STRONGER BUSINESS AND STRONGER BANKS

By F. M. LAW
President American Bankers Association

DURING the crisis when confidence was shattered, bankers were properly concerned in liquidity. Their main thought was to prepare to meet any demand for withdrawal of funds. They were more interested therefore in collecting loans than in making them. For this they cannot be justly blamed. It was a proper procedure. Now that confidence has been so largely restored banks will naturally resume a more normal lending policy. This does not mean they will or should extend loans or unsecured credit, but that in the utmost good faith bankers will perform their proper part in recovery by a sympathetic and constructive attitude in the making of sound loans. Nor should commercial banks make capital or long time loans, for the reason that their loans are made from funds derived from deposits payable for the most part on demand.

F. M. LAW

When the return of confidence is further on its way, business men will find need for credit in making their plans. Then good borrowers, who for the most part have been so conspicuously absent from the market, will return. They will be warmly welcomed by the banks.

Business Men's Fears
Business men have not yet laid all their fears. They worry about what Congress may or may not do. They concern themselves about a trend toward control of business by government. They fear taxes beyond their power to pay. These are real sources of worry and when they are reassured along these lines they will be more inclined to take a fresh look at the future and to make plans to go forward.

As a matter of fact there are tangible evidences of recovery. The Federal Reserve Board officially has stated that prices, wages, business activity and production were back to the highest peak since early in 1931. Commercial failures in the United States are being cut almost in half as compared with the same period last year. It has been reported that the decline in export and import trade was definitely checked in the middle of 1933 and replaced during the last half of the year by a substantial recovery movement. Among favorable factors is the improved condition of the banks. It is doubtless true that the banking structure of the country has never been in a sounder, stronger and more liquid condition than it is today. My authority for that statement is the Comptroller of the Currency. No longer is there any fear or thought of bank runs. Depositors once more know that their money is safe and the banker, thrice armed in the knowledge of his own strength, is looking forward.

R. S. LAURENCE

Funeral services for R. S. Laurence, who passed away at his home in Iredell last Friday, after a short illness, were held at the Methodist Church there Saturday, with Rev. McCauley, pastor, officiating. Interment was in the Iredell cemetery.

Mr. Laurence was born Feb. 19, 1859, being over 75 years old at the time of his death. He was a member of the Methodist Church and had been Superintendent of the Sunday School at Iredell for the past 20 years, thus showing his love for his God and his church.

He is survived by the widow, four sons, W. B. Laurence of Hedley, Melvin of Holliday, Allen of Kilgore and Ed of Iredell; three daughters, Miss Nannie Laurence of Iredell, Mrs. Minnie Rose of Whitney and Mrs. T. M. Tidwell of Iredell; 22 grandchildren and 6 great-grandchildren. The Informer extends sympathy to the bereaved.

A Down-Hill Pull

Si Chestnut says: "Many a politician who imagines he has the world by the tail and a down-hill pull, finds out after the election that all he has left is the down-hill pull."

Si may be right about politicians. We don't know much about that game. Business takes up most of our time these days, and banking requires careful attention. We are always ready to serve our patrons and help build up this community. We are not seeking any special "pull."

HOUSEWIFE MUST HEED DIETETICS

Problem of Planning Meals Is Important One.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THE problem of providing food for the family demands from the housewife of today much more than it did a generation ago when the principal aim was to furnish the plentiful, appetizing meals which have been made famous as "the meals mother used to make."

should have liberal amounts of the various vitamins. Of course, the ideal food is nonexistent, some foods having a large amount of calcium, for instance, and at the same time a low amount of iron. The sum of the foods for the day, however, should reach a thirty share total which is quite possible on a varied diet.

A typical adequate menu for a day at a low price is given as follows:

Breakfast. Farina with 1 1/2 cups milk and 1 tablespoon sugar. Graham bread, 1/4 lb., with molasses and coffee.

Luncheon. Baked beans with pork fat. Graham bread, 1/4 pound. Cheese. Milk, 1/2 cup in coffee.

Dinner. Beef stew with potato, tomato and beef fat. Raw cabbage. Graham bread, 1/4 lb.

The section on well-balanced diets for growing children, the pre-school child, the adolescent boy and girl, as well as the family diets will particularly interest the mother who is vitally concerned in giving her child a foundation of health.

HOW IT STARTED by JEAN NEWTON

That Word "Housewife"

"HOUSEWIFE"—on analysis a strange term, for no woman can be the wife of a house. And yet it is the modern word in good standing to describe the occupation of a married woman who devotes her time to the maintenance of her home.

The term is a very old one, its first literary use dating 1225 in a work called the "Ancien Riwe," in which it is spelled "husewif." The first record of the modern spelling "housewife" is found under date of 1710 in the "British Apollo."

In the original early Middle English, the word was taken from "hus" (house) and "wif" (woman or wife). Incidentally the reader may remark that the English of those days was a very different language from that we know today.

It would appear that in the early use of the word the emphasis was more on the house than the wife, for it applied also to a single woman who was the head of a household.

Dog Able to Sing 5 Notes in E Flat

Cincinnati.—Did you ever hear a dog singing? "Well, I did," said Mrs. Anna Alexander. She owns such a dog, Tim.

This is not a back fence nightmare. He actually identifies and imitates five musical notes. His range is within the key of E flat. When Mrs. Alexander plays chords on the piano, Tim gives voice—or bark—to tones of surprising resemblance.

Mrs. Alexander, a teacher of voice, observed the dog's love of music, and then she began the systematic development of his "talent."

Mayan Culture Still Exists in Guatemala

Washington.—Descendants of the Mayas, inhabitants of a great ancient empire, exist in the highlands of Guatemala, according to the Smithsonian Institution.

Both the Mayan race and its strange culture, the institution explained, still are alive. Artifacts of present day Mayas, officials pointed out, differ slightly from those of ancestors, whose powerful civilization existed before the Spanish conquest.

The decorative gold work of the Guatemalan Mayas, experts claimed, is creditable to the finest European goldsmith. Their cotton fabrics are woven on old-style Maya handlooms with intermixtures of colors in elaborate designs. Yarns, it was added, still are dyed with vegetable compounds.

Physically, declared Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology, latter day Mayas differ from their ancient relatives. The same native language is spoken, and, the curator added, the old religion is retained to a certain extent.

Bank Teller Is Victim of Joke by Gypsy Girls

Cleveland, Ohio.—They're telling a $180 joke at the expense of Leo Bates, teller, and Frank Ballow, guard, both of the same bank here.

How two young women, in bright gypsy garb, came to Bates' window and asked him to change a $50 bill, was recorded in a police report. While the teller was counting out the change one of the women reached through the bars and grabbed at a roll of $20 bills in Bates' hand.

Bates jerked back his hand quickly. "A good joke," the two women chuckled gaily, while Bates was thinking, "These gypsies are a funny people." Guard Ballow, according to the police was a few feet away at the time. A few minutes after the two women left the bank, still chortling over their little joke, Bates checked over the roll of twenties. Nine were gone.

Woman, 86, Loses Hair; It Grows in Again, Black

Westminster, Md.—To be active at eighty-six is rare, but Mrs. Susan Bish, of Union Mills, Carroll county, has done even better than that and has grown a second crop of hair, not gray, but black.

According to Arthur Bowers, Westminster officer and a son of Mrs. Bish, his mother lost her hair at the age of 84. Within six months the new hair began to grow and at the present time it is long enough to braid.

Guests Must Be Old

Great Bend, Kan.—The minimum age limit to attend an annual party given by M. L. Crow is eighty. Unless a person is that age or over, his presence is not desired at the oldsters' party, which was inaugurated four years ago. Last year seventeen attended.

Good Taste Today

BY EMILY POST

Author of

"ETIQUETTE," "THE BLUE BOOK OF SOCIAL USAGE," ETC.

VALUES FAR ABOVE MONEY

DEAR Mrs. Post: We are invited out a great deal, and why, I don't know, because we have so far not been able to return anything. We do send candy, or sometimes flowers, and a book to people we know like these particular things, but outside of that we can't return their dinner, week-end and theater invitations. Ought we to stop accepting those? Oh, if only we had more money!

ANSWER: One need never return invitation for invitation. The only thing that matters is to show our appreciation of the kindness shown us in the best way we can. In other words, by the book, candy, flowers, or by things costing time and thought and heart, which are often more valuable than things costing merely money. Ner is it at all necessary to feel that you are unable to give a party. Remember that a young couple living in a single room, which has a folding sofa-bed, so that the room can be made into the semblance of a sitting room, can perfectly well ask friends they care for (after all, others are of small importance) to come to their "home-in-a-room."

Where people do things with most hospitality, and fail, it is not because they entirely overlook the fundamental fact that the success of a party is far more dependent upon the spirit of hospitality—actually the spirit of friendliness—than it is upon lavishness of provision.

Would you know the real secret of successful party-giving? It has not a thing in the world to do with money. It is simply the gift of never outgrowing a child's imagination. In other words, the spirit of "let's pretend" that enters into the play of all children.

Unless you can enter into the spirit of this hospitality, unless you can delight to have the friends you like share your festival, your party—even though it be given in a palace with rows of lackeys and a ton of choicest viands—will be a heavy procession of over-richly laden minutes. Whereas, if the enthusiasm of your welcome springs from innate friendliness—from joy in furthering the delight of good fellowship beneath your own roof—you need never doubt that those who have accepted your hospitality once will not eagerly look forward to doing so again and again.

TWENTIETH CENTURY CHANGES

DEAR Mrs. Post: Please go into detail about the etiquette of present-day card leaving. I am of the 90's, when the convention was strictly adhered to, but people are getting so casual about cards and visits that I am not sure how much of their old meaning may still exist without "dating" us.

ANSWER: Going out in the afternoon, as we used to do, and leaving cards at two or three dozen front doors without even asking whether any in that house on whom we were leaving them were at home, is at present totally unknown to everyone on the hither side of fifty. Few people even pay party calls except after a first invitation from strangers—and only the rather precisely brought up pay these. There are many occasions, however, when cards must still be left. First of all, a card of sympathy is left at a house of mourning; a card of inquiry at a house where there is serious illness. And of course, people go to see neighbors and friends, and if they find them out, they necessarily leave their cards. Formally, and on strangers, a lady leaves one card of her own and one of her husband's on each gentleman—just as we used to do. But going to see friends, one usually leaves just one card of one's own—and only when they are out. Perhaps I can make my answer clearer by saying that cards of empty form would "date" us unmistakably and would be thought absurd by all younger people. But all cards that have real intention of friendship or kindness are used today just as they always have been.

Dear Mrs. Post: My sixteen-year-old daughter would like to entertain about four couples of her own age. They don't play cards (or most of them don't) and our house is too small to dance. Could my husband and I take them all somewhere, and would it be embarrassing for the boys to let us pay all the expenses? Or don't girls invite boys to go out with them even under those circumstances?

ANSWER: Certainly your daughter may give a party—as many as you are willing to let her give—and nothing could be more proper than to have you and her father take her and her friends somewhere. A hostess as well as a host should always pay the expenses of the guests whom they have invited.

First Use of Celery

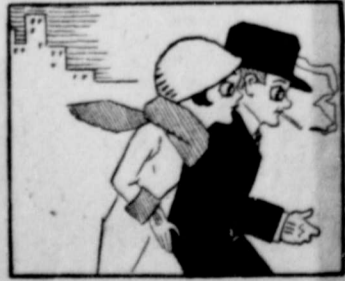

Celery was first used in its present form during the seventeenth century in England, France, Italy, Holland and elsewhere. No great degree of perfection was reached until in the nineteenth century, when considerable attention was given to the development and improvement of varieties, about 1828. Another revival of interest came in the period from 1886 to 1898.

FRIEND OR ENEMY, WIND REMAINS A MYSTERY TO MAN

Of all nature's forces the wind is perhaps the most intangible. Where it comes from and whither it goes no one knows. It can be a kindly friend or a ruthless enemy. It brings showers, clouds or sunny hours; it caresses with a delicate touch or strikes a devastating blow.

Writers of great literature have recognized the wind and its place in the scheme of things since Bible times, for we find in Genesis 3:8, "the cool of the day," margined to mean the wind of the day.

The Athenians gave names to their winds. There was Boreas, the north wind with an icy breath; Apheletis, the wind from the east; Notos, the breath of the south, and Zephyros, the west wind. By these names the winds from the four quarters were personalized, and in Athens, near the Acropolis, there is still standing a temple built 22 centuries ago known as the Tower of the Winds.

Shakespeare, who drew so largely from nature, makes more than 200 allusions to the wind in his writings. Dickens in more modern times said in one of his stories, "I am always conscious of an uncomfortable sensation now and then when the wind is blowing in the east." And George Eliot writes, "but certain winds make men's tempers bad." Emerson, the American classicist, among his numerous allusions to this force, referred to "the pious wind . . . forgetting . . . prophetic, and in other ways.

The terrible force of the wind is best described by Conrad, virile writer of the sea, in "Typhoon" when he says, "a furious gale attacks him like a personal enemy, tries to grasp his limbs, fastens on his mind, seeks to rout his very spirit out of him."

To the effects of a terrible wind in West Indies we owe the fact that Alexander Hamilton was brought into American history. Born in the little island of Nevis, a British possession in the West Indies, his youth was spent on the island of St. Croix, a Danish possession. Not yet sixteen he wrote a description of a violent wind before the terrors had worn off and while its effects were still visible. Printed in the island paper the story made such an impression upon the governor that the anonymous writer was discovered. This incident was the peg upon which his career turned.—Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.

Branding Irons Tell Story of Romantic Period.

Alpine, Texas.—Branding irons that burned claiming marks in the hides of yearlings during the last century lie in historical importance at Sul Ross Teachers' college here.

Cattle rustling, driven over long trails to northern grazing lands and markets and all the color of pioneering in the Big Bend country of west Texas are connoted in these curiously twisted pieces of iron.

They were collected from over the Pecos river country by Henry T. Fletcher, Brewster county banker and ranchman, and presented to the West Texas Historical and Scientific society, of which he is president.

One Used Ninety-Six Years.

Among the 60 irons is the "G" from the H. L. Kokornot ranch, one of the oldest brands in Texas. It was registered in 1838 and the mark has been used continuously for the last 96 years. The brand was bought by the Kokornots from a man named Jones, and four generations of the family have seen their herds graze to the spring grazing country south of the G's burned on their hides.

The Kokornot ranch covers 600 acres in the four counties of Pecos, Jeff Davis, Reeves and Brewster.

The original small "G" brand of the Anti-Horse Thief Association of Texas, is one of the prize possessions in the collection. It was made at

OBSERVATION

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

One of the most convenient things about a home is a small instrument attached to a wall in- filament which is very sensitive to the temperature. When the dial is set at 70 degrees Fahrenheit and the temperature of the room reaches that point, the filament moves in one direction, thus, disconnecting the electric current which shuts off the fuel supply at the furnace. When the temperature falls below the 70 mark, the process is reversed. That little instrument is called a thermostat.

It was discovered by a man named Spencer who possessed unusual powers of observation. He had a job as a night watchman, and in addition to that task kept the fires in the furnace all through the night. After filling up the fire box he would rest at a little distance from the furnace, not too far to hear, every once in a while, a sharp crack at the furnace door. He soon discovered that the crack came at about the time the furnace needed a fresh supply of fuel. While this incident would have passed unnoticed by the majority of night watchmen, it started Mr. Spencer to thinking. Upon closer observation he discovered that the sharp noise came from the center of the furnace door when it was hotter than the outer rim, and also snapped again when the cooling process set in. He worked at this idea, with the final reward, after years of hard toil, of having made the first thermostat.

Some claim that the power of observation is a special gift with which only a few people are endowed. On the contrary it is something which can easily be cultivated. Not only are the things we look for nearest to us, but the opportunities for personal advancement and happiness are also all around us, but it takes an observing eye to see them. The same law holds good in the world of emotional and spiritual values. The blessings of friendship and love are frequently very near us, but we fail to see them because we have not developed the art of observation.

"Seek and ye shall find," is a law which has proven its value many times. There are "sermons in stones—and good in everything" to the person with an observing eye and a patient mind. © by Western Newspaper Union.

The Household

By Lydia Le Baron Walker

THE homemaker who has not inherited money has two ways of acquiring it. One is to make money and the other is to save it. Each way has its advantages and also its disadvantages. There is something stimulating about being paid for one's labor, but it is not always possible to have time, energy for extra work, or money-making ability. On the other hand there is satisfaction in realizing that by careful management and thrift without stinting, small sums of money are accumulating to buy wanted articles. There is in this none of the flair of business, but also there are not the perplexing problems to be coped with which commercial enterprises, however small, always have. Also there is no lurking apprehension that home duties may have been neglected, or at least slighted, by busying oneself with work entirely outside home requirements.

There certainly are points in favor of, and against each of the methods for the homemaker. It is for her to decide which she wishes most to do, make money or save it, and which she can be most successful in. It is probable that as far as the wish is concerned, the pendulum would swing far in favor of earning with most women. It is more than probable, however, that managing and running a home, even with the aid of delicatessen foods and cramped living quarters, plus application to business will be too taxing to strength. Men, who are recognized as having stronger physiques, do not attempt such duplex drain upon their energies.

When Well Fitted. The woman who has business acumen! who excels in making or creating a demand for wares; or who has pronounced ability in management of affairs plus business smoothness with co-workers, competitors and purchasers, is generally able to lead a business life and run a home by hiring a working housekeeper. She must expect to give up many of the social pleasures of entertaining and being entertained and little home activities which lend so much charm to home life. She becomes director of a household, giving orders as would a director of an institution. She relinquishes many of the joys of homelife and homemaking. She is a wage earner, in a large or small way. She can buy and pay for service and needed things. Such a life may be one of choice or necessity.

The woman who must save to acquire money puts home above things. It is only when she reaps the reward of success in her devotion to it, that she wins out. It is payment but not in dollars and cents. It is these she must thriftily accumulate without becoming niggardly. Some women are

by MONTE BARRETT

Copyright, 1931, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co. WND Service.

"That," declared Peter, with slow emphasis, "is the most significant point of all. Fletcher claims Franklin never kept a gun at the apartment. The man is telling the exact truth, or else he is protecting the murderer. And yet, we can find no motive that would cause Fletcher to pursue such a course. I think the fellow might protect the identity of a woman who had been indiscreet. I don't think he would protect the murderer. We have proof of it, in fact. Had he been in league with Franklin's slayer, it would not have been necessary to search the apartment, as was done. Fletcher could have accomplished such a search without any difficulty and without our knowledge.

"That means that Franklin kept the weapon elsewhere. Where? At the apartment he kept for Choo Choo Train? In another possible apartment kept for the woman in blue? At his office?"

"Sergeant," Cardigan spoke with evident conviction, "this evidence led me, ultimately, to two clues to which I did not at first attach sufficient importance. And those two clues, I believe, will prove not only the identity, but the guilt, of the murderer. They are the revolver and the key-ring we found in the murdered man's pocket."

CHAPTER XIV

Introducing the Murderer

"We have identified six of these seven keys," Peter continued, indicating the ring which Kilday was holding in his hand. "One opens the street door of Franklin's apartment building; a second opens his apartment; another fits Choo Choo Train's door; the fourth opens the door of his general office. That's an end of the large keys. Of the smaller ones, the first opened his desk and the last one still remains unidentified. Call Milo Dunbar, will you? I believe he can help us trace this key. We should have done it before. And unless I'm clear off the track, we'll know who the murderer is when we succeed in doing that."

Franklin's partner was located at his office and promised to come at once. "Ask him to bring the key to Franklin's private compartment of the safe," Peter interrupted to suggest. "We'll want that, too."

"I think," he continued after Kilday had replaced the receiver, "that we can definitely abandon the idea that Franklin maintained a separate apartment for this woman in blue. If he had done so, why doesn't the key appear on this ring? All his other keys are here. There have been times I have been tempted to abandon this woman as a clue, for this very reason, and yet she was the motive for the crime, I'm sure. No other solution fits the facts. And since I have arrived at that solution, I can see a very good reason why Franklin had no key to her apartment."

"Was it the Shipley girl?" Kilday demanded. "I'm sure it wasn't she," replied Peter. "In their effort to protect others whom they feared were guilty, a number of people have deceived us. That has added to our complications and that's why you have suspected this girl."

At this point the attorney arrived. Peter Cardigan was still contemplating the slain man's key-ring when he entered.

"Did you bring the key?" "Here," Dunbar handed it to the novelist, who compared it carefully with the small, unidentified key on the ring. His examination completed, he reached for the nurse's pad on the table beside him, and scrawled a few hurried notes upon it.

"How does this key fit into the case?" Kilday could no longer restrain his curiosity.

"I'm not sure," Peter directed a significant glance at his friend. "Here," he handed him the notes he had just written. "With that much to go on, perhaps you can make Rylie Carmody talk."

"But I thought you said—" "Never mind what I said before," Peter replied earnestly. "I may have changed my mind. Look over these notes and follow instructions."

Kilday shrugged and left the room. "Then you think it was Rylie Carmody, after all?" suggested Milo Dunbar. "I must confess I don't understand how that key had anything to do with him."

"We'll soon know," Peter replied shortly.

The attorney walked to the window, his back to Peter and hummed a few bars of a tune. "I suppose the theory is that young Carmody committed the murder to prevent Franklin's marriage to his sister?"

"No. That's no longer the theory. We now believe that the murderer killed Franklin because he discovered the latter's love-affair with the woman in blue."

"The woman in blue?" Dunbar wheeled and eyed the novelist curiously. "That's the mysterious visitor Franklin had in the sacristy just before the crime. Have you been able to identify her?"

"That all depends on Kilday," declared Cardigan frankly. "If his search is successful, we'll be able to identify her without any further trouble."

"I gather that you have come to the conclusion that jealousy was the motive for the crime?"

"Yes. Either jealousy or revenge. In his relationship with this woman, Franklin betrayed a trusted friend and that friend committed the murder, if my theory works out. And it must work out, Mr. Dunbar," continued Peter with conviction. "It's the only theory that fits all the facts."

"I'm interested," Dunbar took a chair beside the bed. "I'd like to hear the whole story. Can't you take me into your confidence? Remember, Franklin was my partner."

"When Kilday comes back," promised the novelist. "He won't be long."

"May I see those keys?" The attorney extended his palm. "I'm curious to know what they had to do with it. Why did you ask me to bring the key to Franklin's compartment of the safe? What does young Carmody have to do with that key?"

"The keys?" Cardigan stared at him blankly. "They were here a moment ago. I must have dropped them."

"Yes," declared Dunbar evenly. "You must have dropped them—into Kilday's hand. You're lying to me, Cardigan. Why did you give those keys to Kilday? Why did you write him that note? What did you have to say that you didn't want me to hear?"

Peter smiled into the angry man's eyes, his hand sliding stealthily, almost imperceptibly toward the bell cord on the table beside his bed. "I believe I mentioned Rylie Carmody," he was sparing for time.

"Only to throw me off the track," retorted Dunbar. "Kilday didn't know what you were talking about when you mentioned him."

Then, for the first time noticing Cardigan's cautious reach for the bell, he forestalled it with a deft jerk of his elbow that sent the small table careening and knocked the bell cord to the floor.

"Then I was right," he said shortly. "You win—again," declared the novelist, his alert glance intently studying the attorney's expression. "My luck was just as bad the other night—at your office."

Before replying, Dunbar locked the door.

"I suspected you had guessed when you wrote that note to Kilday," the lawyer admitted calmly. "How did you do it?" His eyes, slightly bloodshot, returned the novelist's steady gaze.

"You left a very plain trail," declared the latter. "Once it was discovered, we couldn't miss. The only difficulty was that there were so many trails, partly due to your efforts, that yours was obscured. We knew Franklin was killed by some one he knew intimately, otherwise he would have warned Royce, who was only a few feet away; the murderer carried Franklin's own revolver; the murderer called Choo Choo Train and imitated Fletcher's voice in telling her to go to the church; the murderer could not have been in the church, proper, at the time the crime was committed, but he had to be on the ground."

"The woman in blue must have been the motive, because the guilty person took such active steps to remove all clues to her identity, and, in conclusion, Franklin's apartment was searched, not once, but twice, and I was attacked in your office. Only one person answers all these descriptions, Mr. Dunbar. That is you."

"Royce looked for you at the church but couldn't find you out in front, for the very simple reason that you weren't there. Franklin kept that revolver at his office. After searching elsewhere, there was no other conclusion we could reach. You were the only person who had access to it there. You were in great haste to search your partner's apartment, immediately after his death. You told Fletcher you were looking for a will. But you and I know you were there to destroy any evidence which might identify the woman in blue as your wife, before the police arrived. You didn't find it then, and were anxious for another opportunity to conduct the search when Fletcher wasn't present. At the first opportunity, that's exactly what you did, and that's when I picked up your trail, although even then I didn't realize who my quarry was. You used a key you found in your wife's possession to enter that apartment. Remember, too, that my assistant must have had a key to enter your office. The trail was plain from the first, and you are the only one who fits the description, in every detail."

Dunbar, head on one side, lips pursed judiciously, had the manner of a judge weighing evidence. "All very plausible," he nodded his head. "But still only theory."

"Here is some more of it," retorted the novelist. "The night before the wedding, your suspicions of your wife and Franklin aroused, you broke into his compartment of the safe. There you found evidence which supported those suspicions. And the revolver, too. That," he admitted, "is still only a guess. But I'll know whether or not it's a true one in a few minutes."

There you found evidence which supported those suspicions. And the revolver, too. That," he admitted, "is still only a guess. But I'll know whether or not it's a true one in a few minutes."

An expression of annoyance flitted across the attorney's countenance. "Guesses!" he said. "Guesses! You're always talking of guesses! What made you make such a guess?"

"In the first place, you were the only person who fitted every possibility of the crime. In the second, there were Franklin's keys. I couldn't understand why all his keys were intact, upon his ring, except the key to his compartment of the safe. It seemed strange that he should have kept that, of all keys, lying carelessly in his desk where you found it for us. Then the solution occurred to me and I compared that key we found there with the one we had been unable to identify upon the key-ring, remembering how similar they were in size and appearance. Remember, I had tried to use that unidentified key to open that compartment. I was able to insert it in the lock but it wouldn't turn the bolt. Do you know why?"

"They were both keys to that safe. When I compared them a few minutes ago, I discovered they both bore the same manufacturer's serial number. One of those keys belonged to you, Mr. Dunbar. The other was Franklin's."

Peter stared at the attorney expressionlessly. "With that much to go on, I felt confident that I knew how we had been duped. We were puzzled because we couldn't find any clue to the woman in blue among Franklin's personal effects. This was now explained. You had removed those clues when you searched Franklin's compartment the evening before, to verify your suspicions regarding him and your wife. Afterward, it occurred to you that this broken drawer might incriminate you if we discovered it. So you transferred the remainder of his effects to your own drawer, leaving your key in Franklin's desk. The broken drawer you appropriated for your own use. And that," declared Peter with finality, "is what I wrote Kilday a few minutes ago. He is on his way to your office to check up on those two drawers in your safe. Unless I am mistaken, he will discover that the key on Franklin's ring fits the broken compartment which you are now using."

"Simple, when you think about it, isn't it?"

"You make it sound simple," the attorney replied.

"The only thing that puzzled me is why you returned to your office that night," Peter continued. "You had already destroyed the evidence in Franklin's compartment."

"I was afraid there might be some evidence elsewhere that I had overlooked, and I wasn't expecting you to hunt the murderer there." The attorney was making no effort to maintain a pretense of innocence. "I couldn't very well go through the place in the daytime without exciting comment from the employees. I felt perfectly safe in making the search at night, however, until," he shrugged, "you appeared on the scene. None of my employees had an excuse to be there at that hour, and I knew that the janitor's force did not come on duty until ten o'clock, so naturally I was alarmed when I heard your key in the lock. I didn't realize, or have time to consider that you might be coming there to trap some one else. I lost my head, I guess. At any rate, I determined not to be trapped there, so I turned out the lights and waited for you in the dark. You know what happened."

Peter glanced at the locked door. "What's the idea?" he asked. "You can't hope to escape. By this time Kilday has verified the manner in which you switched boxes with Franklin."

"Oh, yes. There's always one method of escape. But don't be alarmed. That was only a precaution against interruption."

From his pocket he took a small vial. Removing the cork, he smelled of the contents. Then he smiled. "Poison," he explained. "I've been carrying it about with me for several days. Even before I killed Franklin, I made up my mind that I would never be taken alive."

Dunbar raised the bottle gravely. "Before I go," he said, "I want to say I'm sorry you went through the window. I had nothing against you. I only wanted to get out of there, undetected."

The momentary delay gave Peter the opportunity for which he waited. With all his strength he buried his pillow at the bottle poised in Dunbar's hand, hoping to knock it from his grasp.

His aim was true, but the bottle did not fall. The fingers which clutched it were too sure of their grip. There was reproach in the attorney's glance. "After making this the only escape possible," he asked, "would you rob me of it?"

He raised the bottle slowly. "I don't blame you for anything but that pillow," he declared gravely. "You're quite a detective, Cardigan. I should be an authority on the subject."

Milo Dunbar took his only means of escape.

Fashions for Juvenile Smart Set

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SUMMERTIME means vacation time, which brings clothes-planning time to hand for mothers who would dress their style-conscious children a fashionably and appropriately.

Since camp life plays so important a part in the modern child's life, it might be well to consider the clothes question from that point of view. Designers of juvenile sportswear declare there is an increasing tendency, to feature bright color in camp and playtime apparel. Because materials are strong and sturdy is no reason why they cannot be gaily colorful and attractive. So, the cotton broadcloths, the poplins, the gabardines and the argentine cloth which serve so admirably for children's recreation and everyday utilitarian clothes are coming out in unusually cheerful hues this season.

For youngsters who romp through woods and climb and wade and attend "gym" classes the idea of shorts, with inner bloomers that are brought up high so as not to be visible, is advocated. The newest shorts are pleated at front and back so as to give the appearance of a skirt.

After play hours, what then to wear? Why not a cunning tailored ensemble, on the order of the clever three-piece which the pretty little girl, to the left in the picture, is posing? The ensemble theme is being played up enthusiastically for children this season. Being so interchangeable with blouses and such, it is a guarantee of a well-dressed appearance for most any child at most any hour of the day. In fact, an outfit like this may be considered almost an entire wardrobe in itself. With the jacket on, the tallieur of marine blue as modish as mother hen cool days and on sheeping tours. Looks nice, too, with the blouse for that wee butte up-the-front at crepe is

The older girl in the picture, who is wearing a smart jacket, which also admits of interchangeable dresses. The one she is wearing while her photograph is a striped blouse, for they are everybody, old and young.

Style interest in little is said to center around sleeves in the newer models, which finishes the neck with a frock of pale pinkish soft teta which the group is wearing. You will note sleeves are fancifully styled. The vogue for taffeta has extended into the juvenile realm. If you prefer pastel crepes they are equally good style for tiny folks' party frock.

That sweet child in the foreground looks adorable in her airy frock of embroidered organdie.

WATCH NECKLINES

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A change in necklines is in progress. High cut fronts are giving way to low cut fronts after the order of the charming neckline which graces the gown pictured. This stunning café dress is fashioned of a handsome chiffon of bengberg. Its beautifully molded-to-the-figure silhouette, together with its interesting low-front neckline, make it outstanding in midsummer costume collections. Slim, long sleeves accented by three tiers of fine pleated net ruffles and a soft satin bow are intriguing details.

PLEATING IS USED QUITE EXTENSIVELY

There is much pleating in use now and it isn't all used for neckwear, although it does seem as though nothing fluffier than neckwear would be found. Ruffles and fringes are lovely on some and so are stripes. Narrow wide pleating can, however, be worn by almost any figure, which is not true of the draped polonaise.

The time has come to think a word in favor of brown. The season is so clearly a blue one that women have been inclined to underestimate the high style interest in brown. During the first showings of the midsummer brown was introduced as something of a surprise, but by that time, women were so hungry for a blue year.

With the interesting brown and white, brown and grey and beige prints, came lovely costumes in which yellow and brown were pleasantly associated.

Brown Still in Picture as Nifty Summer Color

While it is true that navy and black are leaders in spring fashion, it becomes increasingly apparent that brown is to be reckoned with. It is an important color especially in prints, particularly printed crepes.

The brown prints are featured in separate frocks, in jackets and also in long coat ensembles and redingotes, and it's interesting to observe the definite favor combinations of plain and printed crepes, featuring brown shades.

A favorite version is the jacket costume with monotone skirt and printed jacket and bodice. Costumes of this sort are attractive in polka dots, dots and quarter size. Brown with white is then the favored combination.

Straw Cloth Apparel
Straw cloth is a new material that has all the earmarks of novelty with the more stable benefits of practicality. It consists of cotton or woolen on artificial silk.

True Success in Doing One's Best

Arrival, Even at the Top, Not Most Important Thing in Life.

"If this sudden success had come to me at twenty instead of at forty, it would have seemed more important."

Those words of Mrs. Buck, the famous novelist, came back to me the other day in conversation with a woman who yearned for success with something that seemed to me very near a craving, says an internationally famous woman writer.

"If only," she said, "I could put over one thing! I've worked so hard and so long, and it's all good. But nothing just good enough to get me anywhere."

What she wanted to "get" was recognition, success. And at the moment that seemed to her the most important thing in life.

I quoted Mrs. Buck's words as proof of the dwindling importance of success to people who get it, of its place in the perspective of the person who has climbed to the eminence where is found a true sense of values.

It did no good; it never does. And it would not matter, this craving for success on the part of many people who are doing work they love—it might be part of the fun of it all, quite harmless—were it not so distracting. The pity of it is that that thought of where one is going to "get" is a crippling influence, militating against the very powers that should produce one's best work. That is the thought behind endowments for artists—to free them of the necessity of thought of achievement, allowing them unhampered the pure joy of expression.

The way to success is to do one's best without thought of success. The woman who is noted among her friends for making the most delicious cakes, or who bakes the best pie for the church social, will usually turn out to be one who puts her best into the task because she loves it, not in order to do better than her friends and neighbors. And so the artist who paints a great picture, who writes a great book, who composes beautiful music. And when success comes, the substance of real joy in it is found usually to be just the measure of one's own satisfaction with one's work. The more one is deserving of success, the more one is ready for it, the less important will it seem when it comes. In the words of Stevenson:

To travel hopefully is better than to arrive.

And the true success is to labor.

Ontario's Mineral Wealth

The great rock region of northern Ontario, once regarded as almost worthless wilderness, has produced more than $2,000,000,000 in new wealth from the mines since 1907. Up to that year the mineral production of Ontario amounted in value to less than $5,000,000; at the end of 1933 it had reached a total value of $2,014,000,000. The principal contributors to this huge total were gold, $501,000,000; silver, $275,000,000; nickel, $339,000,000; copper, $145,000,000. Other important mineral products of the province include cobalt, arsenic, palladium, platinum, natural gas, petroleum, feldspar, gypsum, quartz, salt, talc, cement and lime.

LOW GRADE FEEDS CAUSE FLOCK LOSS

Access to Fertilized Fields Dangerous Practice.

By R. S. Dearstyne, Head of Poultry Department, North Carolina State College—WNU Service.

Most of the dangers of food poisoning of chickens can be attributed to the use of low grade materials in home-mixed feeds or allowing mash to become damp and decompose.

Feeds mixed from the best materials, particularly ingredients known to be good chicken food, will not poison the birds.

Birds, however, may be poisoned by eating fertilizers or feeds which have come into contact with fertilizers. Hence, a warning is issued against permitting chickens access to freshly fertilized fields or to buildings where fertilizer is stored.

Many causes of high mortality are found in chilling, overfeeding, crowding, poor sanitation, and germ diseases, and not so frequently in poisonous foods as some poultrymen seem to think.

When bothered by a heavy loss of birds, the poultryman should check every possible cause for the high death rate. Then if he cannot determine the cause, he should send several specimens of his flock to the poultry disease laboratory at the state college. With the birds should be a careful description of the trouble and the way he has been managing his flock.

There is little use for a poultryman to send a ready-mixed mash to the state laboratory for testing to see whether it has a detrimental influence on chicks. In the mixture the various elements lose their identity and it would be almost impossible to tell which element, if any, is causing trouble.

The only practical way to test a feed is to give it to chickens for some period of time. This is rather slow, and when done in the laboratory it is also expensive.

Healthy Pulletts Will Be Worth Poultryman's Time

A successful poultryman made the following statement: "The success of a poultryman is determined largely by his ability to grow thrifty, healthy, vigorous, and efficient producing pullets."

If pullets are not thrifty and healthy, says a correspondent in the Wisconsin Agriculturist, the percentage of mortality is going to be high.

Every time a hen dies in a poultry flock she raises the cost of producing a dozen eggs. In some cases the cost per dozen has been as high as 4 to 7 cents from mortality in laying flocks. This cost can only be reduced by producing thrifty, healthy pullets with greater vigor and greater vitality. Clean ground seems to be a very important factor in producing pullets.

If pullets can be grown upon good blue grass sod they will be growing under what seems to be the most desirable conditions.

This is particularly an opportune time for the farmer and poultryman to give thought to a definite plan of range rotation for the growing of his pullets.

Care of Breeding Geese

Geese may lay when one year old but it is seldom that a year-old goose will be a successful breeder, partly because mating is not always successful the first year and the eggs would be infertile in such cases. Geese are better breeders if not overfed or too fat and should have opportunities for exercise. One gander to one goose is the best arrangement and it is advisable to allow the gander to choose his own mate if possible. Two geese, at most, should be the limit. Some geese, after the age of two years will lay enough for two settings and the first dozen should be set under hens, six under each of two "broodies," the geese can be set on the others when she is ready to sit. Ten or 12 eggs are enough to set under a goose. Over that number should be given to another goose or broody hens.

Bumblefoot

Bumblefoot is the result of bruises or other injury to the feet, commonly caused by the birds jumping down from high perches to hard floors or ground. The matter should be let out of the swellings with a sharp knife and antiseptics applied to prevent infection and hasten healing. During treatment the birds should be kept in a pen with clean straw, chaff or other soft litter spread over the floor. Meanwhile lower the roosts or remove stones, sticks or anything that could cause injury.

Mash Feeding

From the time of the first feed to maturity keep the mash mixture constantly before the chicks. Feed in such amounts that it will be possible to give fresh mash twice daily. Provide plenty of feeding space. Use shallow boxes or trays about one and one-half inches deep for the first week, then change to the covered or reel-type troughs which keep chicks out of the feed. After ten weeks the mash should be fed in regular outdoor hop-

ATTENDS MAYTAG MEETING

L. E. Thompson, local Maytag dealer, was in Childress Tuesday where he attended a meeting and banquet for the Maytag dealers and salesmen in this district. He reports that Texas sales of Maytag appliances this year are up 524 per cent over the same period last year.

"The housewife is really getting a new deal in 1934," he reported. "Washing machines are on the bargain counter. Never have prices been so low or quality so high. For instance, Maytag tub aluminum washer, greatly improved over former models, now sell for $65.00 less than 1929 prices."

Clean clothes should no longer be a problem for any family. The new machines actually do a wash in the time it takes to list the clothes as they are sent out and check them over as they are returned. Maytag officials believe 1934 will be the banner year in the industry. Mr. Thompson concluded.

FLAME of the BORDER

A vivid Western tale of romance and border intrigue which will appear in this paper... Do not fail to read it.

VINGIE E. ROE

(Mrs. Raymond C. Lawton), author of this thrilling story which has its setting on the borderline between Arizona and Old Mexico, knows her West from a lifetime spent in that land which still holds much of the romance of the earlier frontier days. She was born in Kansas but has lived at various points in the West and Southwest and now resides at Napa, Calif.

Among the western stories, in addition to "Flame of the Border," which have placed her in the front rank of present-day fiction writers, are "Nameless River," "Primal Lure" and "Heart of Night Wind."

This author has never written a better story than "Flame of the Border." Read it as it is published serially in these columns.

Banks Repaying Loans From R. F. C.

Although banks and trust companies have been the largest borrowers from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, they have exceeded all other classes of borrowers in the rapidity of their repayments. Since the inception of the R. F. C. in February, 1932, loans have been authorized by it to 7,630 banking institutions in the amount of $1,925,000,000. Of this sum $412,000,000 was not taken by the borrowers, the actual advances being $1,553,000,000.

Repayments against these advances through April 30, 1933, aggregated $225,000,000, or about 60 per cent. The ratio of repayments for all classes of borrowers has been only about 37 per cent. These rapid repayments by the banks are taken by competent observers as a strong indication of returning normal financial and banking conditions.

Bankers Finance Scholarships

The American Bankers Association Foundation for Education in Economics has since its establishment in 1928, awarded 354 college loan scholarships, the total loans repaid in that period being $262,000 and the amount now outstanding $86,500. The total investments of its funds are $540,000.
