in southern life, and one

Machine to Prevent Erosion

In some parts of this country a great deal of land is lost by erosion. Valuable top soil is washed away by rainstorms, leaving worthless soil which cannot be utilized for any purpose whatever. This loss is frequently very serious, for in the course of time an entire field may be affected. Government scientists have been giving the matter some attention and have developed a machine which is said to overcome the action of the elements. Not Really Steel Jackets There are no steel-jacketed bullets made in the United States. In Europe there are some cartridges made which have steel (really soft iron) jackets, with a thin wash of cupro nickel. Most bullets called steel jacketed in the United States are made with a cupro nickel alloy jacket.
