SUCH IS LIFE—A Lil' Joke!

By Charles Sughrue

WRITER DECRIES MODERN IDEA OF FORCED LEARNING

"Never regard your study as a duty," said Albert Einstein to the Princeton students, "but as an enviable opportunity."
Quite true! But how shall the student know this, if we persist in treating the university as a school in which tasks are assigned as a burden, and punishment is meted to those who do not do them?

Run Grim Race to Get Arctic Riches

Canada and Russia Busy Annexing Northern Lands.

Montreal.—A grim and silent war which has already cost the lives of many men, is being waged by Canada and Russia for the possession of the vast snow-covered empire in the Arctic.
The prize is supremacy over 2,000,000 square miles of land and a mastery of secrets which may revolutionize the future of the world.

Since then both countries have accomplished miracles in the vast Arctic wastes, which hitherto had been regarded as useless and uninhabitable.
Russia's five-year plan has just ended, and a report has been issued, showing what it has achieved in the polar regions during the last few years. This is what the Russians have done:
Sailed from the Arctic coast of Russia down through the Bering straits and into Vladivostok in one season—a feat never before accomplished.

HOW BIG IS MY WORLD?

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

An argument for a decree of divorce was that the husband instead of procuring lenses as prescribed by an accredited oculist purchased for his wife spectacles at the 5-and-10-cent store. He saw his world, his home, and his life's companion through cheap lenses. His world was not only cheap but very selfish and small. If we look at the heavens through a telescope we are lost in the immensity of space.

Swagger Tweed Suit

Jodelle elaborates the swagger tweed suit with intricate seaming, a new skirt treatment and her individual loose neckline on the blouse.

The Household

By Lydia Le Baron Walker

THERE is nothing more refreshing than the smell of pure fresh air. It is worth remembering this in connection with running the home, and also in the care of wearing apparel and furnishings. Now that spring is actually here it is not so difficult to air rooms as when the temperature was at, or near zero, which it was in many places often during the winter.

Those who live in suburbs or in the country have the opportunity to keep their household draperies, their cushions, and textiles which are not the sort to launder. They can be hung out of doors occasionally in sunny weather. Choose a day when the air is blowing but not too briskly, and let the things be in the actual sunshine for a little while at least.

graduating the size so that the outer ones are quite a little larger than the inner ones. All petals or only the larger outside petals are embroidered. The stitchery is simplicity itself. It is also astonishingly effective and smart. Use several different colors of glossy embroidery silk. Left-over strands from other embroideries can be used up on these flowers, also knitting and crochet silk.

Woman Cashier, 74, Calls Thugs' Bluff

Chicago.—Miss Catherine March is seventy-four years old. Her fighting weight is somewhere around 92 pounds.
Sitting in the cubby-hole where she works as cashier for the elevated lines, she was approached by two young gunmen.
"Open that door," said one, thrusting a revolver through the change aperture, "or we'll fill you full of lead." Miss March leaned back in her chair, folded her arms and shook her head.

larger. A college professor who has spent all his life in an academic environment was asked his opinion of a certain student. He replied: "He did not make the A grade." The professor's world was as big as A grade students, many of whom have failed in life's venture because they were not able to make practical use of their knowledge.

One's world is as big as his life's purpose makes it. The outside world is but a reflection of the world within. We make our world out of the value we place upon the meaning and purpose of life. If we see the world through "cheap" lenses, it is no larger than that expressed by George Bernard Shaw: "The longer I live the more I am inclined to believe that this earth is used by other planets as a lunatic asylum." If we see the world through lenses clean, clear and polished, with adequate preparation and self-discipline and a commanding purpose, the world will be as big as we want to make it.

Kerchief Container

The ordinary cigar box may be made into a useful handkerchief or accessory box. Remove all paper from box, sandpaper well and apply a couple of coats of stain or colored enamel.
A motif or floral design adds to the decorative scheme of top and sides. Line the box with silk or paint the interior, depending upon its use.

Why Hospitals Use a Liquid Laxative

Hospitals and doctors have always used liquid laxatives. And the public is fast returning to laxatives in liquid form. Do you know the reasons?
The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can thus be regulated to suit individual need. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

HUSBANDS ENTERTAINED

Left over from last week
Thursday evening the T. E. L. and Dorcas classes of the First Baptist church entertained their husbands with a banquet at the church basement. Some eighty persons attended. The wives and their guests met in the main auditorium of the church and marched in couples to the banquet where the pretty little place cards made known to each their positions at the table.

The tables were decorated with flowers, which with new paper and curtains made a nice setting for the evening enjoyment. After the invocation by the pastor, a short program was given between courses. Mrs. G.
C. Heath was toastmistress. Mrs.
Aewine, teacher of the Dorcas class, gave the welcome address;
J. W. McPherson responded. Mrs.
Wells gave a talk on "How to enlarge our Sunday School." Mrs.
Moffitt gave a toast to the husbands; Claude Bain responded. A piano solo was rendered by Mrs. Thompson.
Some talks were made on Sunday School work. Mesdames Goin, Hill and Smith had charge of serving the refreshments, assisted by the Y. W. A.
girls.

Rev. W. E. Prater and wife
from Garden Valley, in Smith county, visited in the Frank Kendall home the past week. Mrs.
Prater is a cousin of Mrs. Kendall, and this is the first real visit they have enjoyed since they were girls. Rev. Prater preached at the Church of Christ from Wednesday until Sunday night.
They also visited a daughter at Wellington before returning home.

Rev. and Mrs. D. M. Fitzgerald and son, Dan, of Silverton were in Hedley this week. They were Okla., where they had attended the funeral of Mrs. Fitzgerald's father.

OLD COOK BOOKS STAGE COMEBACK

Low Price of Butter and Eggs Is Incentive.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THE other day I had dinner with one of my older friends who has always been famous for her cooking. She was rejoicing in the reduction of the prices of butter and eggs, which she said allowed her to use them liberally without her conscience bothering her for extravagance. "This is the first pound cake I have made in years," she said, as she offered me delicate slices of this delectable cake, flavored with brandy.

Perhaps one of the greatest differences between old cook books and modern books is the difference in the number of eggs and the amount of butter in the recipe. I have before me a book published in 1845 in Philadelphia by Elizabeth Acton, a famous English woman. It was adopted to meet conditions in this country by an American housewife. The directions are exceedingly clear and it is ahead of its time in many respects. Naturally, eggs and butter are used liberally. For what Miss Acton calls "common baked custard," she uses eight eggs to a quart of milk. For a "richer baked custard," she calls for ten eggs to half a pint of cream as well as a pint and a half of milk. For a french custard, twelve egg yolks and equal parts of milk and cream.

I find that a recipe for pound cake in 1845 is exactly like the accepted recipe of today—white cake uses a large number of eggs and the flavor of vanilla beans must be pounded. Of course, there is no mention of baking powder which is a modern invention and therefore more eggs were necessary. Recipes for sponge cake are practically the same as modern recipes, although we do not find it necessary with modern egg-beaters to "whisk" the eggs thirty minutes as described. "It is a mistake to suppose that they cannot be too long beaten, as after they are brought to a state of perfect firmness they are injured by a continuation of the whisking and will at times curdle, or render a cake heavy from this cause." No recipe for angel food is to be found in this or in other books of this date.

Eggs and butter are valued as much

Ex-Master's Hog Call Is Irresistible to Sow

Billings, Mont.—"Her master's voice proved irresistible to a hog near here. It happened like this:
Three years ago Farmer George Anderson of Lake Basin purchased the sow from "Dad" Hoerr of Billings. A few days ago Hoerr entered a hog-calling contest over a local radio station. He stood before the microphone and trumpeted, "S-o-o-e-y, s-o-o-e-y, s-o-o-e-y."
Suddenly there was a commotion in the Anderson farmyard. A rammed through a fence and, followed by all her litter, waddled toward the radio in the farmhouse. Only the timely intervention of Anderson saved his household from invasion.

Even If It Hurts
Better Add "Nerts"

Chicago.—Take it from Sir William Craigie, University of Chicago professor, and one of the world's foremost dictionary makers, slang is the stuff.

"It's up to you" to "believe it or not," he says, and these two expressions are real contributions to the language which convey exactly what they mean.

You may be "small potatoes," or able to toss the "bunk," but just as long as you earn the "simoleons" to get a "square meal" you can usually get out of a "tight place," and other such expressions are approved by the professor.

Six words are most commonly used, Sir William says, and they are: "A," "an," "the" and "to be."

My Neighbor Says:

USE warm water for the first washing when cleaning spinach, as the warm water aids in releasing the grit.

Fat meat, though very nourishing, is often objected to by children. In such a case, try giving it to them in this way: Cut off the fat before the joint is cooked, chop or mince it finely, mix with double the weight of flour, make into a paste with cold water, form into balls, and boil for one hour. Served with either gravy or jam; this is delicious and children will generally eat it readily.

To clean a griddle that has become crusted, put over a very hot fire and cover thickly with salt. After the salt has burned brown, the crust and salt will brush off together, leaving the griddle like new. After washing the griddle, grease well and heat before putting away.

Always wash eggs before putting them in the refrigerator.

Lights of New York By L. L. STEVENSON

Rambling around this great city day and night, week in and week out, with nothing more untoward happening than might occur on any Main street, one may get an idea that much of that which has been said or written concerning the perils of the unwary in New York may be exaggeration or mere imagination. Possibly anyone who attends to his own business and doesn't take any unnecessary chances is just as safe in the metropolis as in a hamlet. On the other hand, there was that experience of a close friend who just now is convalescing after having been involved in a situation, which arose solely because he had been working too hard and too many hours. Yet he suffered the loss of $18 in cash, both eyes were blacked, his ear and chin were cut, a small bone in his hand was broken, his suit ruined and his hat lost. Yet he was fortunate at that, since he might easily have lost his life.

City wise is the gentleman involved. He's a resident of New York of a number of years standing. Before moving here, he lived in Chicago, and at that time Chicago was far from being a village aroused only by the arrival of No. 7. During the war, he served in the Army Intelligence department and has arrested criminals to whom the taking of life was merely a part of the night's work. Recently, he did some special work for a client which necessitated long and hard hours. In fact, the night before he met his client in a final conference at a hotel near Grand Central, he had not slept at all. Hence when, the business finally concluded, he stepped out and hailed a taxicab, he was so weary that he fell asleep very soon after giving the driver his home address.

He was awakened by the driver saying to him, "Here you are." Still deep in the clutches of sleep, he stepped out of the cab and fumbled for his fare. As he did so, the cab darted away and three gorillas set on him. He tried to fight but the odds were too great. Finally he was knocked down, kicked and robbed. As he was losing consciousness, he sensed that he was being tossed into a snow bank. As it was a bitter cold night, he would have frozen to death had not a passerby discovered him and summoned a policeman. So he was revived in a mid-town police station and taken home in a police ambulance. The taxi driver, according to the police, figured that he was drunk and had delivered him to confederates. When he is able to ride in taxis again, he intends to write the number of the vehicle and the name of the driver on his cuff.

Another instance that jars the belief that the sidewalks of New York offer no dangers, involved two young men who acted as good Samaritans. One was at a party where a guest became too friendly with concoctions on which the government places a heavy tax. The Good Samaritan offered to take him home. The intoxicated one insisted that the cab be stopped a half block or so from the place where he lived so that his wife would not hear it. The Good Samaritan, being married himself, agreed that that was a good idea. So he led his staggering companion home, delivered him and stepped out side. As he did so, something struck him on the top of the head. Not only was he robbed, even to his shoes, but at a hospital it was discovered his skull had been fractured.

The other Good Samaritan helped a young woman, who said she had been taken ill suddenly, into her home. Hardly were they inside when a man, who said he was her husband, arrived and caused a scene. After many threats, he proposed a cash settlement. The good Samaritan didn't pay. Knowing he was up against the old badger game, which might cause him no little trouble, he retained an expensive lawyer who finally brought the blackmailers to time. But his fee was heavy. And with such things in mind, the original idea changes to one that in rambling about New York a certain amount of care and discretion is necessary.

That Word "Enthusiasm"
ENTHUSIASM to us today means—well, just enthusiasm! It means intense belief in something, strong excitement on behalf of it; it is the emotion of fervor and zeal. We like enthusiasm in people. But that is as far as it goes. It never occurred to us that being enthusiastic is akin to divinity.

But that is how it started! We have it ultimately from the Greek "Theos"—God. Literally, the enthusiastic person (en-Theos) is "God-in." In other words, "enthusiasm" implies divine power—to be inspired or possessed by the god!

Mad Anthony's Spies

WHELE Gen. Anthony Wayne started his campaign against the hostile tribes of the Old Northwest in 1793, he resolved not to be taken by surprise by the enemy as his predecessor, Gen. Arthur St. Clair, had been two years before. Therefore, he employed a number of the best woodsmen the frontier afforded, to act as rangers. He gave command of this force of some 40 men to Capt. Ephraim Kibby, a native of New Jersey who had been one of the first settlers near Cincinnati after the Revolution, a hunter for the garrison at Fort Washington and a scout for St. Clair.

Skilled as were Kibby and his rangers in woodcraft and valuable as they were to Wayne as scouts, the elite of the company was a "division of spies" composed of less than a dozen men. Capt. William Wells, a Kentuckian, commanded them, and the others were Robert McLelland, Henry Miller, and four others identified only by their last names—May, Hickman, Mahaffy and Thorp.

"Captain Wells and his companions were confidential and privileged gentlemen in camp, who were only called upon to do duty upon very particular and interesting occasions," says one of the historians of that period. "They were permitted a carte blanche among the horses of the dragoons, and when upon duty, went well mounted; whilst the rangers commanded by Captain Kibby went on foot." One reason for this favoritism was that three of them, Wells, Miller and May, had been "white Indians"—returned captives who could assume the dress and speak the tongue of the red men so well as to deceive any Indian they met, thus increasing their value as spies.

Miller had a younger brother, Christopher, who was still held by the Indians and by a remarkable coincidence, one of his first spying expeditions, when he, Wells and McLelland were sent out by Wayne to bring in a prisoner for questioning, resulted in the capture of an Indian who turned out to be his brother! Christopher later became one of Wells' spies, whose services were so valuable in the success of Wayne's campaign which culminated at the victory at Fallen Timbers in 1794.

After that, the Millers, Hickman, Mahaffy and Thorp drop out of history, but two of the others were marked for future fame—McLelland as a fur trader on the Missouri and an employee of the American Fur company whose deeds are immortalized in Washington Irving's "Astoria"; and Wells as an Indian agent at Fort Wayne and hero of the Fort Dearborn massacre in 1812 when his devotion to his niece, Rebekah Heald, led him to the death which he knew awaited him on the shores of Lake Michigan.

Two Names on Utah's Map

ONE was a Frenchman, Etienne Provot (sometimes spelled Provoist), who was a member of the famous Ashley-Henry expedition of 1822 up the Missouri and later captain of a company of Ashley-Henry men who trapped all through central Wyoming. The next year he quarreled with Ashley and joined the rival Pratte-Chouteau company which later merged with the American Fur company. After that he became head of a group of free trappers and journeyed from Wyoming over into Utah.

Authentic records of this period are scarce but Provot may have seen the Great Salt lake before Jim Bridger did and he may have gone through South Pass before Thomas Fitzpatrick did. A little more authentic is the story of how the site of the city named for him was baptized in blood—when a party of treacherous Snake Indians killed 17 trappers in his company. His long career of adventure came to an end with his death in St. Louis in 1850.

The other was an Englishman, Peter Skene Ogden, the son of a New York Loyalist or Tory who removed to Canada after the Revolution. Young Ogden entered the service of the Northwest Fur company and later was a brigade leader for Dr. John McLoughlin, chief factor of the Hudson's Bay company in the Pacific Northwest. As such he explored much of the present state of Idaho and parts of Nevada and Utah. He is said to have been the first white man to see Mount Shasta and the headwaters of the Sacramento river. He discovered the Humboldt river, which for many years bore his name.

Ogden married a Salish woman and won a great influence over many of the tribes of the Northwest. Because of this he was able to rescue some of the captives held by the Indians after the Whitman massacre in 1847.

Whether or not he and Provot ever knew each other personally is uncertain, but it is likely that they met some time while both were ranging through Utah or at some gathering of trappers in that part of the country. And it would be easy to imagine the Frenchman and the Englishman meeting again at the "Last Rendezvous" in that Valhalla where gather the spirits of all the men who made history in the glorious days of the fur trade and Ogden boasting "A city, a river and a valley in Utah bear my name." To which Provot might reply "That's three. But I have four that bear my name—a city, a river, a canyon and a county!"

Take the Burden From Tired Feet

Ways of Being Comfortable When Housework Is in Progress.

Those who get weary standing on their feet doing tasks about the house can remedy this trouble in large measure if they really want to.

An important thing to learn is to work without standing. At first it will seem very strange, but it is amazing how much can be done equally as well sitting as standing.

Some modern kitchens have composition floors. These have the merit of having one smooth surface easy to keep clean, but they are hard to stand on.

Another way to ease the tired feet is to have a chair the right height to rest the knees on. Place the chair first on one side and then on the other so that alternately each foot can be rested.

The WEDDING MARCH MURDER

SYNOPSIS

Waiting in the minister's study, Jim Franklin, about to be married to Doris Carmody, is stabbed to death. Peter Cardigan, with Sergeant Kilday, begins the investigation. Franklin, while waiting, had visitors, among them his mistress, "Choo Choo" Train; his intended wife's father, Ambrose Carmody; her brother, Rylie; Daniel Bullis, politician, and a woman in a blue frock. Rylie Carmody admits trying to stop the wedding, after being informed by Webster Spears that Franklin was still friendly with Choo Choo, despite his approaching marriage. Kilday secures the dead man's keys. From Callis Shipley, one of the bridesmaids, Rylie's friend, the investigators learn nothing. An interview with Bullis is fruitless. Webster Spears admits informing Rylie Carmody of Franklin's relations with Choo Choo, for Doris Carmody's sake, in the hope of preventing the wedding. Fletcher, Franklin's man-servant, is reticent. An interview with Milo Dunbar, Franklin's law partner, and search of the dead man's office, reveals nothing of importance. Choo Choo admits her relations with Franklin were to continue after his marriage. Six of the seven keys Franklin carried are traced. Kilday decides to arrest Webster Spears and have Rylie Carmody shadowed. Callis Shipley vainly tries to convince Cardigan of the innocence of Rylie Carmody and Spears. She and Rylie plan to leave the city, evading Rylie's shadower.

CHAPTER IX—Continued

"I don't want to think!" When he turned to face her Rylie's tortured expression revealed his inner agony. "Web and I have been like brothers. He loved Doris. If he killed Jim Franklin, he did no more than I might have done, had I been given the opportunity."

"Oh, Rylie! He couldn't have done it! Not Web!"

And when he made no answer, she added, "All the more reason we should stand by him, then. We can't desert him now."

"It isn't deserting him," retorted the boy sharply. "Father will see to his defense. Everything that friends and money can do, will be done for him. We'll all stand by him. But remaining here won't help him. Why, he'd be the first to advise us to go, if he knew."

"They'd follow us wherever we went," the girl objected.

"It's easier than you think, honey." He glanced at his watch. "Three-forty-five. Call Flo and tell her we're coming. In the meantime I promise to lose my shadow. Once out of town, they'll never find us."

Callis walked to the window and watched the loitering detective across the street. Apparently the man was engrossed in the newspaper he was reading.

Rylie peered over her shoulder. The taxi waited, conveniently, half a block up the street. He had grown familiar with the man's methods. When Rylie appeared at the door, the taxicab got slowly under way, so as to be nearly abreast of the waiting detective by the time the young man could reach his car. The detective invariably continued his perusal of the newspaper, apparently taking no notice of the proceedings. Once he was in his car, however, Rylie always noticed the sleuth was close at his heels. This procedure had never varied.

The young man rumbled his hair thoughtfully. "I know how to get rid of him," he began, surveying the stubby hood of the taxicab critically. "I could run away from that car in second, once we got out of the city. Suppose I take him into the country and lose him. If they question me about it later, I only need to say I didn't even know I was being followed."

"They might watch here and pick up your trail when you come back."

"I wouldn't need to come back." Rylie's confidence was rising now. He smiled boyishly. "They aren't following you. As soon as I leave, call up Flo and tell her we're coming. Then catch the first train for Westport. In the meantime, I'll lose the detective and meet you there at seven o'clock. Give me plenty of time, because I'll be miles from there when I give that fellow the shake. I won't take any chances of his finding us again, after I meet you."

Callis wanted to go. After the worry of the past two days, the lazy peace of Martin's Cove was more than ever inviting. And if Rylie were there—Rylie, without detectives dogging his footsteps. She glanced again at the waiting sleuth across the street. What if he had overheard Rylie's bitter remarks concerning Jim Franklin a few minutes ago? Coupled with the suspicion with which he was already regarded, that might have been enough to cause his arrest. It might be better if they did go away for a few days.

"All right," she decided at length. "I'll do it. But first I must see Mr. Cardigan. Perhaps he can help Web."

"Cardigan? What are you thinking of, Callis? He's that detective fellow."

"He isn't a detective, Rylie. At least, not a police detective. He's the man who writes those detective stories. Don't you remember how full the newspapers were of his exploits last summer when he solved the murder of Lila Vale after the police had failed? If Web is innocent, he could help us by finding the real murderer."

"Yes, and if Web is guilty, he'd probably help send him to the electric chair," added Rylie grimly. "Don't go to him, Callis. I'm afraid it would only make things worse."

side before she would agree to drive to Martin's Cove. The only change this required in Rylie's original plan was a later meeting at Westport. It was agreed that Callis should meet him there at nine o'clock.

Rylie lost no time in putting his part of the plan into execution. With the detective's tacit following, he headed, by the shortest route, for the hotel. He felt confident of success. He halted at a gas station and filled his tank. The taxicab stopped at the drug store across the street. He already knew what he would do. An open road, with the accelerator pressed to the floor. Wind singing in his ears, and the taxicab dropped farther and farther behind, until it was lost from view. Then a side-road, and a second one, twisting and curving until there was no possibility of finding his trail.

Callis had several hours until she was to meet Rylie at Westport. She telephoned Flo and packed her bag herself, striving all the while to keep her thoughts away from Rylie. She couldn't. What if something went wrong? What if the very fact that he had given their detective the slip intensified the suspicions that were already directed at him? Now that he was gone, the plan seemed very foolish to her and she regretted the decision she had made. But it was too late now. Rylie was already gone. There would be no way to get in touch with him until she reached Westport. She was tempted to phone Flo again and tell her they had changed their plans. If they returned home this evening perhaps nothing would be thought of the incident of the afternoon.

She was still undecided when she reached Cardigan's apartment. If he would only help, surely there was some way to prove Web's innocence.

"I Think That Girl Has Warped Your Judgment, Peter."

Web couldn't be a murderer! It was unthinkable! She clung to that thought throughout her brief interview with the novelist. It steered her to meet the evident suspicion with which he greeted her visit. There was a time when she thought he believed her, when she was tempted to hope that he might offer his help. But the moment vanished, and when she left, it was with the hopeless conviction that she could do nothing more. Peter Cardigan was definitely on the other side.

It seemed to her that it took far longer than the scheduled hour for the train to reach Westport. Time dragged interminably. Yet it was only a quarter of nine when she arrived. She had half hoped that Rylie would be there ahead of her, waiting, but he wasn't. But it wouldn't be long. He was always very punctual. She waited on the platform, her restless eyes seeking out the lights of each passing motor car, as she heard its approach. The minutes ticked slowly past, and still he did not come.

Nine-fifteen—nine-thirty—the hands of her watch seemed almost to have stopped, and still Rylie was missing. In her anxiety, she conjured up fearful pictures of what might have happened to him. A wreck! Rylie, lying under a twisted mass of metal, his white face drawn with pain. Or arrested? Facing the grilling examination of Sergeant Kilday. Perhaps they had discovered he was trying to run away. She walked restlessly up and down the dimly lighted platform, striving vainly to thrust aside the turmoil of her thoughts. Back and forth, she trudged the platform. It seemed that her steps were as slow as the dragging time. Where was Rylie? What had happened to him? Why didn't he come?

CHAPTER X

A Fresh Trail

The memory of Callis Shipley's agonized expression when he refused his assistance tortured Peter after she had departed. Perhaps if she had made that appeal to him at first, before he had detected her in two efforts to deceive him, he might have enlisted in her cause. Not now. The very admiration which had almost betrayed him into a blind belief in her had also made him wary. He felt that possibly she was acting a role; that this might in some manner, fit into the chain of her other deceptions in a subtly calculated effort to make him serve her own interests, whatever they might be. Grudgingly, he admitted to himself that his instinct had been to offer her his assistance. He almost wished he had called her back and made such a promise. Her argument as to Rylie's innocence had appealed to his sense of reason. Her defense of Spears had coincided, in a measure, with his doubt that the latter could have grasped the knife that ended Franklin's life from its position high on the wall of the rector's study.

His reverie was interrupted by the sharp jangle of the telephone. It was Sergeant Kilday calling.

"Grab a taxi and come on over here," he urged. "I'm at Franklin's apartment."

"Has anything happened?"

"Some one has broken into the apartment. But come on over, I tell you. You can see for yourself."

It was as Kilday had said. During the late afternoon, Fletcher had been absent on some errands. He had been gone about two hours. When he returned, he had found the apartment topsyturvy, the rugs thrown back, the drawers pulled out, the closets ransacked. He had, of course, immediately notified the police.

"Have you discovered what is missing?" Kilday was asking when Peter arrived.

"Everything is so torn up, I don't know," the servant replied dubiously. "I can't think what the burglars were after. There was no money in the house. What little jewelry Mr. Franklin had, shirt studs, a watch and one ring, was not taken. There was no silver of any consequence. Mr. Franklin seldom took his meals here."

A cursory examination could reveal nothing missing. It was apparent that the burglar, whoever it may have been, had searched every corner of the apartment thoroughly. Whatever he had sought had been well concealed, if it were here at all. This was evidenced by the confusion evident in every room.

"Now what," asked Kilday, "was he after?" It wasn't money, "if it had been an ordinary prowler he would have taken that jewelry. There isn't much of it, but it's of considerable value. And if it wasn't money, what was it and how does this fit in with the murder?"

He surveyed the wreckage grimly. His first effort, after his arrival, had been to find finger-prints, and although an assistant had made a thorough search, only one set had been found. These had quickly been identified as having been made by Fletcher. The rooms had been dusted thoroughly that morning and with the exception of the unknown visitor who had left no marks, there had been no one but Fletcher in the apartment since.

"One thing is certain," declared Peter. "It couldn't have been Webster Spears. He was already under arrest."

"It wasn't Rylie Carmody either," the detective added dubiously. "If he had tried anything like this, we'd have had a report from the man who's shadowing him. That leaves the Shipley girl. If this had any connection with the murder, it was she who searched this apartment. But why? What was she after?"

Peter turned to the servant with quickened interest. "What time was it when you left the apartment, Fletcher?"

"I can't tell you exactly, sir. Probably about four-thirty."

"And when did you return?"

"It was a quarter to seven. I had dinner while I was out. There was nothing in the house."

Could it have been Callis Shipley, Peter wondered? Certainly it had been fully five-thirty when she left his apartment, probably later. He tried in vain to think of some circumstance which would help him estimate the hour of her visit. Aside from the fact that he remembered turning on the reading lamp when she arrived, there was no way he could accurately check toward the east, on a narrow canyon of street bordered by high apartment buildings, where dusk crept in early. For Kilday's benefit he related the circumstances of that visit. "I don't think it could have been the girl," he concluded. "This search took time. She was with me at least part of the time Fletcher was away."

The detective chewed reflectively upon his frayed cigar. "Perhaps this didn't have anything to do with the murder, after all," he ventured at length. "We know it couldn't have been either Spears or young Carmody. Who else, besides this girl, is trying to help the criminal?"

"It wasn't an ordinary robbery," Peter insisted. "The place has been ransacked too thoroughly for that. It's bound to have some connection with the crime. In my opinion, it's up to us to find that connection."

"Suppose we are on the wrong track after all? We must be, if the only persons who will fit into our present theory are accounted for at the time this place was searched."

Kilday snorted. "I think that girl has warped your judgment, Peter. I'll stand by my case."

Much Admired Windswept Print

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

fade or run in washing and iron smooth and perfect just as magic. Another grand thing about crepes of this type is that they are such a joy to work with. The texture is so firm and dependable—never pulls out at the seam and stays "put," which makes it easy for the home-sewing woman to handle.

The three adorable dresses pictured are made of the new windswept print. Those dainty white accents at neckline and sleeves—well now, we know you aren't the frothy, filmy necker-fashionists simply thrilling this season?

The print to the right is that gloriously colorful a mere word picture cannot do it justice, and when you stop to think that this print will look like new, what more is there to be desired in the way of a perfect print? The filmy white organdie rolled-petal collar and cuffs add the finishing touch. The self-fabric stitched belt drawn through a gay colored ring is worth noting.

There is a modest beauty about the spring posies with their delicate tendrils so gracefully windswept in the print to the left which will carry a special appeal to the woman of discerning taste. In any of its color combinations this print is charming, but in navy with a strain of lighter running throughout, together with the very white spring posies spotted with fresh light green, it is irresistible.

The ankle-length frock with contrasting fitted jacket admirably solves the problem of what to wear for semi-formal occasions. Worn with its jacket of solid color you have the feeling of being correctly attired most any day of the day. Remove the jacket and the dress goes just formal enough to tone in to most any afternoon occasion. It has quaint drop shoulders and cunning eye puff sleeves. The plain little velvet tie about the throat is reminiscent of the "gay nineties." The windswept print which fashions it carries a very animated patterning.

You'll love these swaggle windswept prints. In the practical construction they are as new as they are good-looking. And do they wear well! There's scarcely any "wear out" to them. Neither will the delicate color

DAYTIME EFFECTS ON EVENING DRESS

A new evening frock which August-bernard makes of her blackish green crepe marocain has a daytime neckline and short sleeves that are gathered into the shoulder seam at the edges. The front of the bodice is draped into a full-length panel, caught under a rhinestone buckle at the right side front of the waistline.

Long fashions the skirt and jacket of this, an evening suit, of black wool, and the latter has revers of sable and sleeves that are unusually wide between the deep-fitted cuffs and the elbows. The skirt is a simple ankle-length mermaid skirt. The blouse of this suit is made of flowered satin, pinks and greens on a black background.

Grand New Nighties of Satin in Floral Prints

A visit to the shops will disclose lots of new ideas. A few minutes in one shop showed grand new nighties of heavy satin in floral prints, so well done that the result looks like panties.

Then there are tailored pajamas of heavy crepe de chine with three-quarter length coats of similar fabric. These are done in white or pastel shades and are piped in a contrasting color.

Modern Jewelry Adds to Attractiveness of Costume

A leading sportswear shop shows costume bracelet and belt sets tricky enough to renew any costume. These come in narrow and spacious widths, one set in coral, natural color, others in either silver or gold mesh.

The silver combination is accented with white metal trim. Another clever ornament here is a dog's head clip—to be attached to one's hat, neckline or waist.

EXQUISITE LACE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The summer program here is a widespread vogue for lace, with special emphasis placed on the gown which is fashioned of the finer sort of lace of delicate cobweb mesh. Molyneux creates this lovely dinner gown of black lace, with its subtle delicacy of flowers and leaves on an enchantingly sheer background. The gown gives delightful expression to the new silhouette which calls for crisp and animated lines (the lace is opened with horsehair), knee-length tulle and fullness which interprets a far-reaching movement, just now so much admired, toward the back.

Few Aviators Attain Highest Gliding Rank

There is no sport which is as scientific as motorless flight. The successful soaring pilot must not only be skillful in handling his plane but also needs to be something of a meteorologist. He must have courage and patience to a high degree and must be a thorough and painstaking student of his avocation.

It takes years to become an expert; the group ranking as such numbers only ten in the world. A special rating has been made for them—the "D" license—which is given for the following accomplishments: a total of over five soaring hours; a distance flight of at least 50 kilometers; an altitude flight to 1,000 or more meters above the starting point.

O'Meara and Schemp are two pilots in America who have fulfilled the "D" license requirements; the other eight pilots are Germans—Arthur L. Lawrence in the Scientific American.
