PIONEER HEDLEY CITIZEN IS DEAD

Last Saturday morning about four o'clock Hedley lost one of its oldest and best loved citizens when Mrs. W. T. White passed away at her home in West Hedley of infirmities incident to old age, she being in her 86th year.

Funeral services were held at the First Baptist Church at 3:00 p. m. Sunday, conducted by the pastor, Rev. M. E. Wells. The large attendance, many of them from Clarendon and other places, and the profession of lovely flowers attested to the affection and respect in which this good woman was held by all who knew her.

The remains were laid to rest in Rowe Cemetery.

Anna L. Allen was born Nov. 24, 1847, at Columbiana, Ala., was educated at St. Augustine, Fla., and came to Texas in 1865, the family settling at Burton, Washington county. She was married Oct. 29, 1873, to W. T. White, who passed away at Hedley in February, 1917. To this union were born four children, two of whom preceded their mother to the other shore.

Mrs. White came to Hedley in July, 1891, nearly 42 years ago. Until her husband's death they made their home on their large farm a short distance northeast of town; since that time she has built and occupied a home in Hedley. She was a charter member of the first Baptist church organized in Hedley, and until her health began to decline a few years ago she was active in church and community work. She was not only one of our oldest citizens, but also one of our very best. Her memory will long be cherished here.

Surviving her are her son, F. A. White of Clarendon, and her daughter, Mrs. S. A. McCarroll of San Angelo, seven grandchildren, and other relatives. To them the sincere sympathy of our people is extended.

Roosevelt Escapes Assassin's Bullets but Mayor Cermak Is Wounded—Senate Adopts Dry Repeal Resolution by Surprisingly Large Majority.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SHOT at five times by an anarchist in Miami, President-Elect Franklin D. Roosevelt narrowly escaped being added to the list of America's illustrious victims of assassins.

Franklin D. Roosevelt

Not one of the bullets struck him, but Mayor Antonio Cermak of Chicago, who was talking with Mr. Roosevelt, was seriously wounded. Two other men and two women in the throng that was gathered in Bay Front park to welcome the President-Elect also were hit by the assassin's bullets and it was feared one of the women would not survive.

Mr. Roosevelt had just landed after his fishing cruise, had made a brief talk to the thousands in the park and was being greeted by personal friends when the anarchist, identified as Giuseppe Zangara of Hackensack, N. J., fired at him from a distance of 20 feet. In the great excitement and turmoil Mr. Roosevelt remained calm and insisted on taking Mr. Cermak to a hospital in his car. He remained over night on the yacht Nourmahal and visited the wounded mayor next morning before leaving by train for New York.

All the world was shocked by the attempted assassination and messages of congratulation on his escape poured in on Mr. Roosevelt, one of the first received being from President Hoover. Mrs. Roosevelt heard the news as she returned home from a club where she had made an address. Her only comment on learning that her husband was not injured was: "I am thankful." She did not change her plans, which took her next day to Ulises to speak at a home and farm week celebration.

Secret service operatives in Miami said Zangara, the assassin, was a member of an anarchist group of Patterson, N. J., and that he declared he had no accomplices, acting entirely on his own initiative. Immediate steps toward his trial were taken, but the authorities were careful to avoid any possible charges that Zangara was being "railroaded."

BY THE rather surprising vote of 83 to 23 the senate adopted the revised Blaine resolution submitting repeal of the Eighteenth amendment to constitutional conventions in the states. In this form the measure is almost in accord with the plank of the Democratic platform. It provides for outright repeal except for federal protection for dry states against liquor importations.

Speaker Garner predicted the resolution would be speedily accepted by the house. The approval of the President is not required; but it must be ratified by thirty-six states.

Voting for the resolution in the senate were 33 Democrats, 29 Republicans and 1 Farmer-Laborite. Against it were 9 Democrats and 14 Republicans. The Illinois senate passed legislation wiping out the state prohibition law and the search and seizure act.

WHILE Ambassador Sir Ronald Lindsay was starting back to Washington with the British proposals for the war debt discussion scheduled for March, Senator Key Pittman introduced a bill that would seem to have some merit, though our expert financiers may tear it to pieces. The measure would permit Great Britain to make the payment on her debt due in June in silver, and this, according to Mr. Pittman, would operate to the advantage of the United States; would enable England to avoid transfer of gold to meet the next war debt payment and would make possible acceptance by Great Britain of silver in payment of a large sum due from India before the June war debt payment.

The Pittman bill would authorize the acceptance by this government of any sum up to $100,000,000 due from Great Britain in silver at current market value.

Its purpose was explained as follows by Mr. Pittman:

"The government of India owes Great Britain approximately $85,000,000. It has been reported with some authority that India desires to pay this debt to Great Britain with silver. The acceptance by the United States of $74,950,000 worth of silver at the world market price of silver of approximately 25 cents an ounce, which is probably lower than it will ever be again, would not only be profitable to the United States but advantageous to both the United States and Great Britain.

"Under such a settlement the United States would receive 296,800,000 ounces of silver at the present market price of about 25 cents an ounce. Under the provisions of the act our government out of such silver would coin 74,950,000 standard silver dollars. It would deposit them in the treasury and issue and circulate against them $74,950,000 in silver certificates similar to those now in circulation in the United States.

"As it requires only seventy-eight one-hundredths of an ounce of silver in the coinage of standard silver dollars, there would remain, therefore, in the treasury, in addition to such 74,950,000 standard silver dollars, 241,330,000 ounces of silver to be held in the treasury as security for the maintenance of the parity of the silver certificates so issued."

ONE of the eminent men called on to advise the senate finance committee, Dr. Herman F. Arendt, a Boston economist, condemning any plan for "internationally managed currency," such as may be expected to be put forth at the coming International Economic Conference, declared that what we need is less credit and more hard cash. Silver is the salvation, in this hard money campaign, he maintained. Its remonetization would be the engine priming that would, in six months, enable America to sell to the Orient between 600 and 650 million dollars' worth of lumber, wheat, cotton and copper.

First of the advisers heard by the committee was Bernard M. Baruch, who is likely to be in the Roosevelt cabinet. He argued vigorously against currency inflation and in favor of a speedy balancing of the budget, and urged the adoption of a beer tax and the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. He also advised the federal leasing of farm acreage to curtail production, and this plan was endorsed by C. C. Teague former member of the farm board. Mr. Teague, asserting that the collapse of the credit structure of the country was the fundamental cause of the depression, urged federal guarantee of bank deposits, and in this he has the full support of Speaker Garner.

George N. Peek, a manufacturer of Moline, Ill., set forth his objections to the domestic allotment bill, which is doomed to death either in the senate or in the White House, and proposed a modification of the plan whereby curtailment of acreage would come after planting and before harvest, since "the variation in yield of all growing crops from year to year depends 75 per cent on weather and pests, largely beyond human control, and only 25 per cent on the acreage planted."

DESPITE the efforts of Brazil and other South American nations, backed up by our State department, real war has broken out between Colombia and Peru and the former country has severed diplomatic relations and declared that mediation is finished. This rupture resulted from an air attack by Peru on a Colombian flotilla on the Putumayo river which was repulsed by Colombian planes and was followed by an engagement at the town of Tarapaca, on the Brazilian border.

FINANCIAL troubles of the Union Guardian Trust company, an investment concern of Detroit, led Gov. William A. Comstock of Michigan to take the courageous step of proclaiming an eight-day bank holiday, and his drastic action received the approval and legal sanction of the legislature. The legislators also got busy at once with the enactment of measures covering the situation and bearing retroactive clauses.

Except for the upper peninsula, which is separated both geographically and economically from the remainder of the state, the banks were abiding by the holiday order. The upper peninsula is in a different federal reserve bank district and, although the governor of the Federal Reserve bank of Minneapolis said he was keeping hands off in the situation, most banks above the Straits of Mackinac were doing business as usual.

The Federal Reserve bank of Detroit remained open and received millions of dollars from Chicago and New York, and the Detroit Clearing House association made arrangements whereby, by $25,000,000 was made available to depositors, the latter being permitted to withdraw not in excess of 5 per cent of their balances for emergency purposes before the expiration of the holiday. Several of the biggest Detroit corporations announced that they were continuing to pay their workers in cash, and all business concerns except the financial houses carried on as usual. The governor held conferences with Secretary of Commerce Chapin and leading financial authorities, and Mr. Comstock said he did not seek to prohibit any bank from making a sensible arrangement to permit withdrawals to meet family necessities or to allow the cashing of pay checks.

SO FAR as the courts and prosecutors of Hawaii are concerned the Massie case has been closed with the dismissal of charges against four Hawaiian youths of mixed blood who had been accused of attacking Mrs. Thomas H. Massie, wife of a naval lieutenant. This action was taken on recommendation of Public Prosecutor J. C. Kelley, who made public a report of a detective agency on an investigation of the case made at the instance of Gov. Lawrence M. Judd and Attorney General Harry Hewitt.

WRITING with restraint concerning the antics of the present congress is difficult. What the house does in the way of economy, if anything, is speedily undone by the senate, and vice versa, or else both sides agree on some legislation which they well know will not get by with President Hoover. Probably all economies that might hit the constituencies or the favorites of any members will be left for Mr. Roosevelt to put into effect through the extraordinary powers which the Democrats propose to confer on him. In the language of the street, they are passing the buck.

Senator Bratton's amendment to the treasury-post office supply bill providing for a 5 per cent cut in appropriations, and the Navy department's plans for maintaining the fleet efficiency by shutting down the pork barrel shore establishments caused a hurried lineup of the congressional supporters of the useless navy yards. But the two propositions put Chairman Carl Vinson of the house naval affairs committee in a quandary. He announced he would fight the Bratton plan in so far as it concerned the navy, and if it carried, he would fight to have the navy yards at Boston, Charleston and Portsmouth closed down at once.

SOMETHING concrete in the way of unemployment relief was done by the senate when it voted to add $22,000,000 to the War department supply bill for 1934 for the purpose of enrolling and training 88,000 homeless and idle young men in year-round citizens' military training camps.

Sen. Couzens

Senator Couzens of Michigan was the originator of the part of the plan which is designed to provide a home, food and something to do for a considerable part of the 300,000 boys who are said to be tramping about the country. The clauses providing that the lads be placed under discipline, required to drill, and limiting those received to Americans physically and mentally fit for community life were introduced at the instance of Senator David Reed of Pennsylvania. As the bill was drawn, boys between fifteen and twenty-one years old will be admissible provided they can show that they have been without work for six months or more, and provided they can meet the C. M. T. C. entrance requirements as to citizenship and health.

INVESTIGATION of the election of John H. Overton as senator from Louisiana by a senate committee that went to New Orleans gave Senator Huey Long opportunity for many characteristic outbreaks, and though he apologized frequently to the committee, Chairman Howell threatened him with action for contempt. Long's brother, now his bitter enemy, and various other witnesses told of many instances of alleged corruption, graft and extortion in Louisiana, and the report of the "Kingsfish" in nearly every case was "You're a liar"—with profane trimmings. The charges involved both Overton and Long.

JAPAN informed the world that its negotiations with the League of Nations in the Manchurian dispute had come to an end. The foreign office in Tokyo said it would offer no further concessions and would stand firmly by its determination to maintain the government of Manchukuo. Yosuke Matsuoka, Japan's able representative at Geneva, was given instructions to this effect and told to withdraw from the league and return home as soon as the league adopted the report of the committee of nineteen which reasserts the principle of Chinese sovereignty in Manchuria and declines to recognize Manchukuo. All this was formulated by the cabinet and approved by the emperor.

Dispatches from Tokyo said the government feels that withdrawal from the League of Nations will be the turning point in the empire's history. Before the ultimate decision is made, it was announced, there would be an extraordinary conference of the council of elders, the heads of branches of the imperial family, all living former premiers and other distinguished personal ages.

Meanwhile plans for a general Japanese offensive against the Chinese province of Jehol, which Japan claims is a part of Manchukuo, were reported well under way, and it was expected a campaign would soon begin to drive out several hundred thousands of Marshal Chang's troops. If this movement starts before Japan actually quits the League of Nations the league might apply sanctions under Article 16 of the covenant, and the results of this could well involve many nations.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—The important nations of the world are about to enter upon a new era. Historians urge that the record of events repeats itself with amazing regularity, but does history show any period wherein statesmen have turned to each other with an appeal, with a willingness to make concessions and sacrifices?

Such is the perspective that we get of the next five or six months. With Creditor America receiving Debtor England and Debtor Italy and other debtor nations to talk over the wartime loans made to them and means of settling the obligations, and with the international monetary and economic conference arranged for, is there any parallel in history?

But why the debt discussions? And why the conference of nations on economic and monetary matters? The answer is the peoples of the world demand that something be done to remove the barriers and the burdens that hold commerce and industry with a deathlike grip. Statesmen charged with official responsibility are settling to their task. They have responded, as they must, to the public call. Some observers think the picture indicates a new and higher order in world affairs. It certainly sets down the year 1933 as epochal.

While the United States has consistently maintained that the debts owed this nation on account of war loans are a matter separate and apart from any of the other world problems, the contention has been, and is now being made to apply only to the extent that readjustment of those debts would never be considered in the same conference with economic problems. No one in authority here doubts the relation between foreign debts and numerous other phases of the great depression. It is simply that the United States is not disposed to do horse trading with her debtors while they are trying to give us a Model T Ford in exchange.

Senator Borah, of Idaho, stated the situation succinctly when he said he was willing to concede some new and easier terms for the payment of the war debts provided the nations which owe the money were willing to forego some of their own selfish purposes in return. He wants to use the war debts as a club to force cuts in military and naval expenditures by those nations who find it hard to pay their debts; he wants to compel them by force of circumstances to live within their income, and he seeks at the same time to remove the underhanded and scheming conspiracies to which so many of the world powers are addicted.

The debts approximate $11,000,000,000. Their influence, therefore, is quite beyond that of a simple commitment to pay. It hamstringing the nation owing the money; it burdens the people of that nation, and it is a barrier to trade because it involves the transfer of moneys between nations, known as international exchange.

But the international debts constitute only one barrier. There are others. The list is impressive: unstable currencies, fear and uncertainty, private debts, disordered government finances in this country as well as abroad, trade restrictions laid down to help pay international and other public debts, restrictions on exchange so that there is not a free flow of money between nations in payment for commodities passing in commerce, falling prices, and contracted and disturbed markets.

The list explains why they must all be considered together. It explains why we have heard constantly that the depression is not a problem peculiar to the United States. Every nation seeks to trade with every other nation. If either one or both parties to the transaction is handicapped, just to that extent is trade slowed down.

The surplus of goods which America sells constitutes only about 10 per cent of the total normal output of this country, yet when that 10 per cent fails to move into the channels of trade with other nations, hard times invariably result. It is easy to see from the list set forth how that surplus which we ordinarily sell is blocked from foreign markets.

Take the trade restrictions, for example. Many foreign nations, in fact, most of them, have established a maximum quantity of many commodities which they permit to be imported. If that maximum is half of normal, our trade has suffered accordingly. The purpose of such a restriction is to create a home industry in that nation, but it has raised havoc with us and with others in the meantime, adding to the unemployed of selling nations and destroying the markets for the raw material which those factories hitherto had bought.

Tariff policies fall into the same category. The United States uses that method. It justifies its course on the ground that it must protect its home industries and its labor.

The exchange restrictions are probably more serious from the American point of view than most of the others, because they fit hand in glove with the depreciated currency situation in many foreign nations. Some of the nations, because they yielded to the impulse to inflate their currencies, to print more money, have found themselves with only a little gold in their hands. Consequently, their governments have laid down rules that gold may not be exported.

When an American firm wants to ship a tractor to the farmer in Rumania, for instance, he cannot sell the tractor because Rumania does not permit the exporting of gold at this time. The buyer, therefore, has nothing to use for money. There is no sale.

A discussion of the influences that flow from these various barriers could go on almost endlessly. It doubtless will go on at considerable length when the representatives of the several nations get together in the forthcoming international monetary and economic conference.

That conference, however, is going to test the sincerity of a great many foreign nations. There will be plenty of maneuvering for advantage. Of that, there is no doubt. Selfishness will be evident from the start. The conference may even fail altogether. Yet there is hope in it. If any progress at all is made, to that extent will there be benefit for all of the world.

It would be wrong to suggest that even a complete agreement on ways and means of removing trade barriers and a settlement of the international debt question on a basis satisfactory to the debtors would have the effect of immediately restoring prosperity everywhere. The world has been too sick for that. Behind it all, however, is this assurance: unless the debt conference and the monetary and economic conference are complete failures, some of the fear and some of the uncertainty will be removed. Mr. Hoover and Mr. Roosevelt and leaders in congress all have said that one of the greatest needs is a feeling of safety about one's food and clothes and money in the days ahead.

Although the Democrats are floundering around with this new control that has been placed in their hands, there is somehow a ray of hope flickering through the clouds. It surely seems like they are going to return to the old-fashioned system of party caucuses. If they do, they will get things done. Whether you agree with their program or not, at least they can succeed in putting it through congress.

It has been a long time since a real party caucus has been regularly used in legislative matters in congress. After all, a party caucus is no more than that. All of the members of that party in one branch of the legislative body get together. The doors are closed. There is no congressional record upon which to spread the sayings and doings of the individuals. Newspaper correspondents are barred. The urge for the individual to play politics for the benefit of the folks back home is quite effectively destroyed. The result naturally is something of a willingness among the members to pledge themselves to vote as the majority of their members think best. They bind themselves.

When controversial legislation reaches the floor of the house or the senate, after a caucus, the party proposing it can reasonably count on a fight only from the minority party. It does not have to battle its own ranks.

There are many reasons why the party caucus commends itself to those who believe in strict party regularity and party government. One of them is that only by this method can the legislation be planned on a national scope. If an individual representative is not bound by action of his party in caucus, his breast is bare to the sharp knives of local interests. If a particular congressional district is going to lose a navy yard or an army post because of economy and the party says that course must be followed, the representative from that district is provided with a shield by being bound. The folks back home can be told that "the party did it, and I stand with the party that elected me."

Another phase is this: in the last few years there have been many representatives and senators elected because they shouted from the housetops of their communities that they were individualists. But when they took their oath of office and entered upon their duties, they were forced to the sudden realization that they had to trade co-operation with the other fellow, or 400-odd other fellows, to get anything accomplished. In other words, the party caucus provides a way out. At the same time, regular party men, be they Republicans or Democrats, maintain that a party caucus system regularly used makes of congress a national legislative body as distinguished from a body of legislators in behalf of individual communities and interests.

Henpecking Credit's Near Collapse Actors and Writers

By ED HOWE

THERE may be a suggestion in the following paragraph to women who are students of men: I do not believe I have ever known a man at all intimately who did not say sometime during our acquaintance: "There isn't another man in the world who dislikes henpecking as much as I do." In a recent reading of the memoirs of Silerius, who lived two thousand years ago, I found this old Roman felt the same way about henpecking; it may be depended upon that all men dislike it. I once had a friend who was a conspicuous victim of henpecking. I intimated as much to him, and have never seen an angrier man; I wondered he did not strike me. . . . I suppose women will never give up the practice; but they should at least be warned that men universally dislike it; and I have known some quite brutal cases of rebellion.

Everyone has remarked the frequent arrests of negro men for slight offenses, and their severe punishment. At Atlanta, Ga., the treasurer of a white Baptist Missionary society, drew three years for stealing $953,000. In the next cell was a negro man who had drawn four years for chicken stealing.

For centuries civilized men have been trying to build up Credit, as a convenience in living our ordinary lives. The National Association of Credit Men lately met in convention, and their disclosures were startling: Millions of people "beat" their way; the convenient thing called Credit may be abandoned through necessity. . . . Bankers tell an equally startling story: hundreds of thousands of bad checks are given every day. Each one represents a penitentiary offense, and often another penitentiary offense is committed in trying to collect them; in compounding a felony. The people complain bitterly of dishonesty in public affairs, and are disgracefully dishonest in their own lives.

My bell rang today, and, on going down, I found a man there who asked if I would permit him to talk half an hour about the Bible. (He was not a good man; I can tell a good man as far as I can see him.) The Bible is an important book, and everyone should know about it; but I know more about it than this fellow knows. He was a nuisance; I had no respect for his attempt to do good, and quickly disposed of him with discouragement he should have met with at other doors.

Handling a dollar, as common human experience as there is, requires all the judgment a man may acquire. To throw it away is not proper; to hold onto it too long is equally objectionable. One should acquire a dollar like a gentleman, and let go of it in the same way.

I wish I had tried to learn to be an actor, instead of a writer. If an actor gives a bad performance, he may be consoled with the thought that he will play the same part the following night, and thus have a chance to improve it. . . . But I, poor wretch, am forever giving a rough first performance; when I write anything, and do not like it in print, I cannot better it. . . . Also note the performance of a musician; he has played the same thing so many times he can remember every note. No wonder Fritz Kreisler is good.

I have long known a very nice woman, and she has been generally admired. Lately noting a falling off in her popularity, I inquired around as to the cause. A woman gave me the best answer: "She has overloaded me with her eccentricities. . . . Men do it, too, so I send out a general warning. Everyone is entitled to a certain number of eccentricities, and there is always a certain amount of charity for them, but eccentricities must be managed with care, or they will result in damaging grumbling."

I doubt that Old Soldiers realize the mean talk behind their backs. "I am having trouble with my stomach due to carelessness in eating," a man writes me, "but so far have not followed the example of a neighbor who put in a claim to the government, and now draws a pension of $20 a month. This man was the uniform three months, and was not injured. I was in France and Germany nearly two years, but still think I would be a grafter if I put in a claim."

Some say my attitude toward women is unfriendly. A woman writes me: "My life is a more useful one because of you. I suffered most from laziness, and no one had the courage to tell me so. I had nothing to do but pity myself, and actually pitted myself into serious illness. I was unreasonable with my good father and brothers; I hope and believe they are better satisfied with me now. I cannot see in you a woman hater."

I have great respect for maxims, as they include philosophy, learning, wit, experience. One of the best is: "Work hard and behave." Were it not longer (in a maxim brevity is very important) "Make the best use of your time" would be almost equally good.

Another Monday Auxiliary meeting for the women of the Methodist Church has passed; another interesting lesson on Bible questions, refreshing our minds on many instances of early Bible days, and causing serious reflections as to how we of the present day might react in such conditions, for the incidents are recorded for our benefit. And we regret that more of the women do not attend, that we might gain knowledge from wide discussion.

Then, another thing. A revival meeting is in progress at the Methodist Church, and the entire town, surrounding country, and all visitors are invited and welcome at any and all services. Our Presiding Elder is doing the preaching, and while the little cold snap prevented a large attendance at the beginning, we are hoping for and expecting great things from the Lord.

Your Power Supply

As much electricity as you can use—or as little as you may require; at the place where you want it, at the time when you want it—reliable and continuous, always ready, instantly delivered.

These standards of electric service have resulted from years of building.

Large, efficient power plants—and widespread networks of transmission lines to serve groups of towns—have resulted in the ample, inexpensive power available everywhere today.

The West Texas Utilities Company, with three major generating stations, nineteen auxiliary plants and over 2,500 miles of transmission lines, is providing this modern power supply to 125 progressive towns in West Texas, the "Land of Opportunity."

Do you know that your increased use of Electric Service is billed on a surprisingly low rate schedule... and adds only a small amount to your total bill?

CANDIES IN COOKERY

AS a nation we eat more candy per capita than any on the globe, like it, and find it wholesome and nutritious and yet our confectioners are sending out literature to urge us to eat more. Here are some new ones, which we all like:

Candied Yams.

Take six sticks of old-fashioned cinnamon candy pulverized. Yum, yum—can't you remember when a stick of candy was a great treat? Dice six marshmallows and chop four ounces of Brazil nuts. Slice six medium-sized cooked sweet potatoes and place in a buttered baking dish, sprinkle with some of the marshmallows, dot with butter, using two tablespoons to the dish; add some from a half cupful of raisins, the pulverized candy to which has been added one-half cupful of brown sugar. Repeat until all the ingredients are used, having a layer of marshmallows on top. Bake in the oven until it is a delicate brown. It is well worth a trial.

Pastry Shells With Nut Clusters.

Put one cupful of nut cluster candy through the food chopper, add one cupful of whipped cream and a few drops of almond flavoring. Heap in pastry shells and serve well chilled. One may use small cup cakes hollowed out instead of the pastry shells, which will be better if children are to be served.

Butterscotch Pudding.

Mix one cupful of brown sugar, three tablespoonfuls of flour, two beaten eggs, stir well, then add one pint of rich milk and cook until smooth in a double boiler. Just before taking from the fire add one-half cupful or more of peanut brittle which has been crushed fine.

that he had moved because he thought he had lived long enough in the old home and wanted to live where he could see more of the Great World. He had left Polly behind, he explained, until he should have a fine home ready for her. Sammy winked one eye, for he understood exactly what had happened. But Johnny didn't see his wink and went on to explain how much better this place was than the far corner of the Old Orchard where his old home was.

When he had finished Sammy wished him a great deal of happiness in his new home, told him that he surely would see a great deal more of the Great World there, and said that he admired Johnny's spirit and independence. Then he flew away chuckling. Johnny didn't see anything to chuckle about and he was a very thoughtful Chuck as he at last started to get his breakfast.

After he had found where the nearest clover patch was and had found out just how long it would take him to get from it to the safety of his house in time of danger, and after he had become fully acquainted with his surroundings, all of which took several days, Johnny settled down to enjoy his new home. He did his best to make himself believe that it was a very much finer home than the old one in the far corner and that he wouldn't go back there for anything in the world.

It was true that there was a great deal more going on there than near the old home. You see there was a great deal of passing along the dusty road just the other side of the old stone wall. This was exciting but not at all restful. It kept him always ready to dart down inside his house. He couldn't doze in peace as he had loved to do in the doorway of his old home.

Then, too, the dust was very provoking. It swept over him every time an auto rushed past. It made all the grass, even the patch of sweet clover some distance away, gritty and unpleasant to eat. His doorstep was not shaded in the least. Some days it got so hot that Johnny almost burned his little black feet. Still Johnny tried to make himself believe that he was enjoying his new home, and that it was ever and ever so much nicer than his old one.

THE HOG PROTESTS

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

"A STREET is a street, and it ought to be clear, But women keep crossing it, right when you're near, And many a time I've been caught by a light— Except for some kid, I'd have made it all right. Some fellow on crutches—I think it's a crime, Wherever you're going, the way you lose time, Some guy with a pushcart—well, here is my view: A street's for the public, and not for a few.

"A kid is so careless, a kid always is; He thinks both the street and the sidewalk are his; And, if you should hit one, that's going to court, And paying his people, and things of that sort. You may slap the brakes on, be able to stop, And even at that get bawled out by a cop. The way that the judges will plaster it on, The pleasure of driving is just about gone.

"Folks get off a street car, and what do they do? They sidestep the street car and walk into you. You may have insurance, and all of that stuff— At least they delay you, that's trouble enough. They're hogging the highways, and that's why I say The children will have to keep out of the way. When I'm in a rush to a dance or a date, The women can hurry, the cripples can wait."

GRAPHIC GOLF

LENGTHEN CLUB TO LENGTHEN TEE SHOT

EVERY golfer is on the lookout for a means of adding a few yards to his shots if he can do it without sacrificing accuracy. This is possible with the development of a longer arc. With few exceptions most of those who are noted for their distance from the tee have a long swing. On those occasions when Jones needs to put some extra distance on his drive a keen observer can notice that he employs a longer stroke. This additional leverage does the job though Jones apparently exerts no more pressure than usual; his swing is always smooth. The average golfer can accomplish the same results comparatively by using a longer club with a fairly springy shaft. With this club the golfer must stand further back from the ball, the clubhead coming back and down in a wider arc. The player does not necessarily hit harder but the clubhead, gaining speed all through the longer arc, is swung onto the ball with considerable momentum and sends it speeding on its way.

INTO this Universe, and Why not knowing Nor Whence, like Water willy-nilly flowing; And out of it, as Wind along the Waste, I knew not Whither, willy-nilly blowing."

Life, to me, is something like that. Omar "hits" me quite often. Somehow we humans do things in spite of ourselves. In the shuffle of existence we sort of find our niches "willy-nilly."

My father died when I was one year old. My mother, faced with the necessity of supporting herself and her baby, took to the stage.

As I grew to boyhood my education became a problem and thus when my mother went on tour she sent me to military school. During vacations I sometimes appeared on the stage, but not with the stage in my mind as a serious future.

Then came college days—Trinity, Hartford, Conn.—where I took part in amateur theatricals. One day a film company from New York came to a nearby village on location. I was impressed with their work; but still my original purpose to enter business upon leaving college remained.

had about made up my mind that there was no room for me in motion picture work.

I suddenly decided to sign up for a naval training cruise to tide me over the summer. I had always loved the sea and this seemed like an opportunity to do something before going back to Trinity college for my senior year.

On the evening when I was to depart on the cruise Fate smiled ironically and decided to alter my life.

A telephone call came from Nazimova asking me to see her at the hotel. I was engaged for the role of Arno in "War Brides," and that was the beginning. I never returned to Trinity!

I was not yet twenty-one when this turning point in my life occurred, but had the call come the next day I would have been away on the cruise and probably become a second-rate business man at the end of my college days.

After "War Brides" came several leading roles with Marguerite Clark followed by some great "breaks" in David Wark Griffith productions, culminating in "Broken Blossoms" and "Way Down East."

Then out of clear skies came the talking pictures. I appeared in "Wary River," "Drag"—both dialogue films, and it is to talking pictures that I look for that eventful greatest role of my career.

Bird in the Fairy Book

"A big bird from one of my fairy tales came and took me for a ride." This was how a four-year-old child of Bombay, India, described being seized by an eagle while playing outside a farm house in the Trondelag district. The eagle carried the child halfway up a high, steep cliff and then dropped her. When picked up the child was quite unhurt.

Foiling the Seasons

Men have used strange methods in trying to convince people that they were different from the rest of the world. Yang Ti, a Chinese emperor, used to have leaves and flowers of silk sewed on his trees every autumn to show that even they were not subject to the laws of the seasons.—Collier's Weekly.

"I should have told her," he answered, "that John's head did not lie in my kingdom, that it belonged to the kingdom of God."—Boston Transcript.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

There were sledges loaded with hay and cornmeal in sacks for the oxen, and with food for the men. There was also a wooden scraper set upon broad runners when not in use. The drivers found water for their teams under the ice roof of a pond. Soon a shelter was built of poles covered with boughs of spruce and hemlock. The snow beneath it was overlaid with a deep mat of balsam. In a little time the woodchoppers had a fire blazing in front of the shelter and the cook had begun his work. A teamster had shot a deer that morning and there was food aplenty. The brawny, happy men amused themselves with singing and story-telling as they rested under the long shelter warmed by a fire 1-to which the snow fell hissing.

Colin got news of Mrs. Bowdler, who had moved to the fort with her children for the winter and who spent a part of every day hunting and trapping in the forest.

"That woman is half horse," said a man of the mountain country. "Fraid o' nothin'. Has killed a panther an' a lynx this winter an' seven-teen deer. She can bring a buck in on her back an' eat him for supper. Han'some as a picture an' neat as a pin an' p'lte as a minister, but it don't do to git her vexed."

The night was so cold that even the oxen were bedded with boughs and some of the teamsters slept between the beasts to keep warm. When the fire sank low, Colin had to get up and rake out the embers and stand leaning over them while he beat his sides for comfort. He had doubled the mare's cover with one of his own blankets and was feeling the need of it. He envied the mountaineers sleeping with frosty beards and with no apparent sense of discomfort. He put wood on the fire and went back to his bed smiling as he said to himself, "I wonder if the future generations will ever know about these days and nights."

The cattle bellowing for food and water were a sufficient reveille before daylight. The teamsters began to yoke their teams and take them to the pond for water. The snow had ceased. The fire was rekindled. The feeding had begun. A corps of shovelers working with pine torches were cutting a tunnel in deep snow. After breakfast four teams of oxen hitched to a scraper were wallowing as they slowly hauled it up the hill. Often the patient beasts were helpless in the white depths. Then the shovelers began to tunnel the drift around them and ahead.

The sky was clear and the sun shining when the scrapers halted at the summit and looked down upon a broad clearing. Colin toiled along behind them on his mare. A freezing wind blew in his face. The white slopes, sown with frost crystals which caught and held the sunlight, shone with dazzling prismatic rays. A fox out on a quest for supplies had made a seam in the snow a mile long from the forest edge to a henhouse on a farm in the valley. The road below was fairly clear for a distance. The guns were coming up behind and halting while the teamsters put chains on their runners to help in holding their loads on the long down-hill slant.

They made less than four miles that day, and at night the men were housed by an accommodating farmer, many of them sleeping on the floors with flaming wood in the fireplaces. The cattle had been watered at the farmer's well and turned into the stable yard where a shed sheltered them. Some of the men with poor foot-cover were disqualified for work by frozen toes. Colin went to another house where men and teams were hired to work through the night as far east as possible with shovels and the scraper. Aided by this forework, the train made about eight miles the next day.

So the guns of Ticonderoga crept along over the hills and through the valleys on their way to a new duty at Dorchester heights. Captain Cabot was wont to say, "They seemed to have left their old home with reluctance and to be sternly resisting the strength of the oxen."

Meanwhile in Boston Pat was having her first great adventure. She had been in communication with Revere since the time of Colin's departure. Mrs. Shipman, the wife of a loyalist, who had been prominent in the social life of the city, was their intermediary. She was from Virginia, where years before, after Washington had returned, a hero, from the unfortunate Braddock campaign, she fell in love with him although then engaged to marry a wealthy New Englander visiting in Alexandria. The young officer was not then heart free, according to credible reports, and nothing came of it save an undying memory in the mind of the girl. She married and went to live in Boston. Her home was a romantic mansion on Roxbury neck. It was built by one Corwin, who was clandestinely in love with the sister of his wife. In constructing the house he had made a secret passage between the walls on the second floor leading to the room planned for his sweetheart. This passage Mrs. Shipman had by and by discovered. At heart in sympathy with the American cause, she said nothing of this singular detail in the structure of the mansion, having conceived a use for it. The young patriots had had secret assistance from her and through Revere she had sent a letter to General Washington reminding him of old acquaintance and assuring him of her desire to assist the cause. She had confided to the young coppersmith the peculiar feature of the mansion. More than once he and his friends had found it a safe and convenient refuge. Shipman was then a brigadier in the British army and not often at home, being mostly in the camp at Bunker Hill.

One evening late in February, Revere was lying on a couch in the bedroom with a secret entrance, called "the chamber of sin," awaiting the hour when the collector of refuse would call for the barrels at the back door and convey him to Snoach's yard. Suddenly he heard the signal agreed upon and arose, eager to finish his errand.

He had been admitted by a trusted negro slave soon after darkness fell. He had not yet seen Mrs. Shipman and was awaiting her signal at the door. As usual when he occupied this room, there was no light in it. Suddenly he heard the signal, which was the flick of a handkerchief. The door opened and the mistress of the mansion entered.

"What have you to say?" she whispered.

Revere answered with like caution. "The Chief appreciates your help but he wishes me to remind you that it is a perilous kind of work and that you may even lose your life in doing it."

"Yes! I know," the lady exclaimed. "That is war. I would have you remember that of quite another thing even greater than war. That you will do when you say to him, and only to him, that life is not so much to me as it was once long ago. That mine is a failure unless I can make it in some way useful to him and that I would gladly give it to the cause he loves."

There was a note of sadness in her tone.

Touched by the sacred character of the message, the spy, who had a remarkable memory, applied himself to the task of noting in his mind the ordering of its phrases.

"There will be a bombardment," he went on. "At the sound of the first gun our friends are to come here and keep indoors. You are to tell Pat Fayerweather that she and her family are to come here. All other points will be in danger."

"When will the trouble begin?"

"We cannot say, but probably early in March."

"Anything more to tell me?"

"No."

"Then you must go. Here are letters. The litterman is waiting."

Revere descended the servants' stairs in the darkness to the kitchen. He stepped out of its door and down into an empty ash barrel on the wagon. A sunken top that held a foot of ashes was shoved into the barrel above his head. Thus he rode in a wagon behind horses driven by an unsuspecting patriot to Snoach's yard. There, if the driver saw no danger signal, Revere would take a water route on his way to Cambridge. The barrel journey to Winnismet was now rarely used.

Mrs. Shipman was a kind of post-mistress in the patriots in Boston. Revere and others in the secret service brought letters to the mansion and there received a few from friends of its mistress to be taken beyond the lines. Pat Fayerweather was one of this band of friends. She came to the mansion in her chaise next morning.

"I'm going through the lines," she said. "I'm desperate. Can't wait any longer. I've got to see that man. Good Lord! I'm in love."

Mrs. Shipman laughed.

"Well! I've had the same trouble. I know that restless feeling. But it's a robber. Women have to look out or it will deprive them of their sanity. Even greater treasures will soon be missing."

"To tell you the truth I am a reckless creature. I am not quite respectable."

"You wouldn't risk your life trying to break through the lines?"

"The apple woman is in town. I have told her to come here at eleven and that I will buy all her apples at a shilling each. She will be here in five minutes. I shall buy her costume and put it on with padding, and make my face as ugly as hers if I can, and go through the lines tonight. I shall reward her well, and I have in the chaise an old gown of one of our maids that will, I am sure, fit the woman."

"It is madness. Contain yourself. We'll be out of our trouble soon. I have a good reason for saying that. I know things which I cannot tell you."

"I am weary of that kind of talk. I must go. You know how I feel. My friends in Roxbury will meet me tonight on the road beyond the lines."

The girl threw her arms around the neck of the woman and kissed her. "I'll see how you look as an apple woman," said Mrs. Shipman. "Meanwhile, I shall think about it."

apple woman came. She was an eccentric harmless old widow who lived alone in an abandoned mill on Stony brook about a mile beyond the western entrance to Roxbury neck. She always carried with her a gift of stockings or mittens knitted by her own hands for the pickets of each army. They were all her "boys" and they called her "Mother Enslow." She was said to be a distant relative of one of the American brigadiers, whose influence had, no doubt, helped her in the beginning of her odd enterprise. She answered every challenge with her own countersign. It was, "My boy, God bless you!" It was sincere and had become sufficient on both lines. At first, the British took her to the guard-house, where she was searched. Later, all suspicion of any motive, save that of earning a few shillings, passed and they welcomed her, glad to have her apples and her blessing.

The girl and Mrs. Shipman went above-stairs with Mother Enslow. Pat began her negotiations with an offer of ten pounds to the old woman for her costume and advice. It was a large sum to this poor lonely creature, but she would not accept it until the girl had frankly given her motive for wishing to pass the lines.

"That's honest," said the old army mother. "Love is a caution. My girl, it's a killin' thing an' may the good God help ye! It broke the heart in my breast years an' years ago. I'll stay in Boston town for good an' all. Ye cross the Neck at seven. If anyone stops ye say, 'My boy, God bless ye!' They're all good boys, an' if ye say it with the holy spirit on yer tongue, they'll give ye not a word o' trouble."

So it happened that the acknowledged belle of Boston came into possession of the gown, bonnet, shoes and good wishes of old Mother Enslow, who, dressed in cast-off garments, presently left the mansion.

"First we'll try an experiment," said Mrs. Shipman.

It would have been difficult to distinguish Pat from the apple woman when she walked with her friend to the fish market where Mother Enslow bought her supplies. There the girl personated the apple woman so successfully that her manner, voice and make-up excited no suspicion in Mr. Snoach or his helpers. Mrs. Shipman laid their plan before him in a whispered conference.

"She'll pass!" he exclaimed. "Many's the time I've sent the apple woman to stockings. She was now the radiant, merry-hearted Pat Fayerweather. "It was a mad venture," said the woman. "If those young men had seen your body, the effect of it would not have been like that of the prayers of Mother Enslow. I do not wonder that Father Jerome forbade Paulina to look at her naked body. Yours would put a saint in jeopardy."

"And here it is withering like a picked rose," Pat answered with a laugh. "What's the use of it? D—n the British army! It keeps me from the one man—the big, dear man I love."

She seized her gold-buckled slipper and flung it across the room with a pretty indignation in her eyes, adding, "Must I always be content with the admiration of women?"

She laughed as she drew the strings on her wide waistband, saying, "If I ever get my hands on him again, he shall not escape."

"My soul!" the woman exclaimed. "You are like Richard when he yelled for a horse. Be patient. You are young yet."

"Young! I am ten years older than I was this morning. I am withering into old age."

Save for the woman spy who was then hiding in the secret passage this illuminating bit of Eighteenth century frankness would have been lost to the world. "Now I shall have to do some lying," said Pat, as, having finished dressing, she sat while a maid was adjusting the pins that held her hair. "You and I have spent the afternoon and evening knitting for the dear British soldiers—bad luck to them! Now that it is over, you will not mind how you spend the day so it be in a good cause."

"Oh, not at all. I'm an obliging liar and may the Lord forgive us! There's an old saying that he smiles at the lies of women."

"Why not? He knows that we have never had a fair chance in this old world of His. Sometimes I think I'd rather be a cock sparrow than a woman."

"We are a down-trodden lot," said Mrs. Shipman. "We have to take what's offered and often live unsatisfied. I'll ring for the chaise. It's time you were going home."

"Home life in the Colonies!" Pat laughed. "Codfish and smelly beef and pious prayers for King George before and after eating! Clinton and Howe laughing at Washington's army! I wonder why they do not fight it."

Before Pat went away, two British officers called at the mansion looking for Mother Enslow, the apple woman. They were told that she had gone. They insisted on searching the house and were permitted to do so.

The sergeant of the regiment of grenadiers had begun to suspect the Mother Enslow whom he had met that evening. In her presence he had missed something. The woman he saw and heard was like Mother Enslow and yet different. As he thought of the meeting, he wondered why his mind would give him no rest in the matter. What he had missed was a thing not to be seen or heard. It was the spiritual aura that surrounded the remarkable woman known as Mother Enslow. He had begun to tell of his suspicion, and a man hearing of it had told of meeting the apple woman and of taking her to the Shipman house and of having a like misgiving. So it came about that Mrs. Shipman and her home were thereafter closely watched. The consequences might have been serious a month earlier.

One day soon after, while visiting the British hospital, Pat came upon Mother Enslow, who was nursing the sick. They had a talk together. The former apple woman won the affection of the fashionable young lady. Within a week the old mother of the armies, shorn, trimmed and neatly dressed, had become a chambermaid in the Fayerweather mansion. Since the war began, wealthy loyalists had lost many servants and their domestic affairs were sorely deranged. Thus it was that Pat, feeling the need of wise counsel and friendly consolation, in her own home, found it in the company of Mother Enslow.

Soon the peaceful folk of the town were in a panic. A man who lived on the Neck looking through a spy-glass from the top of his house, had discovered signs of great activity on Dorchester heights. The heights had been taken by the Yankees without loss in a curious and ingenious manner. Their columns had advanced behind wheelbarrows loaded high with bound hay to screen them. Then barrels of sand were hauled to the top of the slopes to be rolled down upon the charging British regiments. It was a formidable plan of defense.

Many Anniversaries of World's Great in 1933

The Times has been asked what are the outstanding anniversaries of the year 1933. The list would fill columns. Most notable among those who would be a hundred years old if they had lived till 1933 are: Brahms, the composer (born in May); "Chinese" Gordon (January 28); Nobel, who founded the Nobel prizes; Edwin Booth (in November); Burne-Jones (in August), and Bach, the composer (in September), Joseph Priestley, the discoverer of oxygen, was born 200 years ago, in March, and Samuel Pepys in February of 1633. A conspicuous anniversary will be that of the birth of Queen Elizabeth, which occurred on September 7, 1533. Montaigne was born in February of the same year, and Aristotle and Cramer died in the course of it. If the calendar could recall an event so far back as 1033, it would remember the birth of Anselm.—New York Times.

Trade in Hedley

Your Home Town Market

Thousands of dollars will be saved by following the correct and patriotic principle of trading in Hedley

The Out-of-town Merchant is Interested in your Money

--so's the big Mail Order House. On the other hand, your home town business man is interested in the same things you are: Your churches and your schools, your homes, the education of your children, and your general welfare and prosperity. He wishes you well, even if he should happen not to care for you, personally, because you as a citizen constitute one of the forces that will make or break his business. And just as surely, your home town neighbors and business men constitute a force that can make or break you. "No man liveth to himself." We're dependent on each other. That's simple common sense, and you know it.

THE MORE YOU BUY IN HEDLEY THE BETTER MARKET HEDLEY WILL BE FOR YOU

ING THE APPLE

The apple is indeed the fruit of youth. As we grow old we crave apples less. It is an ominous sign. When you are ashamed to be seen eating them on the street; when you can carry them in your pocket and your hand not constantly find its way to them; when your neighbor has apples and you have none, and you make no nocturnal visits to his orchard; when your lunch-basket is without them and you can pass a winter's night by the fireside with no thought of the fruit at your elbow, then be assured you are no longer a boy either in heart or years.—John Burroughs, Quoted in Our Dumb Animals.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are best for liver, bowels and stomach. One little Pellet for a laxative—three for a cathartic.—Adv.

Monetary Truth

Money talks, but not as loud as lack of it.

Do this for Your Child in TWO WEEKS

How to rid any boy or girl of sluggishness or constipation and build a big appetite. The trouble with children who will not eat is usual stasis. The symptoms are a tongue that's always coated, bad breath, poor color, dull eyes that are often a bilious yellow. No appetite, no ambition—even for play. Hard to get to sleep, hard to wake in the morning.

There's an absolute remedy for this condition. It gives listless youngsters the appetite and energies of a young animal! They eat! They gain! They keep well!

It's not the stomach, but the bowel condition that keeps children from eating. But the trouble is in the lower bowel—the colon. California syrup of figs is the only "medicine" that is needed to stimulate the colon muscles. The very next day, your child is eating better and feeling better. Keep on with the syrup of figs a few days and you will see amazing improvement in appetite, color, weight and spirits.

Any drug store has the real California syrup of figs, all bottled, with directions. Nature never made a nicer acting or nicer tasting laxative. (It is purely vegetable.) Remember California syrup of figs when sickness, a cold or any upset has clogged a child's bowels.

WARNING: Even when it's something to give children, some stores will try to substitute. So be sure the bottle says CALIFORNIA Syrup of Figs.

An Alarming Situation

Coolidge in Plea for Man's Humble Friends

On March 30, 1920, there was dedicated in the Massachusetts state house, Boston, the first memorial to animals ever erected in a legislative building. It was a tablet memorializing the horses, dogs and other animals that served in the World war, was given by the Massachusetts S. P. C. A. to the state. After an address by President Rowley, the tablet was accepted by Calvin Coolidge, then Governor of Massachusetts, who said in part: "Those whom this tablet honors will never know its meaning, its significance, or even of its existence, but we can understand what it means and how much was done for the benefit of mankind by these creatures who suffered for our sake.

"A merciful man is merciful to his beast. A just man is just to all. We can show our own worthiness by an appreciation of what these creatures did and how they suffered for our welfare.

"I accept this tablet as characteristic of the teachings of the commonwealth. I accept it with an acknowledgment of the generosity that prompted those who have made it possible. I accept it as an expression of all that is highest and noblest in the history of the commonwealth." —Our Dumb Animals
