SECURITY BANK IS OPENED WEDNESDAY

The Security State Bank was opened for unrestricted business Wednesday morning, the regular time set for the opening of banks in this territory.

The deposits for that day were $4,609.87, and the checks for that day totaled $1,540.87.—an excess of deposits over checks for the first day of business of $3,068.50.

The people of Hedley should feel elated over the fact that their bank opened at the same time as the banks of Amarillo and other larger places in this territory, which shows that the Banking Department considers our local bank among the stronger banks of this section.

Rev. W. P. Hill, veteran Baptist minister and well known in Hedley as the father of Mrs. P. C. Johnson, passed away Saturday evening at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. Combest, at Clarendon, at the age of 82 years and nine months.

The remains were shipped to Sherman for burial, after funeral services at the First Baptist Church there. Mrs. Combest accompanied the body to Sherman.

W. P. Hill was born in McMinn county, Tenn., June 11, 1851, and died March 11, 1932, at the A. Combest home at Clarendon, his wife having died at the same place ten years ago.

Bro. Hill was married to Miss Nance Jane Riggins in 1869; was ordained as a minister in the Baptist Church in 1876, and came to Texas in 1894. He was the father of six children,—the two daughters already named, and four sons, R. S. of Sherman, W. T. of Emory, John E. of San Angelo, and George C. of Winters.

Bro. Hill was well known and loved in Hedley, having made his home with the P. C. Johnson family at various times during the past several years. To know him was to love him. He has "fought a good fight," and while the temporary parting saddens the loved ones left behind, it is sweet to know that this dear old soldier of the Cross has gone to make his everlasting home in "an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

FORMER HEDLEY GIRL IS SIGNALLY HONORED

The following article is taken from last week's Estelline News. Mrs. Tucker is best known here as Miss Velma Newman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Newman. Her many Hedley friends are pleased to know that this well deserved honor has been accorded her.

Mrs. L. A. Tucker and Miss Mary Foreman have been signally honored by being tendered invitations to become members of the Delta Kappa Gamma Fraternity. This fraternity is a National honor society in education, and the membership includes only one-tenth of the women teachers in the schools of a county. Only those are admitted to membership who have achieved distinction in the teaching profession, and whose honor and high professional ideals have been vouched for by officials of the society. Membership in the organization is not only an unusual honor, but it also offers opportunities for further social service.

The main purposes of the fraternity are to aid in elevating the teaching profession and in developing high ideals and professional spirit among women teachers. Membership is based upon success in teaching, power of leadership, unselfish professional spirit, cooperative nature, and other desirable personal qualities.

Only those are invited to join this society who are recommended by persons known to some of its officers as having the qualifications above set forth.

Mrs. Tucker has taught in the Estelline schools for ten years. This record is seldom equaled, and because of her efficient work and cooperative spirit she is loved and respected by all her pupils and those who know her. Miss Foreman has taught seven years in Hall county. Six of these have been in Estelline schools. She has come in contact with practically all the students in the Estelline schools as well as many others who have graduated. Her devotion to her profession is recognized by everyone.

Not only have Mrs. Tucker and Miss Foreman been signally honored, but they have also brought honor upon the Estelline schools and the town.

A SHORT SERMON

A WISE MAN said: "Youth stumbles around with Theories. Old age has to contend with Facts." There is a sermon in those two sentences.

Youth is ready and willing to take a chance. Old age must be more careful. But whether in Youth or Age, it is a fine thing to have a connection with a good Bank like ours, where your funds are safe; where you feel free to ask advice; where the best banking facilities are yours for the asking. Lindy's Old Home Airport Replaced

THE little old buildings that marked the San Diego airport, where Charles Augustus Lindbergh first learned to fly an airplane and prepared for his famous transatlantic flight, have been replaced by buildings of Spanish architectural style. The airport now ranks among the most beautiful and best equipped in the United States. Pictured is the field entrance of the administration building.

DISHES THAT ARE DIFFERENT

THE following chicken salad with hot biscuit, dessert and coffee will make a complete luncheon menu:

Chicken Fruit Salad.
Cut cooked chicken into strips, using two cupsful of chicken, one cupful of celery cut the same way and one cupful of orange sections. Pile on lettuce, top with mayonnaise which has been enriched with cream and top with the orange sections as they will crush when mixed with the salad.

Spanish Sauce.
Prepare a white sauce, using two tablespoonfuls of butter and the same of flour, one teaspoonful of salt and one-eighth teaspoonful of pepper. Melt the butter, add the flour and stir until well blended. Remove from the heat and add the milk gradually, using one and one-half cupsful of top milk. Cook, stirring until the sauce boils, add seasonings and one small can of pimientos finely chopped. This recipe makes one and one-half cupsful of sauce and lends a piquant flavor which is quite foreign.

Maple Bavarian Cream.
Take two-thirds of a cupful of maple sirup, the yolks of two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of gelatin, four tablespoonfuls of cold water, one-half pint of whipped cream and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Soak the gelatin in the cold water. Heat the maple sirup to boiling, add the softened gelatin, add to the beaten egg a little at a time, let stand until beginning to thicken, then beat for a few minutes, fold in the whipped cream and flavoring. Pour into a mold and cool.

Sardine Salad.
Take one-half cupful of sardines, skinned, boned and shredded, mix with the juice of half a lemon, add one-half cupful of stuffed celery hearts, one-half cupful of stuffed olives cut fine, mix all and add mayonnaise and serve on lettuce. Garnish with nuts.

Sardine Mayonnaise.
Skin and bone three sardines, mash and mix well. Sift the cooked yolks of three eggs and add to the sardines; work until smooth, then add to one cupful of mayonnaise dressing.

Spring Costume

In this charming spring costume the "bonnet" reveals the forehead and the new crown is deeper at the back. The hat is made of Rodier's Venetian crash with trimming cords in red and linen tone. The suit is of men's wear gray flannel with yellow blouse and scarf.

Old Indian Gold Mine
An old gold mine found in southern California is believed to be of Indian origin and known to the early Spaniards.

REDDY FOX DOES SOME PLANNING

IF THERE is anybody in the wide world who wants to know all that is going on about him, it is Reddy Fox. Some folks like to find out all they can just through idle curiosity. One of the first things old Granny Fox taught Reddy when he was little was that the more you know about the affairs of other people, the greater is the chance that sooner or later you will be able to profit by your knowledge. So Reddy Fox never willingly or knowingly allows to slip by a chance to learn something of his neighbors and their affairs.

You remember how Johnny Chuck had thought himself very clever in making his new home in the corner of the old stone wall because it would give him protection on both sides. At least that is the way it seemed to him. And you remember how Reddy Fox had discovered that new house. And how he said that it couldn't suit him better possibly. The reason it suited Reddy so well was that he saw at a glance that the wall was too high for Johnny to see over even when he sat up, and so it would be an easy matter to creep up behind that wall and watch for a chance to surprise Johnny.

Of course, at first Reddy had not known that it was Johnny Chuck who had built that house. He had hoped that it was a young, foolish and tender Chuck. So the first thing Reddy did was to find out just who the owner of that house was. He did it by peering over the wall from some distance away, watching until he had a good look at Johnny. You can imagine how surprised he was.

At first Reddy was disappointed. Johnny was no longer young and tender. Johnny was wise in the ways

And There He Watched Until He Saw Polly Chuck Come Out.

Polly Chuck Come Out. of Foxes. Reddy thought of how often he had tried to catch Johnny Chuck and failed. Then he thought of Polly Chuck and at once began to wonder if she was with Johnny. If she wasn't—well, he might be able to catch both. It would be worth trying anyway.

So Reddy promptly stole down to a certain favorite hiding place where he could see the old apple tree in the far corner of the Old Orchard, and here he watched until he saw Polly Chuck come out to sit on her doorstep. Reddy grinned. "They've quarreled about something," thought he. "That is just what they have done and Johnny has gone to live by himself. What a silly fellow! What a silly fellow to give up such a splendid safe home as he had for such a place as he has now! Here I couldn't surprise him, but up there, well, we will see what we will see."

So for several days Reddy Fox watched Johnny Chuck, usually very early in the morning. Always he took care that Sammy Jay shouldn't see him. The minute Sammy arrived in that part of the Old Orchard, Reddy had business elsewhere. You see he knew that if Sammy once saw him watching he would at once tell Johnny Chuck, for there is nothing Sammy takes greater delight in than in upsetting the plans of others.

It didn't take Reddy long to learn that Johnny had to go some distance from his house to get his meals. He learned at just what hour Johnny breakfasted. He learned that when ever a wagon or an auto passed along the road, Johnny ducked down out of sight, but didn't stay down long. In fact, he learned all about Johnny's ways, and then Reddy began to do some planning, and all this planning had to do with the catching of Johnny Chuck. Reddy indulged in many silly grins as he planned. If Johnny could have known what was going on, he would have been nervous. He certainly would.

OUR PLACE IS HERE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE MAY grow very weary of the world, and would be on the road so many that we love. Have onward, upward, gone—And so the man would quit the plow. Before the set of sun, Yet knows he must not leave it now, Until his work is done. As long as we can tend a hand, Can even breathe a pray'r, As long as we can understand Another's load of care, As long as we can give a smile Or speak a word of cheer, We know our place is never there, We know our place is here. The selfish only would depart; Our duty is to stay, With willing hand, with patient heart, Until the end of day. As long as there is stranger, friend, To give a word of grace, Until our work is at an end, We know here is our place.

SARAZEN'S PUTTING

SARAZEN once said that the men who win big competitive events are the ones who put most consistently during that particular tournament. He certainly called the turn on himself in this regard as far as the British and American opens were concerned. Putting was perhaps his strongest point during both these events. Long an admirer of Hagen's ability at putting Sarazen has undoubtedly patterned much of his style after him. Sarazen's putt is a smooth stroke, noticeable body action aiding a comfortable relaxed stance. The ball is swept evenly over the ground. When Gene's left wrist is bent at the finish of the stroke the putt is good for it shows that a straight follow through has taken place. Sarazen advocates practice as the main way to increase putting proficiency particularly stressing distances from three to ten feet.

To improve Any child's APPETITE

A sluggish appetite means a sluggish colon. Correct this condition called stasis, and see how quickly a listless, drooping boy or girl begins to eat—and gain! The only "medicine" such children need is pure, unadulterated fig syrup.

California syrup of figs is doing wonderful things for ailing, sickly children all over the United States.

If your baby, boy or girl, is bilious—pale-faced and dull-eyed from constipation—breath bad mornings, tongue coated all the time—don't give cathartics that weaken twenty feet of bowels! Instead, a little syrup of figs that doesn't disturb either stomach or bowels, but does act on the lower colon—where the trouble lies.

Nature never has made a finer laxative for children; they all love the wholesome, fruity flavor of the real California syrup of figs. It's purely vegetable, but every druggist has it all bottled, with directions. Begin with it at once. Your child will soon be eating better and feeling better. Keep on with the syrup of figs a few days and see amazing improvement in appetite, color, weight, and spirits.

Children who get syrup of figs, now and then, keep well and avoid colds.

NOTICE: The bottlers of California Syrup of Figs respectfully warn mothers that the promises made here apply only to the genuine product in bottles plainly marked CALIFORNIA.

One Sure Way to End Coughs and Colds

Persistent coughs and colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the infected membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (Adv.)

Hull and Woodin Head the Roosevelt Cabinet—Congress Puts Prohibition Repeal Up to the States—Japan Invades Jehol.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SO THAT his administration might get a running start in the negotiations concerning war debts, world economics and other related matters that are worrying the nations, President-Elect Roosevelt made public two of his selections for his cabinet. These were Senator Cordell Hull of Tennessee as secretary of state and William H. Woodin, New York capitalist, as secretary of the treasury.

Cordell Hull

These gentlemen, who, Mr. Roosevelt said, were "drafted" against their will, were at once associated with him in the preliminaries of determining the policies of the incoming administration in its relations with foreign powers. They became members of what Mr. Roosevelt has called his "unofficial" committee to advise him on world economic problems, and met with that group, which includes Bernard Baruch, Prof. Raymond Moley and others.

Mr. Hull, long considered one of the ablest men in the Democratic party, is not an orator or an accomplished debater but is studious, resourceful and has served his country ably for many years in the house and the senate. Before entering congress he was in the Tennessee legislature, and he served in the Spanish-American war as a captain of volunteer infantry. He is devoted to the policy of tariffs for revenue only, and believes that one of the basic causes of the business depression has been nationalist isolationism, started by the United States in 1920 with the erection of tariff walls which other nations were quick to copy. Prohibitive tariffs, he holds, have helped stagnate trade by creating a productive capacity in excess of domestic demand.

Senator Carter Glass of Virginia was Mr. Roosevelt's first choice for secretary of the treasury but he declined the post solely because he believes he can better serve the country in the senate. So the President-Elect persuaded his close personal friend, William H. Woodin, to accept the portfolio. Mr. Woodin formerly was a Republican, but he joined the Roosevelt camp before last summer's convention and afterward was treasurer of a special finance committee that raised a large fund for the Democratic party. He has an international reputation as a manufacturer of railway equipment and as a banker and is now president of the American Car and Foundry company. His interests are not all in business, for he is an accomplished musician and composer, a numismatist and an art collector. He is sixty-five years old, married and has four children.

William H. Woodin

UNOFFICIALLY, the other members of the Roosevelt cabinet were announced to be these:

- War—George H. Dern of Utah.
- Attorney general—Thomas J. Walsh of Montana.
- Postmaster general—James A. Farley of New York.
- Navy—Claude A. Swanson of Virginia.
- Interior—Harold I. Ickes of Illinois.
- Agriculture—Henry A. Wallace of Iowa.
- Commerce—Daniel C. Roper of South Carolina.
- Labor—Frances Perkins of New York.

GIUSEPPE ZANGARA, the brick-maker immigrant who tried in vain to assassinate the President-Elect in Miami, must spend 30 years in prison at hard labor, if he lives so long. He pleaded guilty to deadly assault on Mr. Roosevelt and on three others whom his bullets reached, and was sentenced by Judge E. C. Collins. Two of the victims of his mad deed, Mayor Cermak of Chicago and Mrs. Joseph H. Gill of Miami, were still lying in the hospital severely wounded, and so there was a chance that Zangara, should the victims of his mad act die, would be put on trial for murder.

Mr. Roosevelt wrote a graceful letter of appreciation to Mrs. W. F. Cross of Miami, who probably saved his life by seizing Zangara's arm as he was shooting; and Representative Green of Florida introduced a resolution to have congress vote a gold medal of honor to the courageous woman.

Government agents in Washington were investigating a second apparent attempt on the life of the President-Elect, following the discovery of a package addressed to him containing a crudely wrapped shotgun shell. It was mailed from Watertown, N. Y., and was found in the Washington post office. Postal inspectors thought it was the work of a crank but said the shell was wired to explode if jarred or struck and might have resulted fatally.

SIR RONALD LINDSAY, British ambassador, immediately after his return from London held conferences with Mr. Roosevelt—Secretary of State Stimson approving—and reported to Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, that the conversations had been "useful." What was said was not revealed, but Sir John said:

"The conversations are, of course, at present in a wholly preliminary stage and of an entirely general character, but it is not too soon to say that we believe that by a frank and intimate interchange of views between ourselves and the United States over the whole field of current economic problems, the way will be best prepared for the effort which the countries of the world must make together to assist in promoting world recovery."

Mr. Roosevelt also conferred at length with Paul Claudel, the French ambassador, and William Duncan Herdridge, the minister from Canada. In Paris Foreign Minister Paul-Boncour said war debt negotiations between France and the United States would be resumed after the inauguration of Mr. Roosevelt, but did not explain what form the negotiations would take.

REPEAL of the Eighteenth amendment is now up to the states, for the senate's Blaine resolution submitting the action to state conventions was passed by the house by a vote of 280 to 121, or 15 in excess of the required two-thirds of those present and voting. For the repealer were 108 Republicans, 180 Democrats, and 1 Farmer-Laborite. Against it were 89 Republicans and 32 Democrats. The action of the house was a reversal of its attitude of the first day of the session, when a resolution to submit unqualified repeal failed of adoption by 6 votes. It was in a way a personal victory for Representative Henry T. Rainey of Illinois, Democratic leader, who moved the adoption of the senate resolution and argued warmly and effectively in its behalf.

Though immediate steps toward the calling of conventions were taken in many of the states, the battle for repeal was by no means won when the submission resolution was adopted. Ratification by thirty-six states is necessary, and if this is not obtained within seven years the whole matter lapses and prohibition remains. Of course the wets are confident that repeal will win in the required number of states within at the most four years and possibly in much less time, and it may be they are right. Wet leaders assert that only Kansas, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Nebraska can be counted on as certainly dry, and Alabama, Vermont, Idaho and Maine as doubtful. On the other hand Bishop James Cannon, Jr., asserts that thirty to thirty-three states will refuse to validate the Blaine amendment.

Disagreement as to the method by which states' conventions may be set up may delay the functioning of the machinery of ratification. Some congressmen thought congress should prescribe the procedure, but Senator Walsh of Idaho held that all connection which congress has with prohibition repeal ended with submission of the new amendment to the states. This view also was taken by Representative James Beck of Pennsylvania, who, like Senator Walsh, is an eminent constitutional authority.

FOLLOWING a demand on China to withdraw its troops voluntarily from Jehol, actually by Japan but nominally by the government of the puppet state of Manchukuo, the main body of the Japanese army in Manchukuo crossed the border of the province and advanced rapidly toward Chaoyang, second largest city of Jehol. The opposing Chinese were reported to have fled, but immediately thereafter regular Chinese troops crossed into Manchukuo to join irregulars in an attack on the Japanese positions at Tungliao. The Japanese high command in Manchuria announced that it was determined to "annihilate" the 100,000 regular troops in the army of Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang, and that it might become necessary to occupy Peiping and Tientsin. As is its custom, the Japanese foreign office declared that Japan regarded the Jehol invasion as purely a local affair.

The Japanese delegation in Geneva maintained its uncompromising attitude as the assembly of the League of Nations began general discussion of the report of the committee of nineteen on Manchuria. This report is in most respects at utter variance with the claims of Japan, and the Tokyo delegates warned the League that a grave situation would arise if it were adopted by the assembly. Such action, they suggested, might upset "friendly relations between nations, upon which peace depends."

MORE woe for President Machado of Cuba is at hand, for the expected revolt against his rule has broken out in many widely separated parts of the island. Skirmishes between the rebels and government troops were reported at various points and there were some fatalities. Groups of armed men were said to be starting fires in the sugar cane fields and driving away the workers

RECENT deaths included those of James J. Corbett, former heavy-weight champion, and Maj. Gen. William H. Johnston, an American commander in the World war, who won fame and decorations for his "extraordinary heroism in action."

PRESIDENT HOOVER, rather neglected in the news of late, surprised congress by sending in a special message urging action on eight subjects of legislation which he thought would aid in economic recovery. He asked that the present congress pass the bankruptcy bill, the Glass banking bill, a measure to increase the amount of Reconstruction Finance corporation funds for state relief loans, a federal farm lease bill and the repeal of the publicity clause in the R. F. C. act. The President also advised the ratification of the St. Lawrence waterway treaty, the adoption of the arms embargo resolution and the starting of study looking to the expansion of the home loan banks into a general mortgage discount system. Mr. Hoover advocated the Hyde farm leasing plan as a substitute for the domestic allotment scheme, declaring the latter seemed "wholly unworkable" and calculated to do far greater harm than good to agriculture.

President Hoover

The senate did take up the bankruptcy bill, which had passed the house, and it also passed the Wagner relief bill, which increases the R. F. C. funds for state relief and goes farther than the President contemplated. It was generally agreed that his other recommendations would meet with no response during the short session.

SPEAKER GARNER dropped his plan to make Roosevelt a constitutional dictator for two years, and the house accepted the senate provision of the treasury and post office appropriation bill conferring limited automatic power on the incoming President to reorganize the administrative branch of the federal government. By its terms he may consolidate or abolish any administrative agencies and their functions, but may not abolish or consolidate entire departments.

The house rejected the senate amendment directing the head of each department and independent establishment to effect a 5 per cent reduction in expenditures for appropriations for the fiscal year 1934. Without debate the house accepted the "Buy American" amendment sponsored by Senator Johnson of California. It provides that the heads of all government departments must buy for government use only goods made or produced in the United States or substantially composed of domestic material. Every contract for construction, alteration or repair of public buildings or public works must contain a clause requiring the contractor to abide by the "Buy American" policy.

FOR the first time the navy now has a vessel designed and built as an aircraft carrier. It was launched at Newport News, Va., and Mrs. Herbert Hoover christened it Ranger in honor of the ship of the same name that was commanded by John Paul Jones. Our other airplane carriers, the Langley, Saratoga and Lexington, were designed for other uses and were converted. The authorized design intended the Ranger to be of the "flush deck" type, but the navy is now trying to get a bill passed through congress to authorize a change in the plans to construct with an "island deck." In the first type of construction no superstructure is provided except a smokestack which swings out of the way so that the entire deck is available for taking off and landing.

The "island deck" type has a superstructure at the extreme side of the vessel, leaving practically the entire deck free for the use of the airplanes. The change, if authorized by congress, would entail an extra expenditure of $2,000,000.

AUSTRIA was greatly disturbed by a request from France and Great Britain that a shipment of 50,000 rifles and 200 machine guns shipped there from Italy be returned or destroyed, but after some indignant protests Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss announced his government would comply with the demand and the arms returned. Sir John Simon told the house of commons that he hoped the matter might be considered a closed incident. The guns, or at least a part of them, were believed to be destined for Hungary, and the French and English were inclined to hold Mussolini responsible for the seeming violation of the peace treaty. The Italian version was that the arms were sent to Austria by private citizens merely to be repaired and returned.

MORE woe for President Machado of Cuba is at hand, for the expected revolt against his rule has broken out in many widely separated parts of the island. Skirmishes between the rebels and government troops were reported at various points and there were some fatalities. National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

Washington.—As discussions proceeded over the question of what to do about the foreign debts, it becomes quite apparent that there is a great deal of confusion existing on the subject throughout the country. It seems that many persons are unable to untangle the skein or to get a clear idea of how the influence of the debt question carries on through to individuals.

I was privileged to see a letter received a few days ago by a member of the house of representatives. Because of the earnest desire of the individual who wrote that letter to learn something about the problem, I think he must be typical of a great many other persons throughout the country.

"If I could understand how the debt question affects me," he wrote, "I think I might be interested in all this argument. As it is, I confess my inability to determine whether I ought to favor or oppose readjustment of the debts."

Let me say at the outset, I believe those who favor scaling down the foreign debts are exaggerating the benefits which they are saying will result, and that those who are unalterably opposed are being a little unfair in some of the statements they make. Proponents of debt reduction by the United States claim there will be a revival of foreign trade, so the farm surplus will be saleable and the products of factories will be marketable again, if the foreign nations owing money to the United States are let off in the payment of some of it. They are claiming that American banking conditions would be improved by debt reduction, because it is well known many of our banks hold foreign government bonds in large amounts. If the debts to the United States government are scaled down, of course, the private holdings of the foreign bonds naturally become worth more because there is a better chance for their payment.

It is undoubtedly true that banking conditions would be eased here and that a great many individuals who have invested some of their savings in foreign bonds would benefit by any debt reduction. The circumstance is this: there is only so much revenue available to any one of the foreign governments, and when part of that government's obligations have been released, the chances are the others will be paid.

The same holds true as regards the revival of foreign markets. When their government's debts have been reduced to some extent, manufacturers and other lines of business in that country recognize the probability of reduction in their taxes and some greater freedom in business dealings. To that extent then those potential purchasers feel able to enter the market and buy the usual amount of goods from America. And, of course, if there is a demand for goods from our farms and our factories, prices rise, employment increases and the whole country profits.

On the other side of the picture, the opponents of debt reduction set forth an insistent cry that "reduction of the foreign debts is simply transferring those debts to the backs of American taxpayers." By that, they mean the United States government, having borrowed the money originally from its own citizens, has to pay them as the bonds become due. The government can get money only by taxation.

Opponents of debt reduction say, too, that there is no assurance of any revival of foreign trade with the United States. They point to the British empire agreement of last year, giving preference to products of their provinces and dominions, and to the trade restrictions now in effect or projected among numerous other nations.

These are the general tenor of the arguments. They vary in different sections of the country, for undoubtedly the products of some parts of the country are ordinarily in greater demand from foreign lands than are others. So it is obvious how many variations may be found.

But the stake is so great that naturally there is being used every influence available. The Vast Sum Owed total of the debts United States owed the United States is $11,750,271,281, an enormous sum of money and an amount constituting more than half of our own government's national debt. In other words, if the foreign debts were paid at once, our government could reduce its own national debt to about $9,500,000,000.

Here are the names of the debtor nations and the amounts they owe:

Austria	22,752,217
Belgium	406,555,000
Czechoslovakia	165,571,023
Estonia	17,202,743
Finland	8,302,295
France	3,921,547,952
Great Britain	4,499,520,000
Greece	22,120,388
Hungary	1,594,077
Italy	2,067,406,125
Latvia	7,085,454
Lithuania	6,382,612
Poland	215,289,815
Rumania	63,860,580
Yugoslavia	61,625,000
Russia	327,582,071
Armenia	19,617,103

With respect to Russ. and Armenia, hope of gaining repayment long since has faded away. There is no Armenia any more, and the Russian Soviet has repudiated all debts made by the Czarist and de facto governments preceding the present type of control in Russia.

Publication of the agenda, the things to be talked about, at the international economic and monetary conference, shows that the rest of the world, or its experts, considers the same thing paramount that is fostered as the highest hope in this country. It is the desire for higher prices of commodities. And these prices, it may be added, necessarily revolve around the values of the products of the farm. Thus it is demonstrated again that the farm question is basic.

The conference program, necessarily prepared two or three months in advance of its use in the conference, treats of tariff readjustment, readjustment of international debts, abolition of trade restrictions, the stabilization of currencies on the gold standard to which the United States has adhered so tenaciously, and steps to balance the budgets of whatever governmental units there are.

Of course, the discussion already has been initiated on the question of debt readjustment. It had to start with the United States. Our nation is the creditor of all of them.

Every one here with whom I have talked, agrees that the theory is right. The debtors, who are creditors of other nations, must know to what extent they are going to be let off before they feel free to let somebody else off. So it is a circle which can be unlocked by the United States.

But there is another side. It is in the other side that the trick lies. The question is: "Will Here's Where the debtor nations the Trick Lies to whom the United States makes concessions carry those concessions through to the ultimate debtors?" If they do not, the experts here say there is nothing to be gained by making concessions.

To state the problem another way, unless such concessions as are made by the United States are reflected all along the line, the United States will have been just a plain sucker. Uncle Sam again will have been played as the victim in the shell game. There was no pea under either shell when the game began.

From these facts, it becomes perfectly obvious why consideration must be given to the program of the international economic and monetary conference alongside of the discussions now going on between the United States and those powers to whom it loaned money during and after the World war.

Sponsors of the agenda for the conference decline to admit it, but unbiased views hold that the program for the conference is too complex to be worked out at one series of meetings. The experts take the position, however, that because the problem as a whole is so complex, it cannot be dealt with by pieces. They say that when the pie has been cut, none of the pieces will serve the ends desired if taken singly. That was the attitude of some of the leaders in the Hoover administration; it is, furthermore, the attitude of Mr. Roosevelt and his associates now.

There is reason to believe, therefore, that we are going to see a continuing series of international exchanges of views for quite some time.

It is necessary here to call attention to another factor in the whole situation that has begun to loom on the horizon. The situation that confronted Woodrow Wilson who, as President, sought to gain senate approval of the Treaty of Versailles. The treaty had the League of Nations covenant as its heart. The senate refused to wear the halter. There were a number of senators who became balky horses. They were called the "irreconcilables."

Whether their position was wrong or right is of no moment in this article. The fact is that the irreconcilables blocked American adherence to the League of Nations.

Now, there is another group of them. Several senators remain in the senate from that original group. They are restating their views these days, some publicly, others privately. They are insisting that the United States retain its "sovereignty," and remain isolated from the entanglements which they say they foresee in the debt discussions and the international conference.

Conservatives and radicals alike agree on one thing: Mr. Roosevelt has a tremendous job ahead of him as he settles himself in the White House. A very great many of them are going to stick by him, even though some of the things he does may taste like sour milk, because they recognize the magnitude of his job. It will be fortunate, indeed, for the President if a sufficient number of both factions accept the responsibility and stand by the President until the urgent job of getting the country on the road to recovery is done.

How

Your Servants Handling Lawsuits Meanness

By ED HOWE

MOST people, when they give a man a present, give it to his wife. An incident in a recent divorce case in my neighborhood was that the wife took all the wedding presents, although certainly half of them were intended for the husband.

I object to a lot of things, and receive little encouragement; but when I like a man, and have a present for him, I give it to him.

I was once making a journey on an ocean steamship, and an idle fellow estimated there were seven servants to wait on every passenger.

I have often wondered how many servants are necessary to supply the wants of the ordinary citizen.

To attend him when he is born and when he is buried; to teach him his letters, and later details of education; to bring him luxuries and necessities from near and distant place; to preach to him; to doctor him; to regulate his conduct at street crossings and at other dangerous places; to supply his clothing, food, fuel, and entertainment in love, literature, art, and beverages; to pump water for his bath; to build his house and keep it in repair, etc.

Probably the average man has two or three servants in his private employ, if we count the seconds, minutes, or hours thousands devote to him.

A farmer waits on himself a good deal. I saw a statement lately that there are thirty million persons in this country earning their living from the production of food supplies, as against fifty million earning their living from supplying the various wants of the farmers. So even every farmer has two servants to feed and pay, and fuss with because they do not earn their money.

These servants we all have are Working Men so much heard about; particularly in connection with twelve million of them being out of jobs at present.

It is charged against writers that there are very few good ones. For nine hundred years, from the time when Augustine wrote his "City of God" until Dante wrote his "Divine Comedy," not a single writer appeared in Europe whom any person reads today or should read.

The fallow period was longer, so far as I am concerned. I have been a reader many years without seeing a copy of Augustine's "City of God," or hearing anyone mention it. So far as Dante's "Divine Comedy" is concerned, I know what it is about, and have tried to read it, and failed.

There is excuse for Shakespeare; he is an undoubted genius no one has neglected to appreciate. I have heard the commonest men quote him all my life, as he wrote about real things real men can understand and may benefit from, but millions of his imitators deserve the fire. The ancients burned worthless books; if the present winter is a hard one we might imitate them, and use our worthless books for heating and cooking instead of more useful corn.

I would not be meanly suspicious so frequently if my suspicions did not so frequently turn out well founded.

I am of the opinion that lawyers, judges and courthouses combined make up one of our greatest ills. Lawyers probably rank highest as the class producing our smartest average men, but they have built up a system that has become very burdensome, and in most cases unnecessarily so. The system is specially mischievous in that it encourages and cultivates our natural habit of quarreling.

Is there any remedy? I once found one. A man said I had damaged his adjoining lot with a building I was erecting. I thought he was unreasonable, and made this proposition to him: We would ask the judge of the district court during the noon hour to walk over the ground. I would present my side of the case in five minutes; my neighbor to do the same. He agreed, and the judge walked over the ground with us as proposed. The judge said that in his judgment there was no cause of action. We thanked him; and a case that might have cost thousands of dollars, much ill feeling and loss of time, was settled in five minutes.

The judge was a good man; he later became chief justice of the Supreme court of Kansas.

Every man is a fool, and very few know what to do about it.

The most prominent characteristic of men, women and children is meanness; I am sorry to admit it, but long experience has forced me to that conclusion. . . . Still, our constant clamor that all should be good, nice, respectable, has had an influence; I know many mischievous persons to be so influenced by the talk against them that try to be mean in a nice way.

A man never has all he wants, but usually he may pick up enough to get along with.

Formerly the great effort of men and women was to attain wealth, distinction, education, gentility, usefulness; now it is to get notoriety in the newspapers.

FIRST U. S. COIN SHILLING OF 1652

Melted Candlesticks Used to Make Silver Piece.

On May 26, 1652, John Hull minted the first piece of silver for use in the American colonies.

Feeling the need of a satisfying medium of exchange, the Boston colonists induced the legislature to enact a statute permitting the coinage of money in the colony.

John Hull, a Boston householder, offered to erect a building at his expense on his own land to be used as a mint. His proposition was accepted and he was made master of the mint. As compensation he was to receive one shilling for every twenty that he minted for the colony.

So, out near the barn on his property, he built a one-room shack, 10 feet wide and 16 feet long. And here in this unpainted building was minted the first shilling in the Colonies. The event was marked by an absolute absence of ceremony. He went about the task in the same matter-of-fact way that he would have approached the task of moulding audies.

Using an English shilling as a model, this first minting of a few silver pieces was a day's job, Hull and a friend melted up some silver candlesticks in an oven built of field stones. It required a long time to get the oven hot enough with the wood they were using as fuel. However, late in the afternoon the two men were ready to pour the molten silver into flat moulds.

At this point Mrs. Hull appeared on the scene to persuade them to eat supper, which they did unwillingly. After supper they returned to work by candle light.

First they removed the silver that had cooled in flat slabs, and pounded it down to the right thickness. Then, with a heavy hammer and a punch, they cut out the discs, on one side of which they stamped N E, standing for New England, and on the other XII, denoting 12 pence. Finally they weighed each disc separately. If the disc weighed more than 72 grains, they cut off a piece, which is why most of them are of such irregular shape.

Thus with crude tools and methods did the first Colonial shilling come unceremoniously into being.

English Farmers Defy Collectors of Tithes

To defend themselves against seizure of stock following nonpayment of tithes, several hundred farmers in the Kent district of England have organized themselves into an army. They are working along war lines, and when three large trucks were sent recently to collect at ten farms the representatives of the law were routed without any of the 89 lots sought. A body of men is kept on farms where seizures may be attempted, and a small army is stationed in the village square ready to hasten to any farm on a given signal.

On the other hand, your home town business man is interested in the same things you are: Your churches and your schools, your homes, the education of your children, and your general welfare and prosperity. CHAPTER VII—Continued

Rumors of a bombardment were flying through the city. The British army officers gave them no credit. The roar of Washington's cannon had the effect of a merry jest in Howe's army.

The Fayerweathers were aboard the flagship of the fleet in the harbor on a visit to Admiral Shuldham when the guns of Ticonderoga and others from Dorchester heights to East Cambridge, opened a withering fire on the defenses in front of them. It was the clever girl Pat who was responsible for this flagship party. She had had a hint from Revere. Pat's maid had deserted her in the panic and so Enslow, as she was then called, went with them to serve in that capacity.

That night of March 4, 1776, from dark to daylight, the guns from Ticonderoga bellowed and sheets of flame were leaping upward along the seven-mile line of Washington. It was a night of terror. Cannon-balls splashed into the harbor. One of them tore through the rigging of a ship and splintered a mast. An order was given to weigh anchor and hoist sails and move out of range. This was done. After daylight, when the firing had ceased, Admiral Shuldham returned for observation. At a prudent distance from the town an officer climbed to the masthead and with his glass noted the extent of the disaster. A big redoubt, built in the night, now crowned the heights of Dorchester. Many of the British works were destroyed. The city itself had suffered little damage. But the town and the harbor were at Washington's mercy. His artillery had become a menace instead of a joke.

The admiral informed General Howe that unless the enemy was dislodged he could not occupy the harbor. That afternoon Howe took three thousand men to Castle Island for an attack but it was held in check by a great storm. Before an advance was possible, Washington had so strengthened and extended his works that Howe abandoned his plan. The latter offered to embark his army and leave the city uninjured if permitted to do so without molestation. The proposal was not signed, but the commander of the patriots had no doubt of its sincerity. So, his supply of powder having been shortened by the cannonade and, desiring to save the city, he let the British go in peace.

The bombardment had continued three nights. No one on the flagship had been allowed to go ashore. The important loyalists in town came aboard with their luggage, and, as soon as the storm abated, the admiral found an anchorage far out of range and lay to while the army was embarking on other ships. So it befell that the Fayerweathers and some nine hundred loyalists sailed for Halifax with the British army on the seventeenth of March.

The Captains Amos Farnsworth and Colin Cabot rode into the almost deserted city with their regiment the day following the evacuation to explore it and report to the Commander in Chief. They found large stores of food and ammunition which the overcrowded ships had not been able to accommodate.

The big houses were all deserted save by hired caretakers living in the stables. From one of these Colin learned that the Fayerweathers had gone with the admiral of the fleet.

The young man turned to Amos with a groan as they rode away, saying, "My heart is about as dead and lonely as the city. I begin to fear that I shall not see her again."

"Cheer up, my son, which it ain't no time to be feelin' poorly," Amos answered. "The war will soon be over. They don't want to play with us no more."

The two captains went to the fish market and found the old sea-god, Ebenezer Spooner, who stood with his spy-glass eyeing the far horizon in the east. "They'll go with the wind northward," he said. "The sea will keep a-taxin' 'em. The sea is the great king. He'll wear 'em out."

"The fickle and merciless ocean is our ally," said Colin.

Returning they found preparations in progress for breaking camp. Day after day they labored in the almost deserted city loading ships and wagons.

The shifting backgrounds of war had broken many threads of hope. That between the two lovers was now badly strained. The mind of the girl was like a pot boiling with the heat of her indignation. The international issues were to her a matter of minor importance. It had been clearly the duty of the British army to surrender and cease to delay peace and happy weddings. Its fleet had made a quick journey to Halifax.

There the Fayerweathers lived at a tavern for a time and presently settled in a furnished house. Among their first guests were General Sir Guy answered with a smile. "You remember Nancy Woodbridge?"

"No man could forget that form of beauty and those big dark eyes and red cheeks and hair like sunlight," he answered, laughing.

"You stop!" she commanded with a look of mingled reproof and amusement. "Remember you must behave yourself! She is terribly good-looking."

"Have you seen her?"

"Yes, Pat sent her here. It was her last resort or, of course, she would not have sent a female envoy so young and beautiful. She and her brother came this morning on a pair of lovely black horses, having ridden all night. Her father is the great horse breeder who ships his colts to every province. Nancy brought this letter."

Colin took the letter and eagerly broke its seal. It was from Pat and it ran as follows:

"My beloved:
"With desperate valor I have tried to break through the lines but in vain. The love-killer still stands between us. I am a desperate, helpless maiden, but my love is a strong growing child. My effort has broken the one safe channel of communication. Our inter-arranged post office has been under suspicion, with every door guarded so

The gallant general would enter upon no argument with a lady. In the Eighteenth century a gentleman never argued with ladies. His answer to a woman's argument was likely to be a good-natured laugh ending in a word of flattery or a merry jest.

"You beautiful rebel!" the general exclaimed with a gentle laugh. "You have, at least, captured my heart. I agree that love is the only thing worth while, especially that of a man and a maid." He lifted his glass adding, "The health of your young man! May he keep an unbroken skin and come out worthy of the dearest girl on this continent."

"The girl is incorrigible," said Mr. Fayerweather with a frown. "Since she met the young renegade she has been a thorn in my flesh."

"It's the usual penalty for meddling with roses," said the general. "The dear child has my sympathy. Love is the greatest of all tyrants. But here is good news. Our army will soon be going down to York to meet Howe and end the war. Many grand ladies are going with us. If I may have your consent, sir, we shall take your daughter with us. We shall have all the rebels in a sack with very little bloodshed. You and the good madame will follow us and I hope we may have a great army wedding on York Island to signalize the restoration of goodwill."

"It is a pretty dream," Pat answered. "I'd love to go but your plan reminds me of the greedy man in my reading book who put such a burden in his sack that he could not carry it and his reward was nothing."

This illuminating fact is recorded in the girl's diary:

"I do not wonder that Sir Guy and Lady Carleton have won the affectionate regard of my mother and father. I am fond of them in spite of their love of that old pig on the English throne. I have permission to take Enslow and to go with them to Quebec. We shall be sailing next week. Enslow holds up my heart. She is a treasure. Religious! Terribly religious! Yet wise, gentle, sympathetic. Came of a good family. Seduced and driven out of her home when she was sixteen. The boy married her and was soon killed by Indians. Her two children died in the plague. For years a friendless creature but always a lady at heart. She looks ten years younger since she came to me. What a change can be wrought by love and good food and clothing! Every day I thank God for Mother Enslow."

"Harry Gage has renewed his attentions but very mildly. The discipline of the sword has improved him. He has better manners and a deeper respect for Americans. I like him better. I suppose that he will be making love to me again but I shall not listen."

CHAPTER VIII

Devoted Mostly to Colin's Temptation and His Adventure With New Enemies of America.

At the end of his labors in Boston, Colin reported to General Washington. The Commander in Chief showed no elation. But his face was no longer shadowed with anxiety. He smiled when he thanked the captain and gave him his hand saying:

"I have the pleasure to address you for the first time as 'Colonel Cabot.' My first order is that you give yourself the rest you need. After the arduous labors in which your industry and valor have been an example to the troops, I wish you to retire to your room until you feel restored. I think that Mrs. Washington has something to say to you in the library before you go above-stairs."

A little later Colin was sitting with Lady Washington.

"Pat must have gone away in a British ship," he said.

"Yes, I have news for you," the

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

At Boston, in July, 1775, Colin Cabot, ardent young lover of liberty, bids good-by to his sweetheart, Patience "Pat" Fayerweather, daughter of a loyalist but herself a "rebel." He joins the Revolutionary army at Cambridge, and is mustered into the company of Capt. Amos Farnsworth. Colin impresses Washington, and he makes him his informal secretary, with the rank of captain. A letter from Pat tells Colin she is to visit friends outside the American lines, and asks him to meet her. He sets out. Learning of a British plot to capture Colin, Farnsworth, with a troop, rides to the rescue. A British patrol, led by Harry Gage, Colin's rival for the hand of Pat, threatens the young patriot. Farnsworth and his troop come up. Gage challenges Colin to a duel. They fight and Gage is wounded. Colin returns to Cambridge. Washington, having forbidden dueling, reduces him to the ranks, but Mrs. Washington, affectionately known to the army as "Lady" Washington, remains his staunch friend. Restored to his rank for meritorious service, Colin is sent, with Col. "Sis" Betts, a "civilian soldier," on a recruiting mission to the West. He meets a typical "slooser woman," Mrs. Bowley. A band of drunken Indians is outwitted by her bravery and shrewdness. With many recruits, Colin goes back to Cambridge. He is sent to aid in the transportation of the guns of Ticonderoga to the heights of Dorchester, to bombard Boston.

deroga and placed on Dorchester heights.

Below were the staff officers and their wives, John and Mrs. Adams, Nancy Woodbridge and her brother, and a number of the best people of Cambridge gathered in the great hall and parlor, talking of the retreat as they waited for dinner to be announced. Mrs. Washington took Colin's arm and introduced him to the company as "Colonel Cabot," whereupon he received many congratulations. The woman had a motherly pride in the handsome boy.

"You will follow Mr. and Mrs. Adams into the dining room with Nancy Woodbridge," said Lady Washington.

"Nancy Woodbridge! Where is she?"

"Surrounded by officers, of course! The old bucks! We must charge through them and rescue her."

Nancy, who had been chatting merrily with some members of the staff, grew serious at seeing the young man. The color in her cheeks deepened.

"We meet—again," she said as he took her hand. "Do you remember the night you left us?"

"As if it were yesterday. I remember the kindness of your mother and father and often I have thought of your beauty and your merry words."

"I saw you get out of a barrel. It was interesting and you—looked harmless. Now that I've read so much about you in Pat's letters, of your bravery and gallantry, of the duel, and of all your many virtues, I am afraid of you. I feel as I did when I met General Washington—a little over-awed."

He laughed, saying, "I've been well advertised to all the friends of Pat. If a lover shared the opinions of his sweetheart, he would feel sorry for Julius Caesar."

"When I find a lover, my praise will be for his ears only. I shall not dare to advertise him."

"I wonder that you are not bespoken."

"So do I. There have been candidates but not the one man. I am only an ambassador of Love. I had read so much about you that I had to see you again. So I brought the letter."

"You make me feel like the great Boston meeting house—that people come so far to see. It's a poor reward for hard work, to look at a homely soldier. Thanks and better luck to you."

Nancy had not the manner or the intellectual graces which embodied the beauty of Pat Fayerweather. Her greatest attraction was a physique tall, lithe, beautiful in its color and perfect symmetry. Martha Washington had rightly divined that a rather dangerous individual had come into camp.

Dinner was announced. The staff officers and their wives were forming in line behind General and Mrs. Washington. Colin offered his arm to Nancy. They took their places behind Mr. and Mrs. Adams, who followed the brigadiers. The procession started. General Putnam led it, bearing the first Union flag. Its device of thirteen stripes with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew in the upper left-hand corner, acknowledging that the Colonies were still a part of the British empire, streamed out behind him. He was followed by a file and drum. The stately procession marched once around the long table and came to rest. Doctor Langdon offered the invocation and they sat down. It was a feast like those at Mount Vernon in better days, with roasted ham and shoulders of mutton carved on the sideboards and served with jams and jellies and potatoes and wine. At its conclusion General Washington asked Mr. Adams to make a few remarks.

Colin describes the distinguished schoolmaster of New England as "a stout, resolute man with a heavy voice the vibration of which suggested iron." After hearty congratulations to the Chief and his army he spoke of the king's speech and the "diabolical ministry." Then for the first time the note of independence was sounded in New England from the lips of a leading citizen and won the applause of important people. He said that the war should no longer be a contest between subjects and their acknowledged sovereign.

The Commander in Chief said to his neighbor, "If they continue to use force, the step is inevitable."

The men were a long time at the table discussing this matter after the ladies had left. Wine flowed freely. After his strenuous exertions Colin found a most agreeable reaction in the cup.

Having a deep respect for his host and hostess, he restrained himself but was considerably revived when he and Nancy took their place on the floor. Wine has its effect on the blood of youth, which at best is subject to increasing temperatures. Only for that reason, his gallantries took all the license accorded to a young gentleman of that time. They turned a head not too firmly set on its fair shoulders. What he may have said to Nancy that evening the historian can only imagine, although there is some hint of it in a story told at many a fireside.

When, some days later, Colin, obeying an order of the Chief, set out to engage quarters for General Washington and his staff on their way to New York with the army, he had traveled less than a mile when he overtook Nancy on her handsome black mare.

"You improve the scene," he declared. "You are the only flower in this gray leafless landscape. Am I indebted to good luck, or is Fate seeking to remind me of your beauty?"

"Take your choice," she answered, pressing his extended hand and looking into his eyes. "Who could tell what Fate is doing today? I have been hard at work in the hospital. I was seeking a breath of fresh air and I find you. What say you to that?"

"When I Find a Lover, My Praise Will Be for His Ears Only."

that I can neither send nor receive letters. There is to be a bombardment and we are going to the admiral's ship. I send this letter by a route you know to a friend, and have asked her to send it on to you because her father is a friend of Washington and I know it will get through. There are times when I fear that we may not see each other for years. If so, please be sure that I am waiting for you and that I am praying ever for your safety and the end of the war. I had thought of sad and touching words for this letter but I seem to have lost them. I fear that the heat of my heart has burned them up. I am sure that they would have brought you to tears. Now I am so angry that I can write nothing fit for the eyes of a Christian. My maid is often so astonished by my wickedness that she opens her Bible and asks me to read the ten commandments. My soul is ruined. What will you think of me when you read that I wish the whole British army could be driven out to sea and drowned. I end with a great truth. It is this: I love you. Look again at these words. You will see that an angel stands between us. I hope and pray that he may not lose his hold upon either one. I send affectionate greetings to dear Lady Washington and the great General.

"Devotedly yours,
"Pat."

When he had read the letter to her, Lady Washington laughed saying, "Poor child! I know how she feels. I am old and you are young. I have seen a lot of this world. Women know each other very well. I am going to look after you. Nancy and her brother have enlisted. She for the hospital."

"My dear Lady Washington, I am no weathercock. Nor am I an April wind. Why should you or Pat worry about me?"

"You are a man, and men do not know as much as we do. I have said enough. Go directly to your room and get your rest."

For days the young man had been on the new redoubt, working in fevered haste and in constant expectation of a charge. His regiment had helped in placing the fascines and in filling gabions. They were under fire with aching ears and smothered sick by the smoke of near cannon. Then the ceaseless, hurried toil in Boston. He went to bed and the people below stairs saw no more of him until Mrs. Washington's maid called him an hour before dinner next day.

"You are expected at dinner, sir," she said at the door. "There will be a large party, sir."

The party was to be an official celebration of the retreat of the British before the guns hauled from Ticon-
