IN MEMORY OF BRO. W. T. YOUREE

Bro. W. T. Youree was born Sept. 8, 1855, near Orvilla, Ellis county, Texas; died at his home in Hedley Jan. 18, 1932; age 76 years, four months and ten days.

He moved to Hamilton county in 1881, and was married to Ella Bell July 12, 1885. Two children were born to this union, Mrs. S. W. Lamberson of Clarendon and C. O. Youree of Quail. His wife died Nov. 20, 1892.

He was married the second time on Dec. 29, 1897, to Nannie E. Woodley at Meridian, Texas. To this union were born seven children, five boys and two girls: Woodley, Woodvin, Jack, Ethel, Veneta, Louis and Eugene, all of whom, with their mother, survive, except Ethel, who died in infancy. He was preceded in death by his father, mother, four sisters, one brother; 3 brothers living: J. B. Youree, Los Angeles, Cal.; W. H. Youree, Trinidad, Col.; J. A. Youree, Eldorado, Ark. He leaves thirteen grandchildren and a host of friends to mourn his going.

Bro. Youree professed faith in Christ in 1899, and joined the Missionary Baptist Church, and lived a loyal and consecrated life to his church until death.

Bro. Youree has lived in and around Hedley for more than thirty years. He was known to his many friends as "Uncle Tom" and he always had a word for his friends wherever he met them.

Hedley has lost a good citizen, the church a faithful member, while we all miss him. How lonely it must be at home without him—he was such a true father and faithful husband. But while we are so lonely and sad, let us remember that our loss is Bro. Youree's eternal gain.

May the God of all Grace comfort the loved ones that are left behind, is the prayer of his unworthy pastor, V. A. Hansard.

Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Heath took their baby to Amarillo the first of the week for treatment for a severe eye ailment. The specialists concluded that removal of the eye was necessary, and this was done Monday. The little one was reported resting easy Tuesday, and it is hoped that the trouble has been permanently corrected.

Many Government Speakers on Air

Five hundred and fifteen broadcasting hours were utilized by the United States government over the networks of the National Broadcasting company during 1931.

The United States Department of Agriculture made the greatest use of radio during the year. Exactly 254 officials of this department gave 581 talks before the microphone.

President Hoover, Mr. Aylesworth's report shows, spoke 29 times, which is the greatest number of times any President has been heard over the radio in one year.

Vice President Curtis made three radio speeches; the chief justice, Charles Evans Hughes, spoke five times.

Every member of the cabinet faced the microphone at least once during the year.

Thirty-two members of the senate made 52 radio addresses and members of the house spoke 25 times.

America's three service bands were heard in 241 contests, many of which were in the National Farm and Home Hour.

Numerous officials of foreign governments also spoke over the networks.

Since his inauguration President Hoover has made 66 radio addresses.

All known records for a continuous broadcast were broken recently when Gene and Glenn were on the air from WTAM in Cleveland for more than seven hours in the interest of the Cleveland Christmas fund program.

An admirer of Lowell Thomas, sent him a letter for his automobile. "Hope this will keep you from catching cold," read an accompanying note.

Elaine Paige, style expert of Women's Radio Review, mentioned in a talk a new style knitted beret that could be made at home, and received three thousand requests for directions.

"I've gone ping-pong mad!" says Odette Myrtle, orchestra leader, mistress of ceremonies, and violinist and vocal soloist of the Gaytees orchestra program.

Theresa The Story of a Repentant Daughter

By Fannie Hurst

NO end of ways, the mother of Theresa was a trial. No getting away from that. And as she grew older, the many aggravating little facets to her personality grew more pronounced.

She had been a dominating young girl, she had been a dominating wife and, not unnaturally, a dominating mother. Not that her dominance had ever actually outbalanced her thousand and one ingratiating traits.

Her husband, whom she fretted, even as she was later to fret her daughter, declared all of his married life with her that she enervated him with her excess of vitality, robbed him of ambition by virtue of the superabundance of hers, wore him down, tired him out, exhausted him.

With Theresa, her only child, every one predicted total eclipse. There was no withstanding the overshadowing figure of her mother.

All that was true enough until Theresa reached the age of twenty, when suddenly there developed in the girl, who lived beneath the shadow of her parent like a chick under the wing of the hen, a slow, a cumulative, a rebellious kind of anger that gathered within her like a storm, but unlike a storm did not burst but rolled up, rather, into a great, portentous gloom.

Strange, but for some time the mother of Theresa, too absorbed in her career of living for her daughter, did not realize the change.

And so it was that gradually, but with unrelenting consistency, slowly, surely, the daughter gained the upper hand in the relationship of parent and offspring.

When she was thirty, a bachelor from a neighboring town, in love with a certain wistful quality he saw in her, came wooing her for marriage.

When she was thirty, a bachelor from a neighboring town, in love with a certain wistful quality he saw in her, came wooing her for marriage.

It is doubtful if his offer, any more than his personality, would have meant anything, except that in his plea for his case, he mentioned apologetically the need for his aged mother to live with him after marriage.

"Not that there was an open issue. Outwardly, the situation was practically the same. That is, in the beginning at least, the old respect and obedience to the dictates of the parent were there.

"Have you noticed how badly Theresa's daughter is treating her these days? What has come over the girl! Why, she is positively rude and horrid to her. And what a change in Theresa. She stands for it."

True, all true, but not quite so simple as it seemed on the surface. Underneath her sense of triumph over the old domineering ways of her mother, the girl was waging a bitter struggle to throw off this tendency to feel annoyed at her mother's slightest remark; to resent her interest in her affairs; to leave her many questions unanswered and to give her the curt, unceremonious reply instead of the considerate one she would grant a mere stranger.

It came to be almost a madness with her. It was practically impossible for the daughter of Theresa to be civil to her mother, although she would awaken from a troubled sleep resolved to atone in a thousand ways for yesterday's rudeness; and then, just let her so much as make a simple statement or evidence a natural interest in her daughter's affairs, and there she was, ready with the stinging retort or display of ugly manner.

"If only Mother wouldn't be meek about it all," she prayed to herself.

"If only she would put me in my place the way she used to when I was a child. If only she wouldn't break my heart and madden me by standing for it all. Why did I walk out and slam the door on her just now? Dear darling, she would go through fire for me, and I am a beast to her. Why was I rude to her in front of her friends? How crushed she looked. Oh Mother, how can I treat you so!"

And yet, somehow, the daughter of this mother could and did until, in their circle of friends, it was not unusual to hear an exasperated parent exclaim to a child, "Don't be rude about it. You'll soon have the reputation of treating me as the mother of Theresa is treated by her daughter."

Inevitably, it got about, this tyranny of daughter over parent, and the situation became pretty well unbearable all the way around. Except, strangely, the mother of Theresa, even while her daughter wailed and agonized over what was happening, seemed fascinated by the change. There was something actually sadistic about the way she bared herself for the blows of her child, asking questions that she must have known would bring wrath upon her head.

"Daughter, why do you wear your skirts so short. They're ugly."

"For the reason that it pleases me to, and if you don't like them, don't look."

"Daughter, where are you going?"

"When I want to announce every move I make, I'll post a bulletin."

"Daughter, you look a little pale tonight. Are you tired?"

"Mother, if you ask me that again, I'll go mad."

It was shocking, it was terrible, it was embarrassing even to have to hear, and it seemed to the daughter that sometimes she actually went about that home with little needles and pins of irritation popping out all over her. Every move of her mother's seemed a source of irritation. To hear her crack nuts; see her spill a bit of coffee over into her saucer; have to listen to the rasp in her voice when she telephoned, were such anathema to her that she would rush upstairs into her room, slamming the door, locking it, crying there.

At sixty-two, after years of this domination which had reduced her to some one little and gray, the mother of Theresa died, quietly, one night in her sleep, and it was to linger with her daughter forever after that her last words to her had been:

"For goodness sake, Mother, if you don't stop cracking those nuts, I'll go mad. Haven't you any regard for the nerves of others?"

That memory in itself seemed to the girl sufficient punishment; the recollection of those words dancing in fire before her as the still form, in its small-sized bier, was borne tilted from the house. But her actual scourging lay in the years to come.

Why had she treated her so? The dead, cowed footsteps of her parent seemed everywhere about the house. Her voice, almost with a dodging note in it, as if fearful of rebuke, lingered on the stillness of the halls and rooms. Here was a girl who, after her mother's death, had everything to reproach herself for. She had heard people say of others after a death, "Well, she has nothing to reproach herself for."

The daughter of this dead woman had! And down through the years she went reproaching. Down through the years she went forgetting and yearning, with that most terrible of all follies, for the opportunity to live her life with her mother over again.

Yes, she had much to reproach herself for.

When she was thirty, a bachelor from a neighboring town, in love with a certain wistful quality he saw in her, came wooing her for marriage.

It is doubtful if his offer, any more than his personality, would have meant anything, except that in his plea for his case, he mentioned apologetically the need for his aged mother to live with him after marriage.

"She's old, gets on my nerves a good bit, but there's nothing else to do but have her with us, dear, the few years she has left."

There was her chance, and she grasped it, to baby and indulge and protect, from the possible curtness of her son, a mother-in-law.

In the name of a mother who, alas, had not been babied and indulged and protected from the curtness of a daughter, she married the son in order to gain a mother-in-law. And her husband marvels at the happiness that her patient sweetness is giving to an old mother's sunset days.

Old Rule for Longevity Speaking, reading aloud and singing, are useful kinds of exercise and it is supposed that this is at least a cause of the great longevity of clergymen, public speakers, teachers in universities and schoolmasters; and Doctor Andrew pleasantly observes, that one reason why women require less bodily exercise than men, is, that they are in general more loquacious. — London Spectator, October 22, 1831.

Penalized for Smoking The earliest instance known of penalizing smoking in the streets is mentioned in the court books of the mayor of Methuon, in Norfolk, England.

There is the following entry on the record of the court held on October 14, 1605—"We agree that any person that is taken smoking tobacco in the street shall forfeit one shilling for every time so taken. We present Nicholas Barker for smoking in the street, and do amerce him one shilling." The same rule was repeated at courts held in the years 1693 and 1695.

In MANCHURIA

Loading Manchurian Flour Aboard a Sungari River Boat.

THE three principal focal points of the Sino-Japanese disturbance in Manchuria—Tsitshar, Anganchi, and Chinchowfu—Tsitshar is, perhaps, the most widely known because it has been a stopping place and press box for world-girdlers in recent years.

Tsitshar is the capital of Heilung Kiang, largest of the three provinces of Manchuria, and the principal city in a vast, only partially-developed area of rich farming and grazing land.

Later China sent many bandits into exile in Manchuria. The medley of native population groups in the vicinity of Tsitshar forced the construction of huge barracks there and the details of military units to the town, so that it has long had the aspect of a fortress.

Anganchi is two miles south of Tsitshar station. It is the northernmost station on the new Chinese-operated, Japanese-built railway line from Taonanfu.

The new line does not end at Tsitshar but continues in a northeast direction for 73 miles to Talanchen. Eventually it will reach the Siberian border and will connect with a branch of the Trans-Siberian railway at Blagoveshchensk.

Few travelers visited isolated Tsitshar before the railroad came. For a time those who did passed by coffins strewn outside the town walls—coffins of natives whose families were unable to pay burial expenses.

Railroads have changed all that. Today Tsitshar is a busy town, greatly changed and improved by modern development. While it is neither as large nor as modernized as the other two Manchurian provincial capitals, Mukden and Kirin, Tsitshar has several wide, paved streets, electric lights, telegraph and telephone services.

Since the new north-south railroad has been added to the spur from the Chinese Eastern railway, Tsitshar is on the way to becoming one of the chief industrial centers of Manchuria.

Manchus, Mongols, Koreans, Russians, Yakuts, Chinese, Japanese and a few Europeans may be seen on the streets of the city, which is fast assuming the cosmopolitan air of other Chinese trading towns.

In addition to its importance as a railway and military center Chinchowfu also is a shipping point for the greatest fruit and cotton raising region of Manchuria—the nearby Liaoc river valley.

Chinchowfu itself is a metropolis of about 80,000 population. Much of its newer part spreads beyond the ancient walled city, especially northward in the vicinity of the railroad terminal.

OUR BOYS HONORED

Hedley has several boys to be proud of, and some of them were recognized at the News Globe tournament in Amarillo last week end. "Speck" Armstrong was chosen by sports writers as the best all around sport at the tournament. Buster Stafford and Speck were given places on the First team, also chosen by sports writers. Fred Tidwell was given honor on his speedy play. And the Owls were credited with the tournament's biggest 'upset' in defeating the Dalhart Wolves. Well done, boys! We're proud of all of you—and your Coaches.

Junior Boys Tournament

The athletic mind of Hedley is eagerly looking forward to the Junior Boys tournament that is to be held in the High School gym Friday and Saturday, Jan 29th and 30th. According to the Coaches quite a number of teams have entered and much interest is manifested in the event.

Owllette Player Hurt

Jeanette Clarke was painfully injured last Saturday when she sprained her ankle. She is not in school, being unable to walk. All the students hope for her speedy recovery.

Sidelights

The Juniors plan to present a play, "Two Days to be Married." Watch for further announcement.

Donald Moreman, Junior High student, was operated on Monday for appendicitis. We hope for his early restoration to good health.

The editorial staff and other friends express their sympathy to Opal Heath, and her parents, during the illness of her baby sister.

Opal Hammitt of Quail enrolled in the Senior Class last Monday. Welcome!

Verda Gilliam, Roe Plunk and John Aull, ex students, are reporting to Shortband classes. Our fairest welcome, Exes!

Mr. and Mrs. Elba Harkness entertained a group of school friends with a 42 party in their home Wednesday night.

Owl News

The Owls have defeated the Kirkland Eagles once before, at Childress, but had a hard battle to repeat Monday night on the local hardwood. The Eagles at the quarter led 7 to 0; at the half 9 to 6. Then, after a short and snappy skull practice, the Owls "came out of it." Final score: Owls 19, Eagles 15.

In an opener Monday night, McKnight defeated Giles in a one sided affair, with the score 44 to a bare 4 points scored by Toots Nash.

My Ideal Girl

By Marguerite Hansard

My ideal girl is about five feet four inches and weighs about 125 pounds. She is pleasant, and tries to be a friend to everyone. She is quiet—but not too quiet—in a crowd, and not always trying to attract the attention of others by her loud mouth, or sarcastic remarks, or continually by some silly little trick trying to be popular and attractive—especially among the boys. She never

"shows out" or "puts on," trying to make it appear that she is something when she is not.

She always wears a smile, and doesn't class herself above others—therefore she has a host of friends, both boys and girls. She doesn't try to make herself popular with boys by smoking and drinking and granting every request the boy may make; but she readily tells them what to expect, and that is the end. She never gives them a chance to disrespect her in any way. The boys naturally respect her and enjoy going with her. She seldom spends a lonely and restless evening. She may have callers, or if she prefers she quietly sits in her room and reads or engages in such occupation as she sees fit.

She is independent and knows what to say, wear, and do, on any occasion. As for clothing, she wears nice tailored dresses that are suitable, and not these lacy, trailing, cheap silk dresses. She knows the appropriate colors, styles, and materials.

Her general appearance is very good. She takes pains with her clothing and in the care of her skin, hands, and hair, which mean a great deal to any girl. She does not pile on the paint and lipstick; merely puts on an amount suitable to her needs.

The world of today might be better off if it had more girls of this type in it.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Whereas, our brother, W. T. Youree, a charter member and Master Mason of Hedley Lodge No. 991 A. F. & A. M. of Hedley, Texas, was on the 18th day of January, 1932, called from his duties on earth to that innumerable caravan to that land from which no traveler returns;

Whereas, he was a devout member of the Missionary Baptist Church for many years;

Whereas, he was an upright citizen, a worthy brother, a faithful husband and a good father, constantly laying good and wholesome instruction before his family and fellow men;

United States Warns Japan It Is Violating the Nine-Power Treaty—President Prods Congress on Relief Measures.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

JAPAN has been formally notified that in the opinion of the American government she is violating the nine-power treaty by her actions in Manchuria. The United States does not recognize as legal Japan's occupation of the country. China and Japan are both warned that Washington will not recognize any agreement entered into by them which violates the open-door pact or the Kellogg anti-war treaty.

Sec'y Stimson

These statements were forwarded in identical notes to Tokyo and Nanking by Secretary of State Stimson, who immediately thereafter called in the diplomatic representatives of the signatories to the nine-power pact and told them what he had done. It was expected that Great Britain and some of the other powers would follow the American example. Mr. Stimson declined to say what could or would be done if Japan persists in violations of the treaty. The nine-power pact calls for no other action than "full and frank communication between the contracting powers concerned" in case of an emergency. The Kellogg treaty calls for no military or diplomatic steps.

The Japanese forces in Manchuria moved on southward from Chinchow and occupied Shanhakwan, the gateway to China, situated where the Great Wall reaches the coast. Their garrison in Tientsin was heavily increased and a "grand review" was held there. Earlier in the week the Washington administration was aroused by an attack made on American Consul Culver E. Chamberlain by Japanese soldiers in Mukden. Formal protest brought an apology from the Japanese ambassador in Washington but Mr. Stimson let him know that the incident would not be considered closed until the offenders had been adequately punished. For this affair, as for all its actions in Manchuria, the Japanese government sought to put forward excuses and explanations which in most cases appear to be ready made to fit the circumstances.

On Friday a bomb was hurled in Tokyo by a young Korean in an effort to assassinate Emperor Hirohito. It exploded near the carriage preceding that occupied by the ruler, and no one was injured.

GREAT disturbance in the French government was caused by the death of Andre Maginot, minister of war, and it appeared certain there would be changes in the cabinet. Some observers expected Briand would be forced out and that Tardieu would succeed him as foreign minister. Maginot was responsible for the government's strong military attitude and originated the plan for a great chain of fortresses along the eastern border.

WITH President Hoover appealing to congress for speedy and nonpartisan action on the relief measures he has recommended, the Democrats began to push forward the first of their party bills of major importance. This is a tariff bill not designed to alter existing rates but to deprive the Chief Executive of his control over the flexible provisions of the present act. It also calls on the President to summon an international conference for the reduction of tariff rates.

J. W. Collier

This measure, which was introduced by Representative James W. Collier of Mississippi, Democratic chairman of the house ways and means committee, had the approval of the congressional Democratic joint policy committee. It would take away the power now enjoyed by the President to accept or reject, as he alone sees fit, the recommendations made by the tariff commission, under the flexible provisions of the Smoot-Hawley act. It would give congress the final right to determine whether or not the commission's findings justify a change in rates.

Supported by all the Democrats and probably some of the Independent Republicans, this bill, it was admitted, had a good chance to get through both houses but not with a sufficient margin to pass it over the presidential veto that might be expected.

MR. HOOVER'S plea for quick action on relief bills was made in a special message. The measures for which he spoke especially included the bill already passed by the house to increase the capitalization of the federal land bank system by a sum between $100,000,000 and $125,000,000; the bill to create a federally financed $500,000,000 "reconstruction finance corporation"; the bill to create a home loan discount system capitalized by the government at a minimum of $150,000,000; and a bill to liberal-ize the rediscount provisions of the federal reserve system.

The President also urged a plan to release the assets of closed banks, a revision of the transportation act with a view to strengthening the value of railroad bonds, and a revision of the banking laws, the better to protect depositors.

Senate and house leaders of both parties promised to aid the President's proposals. The senate started relief affairs in its own way by passing Senator Capper's resolution authorizing the distribution to the needy of 40,000,000 bushels of stabilization wheat held by the farm board, through the administration of the American Red Cross and other organizations. The farm board is to be credited with the market price of the wheat at the time of the transaction.

John Barton Payne, chairman of the Red Cross, said that that organization would gladly undertake the distribution, and later before the house committee on agriculture he not only spoke in favor of this bill, but encouraged the introduction of a bill to treat farm board cotton in the same fashion, so that cotton goods may be donated to those lacking clothing. Mr. Payne was explicit on one point. He wanted the exact duties of the Red Cross as distributing agent definitely set out in the bill. Out of his experience, he said, the Red Cross would be criticized in whatever it did and he wished no loopholes left in the bill.

COULD William Jennings Bryan have returned to earth and been present in the senate chamber the other day he would have been immensely gratified, for the old "16 to 1" issue which nearly carried him into the White House years ago was revived by Senator Burton K. Wheeler.

Sen. Wheeler

From his cell Gandhi issued an appeal to the Christians of India to support the independence movement, to adopt the spinning wheel and home-spun garments and to renounce drink. Native women were leading most of the anti-British demonstrations, while the men carried on the fight against payment of taxes and manufactured illicit salt. The boycott of British goods of all kinds spread rapidly. Gandhi told his followers that "the boycott is the weapon that will bring England to her knees." He continued to urge that they indulge in no violence, but in this he is not being obeyed by all the Nationalists.

"Contentment, happiness and lucrative occupation would be substituted for discontentment, despair, with their inevitable resultant tragedies to follow."

SENATOR BORAH sometimes disregards utterly the wrath of his colleagues, and he did this when he introduced three bills designed to effect economies in government expenditures. The first of these measures would reduce the salaries of the federal farm board members from $12,000 to $9,000 a year. It would further place a $15,000 maximum on any annual salary connected with the board, a provision aimed at the counsel who now receives $20,000.

The second bill strikes at the dearly beloved twenty cent mileage prerogative of congressional and certain other governmental officials. The third bill cuts the salary of the Vice President from $15,000 a year to $10,000; and does the same thing for the members of the President's cabinet. It also reduces the $10,000 per annum now paid to senators and representatives to $8,000.

It was stated at the White House that President Hoover did not believe this federal salary cut movement would come close to passage in congress and that if it were seriously considered he would oppose it. His opinion is that it would result in loss of efficiency and morale and also, that it would set a bad example for the country. All through the depression period the President has urged business and industry not to reduce wages except as a last resort.

COMMUNIST activities in the United States have been a specialty of Hamilton Fish, Jr., congressman from New York, and the recent tragedy in Easton, Pa., when mail clerks were killed by a bomb mailed to them together with the discovery of bombs in the mail in other localities gave him a new opportunity. He introduced a resolution for a congressional inquiry into the activities of Fascists and anti-Fascists in this country. He said, "diabolical bomb conspiracy," he said, had been charged to both those factions of our Italian residents and he urged the investigation "for the purpose of putting an end to all such activities which tend to create discord with a friendly nation and have caused enemies, riots and murders among our own people."

Hamilton Fish, Jr.

REvolution in Portugal was said to have been frustrated by the arrest in Oporto of 200 persons and the seizure of quantities of bombs, rifles and pistols. The situation, however, was still considered serious. (Ed. 1912. Western Newspaper Union.)

JOHN J. RASKOB, chairman of the Democratic national committee, fearing a split between the wet and dry wings of the party, backed down a bit from his dripping wet attitude. He made public a letter he sent to members of the national committee recommending the adoption of a home rule plank by the coming national convention. He advocates the submission of an amendment to the Eighteenth amendment which would give control of the liquor traffic to each individual state.

Mr. Raskob also asked that the result of his questionnaire to contributors to the last national campaign be referred to the convention. More than 25,000 replies to the questionnaires were received and of these 43 per cent favored the resubmission of the Eighteenth amendment to the people. Seventy-nine per cent were for outright repeal of prohibition.

In his letter Mr. Raskob said: "I believe there will be either a definite split between the Democratic party of the North and the Democratic party of the South or there will be formed a Liberal party in America unless those of us who love the traditions of the Democratic party find some common ground under the teachings of Jefferson without resorting to expediency and sacrificing the high principles of either school of thought."

DEMOCRATS and wets both rejoiced over the result of the election in New Hampshire to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Representative Fletcher Hale, dry Republican. In a normally Republican district William N. Rogers, former congressman, who is a wet Democrat, was victorious over former Gov. John Bartlett by about 3,000 votes. Rogers' chief issue in the campaign was unemployment and industrial depression.

The Democrats in the house now number 220, while the Republicans have 214 and the Farmer-Laborites one.

MAHATMA GANDHI is in prison at Poona, many other leaders of the Indian Nationalists are under arrest and troops are on their way from England to reinforce those in India; but it is evident the British government is going to have a terribly hard time suppressing the revolt of the natives. Viceroy Lord Willingdon put into effect various emergency decrees, outlawing the All-India Congress party, forbidding contributions to its funds and prohibiting demonstrations and peaceful picketing.

From his cell Gandhi issued an appeal to the Christians of India to support the independence movement, to adopt the spinning wheel and home-spun garments and to renounce drink. Native women were leading most of the anti-British demonstrations, while the men carried on the fight against payment of taxes and manufactured illicit salt. The boycott of British goods of all kinds spread rapidly. Gandhi told his followers that "the boycott is the weapon that will bring England to her knees." He continued to urge that they indulge in no violence, but in this he is not being obeyed by all the Nationalists.

CHARLES G. DAWES, ambassador to Great Britain, on coming home from London the other day took occasion to deny forcibly the rumor that he was a possible candidate for the Republican nomination for President, a sort of last hope of those who do not favor the re-nomination of Mr. Hoover. Gen. Dawes said he was in Washington solely for the purpose of consulting with the President concerning the course to be followed by the American delegation to the coming disarmament conference, of which delegation he is to be the head.

C. G. Dawes

After General Dawes and the other American delegates had breakfast with President Hoover it was announced at the White House that the United States does not intend to play a leading role at the conference. Having cut the American military establishment to the bone in the name of economy, no further cuts along this line should be expected, this administration spokesman said. It was also pointed out that as the United States now ranked fifteenth among the nations in military power, there was little likelihood that this country would be asked to make any real cuts.

Dispatches from Rome say the Italian delegation will be led by Foreign Minister Dino Grandi, and that he will be assisted by the ministers of war, navy and air—and some fifty other officials. The attitude Italy will take in the conference will be in accordance with the understandings reached in the conversations of Mussolini, Grandi and Secretary Stimson in Rome and of Grandi with President Hoover in Washington.

NOT only Chicago but mankind is much the poorer for the death of Julius Rosenwald, philanthropist and capitalist, who passed away after two years of illness. He had made great sums of money in merchandising and devoted most of his fortune to benefactions designed to encourage thrift and to eradicate racial and religious prejudice.

SOME POINTERS ON CARE OF BREEDERS

Green Feed Always Matter of Importance.

The way in which the breeding stock is fed and cared for from now until the hatching season will determine, to a great extent, the hatchability obtained from the eggs. Experiments indicate that exposure to sunshine, green feed and milk are conducive to good hatchability and strong chicks. This means that the breeders should have free range, except in stormy weather, where they will be exposed to a maximum amount of sunshine. If there is green feed on the range, so much the better. Between now and the hatching season brightly cured alfalfa hay, clover or soy bean leaves will provide adequate green feed or if preferred from 5 to 10 per cent alfalfa leaf meal may be included in the laying mash. If milk is available on the farm the breeders should be placed in the preferred class to receive it. If supplied in large quantities it may take the place of one-half of the meal scrap given in the laying mash. In addition one should not forget to feed liberally of yellow corn and oyster shell, or some other equally satisfactory source of shell making material should be provided. In sections of Missouri where the amount of sunshine is not abundant it may be advisable to feed cod liver oil at the rate of 1 per cent of the mash or 1 pint to 100 pounds of mash.—Missouri Farmer.

A Cold

Colds are common because people are careless. Prompt use of aspirin will always check a cold. Or relieve your cold at any stage. And genuine aspirin can't hurt you. Take two tablets of Bayer Aspirin at the first indication of a cold, and that's usually the end of it. If every symptom hasn't disappeared in a few hours, repeat. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. Take enough to give complete relief. And if your throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in water and gargle away all soreness. In every package of genuine Bayer Aspirin are proven directions for colds, headaches, sore throat, neuralgia, neuritis. Millions who used to suffer from these things have found winter comfort in aspirin.

AS SCIENCE VIEWS ADVANCE OF MAN

Erect Position Put Him Above Beasts.

From a single fossil skull discovered in the desert wilds of Central Australia, Sir Colin MacKenzie deduces the fact—or at least the conclusion—that "the erect posture dominates man's intellectual system, and shows that all intellectual development has a muscular basis." At first glance it is a little difficult to perceive how a skull which is not a whole skull, but only a portion of one, and which is supposed, to be, and probably is, a relic of a primitive kind of human being, can teach the scientist all that. It takes a good equipment of imagination to understand it. We must first imagine the creature from which man is descended going on all fours. He had not yet assumed the erect position. He was then like any other beast of the jungle. Any bigger beast might tread him to death under its feet. Mastery was a matter of size. But one day, through some accident, or freak, or the help of a stump or a rock, gets upon his hind legs. In that position he sees above the grass. He is enabled to observe the approach of the possible mastodon who will grind him to death, and to hid from him. With this incident, this grovelling creature's relative advance begins. From that time on, he and his species struggle toward the maintenance of an erect position. They employ craft; they learn a superior mode of physical progression, and thereby they attain a superiority over other creatures.

A step surely resulting from this point is the liberation of the creature's forelegs from the function of progression and their gradually increased usefulness in providing easier means of subsistence. With practice, now, the creature's front paws become hands. By development, one of the paw projections which once were mere claws becomes a thumb, which by repeated use becomes opposed to the other claws—now fingers—so that the creature can seize and hold any article. Now the animal who is on the road to become a man has achieved a point of superiority to the ape, all of whose "fingers" are in a row—who does not possess the opposed thumb. Counting by thousands of centuries, the new "man" now gets beyond the ape by leaps and bounds. Without the opposed thumb the "man" would have remained in the half erect, or only occasionally erect, position of the ape. Together, the erect posture and the opposed thumb made man the master of his own evolution.

Of course at the stage noted the "mind" is yet to come. But it is now an inevitable thing, for the improvement achieved makes the newly developed species gregarious. Superior individuals learn to dominate their fellows. Communication becomes necessary. Language is developed from grunts and squeaks. Society is organized. Thoughts are expressed. Thus from the bones and muscles of the legs, from the bones and muscles of the hands, an "intellectual development" has been evolved. The great thing was to get started, and the start was the erect posture.

"Quod erat demonstrandum," says the professor. But of course all this is not a demonstration. It is only a speculation. Sir Colin MacKenzie's notion about the dependence of intellectual development on muscle is pure Lamarckianism. Lamarck was a French naturalist who was born in 1744 and died in 1829. He was the forerunner of Darwin, who accepted his doctrine of "acquired characters." What Lamarck taught is concerned in his account of the manner in which the giraffe acquired his long neck. An ordinary antelope who lived in a South African region where, from increasing aridity, food for the antelope on the earth's surface disappeared, could graze only at the tops of trees. Such individual beasts as had the longest necks could reach food and survive. Those individuals survived when their shorter-necked fellows perished; it was they who propagated their species, which became increasingly long-necked. The primitive man, getting on his feet in the tall grass, is practically doing the same thing that Lamarck's giraffe did.

Sir Conlin MacKenzie's deductions from the discovery of the skull in the Australian desert demonstrate that Lamarck is coming to his own in the field of evolutionary science. They demonstrate nothing else—that is, as yet.—Boston Transcript.

Muddy Water

The city of New Orleans gets its water supply from the Mississippi. In filtering this water an average of 3.6 tons of debris and mud is taken out of every 1,000,000 gallons. Yet after this is done and it is chemically treated the water is made safe for drinking and other domestic uses, thanks to modern science.—Capper's Weekly.

Candle Fish

A fish native to Alaska and known to Alaskan Indians as the "candle fish" is used in the making of a crude sort of lamp. This species of fish is said to be so oily that a pith or bark wick passed through its dried body and lighted at the exposed end will burn for a long time.

Pacific Salmon

Unlike the Atlantic coast salmon which spawn several times, the Pacific salmon spawn but once and die immediately thereafter at the river spawning ground. All the five varieties of Pacific salmon are members of the same family (Oncorhynchus), but show interesting differences in length of natural life span. The pink lives only two years; the coho, three; the chum, four; the sockeye, four to five, and the spring, six or seven.

Tidal Phenomena

There is only one high tide and one low tide in the Gulf of Mexico each day. The diurnal inequality has become exaggerated to such an extent as practically to extinguish the semi-diurnal tide in the inner parts of the gulf, giving high and low water only once daily. Normally there are two high and two low tides every 24 hours, but there are numerous variations in tidal phenomena in various parts of the world.

Several of the diseases that attack growing chicks are definitely traced to a lack of vitamins in their rations.

The western states have a turkey crop this year about 5 per cent smaller than last.

Research at several agricultural colleges indicates that young chickens develop more rapidly than do older ones, and that it requires less feed to put a pound of weight on young chickens than on older ones.

Green feed of some kind should be supplied to laying hens throughout the year.

Crowding in a corner causes the birds to sweat; this, in turn, makes them susceptible to colds, chickpox and kindred diseases. Many good pullets have been ruined in that way.

Hens eat about six pounds of grain a month. To feed this much grain to hens that do not lay eggs is simply wasting the feed.

Forgotten Heroes

By
ELMO SCOTT WATSON

The Hero of Campbell's Island
NOT all of the heroes of the War of 1812 made their bid for fame on the battlefields of the East or in the naval fighting which forms such a brilliant page in the history of that conflict. Out in what was then "the West" there were heroes, too. One of them was Capt. Stephen Rector.

In 1814 Captains Rector and Riggs with 66 Illinois Rangers were ordered to accompany Lieutenant Campbell with a force of 42 regulars in three keel boats up the Mississippi to reinforce the garrison at Prairie du Chien in Wisconsin. Going through the dangerous rapids near Rock Island, Campbell's barge was driven ashore on the small island which now bears his name. Here he prepared to spend the night but no sooner had he pitched his camp than he was attacked by a war party of Sac Indians under Chief Black Hawk and driven back to their boat.

Rector and Riggs, hearing the firing, tried to return to his aid but in the storm-tossed river Riggs' boat became unmanageable and was stranded in the rapids. Rector managed to bring his boat near enough to Campbell's men, hiding in the trees which fringed the edge of the island, to fire upon the savages at long range. Suddenly Rector was horrified to see Campbell's barge burst into flames. Caught between the blazing boat and Black Hawk's whooping braves, the regulars faced annihilation.

Rector made his decision instantly. Ordering the anchor to be raised and the barge to be lightened by casting overboard nearly all of his provisions, he guided his boat down the raging stream into the teeth of the Indian fire. Forcing it to the windward of the burning boat, his boatmen leaped into the water and held their craft close to Campbell's barge. Indian bullets were crashing into the timbers of both boats but Rector coolly went about the work of directing the rescue of Campbell's men. While some of the Rangers opened fire on the Indians, the others transferred the wounded and dying from the burning barge to their own.

Finally the last wounded man had been transferred. Then Rector cast off and running a gamut of renewed Indian fire, his boat swept down the river with its precious cargo of wounded men safely out of the range of the enemy guns.

He Saved Pennsylvania

ON A hot summer's night in 1763 the fate of the colony of Pennsylvania—and perhaps of all the English colonies—rested in the hands of the commander of a little body of English troops camped on a barren hill about 20 miles from the present site of Pittsburgh, Pa. He was Col. Henry Bouquet, a Swiss soldier of fortune who was leading a little army of less than 500 men, composed of detachments of the Sixtieth regiment of Royal Americans, the Seventy-seventh regiment, Montgomery's Highlanders, the Forty-second regiment of Royal Highlanders (the famous "Black Watch") and a few rangers, from Fort Ligonier to raise the siege of Fort Pitt.

Pontiac, the great Ottawa chieftain, had united the tribes to wipe out the hated English. Every military post in western Pennsylvania, except Pitt and Ligonier had been captured. If Pitt fell, Ligonier fell and a storm of savage wrath would break over the towns of Shippensburg, Carlisle and Bedford into which hundreds of terror-stricken fugitives had crowded.

About noon on August 5 Bouquet's advance guard was attacked. The "Black Watch" soon scattered them but almost immediately the savages came swarming back and within a short time the soldiers were surrounded and fighting for their lives behind a hastily constructed defense on top of Edge hill. All afternoon they beat off the attacks. That night their case seemed hopeless.

When morning came the Indians renewed their attacks. Bouquet saw that it was only a matter of time until the plunging fire of the enemy cut down his force until the few that were left could not withstand the charge that was sure to come. Deciding to wager everything on one stroke, he planned a daring maneuver. After explaining to his men exactly what they were to do, so that there would be no mistake and no panic when it got under way, he suddenly withdrew the two companies of Highlanders from the line, had them retreat across the hill and enter a small ravine. Seeing this, the Indians believed that a general retreat was about to begin and came whooping into the open.

This was just what Bouquet wanted. As the mass of savages struck the weakened line, the "Black Watch" came charging out of the ravine on the flank of the enemy. Too late the Indians realized they had been trapped. For Bouquet again broke his line, threw two companies of light infantry out of the circle on the other flank and the savages were caught between two fires. Within a few minutes the English were in full possession of the field. Bouquet then pushed on to Fort Pitt and a death blow had been struck to the conspiracy of Pontiac.

Short Short Story, but Neatly Pointed Moral

A certain king sent to another king, saying, "Send me a blue pig with a black tail, or else—" The other replied, "I have not got one, and if I had—" For these words they went to war. After many men had been killed they wished for peace. But before peace could be got they had to explain the words they had used. "What did you mean," asked the second king of the first, "by saying to me, "Send me a blue pig with a black tail, or else—" "Why," said the other, "I meant a blue pig with a black tail, or else some other color. But what did you mean by saying, 'I have not got one, and if I had—'?" "That if I had one, I should have sent it." Both kings were pleased, and peace was made. Many quarrels are pretty nearly as foolish as the war about the blue pig with the black tail.—Montreal Family Herald.

Gaelic Sign Too Attractive

Merchants of Dingwall, Scotland, decided that during the annual Mod week last year they would make a hit with visitors by having all signs over their stores in Gaelic. One non-Gaelic business man got a neighbor to write an advertisement of the excellent quality of his wares. When a crowd stormed the place the merchant learned that his sign advertised that any customer coming into the store at a certain time would get "three free drinks." And down came the sign in record time.

Education in China
Until very recent years very few people in China received any education, and the education of this few was confined to a so-called classical system. Probably one of the most outstanding of the new cultural forces in China is the new educational system. The most revolutionary changes of this system are the granting of educational facilities to women and the introduction of co-education in primary schools. Of the vast number of Chinese characters, 1,000 of the most essential have been selected for use in the people's schools, and are exclusively used in the writing of appropriate popular books.

Oklahoma Girl Strong as Boy

"Louise Alice was fretful, nervous and all run-down from whooping cough," says Mrs. F. J. Kolar, 1730 West 22nd St., Oklahoma City, Okla. "The little I could force her to eat wouldn't ever digest. She became underweight, sallow and weak. "Then I decided to try California Fig Syrup, and the results surprised me. Her bowels started working immediately, and in little or no time she was eating so she got to be a pest at the table, always asking us to pass things. Her weight increased, her color improved and she began to romp and play again like other children. Now she's the picture of health, and strong as a boy." Pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable California Fig Syrup acts surely and quickly to cleanse your child's stomach and bowels of the scum that is keeping her half-sick, bilious, sallow, feverish, listless, weak and puny. But it's more than a laxative. It tones and strengthens the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord.

Over four million bottles used a year shows its popularity. Ask for it by the full name, "California Fig Syrup," so you'll get the genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years.

That Mutual Affection of Teacher and Pupil

"Schools are much different now from what they were when I was a lad," declared Senator Moses in a recent address. "Nowadays, with its bright sunny rooms, its variety of study and exercise, school has become a pleasure for the young people instead of a drudgery. But I expect that for the teachers, things are much the same. "I expect that some of the young folks realize this, too, for just after the September term opened I asked a young friend of mine: "I see school has opened again. Were you glad to get back to your desk and see your teacher?" "Well," said Johnny with a grin, "I guess I was just about as glad to see teacher as she was to see me."

Matter of Business

"They say Dave married Gladys for money." "Yes, to get back what he'd given her!"

Don't believe in intelligence tests, except the unpremeditated ones that present themselves all through the day.

Heart of the North by William Byron Mowery (WNU Service.) Copyright by William Byron Mowery.

THE STORY Six bandits hold up the steamer, Midnight Sun, on the Mackenzie, kill Jimmy Montgomery, and escape with gold dust and furs. At the Mounted Police post at Fort Endurance, Sgt. Alan Baker disputes with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, regarding plans for the capture of the bandits. Baker starts out in the police launch with five men. At the MacMillan trading post, Joyce MacMillan is thrilled at the arrival of the police launch. She had expected to marry Baker, and had been stunned at the news that he was to marry Elizabeth Spaulding. Stolen furs are found on the MacMillan place and evidence points to Joyce's father. Alan leads his expedition up the big Alooska. Compelled by Haskell's foolish orders to divide the party, Alan fails to capture the bandits and returns to Fort Endurance. Haskell blames him for the failure and Alan is allowed to buy out of the Mounted on condition that he absolve Haskell from blame.

CHAPTER VI -12- The Dark Hour

In his cabin Alan took off his uniform and changed to civilian clothes. It seemed to him he was stripping off his foot-free adventuresome life with that uniform.

What money he had on hand, several hundred dollars, he buttoned carefully in his shirt pocket. His expenses on this trip ahead would be heavy; he would have to borrow. But he was going to take that Victoria job, and he knew Colonel Steele would gladly give him a salary advance.

Then he made up a slender pack—a single blanket, a change of clothes, food for a week or ten days. That was all. No camping outfit, no weapons, no equipment for wilderness travel.

As he was buckling his pack together, Elizabeth unexpectedly came into the cabin. As she stepped into the light, she exclaimed: "Alan! That MacMillan girl told Mrs. Drummond that Haskell demoted you! That you're a constable! That he put all the blame of this patrol on you!"

"That's what he did," Alan answered, straightening up, facing her. "I didn't believe he was capable of it. But I shouldn't have been surprised; he's given me cues enough to his nature."

"And you're going to stand for that?" Her voice rose, sharp, nagging. "You're going to be his orderly, a constable, disgraced, bossed around?" "I think that any man would—would—"

She checked herself as she saw the government property laid out on the bed and noticed that Alan was in civilian clothes.

He said quietly "You were a bit hasty, I didn't stand for it. I bought out. I'm out of the Mounted. Out for good!"

Elizabeth gasped. For moments she stared at him, incredulous.

She did not know just why he had taken this drastic step, but vaguely she guessed he had had some fierce clash with Haskell. It did not matter, the circumstances. He was free of this ninety-month rut, this backwoods calling. There had always been a doubt in her mind whether Alan, when the great test came would actually tear himself away from the Mounted. She had expected a fight that would embitter him against her. But now he was out; he would surely take that Victoria offer; next winter she would be living in Victoria!

Feeling that he owed some explanation to the girl he was engaged to, he partly explained: "I'm pitching off on a trip, Elizabeth. By myself. I'm going after those men that shot up two of my friends. Haskell blocked a patrol I wanted to make. To go after them I had to be free. I don't know how long it'll take me. Maybe three weeks, maybe six. I'd like for you to wait here."

Something in his manner stopped Elizabeth from questioning him. She knew he intended to marry her and take her to Victoria; but something told her that in this present hour it was not well to question or oppose Alan Baker.

She acquiesced: "I'll wait, dear. I'll wait here for you. But, Alan, be sure you go . . ." She stood on tiptoe, reproaching him, begging, "Aren't you going to tell me good-by?"

Alan bent and kissed her, as she invited. But he did it dispassionately, as a thing expected of him. He felt her breath on his cheek, her arm tightening around him, her body pressed against his. He was subtly but unmistakably aware of a certain willingness about her; she wanted him to linger; she would have stayed with him there in the cabin. . . . It surprised, it shocked him, after all these months when she had been so cold and passionless.

When she had gone, he buckled his pack and caught up his hat. As he started to snuff the two candles in the alcove, he heard a thumping foot-step on the threshold and turned to see Bill Hardsock. In a flash he guessed that Bill had been waiting outside, not wanting to come in while Elizabeth was there.

"Alan! H—H's blue blazes!" Bill was all but incoherent as he advanced across the cabin. "Say it isn't so! I heard . . . wasn't meaning to listen a scheme, Alan sketched his plan. "And you'll keep quiet about this, Bill? Don't tell Ted, Elizabeth, Drummond, anybody. If it ever gets out, it'd wreck the whole idea, and I'd probably land in a penitentiary."

"I'll keep quiet as a dead dog. I won't breathe a word. But Alan, why in h—l way we've hung together, why can't I be in on your trick?" Eagerly he pleaded. "Let me go along, Alan."

"It'd mean desertion for you. Haskell would give you the limit. And you've got to watch after Joyce. My work is a one-man job anyway. We'll keep in touch, Bill. You write to me. Lord knows but—what you and I, sometime ahead, might get together again."

They shook hands. Alan hurried down the slope to the trading store. Factor Drummond had not gone to bed. The news of the patrol, of his old friend Dave MacMillan being arrested and faced with such overwhelming evidence of guilt, had upset him.

"What the devil, Alan?—civilian clothes!" Alan was weary of people's astonishment. He wasted no time with explanations.

"Drummond, where's old Dad Pence? I saw him here when we got back this evening."

Drummond pointed behind the counter. Alan walked around, up the narrow aisle, and there found old Pence asleep on a pile of wolf skins.

He had passed his three score and ten, old Dad Pence, at prospecting, trapping, water dogging, whatnot. He had made fortunes and guilelessly had lost them to men sharper than he. He had come down to the twilight of life penniless, homeless, childless. But old Dad Pence could still handle a rifle with the best of the youngsters; and a reputation for magic which he had acquired among the witch-killing Indians, still clung to him and put fear into primitive hearts. Altogether he was the man for Alan's purpose, if only Joyce would not mother him too much and make his existence thereafter too desolate by contrast.

Shaking him wide enough awake to understand what was wanted of him, Alan explained. He was to go back to the Big Alooska with Joyce and watch after her. He was to keep in touch with Bill Hardsock. Under no circumstances was he to wander off into the bush and leave Joyce alone.

Old Pence nodded. "I'll do it, b'y, just as you say. I'll try not to ferret and wanner off in th' bush. I'll look after Joyce, you don't worry."

Alan thrust a handful of bills into his pocket, and rose up and stepped back around the counter. "I want to buy your motor canoe, Drummond. How much?" "To buy it? You making a trip? Go ahead, take it and use it, Alan."

TRAIN—2 O'CLOCK

By ELIZABETH B. LUDLOW (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service.)

"THANK the Lord!" Bill had said, grabbing his friend, Anthony Harcourt by the arm. "Listen, fella, you've simply got to meet my girl. It's her first visit to New York. Take her to tea at the Ritz. I'll meet you there at five. I'm in a dence of a rush!"

"But, I say, I—" Tony Harcourt had begun hopefully. "Oh, yes," Bill had stopped long enough to shout back at him. "Train—two o'clock. Grand Central. Medium height, slim, dark hair, adorable nose."

That was how it happened that Tony Harcourt was trying to meet every two o'clock train arriving at the Grand Central terminal. He didn't know where she was coming from and, worst of all, he had forgotten her name, although he had heard Bill mention it several times. He had met two trains where almost everybody had been met by friends or seemed to know exactly where they were going.

Not every one, though. Tony approached three brunettes who had seemed a bit undecided, but each one had frozen him with a glance almost before he could make his carefully prepared speech—"I beg your pardon, but was Bill Felton to have met you?"

As Tony approached the third train, he was inwardly muttering, "Darned old fool. Why couldn't he do his own dirty work? I give up. This task requires super-human powers." But he noticed that, as he was rather tardy in approaching his third train, most of the passengers had left. Those that remained were chatting with friends who had met them—all except one, a slim, dark girl of medium height with an adorable nose. "Of course," thought Tony Harcourt with a leaping of his pulses, "that is all the description that girl would need. I've been wasting time."

She was looking about in a puzzled, hurt, almost frightened way, and he approached her with his carefully prepared speech—"I beg your pardon, but was Mr. Bill—"

"Oh, yes," cried the girl, relief and joy in the lovely eyes raised to his. "Did Bill send you? I was just about to appeal to the Traveler's Aid. New York is rather overwhelming when you've never been here before, isn't it?"

"It certainly is," agreed Tony, holding close the small gloved hand she had given him. "I'm awfully sorry to be late but, Bill gave me the sketchiest description and directions. I've been trying to meet all the two o'clock trains." Suddenly he realized that they were still standing looking at each other and that he still held her hand.

The realization came to her at the same time and she colored and withdrew it. Then both laughed.

"You darling—you darling—oh, d—n Bill's luck," said Tony to himself, but aloud he said, "The program is tea at the Ritz where Bill will join us at five."

"Oh, grand!" exclaimed Bill's girl happily. "Wouldn't he just think of something nice like that. But we have lots of time, haven't we? Do you know what I'd like to do first? I'd like to drive around Central park. The train was so hot and dusty, and I've always wanted to see Central park."

"Central park it shall be," said Tony. He would have driven her to Alaska if she had asked him to. When finally established in his car and while he threaded his way through the traffic, he said, "Now, I can see why Bill mentioned the nose. Of course, that was really the only description needed."

She brought her shining eyes back from their excited and delighted scrutiny of New York to laugh up at him. "I know," she said. "I've often thought of wearing a mask, but—imagine Bill really noticing my nose!" "I can," he told her. "I was planning to have a cast made of it and erected here in Central park. Gee, I'm glad Bill couldn't get off to meet you."

Mother Snake on Guard

A Florida rattlesnake guarding her young in the reptile house of the New York zoological park aroused much interest. When the keeper approached and touched the gate of the cage the mother came shooting out of a corner to see what was going on. Even snakes are capable of individual characteristics it seems for in all his thirty-two years dealing with them Mr. Toomy, the keeper, never saw one act as this one did.

When TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet it is always effective, for older children, too. Remember, Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name:

The Realist and the Sea

S. S. Slog, the noted bibliophile, was condemning on the Lafayette a realistic novelist. "The man's view of life," he said, "reminds me of a servant girl who had never seen the ocean. Finally she was taken to Ocean City, and her mistress led her down to the beach and said, waving her hand over the great windy spread of rolling waters and white sands and wheeling gulls: "There it is, Maggie. What do you think of it?" "Frew! said Maggie. "It smells like stale oysters, don't it?""

Old English "Sport" of Fox Hunting Endangered

Would England still be England, without its hunting rallies? Is this sport of centuries, the merry chase of elusive foxes, fated to die out? It is unlikely that there is any feature of English country life so typical of the customs and traditions of the nation, as fox hunting. This being so, a recent statement of the earl of Rosebery, on accepting the mastership of the Whadden chase, that this sport is in a very critical condition, came rather as a surprise. He declared that five neighboring packs are having difficulty in finding masters, and that sportsmen must rally around now, or see fox hunting go the way of hawking. His lordship ascribed the decline to hard times and high taxation.

This might be considered bad news, even for the foxes, for from accounts of this sport that I have read, it would seem that the prey gets as much fun out of eluding the huntsmen, as the latter do in the galloping pursuit. After some of these old-wily masters of the craft have learned the business, their chances of becoming a mere brush are comfortably few. Why, there are even some of these old fellows who pay visits to the kennels, if the hunt is not up regularly, to see what is keeping their little playmates! At least that's the story told.—Border Cities Star.

Constitution First

The Constitution was written before the preamble, and voted upon, section by section. It was then submitted to the committee on style, which made the final draft, placing the preamble in its proper place. It was then voted upon in its entirety.

JUDGE FIRES FOR RE-ELECTION DISTRICT JUDGE

To the Voters of the 100th Judicial District of Texas:

I am a candidate for re election to the office of District Judge of this District. As most of you know, I was a practicing attorney in Childress, Texas, for more than forty years before I was appointed and elected District Judge, and you know at the end of this term I will have served four years as Judge by election and three months prior thereto under appointment. I am grateful to the voters for the support heretofore given me, and if you now feel that I have done my duty and am qualified, I will again appreciate your support.

If you feel that I have not done
my duty, or that I am not qualified, then as a good citizen you should vote against me.

A. J. Fires.

Not only is Judge Fires the Panhandle's pioneer attorney, but for years it has been a generally recognized fact that as a jurist he has no superior and few equals in Northwest Texas. Any man who has taken a leading part in the affairs of any section for more than forty years will doubtless accumulate some enemies.
If Judge Fires has enemies, we dare say that not one of them will question his ability, or his "straight shooting," or charge that he has ever "fallen down on the job." Which, as a record, seems to us plenty good.
