A Humble Alibi

By BETTA WEBB

ARIA BATES packed the basket slowly, thoughtfully.
Though it was a big basket with curved sides and stout handle, the kind her grandfather had woven from the osiers that grew along the creek side, she had enough things to fill it cram full.

Let's see, the loaves, one of saltrisin' bread, one of raisin cake, must go in so. Then the jar of pickled peaches, the piece of baked ham, the bag of cookies. Now where should she put the apple pie? "Guess it will have to ride on top."

Maria spread a snowy towel over the packed basket, tucking in the edges neatly. When the Dibbles saw that basket they'd be glad she'd come.

Maria pinned on her black hat with its cluster of purple pansies, poked a wisp of graying hair behind her ear and examined her visage in the glass to see if it bore a smudge.

It was a wholesome face, strong, rosy, with dark eyes behind gold-bowed spectacles, a kind, sincere face such as dogs and children trust instinctively. Owners of such faces should have extensive means but seldom do have. Maria's little hoard, like the milk in Baucis' pitcher, seemed forever to yield supply to those who needed it.

Folks called her a good woman. She retorted that good women of her sort were common as rain,

It was a long way to the weatherbeaten shanty on the hill where the Dibbles lived.

Mrs. Dibble had just had a new baby, and there were twins besides.

Mr. Dibble was a little shiftless, but the whole family, according to Maria, were just poor bodies who needed a boost now and then in order to keep them going. The kiddles weren't to blame if their papa wasn't ambitious; little tummies got awful gnawings in them sometimes. She knew how that went, she'd raised five boys and girls herself, all married and gone now. Every week or so she got an urgent letter begging her to come and make her home with Edna or Luise or Bess or Tom or Harry as the case might be. But she had lived all her life in the white house under the elms, she had gone there a bride of seventeen. Henry had died there, her children had all been born there. And she wasn't going to get so far away from Henry's grave that she couldn't lay a handful of posles on it any time she wanted to.

Maria found when she got out upon the road that the wind was blowing a gale.

She might have known that the ring around the moon last night meant a soaked, to say nothing of herself.

The baskerful of goodies would be soaked, to say nothing of herself.

There wasn't a roof in sight. Nothing but a great elm tree. She got under it, but the branches tossed about so that they gave little protection from the downpour. It was too far to go back home. But the bus ought to be pelting along just about now, that is, if Bill Hoyt had been able to get it repaired. It had broken down last night. Still, if Bill didn't have the bus he'd have a closed car of some kind. He never missed a trip rain or shine.

He never missed a trip, rain or shine.

A car was approaching. Maria couldn't see much more than that because the rain blurred everything and her spectacles were fogged up besides. But she was sure it was Bill driving a conveyance of some kind.

Maria stepped out and held up her

For a panicky second she thought the car was going on by and so she shouted: "Hey, you Bill! Don't you dare leave me here in the rain!"

The car did stop then. The door opened. Maria hastened to get inside. She was surprised to find how cozy the car was. The cushions were soft and velvety and there was a whiff of perfume. The perfume came from a young woman who sat opposite the place where Maria had established herself. The girl gave Maria a stare out of her blue eyes, then turned her head toward the window.

"Bill certainly totes elegant passengers," Maria thought. Aloud she said cheerfully: "It's raining cats and dogs, isn't it? I don't know when I've ever been caught out like this before. Lucky Bill came by just as he did." She was still sure it was Bill, although she couldn't see exactly on account of there being a glass partition between his seat and hers,

"I wonder where Bill got this car anyway?" she mused. "Usually when the old bus balks he uses Jim Watson's jitney. This conveyance looks like it had seen better days."

The girl opposite spoke icily: "A Rolls-Royce knows no age."

A Bolls-Royce! Maria's heart gave a bounce. There was only one Rolls-Royce in all the community, and it belonged to the Gordons, who came each summer to their cottage on Highmount. She laughed shakily.

"Good land! I don't see how I ever came to be riding in a Rolls-Royce!" The girl shrugged her shoulders as if to say: "Neither do L"

Maria was feeling most uncomfortable about it all when the car gave a jolt that nearly sent the girl into her lap. She screamed into the speaking-tube: "William! What are you doing?"

The chauffeur answered: "Detour, madame." It was a dreadful detour. Maria knew where it led to, out onto the flat, up a steep winding hill, through a deep hollow and over the treacherous creek. The car creaked and bounded. Amy Gordon clutched at everything, even Maria, who sat firm, her basket clamped between her large feet.

In the hollow the heavy car sank into mud so deep that only a team of horses could pull them out. Blacker and louder roared the storm. Maria tried to cheer her terrified companion.

"Makes me think of Johnny Tuttle," she said. "Johnny and his granddad worked all day with their team of horses pulling cars out of the mud-hole in front of their house. 'You must sleep like a top at night seeing you're so busy all day,' somebody said to Johnny. 'I don't get a wink of sleep,' says Johnny. 'That's when granddad and I draw the water to make the mud-hole,'"

Mrs. Gordon got an idea. "You'll have to find help, William!" she commanded through the speaking tube. William put on his slicker and got out of the car.

"Now isn't that a pity?" Maria thought watching him as his polished puttees sank into the muck at every step. He vanished and the two women

Half an hour, an hour, two hours passed. Maria was uneasy. If the boy had crossed the creek, he might not come back at all. By this time the frail temporary bridge ha's probably

For Mrs. Gordon the suspense was really terrible. Suddenly she burst into tears. Maria reached over and patted her knee. After all she was young, about the age of Bessie, Maria's granddaughter—"Though Eessie wouldn't ever act up like that."

been swept away by the rising flood.

"You don't understand," sobbed the girl. "I promised my husband I would be home at a certain time. He will be terribly angry. We haven't been getting along well together just lately. He objects to my friend Mrs. Thorne. He thinks Mrs. Thorne hasn't a good influence over me. But I haven't been near Mrs. Thorne, just to town to do a bit of shopping. I promised to be right back. George is the kind who won't believe a storm could delay me. He never lets storms or anything else prevent him from keeping an appointment. He's always so punctual-" There were further confidences of the same kind, for Mrs. Gordon being very young, had to have sympathy and Maria gave it.

It was going into the third hour when William returned. He had walked for miles, he explained, trying to find a team. The team was following close behind.

Once across the creek where the bridge still held firm Maria asked William to stop and let her out. The rain was letting up and she now hadn't far to go. Mrs. Gordon caught Maria's hand and pressed something into it. "I'm sure you know somebody who needs this," she said.

It was a fifty-dollar bill.
"I guess I do know somebody who Maria was out of the car when she thought of something. Snatching the apple-pie from the basket she placed it in Mrs. Gordon's lap. "Take that to Maria Bates sent it to him."

Mrs. Gordon laughed. "My alibi!"
she cried.

Maria certainly had a fistful of good cheer to take to the Dibbles, as she told herself.

A few days later the Rolls-Royce stopped at Maria's door. Out of it stepped a radiant young woman. She was followed by a fine looking man. The Gordons had come to make Maria a friendly call.

"That apple pie took me clear back to my boyhood days," declared Gordon. "Lucille, you must get Mrs. Bates to give you her recipe for apple pie."

Women of East Rejoice

in Recent Independence

In the Orient it's still a man's world—by western standards. But if the eastern woman's status is measured by the yardstick of her own past, it becomes plain that feminism has had brilliant victories in China and Japan. The woman of the Orient is no longer simply the slave of men; she is on the road to being an independent human being, notes a writer in the Chicago Tribune.

To Japanese women the right to have obs and the right to marry whom they please are exciting new liberties. Nearly half a million Nipponese women have left their homes to work in textile mills alone. The wage is small, but it at least makes them self-sufficlent. Half a million more women are in other forms of industry. They are street car and bus conductors, "dime a dance" girls, saleswomen, stokers on the ships at Nagasakl, laborers in the rice fields. And because they are economically free, Japanese girls are now also free to marry whom they please, shattering the century-old tradition of the "arranged" match.

The doors to politics are still tight shut against them, however. Until 1931 there was a movement, warmly supported by the Minselto, the more liberal of the two great political parties, to give Japanese women a modified form of suffrage. But it has been lost in the mighty surge of nationalism and imperialism that followed Japan's conquest of Manchuria. Now Genji Matsuda, leader of the Minseito, says: "Japanese women should stay at home and look after domestic affairs. It is out of the question to give them the vote. Women are simply hideous these days. They get their hair bobbed, and many even bleach it and look like for-

STARS AND STRIPES FOREVER

IN NAPLES, ITALY, in 1896, John Philip Sousa read a three-day-old copy of the Paris edition of the New York Heraid. In it was a brief dispatch saying that David Binkely, manager of Sousa's famous band, had dropped dead in his office. That meant that the bandmaster must assume all the responsibility for the arrangements of his next American tour.

Hastily cancelling the plans that he and Mrs. Sousa had made for a visit to Sicily, he booked passage on the first ship for America. As he paced the deck of the S. S. Teutonic, saddened by the news of Blakely's death and his mind filled with the burden of the task ahead, an uncanny thing happened.

Sousa became aware of the rhythmic beat of a playing band—just an imaginary band that was making music in his mind. Throughout the voyage across the Atlantic, that invisible band kept on playing, playing. Never for a moment was it silent and it always played the same 'une! He tried to think of other things but the theme of the melody echoed and re-echoed in the back of his brain. Psychologists today might claim that this was "compensation" . . . the reaction of a creative mind after a severe shock.

But whatever the reason for it, Sousa made no attempt to set the tune on paper while he was aboard the steamer. When he reached New York and found that mystical band still playing on and on, he could resist it no longer. He sat down and in a few minutes had recorded the all-too-familiar measures of that composition. In his spirited autobiography, "Marching Along," Sousa has written the fact that not a note of that tune has been changed from that day to this. It was the "Stars and Stripes Forever," known all over the world today and the most beloved of all the compositions of the "March King."

PIGS IS PIGS

"PIGS is pigs" and they're also trouble-makers. No less than twice did they seriously affect the diplomatic relations of nations and once they almost brought on a war.

In 1841, Monsleur de Saligny was French ambassador to the Republic of Texas. One day, a pig belonging to an Austin hotel keeper named Bullock, strayed into M. de Saligny's garden. One of the ambassador's servants abused the pig. Whereupon Bullock proceeded to horsewhip the servant.

proceeded to horsewhip the servant.

De Saligny insulted Bullock and Bullock insulted de Saligny with the result that the ambassador demanded his passports and left the country. Diplomatic relations between France and Texas became strained and it required an apology from President Lamar of the Lone Star Republic to restore peace.

More serious was the pig incident that troubled the peace between England and the United States a few years later. On one of the tiny San Juan islands in Puget Sound lived an American and an Englishman. One day the Briton shot one of the American's pigs and a furious quarrel resulted. But they finally agreed to settle it in court.

But which court—British or American? Despite the treaty of 1846, boundary lines were none too clear, especially on this little island. So the dispute grew worse over the matter of jurisdiction. Civil officers were drawn into it, then the military. Troops were mobilized and it looked like war. By this time the pig was forgotten in a controversy involving citizenship, boundary lines and international law.

Eventually it was settled by arbitration—with no less a person than the. German emperor acting as arbiter in a dispute that started over a pig!

"HE SHOT AN ARROW-"

THE capture of 'ne important Spanish fortress of San Lorenzo by Sir Henry Morgan, the famous English buccaneer, was not due to his expert generalship as much as it was to a strange chain of circumstances over which he had no control.

In his command were a number of pirates who had fought well for the cause. One day, during the siege of the fortress one of these men was pierced in the side by an arrow. The cutthroat pulled it from his flesh vowing to send it back to the Spaniards as fast as he could. He had no bow but, in his anger, he used the one weapon be had . . . his musket.

Wasding cotton around the end of the arrow, he crammed it into the barrel of his gun, took aim and fired. The missile went sailing over the fortress wall and was lost from view. It was merely a gesture of revenge. No one dreamed of the consequences.

But the cotton was kindled by the powder which in turn set fire to the thatched roof of a building inside the fortress. The Spaniards were frantically trying to get the flames under control when the creeping fire reached the powder magazines. They exploded, bursting part of the walls, and Morgan rushed in to capture the stronghold.

We are in A New Automobile Era!

Cars built since 1931 have twice the power and speed of ten years ago!

Continental offers you better lubrication for modern cars -an *Alloyed Oil with twice the film strength of other oils!

* Alloyed by the Patented Germ Process

Just as the metallurgist adds small amounts of other metals to make special alloy steels, so we add small quantities of concentrated oily essence to highly-refined, raffin-base motor oil. This Germ Processing, discovered scientists, gives Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil lubricating qualities no other oil has.

TT'S hard to realize how improved cars of the '30s are over those we drove ten years ago. We are in a new automobile era! Power and speed have almost doubled in a decade, with little increase in motor size.

Increased power has brought enormous increases in bearing pressures and crankcase temperatures. In making motor parts that will stand up under these severe conditions, car manufacturers have turned to new alloy metals of extra strength and durability. For the same reason, you must have oil with enough extra oiliness and film strength to protect your motor under extreme pressures!

Yet motor oils generally have no more oiliness and film strength now than they had ten years ago. New refining methods have recently come into use to make oils free from carbon and sludge. But these new refining processes have actually lowered instead of increased oiliness and film strength!

There is one exception-Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil. It, too, is free from carbon and sludge troubles, as its users know after millions of trouble-free miles of driving. But more important, Timken machine tests prove that the new Germ Process* puts into this oil 2 to 4 times the film strength of any straight mineral oil! That extra film strength protects your motor under the most extreme pressures and neat.

Germ Processing gives other valuable advantages. Because Germ Processed Oil penetrates and combines with metal surfaces, a "Hidden Quart" stays up in your motor and cuts down starting wear. Germ Processed Oil gives longer mileage with greater motor protection, as proved by the famous Indianapolis Destruction Test.

Plain mineral oils were all right ten years ago-today they are becoming obsolete. Say "O.K .- Drain"-fill with Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil and drive with the comfortable assurance that your oil meets your motor's

Foreign Lotteries Are Put Under Ban

Postal Department Renews Drive on Swindles.

Washington.-The federal government is strengthening its barriers against sweepstakes and other foreign lotteries. Customs inspection is being strengthened at borders and other ports of entry, and a series of nets has been woven to enmesh ticket counterfolls shipped back to foreign agents. Seizeres have increased rapidly in recent

Forty thousand sweepstakes tickets were confiscated recently by federal agents in post offices in Boston and Philadelphia. Three trunkfuls were seized in an express office in Buffalo. Quantities ranging from single tickets brought in by individual foreign travelers to hundreds of books of the flimseys smuggled across the Canadian border are being taken almost daily by customs officers. Mail sacks full of tickets and counterfolls seized in post offices all over the country are being shoveled more frequently now than formerly into the big furnace in the basement of the dead letter office at Wash-

Growth of Traffic.

Traffic in foreign lotteries has grown enormously in the United States in the last four years. The annual loss to the American people is estimated at more than $10,000,000. No estimate is available of the additional millions lost through the purchase of counterfelt tickets, but single seizures by the government have involved more than $500,-000 worth of such "phonies." Investigation of a Cuban lottery whose agents were reported to have sold 3,000,000 tickets in the United States revealed only 100,000 tickets entered in the drawing.

Operators of the Irish sweepstakes have boasted that they take $1,000,000 net profit out of the United States on a single lottery. This figure was greatly exceded last year, when more than 2,000,000 tickets at $2.50 each were sold in this country on the Cambridgeshire lottery operated by the Irish Free State. Of the 2,000,000 buyers there were less than 1,000 winners. For every winner there were more than 2,000 losers, and all who held counterfelts lost.

There are three Irish sweeps a year, based upon the running of the English derby at Epsom Downs, the Cambridgeshire at Newmarket and the Grand National at Aintree. Other big lotteries for which tickets are sold in the United States are the French National, Cuban National, Mexican National and the Canadian Army and Navy lottery. The government recently confiscated tickets on a lottery in Morocco.

Warnings to Post Offices.

Lists of names of foreign sweepstakes and other lottery ticket sellers against whom fraud orders have been issued by the government are sent each month to 15,000 post offices. Special complications of names and addresses go to twenty-four postal exchange stations through which all mail for Canada, Cuba, Irish Free State, France and Luxembourg must clear. No money orders can be drawn to these persons, and all mail addressed to them must be returned to senders. More than 750 orders have been issued since last August.

Since many persons are not willing o claim the returned letters and thereby admit complicity in a lottery, in violation of the United States penal code, the cash contents often go into the United States treasury and the counterfolls are Coming in by mail, the tickets run a gauntlet of watchful postal agents, adept at detecting fraudulent material, no matter how skillfully it may be concealed in rolled newspapers, books, clothing and first-class mail matter.

Patience in its finest form is an ele ment of loving devotion whereby others are helped at the price of personal comfort. Or it is a marvelous means to an end which is worthy. Patience of these types is selfless.

Patience which is akin to will power, is another beautiful type. It is true that to exercise patience often re quires a profound self-control, but it is when it has the working energy of force in business and home management that it is being used wisely. The statement "Everything comes to him who waits," is futile unless it is a working patience. It must be the kind which has actual power to aid in bringing about the desired end. How this is done cannot be stated with precision, but it is reminiscent of the other truth that "Faith without works is

The Lucky Lawrences

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

SYNOPSIS

The luck that had brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000.acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. The death of their father forced the three eldest children to work so that Sam and little Ariel might continue their education. Phil, now twenty-five, had gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store. Seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem, and Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchlson, scion of a wealthy family, returns from acserted her. Young van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's best friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Van continues his social attentions to Gail.

CHAPTER III-Continued

"I thought it was the limit!" said the usually elegant Edith.

"It didn't seem to be." "I wonder if you'd know the limit if you saw it, Gail," the younger sister said, with a sophisticated, fond smile.

"Oh, Edith, get off your foot!" Gail wanted to say. But she could not be mean to Edith tonight, when Edith had finished up the dishes, and stayed at home. So she smiled, too, and went on with her undressing. Her mood began to change; everything was all right.

"How long was I'hil gone?" "Ob, not long. 'Bout an hour."

"He didn't-" Gail paused. "No, he didn't have time to see anybody.

I don't believe he's so crazy about Lily Cass," Edith opined. "He and Dick had to go over to the Iron Works, didn't they?"

"Yes. And, by the way, Dick's sleeping here, because he and Phil want to get up at five and go over and see an installation-or somethingat Milpitas. They're going in Dick's car.'

"Dick's car! Since when has he-"Isn't it killing! It's quite decentlooking, too. You know old Benstein, of the second-hand place down near

"I know the place. Yes, and I kind of know the olo man, too.

"Well, two cars collided out on the highway near there about three months ago, it seems, and old Benstein bought them-they were wrecks-for about fifteen dollars aplece. So he sent for Dick, it seems, and told him if be'd put the touring car in order he could have the roadster. Dick did Benstein's first, and he's been puttering over his own for about six weeks. So last night he drove it in from Stanislaus, and put it in Joe Foster's garage. and Joe looked it over, and he says it's perfect, and he offered Dick two hundred dollars for it."

"Dick's so darn admirable," Gail said indifferently, opening her book, "that you expect him to break out rail splitting 'most any minute! I can just see him sweating over politics some day, and being on the losing side every time! 'Honest Dick Stebbins for governor!" But I like old Dick!"

"Oh, so do I," the younger sister agreed eagerly.

She went away, and Gail lay musing, ber open book in her hands. The meroory of her parting with Van, in the deep black night gloom at the gate, kept returning to buzz about her like a midge, and spoil all the other recol-

She put out her light, but her thoughts milled and milled unceasingly. What had happened to the gay, companionable mood of the earlier eve ning? What had made the parting so labored, so artificial?

"Why is it," Gail asked herself savagely, "that I can get along so beautifully with girls, and act like such a fool with boys? If he'd been a girl, tonight, I would have gone on talking, laughing, putting off coming into the house. I would have kept saying, 'Listen. I have to go in.'

"Oh, well, what difference does it make! We'll all be dead in a hundred years!"

baffled and dissatisfied after this mar-velous day on which the dream had come true.

The next day she and Edith had real trouble to think about and to discuss as they walked to work.

In the first place, Sam had told them at breakfast that he, Sam, had been driving some boy's car without a license and had been fined fifteen dollars by Judge Gates.

"Oh, Phil paid it," Sam had said in his confident, little-brotherly manner, "How could Phil pay it?"

"Oh, he worked overtime all last month, you know. He had something coming to him."

"You oughtn't to have done it, Sam You're such a fool!" the older sister had said reproachfully, affectionately, She repeated the phrase to Phil, when he came in late to report his expedition with Dick,

Edith had felt every fiber of her being stiffen; Gail's hands had begun to tremble as she had said pleasantly, confusedly:

"Well, of course-if she'd like it, Phil."

"Why shouldn't she like it?" Phil had asked in a level, challenging voice, "No reason why! Except-hasn't she rather young children?" "Yep. She has three kids." Phil had been refilling his coffee cup. "I don't think she'd come!" Gail had said, uncomfortable but determined. "You might try!" Phil's voice had been level, composed. He had returned to his newspaper with no further reference to the subject. His sisters, in utter consternation, had spoken since of little else. "She's simply mesmerized him, that's all! It's just too horrible!" "Gail, we couldn't ask her to the house! "I don't think we could."

They parted on the dublous note, deeply worried, as they had been worried so many, many times before about Sam Ariel, Phil in turn, about frmils finances, social complications. "Just when I was-sort of-looking forward to Sunday-night suppers." Gail offered in parting, when they came to the Calle. "Yes, I know!" Edith answered quickly. "What on earth can we do. Edith. if Phil says anything more?"

'Well, have her, I suppose!" "But she's simply-she's simply not pectable!"

"I know." "I mean, everyone knows what those Wibsers are, and the Cass boys are just gangsters!"

"I know," Edith conceded again anx They went their ways. Gail's thoughts went to Van, however, at intervals during that day and the next day. She began the girl's calendar: "It's only one full day since I saw him-it's only two full days-it's only the morning of the third day."

CHAPTER IV

It began to seem like a dream to her that he and she had been laughing over the library counter last Saturday night, and that he had come to supper with the Lawrences, and that she had gone down the highway, beyond Dumbarton bridge, to Old Aunt Mary's for a late supper and dancing.

Edith asked, delicately, lightly, if there had been any telephoning, dur-ing the day, and Gall became expert in careless replies.

And then quietly, indifferently, "Oh. yes! Van Murchison was in. It seems Mrs. Chipp is having a house party down at their Lace in the Santa Cruz ountains a week from this week-end. and she wants me to go!"

"What!" Edith ejaculated, incred-"Oh, Gall, aren't you excited?" Gail laughed a little protestingly. "But yes I am," she admitted non estly, "terribly excited! But of course they only want me because Van does. He probably asked his aunt to ask me! "Oh, for heaven's sake!" Ariel said impatiently and unexpectedly, in her husky tones. "For heaven's sake, what would you want her to ask you forbecause mamma was a church member? You know very well you're not an intimate friend of hers. Why should she ask you? I'd much rather go a place because a boy wanted me than because his mother did!"

And laughing helplessly and a little shocked, Edith and Gall admitted that

An instant chill. Then Gall said casually, "Neither, my dear. She sent a message by Van." There was a silence. Edith stood distressed and disappointed in the center of the kitchen; Ariel looked up alertly from her book. Gail went on busily with her cooking. "Well, she will write?" began Edith, on an upward inflection "She may!" Gail agreed indifferently. "Well, you won't think of accepting unless she does write, Gail?" Edith rsisted unhappily.

"My dear Edith, we are living in the Twentieth century, not in the good old days of Pamela and Evelina." "Well, I'm very much surprised at you!" Edith said, trembling. Dinner was served in a sulphurous silence. Phil, hungry, grimy, and tired, noted at once that something was wrong, and his first question brought the whole thing down upon him in an avalanche Gail was flushed and angry. Edith reasonable and cool. They talked at once, and Phil frowned faintly, smiled faintly, as he looked from one face to another

"Phil, isn't it ridiculous in this day and generation to expect a person to send you an engraved invitation-" "I didn't say an engraved invita-

"Because, I mean, everything's done so informally now, and people telephone invitations to weddings!"

"No. but listen, Phil! We've always held up our heads, and been known as girls who weren't cheap, who wouldn't jazz-haven't we, Phil? It's all we have -it's us." Edith, her eyes suddenly wet with tears, went on shakily.

Philip had champloned Gail all her life, and she adored him as her unfailing authority. It was therefore like a blow in her face to have him say. judicially, over his pipe:

"I'm not so sure but what Ede's right, Gail. You aren't sure that Van Murchison-he's an awfully nice kid, and he's most amusing and all that, and he means well enough-but you aren't sure that this kid ever spoke to his aunt at all. How do you know-" "Oh, listen, listen!" Gail said, managing a laugh, but inwardly seething with fury. "He didn't ask me to go to China! He asked me to go for two nights to Los Gatos-and I'm going! That's all there is to it!" There was a full minute of dead silence during which her angry voice hung in the air. Then Ariel expelled long, sighing breath, and Phil shrugged philosophically. "You're of age," he said briefly. Nothing more. The girls, as they cleared the table, avoided each other's eyes and presently began to talk lifelessly of other things. Phil went out without another glance or words for his favorite sister. When Gail and Ariel chanced to be for a minute alone in the kitchen, Ariel seized the opportunity to say eagerly: "Stick it out, Gail! If every one felt the way Edith does, no one would have any fun at all! We'd all be old Ariel's sympathy was very sweet.

But it did not have the value of Edith's approval. On the contrary, there was something disturbing in this suggestion of a general mutiny against the Lawrence way of doing things. Ariel had arranged with a boy friend that he should call her on the telephone at eight o'clock, and she should answer his call with a pleasant, dutiful "Oh, yes, Miss Hemmet?" Miss Hemmet was her mathematics teacher. She would then say to Gail, "Gail, I'm going over to Miss Hemmett's, and then I'm going to meet the crowd at the corner and go down to Sticky Dobbins' for some ice cream, I asked Phil, and he said. 'All right.'"

It was a risky game she was playing. but after all it was a game. Edith was playing no game at all, and Gail was demonstrating more forcefully every instant how little she knew of the rules. Better anything than to spend one's evening darning the fraternal socks, as Edith was placfdly preparing to do, or patiently to settle down to helping Sam with his correspondence school aviation work, like Gail.

The telephone rang. "Take it, freshman!" Gali said to her younger sister. But Ariel needed no prompting; she was already halfway to the hall. "Oh, thank you, Miss Hemmet, I will!" her sisters heard her say. She came back to her work with her transparent skin exquisitely flushed, and her strange eyes alight. "Gail, Miss Hemmet wants me to come over. And Phil sald we could go to Dobbins' afterward."

"Oh, that's all right, Go ahead!" Gail said absently. Ariel faded from sight silently, was gone. Later Lick Stebbins looked in at the kitchen door.

"Peanuts, anybody?"

"I'hil's gone," Gail said, "I'll follow him up." But Dick came in instead. Gail noiselessly escaped into the dining room and secured her little playing cards. She came back to the kitchen table and began to play. Edith matched socks thoughtfully,

Let Our Motto Be GOOD HEALTH BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD

fessor of Bacteriology and Prevent Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

We hear so many people speak of high blood pressure as if it were disease that perhaps it would be well to state that high blood pressure is not a disease People do not die of high blood pressure. But high blood pressure is a symptom that something is wrong with the health of the body. The blood circulates within a closed system of vessels in the body. The heart is the central pumping mechanism. The large outbound vessels from the heart are called arteries. These gradually become smaller in diameter the farther they get away from the heart, until they finally end in small thread-like capillaries. There are many undreds of these capillaries branching off like the limbs of a tree from the small arteries in the skin, muscles and organs. The capillaries are the distributing agents. As the blood in the large arteries leading from the pumping station, the heart, is under considerable pressure in order to insure a proper distribution of blood, the walls of the arteries must be able to bear the load. So the larger the artery, the heavier is

After the blood passes through the capillaries it returns to the heart through the veins. These veins begin as very small vessels close to the capillarles and increase gradually in size as they approach the heart. But the walls of the veins are never as thick as those of the arteries, for the blood is not under very much pressure in the venous system. The volume or amount of blood in the body remains relatively constant. The absorption of water and other fields and the excretion by the kidneys and the sweat glands maintain a constant blood volume or balance. In case of high blood pressure, the capacity of the vascular system is usually decreased. Hence the pressure increases because the volume of blood remains constant. The capacity of the vascular system decreases in most instances because the arteries become hardened and hence cannot dilate and increase in size with each heart beat, as they should. This inability to dilate and increase in size normally is called arterio-sclerosis or aging of the arteries.

Certain forms of heart disease also play a part in high blood pressure. High blood pressure in older adults is due many times to injuries of the heart and the kidney during childhood or adolescence, caused by some infectious disease. The primary damage is done at that time and the gradual development of scar tissue finally uses up all the reserve power of either the heart or the kidney and an elevation in blood pressure is manifested in later life, The important factors to determine in high blood pressure then are (1) the state of the arteries, (2) the size and efficiency of the heart, (3) the state of the kidneys. The fact that one has high blood pressure is usually brought out as the result of a physical examination made by a physician, and the control of it, after it has developed, necessitates frequent medical examination and intelligent co-operation with the physician. Other factors than the state of the blood vessels, the heart and the kidneys may be

The best time to begin treatment for high blood pressure is the time when it starts to rise. Everyone of course has momentary rises in blood pressure due to anger, strenuous exercise, or worry, but if these periods last only a short time, they are unimportant from a health standpoint, But if the blood pressure is elevated above the normal for any length of time, it is important to know whether this increased pressure will remain stationary, or whether it will become progressively higher. Then health habits can be corrected. Apoplexy, bright's disease, and heart failure are usually the terminal conditions in persons with sustained high blood pressure,

The individual with high blood pressure, after determining the cause and following the physician's direction, should guard against strenuous physical exercise as much as possible.

Strong contractions of the muscles of the arms and legs always increases blood pressure by decreasing the volume of blood in the muscles while they are contracted, and hence there is rapidly increasing blood pressure for a short time. This may be disastrous to an individual with high blood pressure. Worry and overwork, sleeplessness and physical exhaustion, will also increase the blood pressure above the normal, and should be guarded against. Low blood pressure is usually as important a danger signal for the older individual as high blood pressure. Low blood pressure in many instances is due to a decrease in the efficiency of the heart muscle. There is decreased pumping force of the heart and hence lessened pressure within the arterial

Laxative So Many Like

Old folks, young folks—thousands of them say they prefer Thedford's Black-Draught when they need a laxative. It does its work so well. "I have used Thedford's Black-Draught in my family since 1885." writes Mr. Henson Temple, Smithdale, Miss. "We do not feel like we could keep house without Black-Draught. We are quite a good ways from town, and a good, simple medicine, like Black-Draught, is good to have on hand. All these years I have never changed because it gave satisfaction." # Gay, Crisp Taffeta Trims New Gowns are now treading lead to taffeta. The furore and excitement over this crisp, sprightly and youthful silk is keeping up at such a maddening pace, those who launch the new fashions are almost talking taffeta in their sleep while during their waking hours they are voicing a spring-song of taffeta which is reaching to every style center far and near.

And such taffetas! . Taffetas which baffle description so persuasively lovely and dramatically chic are they. Printed, plain, metal-interwoven, plaided, striped-just say taffeta and the salesperson will show you such a versatile assortment as to almost bewil-

According to the new style program taffeta is as smart for dresses, daytime or evening, it matters not which, as it is for suits, wraps and ensembles. It is equally as important used in a trimming way and for hats, big bows and accessories of every description.

The latest news about taffeta is the little separate jacket of this pert swishy silk which may be worn with your spring frock of light woolen or crepe or "what have you." It may be quilted or plain and it may be in black, navy or other dark street color with prospects of pastel shades later on in Demonstrating taffeta in a trimming way, the three costumes pictured tell a fascinating story of what's what to wear this spring. Of course the upand-going dress to the left in the group is navy, for navy blue outranks even black in importance according to re-fastening adds an intriguing touch. The dress going arm-in-arm with the afore-described may be considered in terms of either black or navy. The deep cape collar is in taffeta in the same color accurately matched so as to carry out a perfected monotone. The huge animated taffeta bow interprets a fashion which is all-prevailing this Comes next in the picture to complete the group a stunning suave, sleek and slim-of-cut two-piece tailleur fashloned of a novelty weave woolen in a rich-toned green. The decorative bow is of gold-striped taffeta with the same color combination repeated in the square buttons. Note the fashionable breton sailor which tops this smartly costumed woman's carefully coiffed head. If you are asking about the millinery outlook there is much could be said in regard to the race for supremacy which is now going on between sailors of varied type and quaint pic-turesque "way-back-when" looking bonnets to which add a third competitorthe very new brims which lurch toward the front narrowing at the thoroughly modernistic in their streamline movement.

KID BOOTEES TRIP ONTO SHOE MARKET

You should see the new kid bootees that have just tripped onto the shoe market.

A revolution in footwear, is the way most people feel about them. Cecil's little black kid ones already are a success. The effect is achieved by eight straps that lace across the instep until close under the ankle bone. This particular bootee lunched at the Crillon and Madame was wearing at the same time a belted three-quarter coat, whose high neck and accompanying lofty Russian toque obviously demanded the bootee touch.

Cecil has another bootee deserving mention. It is of black kidskin with patent leather lacing at the outside.

Tailored Styles Will Be

Popular for Spring Wear As a fashion foreword to spring, a prominent stylist says that women are asking for models that have a minimum of fancy trimming and a maximum of tailoring. With these requirements in mind, this authority believes in Interpreting Regency and Emptre themes to spring sportswear.

He refers to Empire skirts being cut very high, a good three inches higher for spring than this winter. Swallow tail jackets as novelties, vests, loads of them in all different colors, in patterned silk or in plain pique, wing lanels faced in contrast fabric-these are some of the Regency developments which he believes in borrowing, developments taken from the masculine phase of the Regency period and as-similated in sports fashions minus the decorative trimming of this period.

New Blouses Blouses with very feminine lines and flattering fullness in medium pastels, rose tones and beige are going to be seen worn with spring suits of the "dressmaker" sort. Chiffon blouses will soon replace the more opaque

"GOOD READING" MATTER FOR THE CHILD TO DECIDE

Supported by The Parents' Magazine, which prints the charge that may influence adult thought in regard to juvenile reading. Josette Frank accuses the nation's fathers an opportunity to remark on her con and mothers of impoverishing their children's literary diet-letting them starve in the midst of plenty.

"Mother does not always know best, and no book is a good book for a child if it fails to interest emphatically declares Miss Frank, her conviction born of experience in the Child Study association.

"There is ample reason for doubting parental infallibility on this point when we realize how often parents have changed their minds as to what is and what is not good reading for children," says this authority, recalling that it is not so long ago parents regarded storybooks with suspicion; then grudgingly approved painfully pure tales and only lately countenanced literature which addresses children as reasoning people. "There are no best books for children, only best books for the particular child. What is real meat to the girl of twelve may be 'applesauce' to the boy of the same age. Nor is there a law of heredity that makes children like what their parents liked before them. Our Jane may find 'Little Women' boring or 'Gulliver's Travels' dull."

Like the horse in the old adage, evidently one may lead a child to a good book but cannot make him read it. This being the truth, however much it may hurt. Miss Frank sanely concludes that about all parents can do is to make available to their children the best there is in the world to read and let nature take its course.

Avoirdupois in Demand

Current prices for wives in Cyprus, Mediterranean isle owned by Britain, range from $100 for a slim wench, to $500 for a buxom girl with plenty of curves. The buying and selling of girls for marriage is, of course, legal. The girls are the daughters of Turkish parents, who sell them to the highest bidders, usually Arabs from Palestine. A document has to be drawn up and stamped, and duty is paid. In the case of divorce, full recompense must be given; but in virtually every case the girls are contented .- Grit.

Commenting on these oldtime rules of politeness, a modern woman writer caustically remarks:

"The prize, by honest vote, would go, I think, to this one: 'Neither must you flatter your companions by remarks on their beauty, dress or any slight accomplishment, in order to in-crease their vanity'! Today's 'wellbred young lady' would regard it as better 'manners' to never overlook panions' beauty or charm-and wherever possible within the bounds of conscience to say something pleas ing and heart-warming to those whose hand she touches in this fleeting journey on which we are for a short time together.
