HEDLEY P. T. A.

The Parent Teacher Association met Thursday night, Nov. 7 in the high school auditorium. Mrs. Bridges presided in the absence of Mrs. Kendall.

S. J. Lovel spoke on P. T. A. work in Texas as the out of town speaker could not be present. He outlined the history of the organization in an interesting story, enumerated its accomplishments, and pointed out to us the things yet undone. Among the things he brought to our thinking were that P. T. A. should intensify and disperse home influence, give a more noble reason for education and encourage a desire for study in a wholesome moral atmosphere. Those who missed his discussion failed to hear one of our most inspirational talks.

In the business meeting, P. T. A. voted to have a contest among all the grades for a membership drive. A reward will be given to the grade which turns in the most money. Help your child and his grade by paying him your dues.

The body discussed plans for a Father and Son Banquet, but left the definite plans to be made at a future meeting.

The Seventh Grade received the flag for this month.

We invite cordially every interested patron of the school to attend these meetings as there is always something worth while. The next one will be November 21, at 7:30, in the high school auditorium.

Another shipment of pawn brokers suits and overcoats to arrive at Kendall's this week. They are priced right, also some new calf skin jackets have arrived for your inspection.

H. E. McClain

That big commotion that occurred in Battle Alley the other morning, turned out to be nothing more serious than an angry wife beating her husband for looking so slovenly when he could buy a good suit, hat or overcoat at Kendall's so cheap.

COTTON GINNED

Up to Wednesday noon, the three Hedley gins had ginned a total of 967 bales.

J. N. Kendall, who is with Uncle Sam's Navy, located at San Pedro, California, is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kendall, and meeting his old Hedley friends this week. It has been nearly 5 years since he left Hedley. He has a 30 day furlough and will return to his work again about Dec. 5th.

The Press— Guardian of Liberty

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Steadily the dark stain of censorship is spreading over the newspapers of Europe.

What is the result? The headlines tell. Let's see what dispatches from the nations that have shackled their Press describe:

War—imperialistic war... religious intolerance... the red blight of Communism!

In each of those nations the Press is in chains. In each of them free speech and free presentation of the news is forbidden. The papers print, and the people read, only what a dictator permits.

That's how despotism is created and preserved. That's why Napoleon admitted that if he allowed freedom of the Press his power could not last six weeks. That's why the autocrats of Europe have hand-cuffed their nation's newspapers.

Such things aren't happening in America today. The newspaper on which you rely for knowledge of what goes on—in the world and in your home town alike—gives you the facts undistorted by the hand of a Dictator. Here the Press is free—and with it the people.

Who kept it that way? It was the newspapers and the men who make them—supported of course by the public. Throughout our history they have fought to retain the freedom of speech and of the Press that was written into the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

Their fight was not dominated by self-interest—for newspapers, as Europe has proved, can survive under a Dictator's thumb and profit by his favors. It was, instead, a fight for all the people. The newspapers knew—and know today—that an enslaved Press means an enslaved populace. They realize that, so long as the Press remains free, and its editors courageous, America can never fall under the iron hand of despotism or dictatorship.

They remain, as always, the shock troops of our liberty.

To them is due our appreciation—and our support. Freedom of speech and freedom of the Press are every citizen's concern.

Americans Are Hard to Scare

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

During the past few years there has been advocated in this country a philosophy utterly new to America.

It is the Philosophy of Fear. It is preached by those who would destroy our faith in America as a nation and in the individual American as a self-reliant, self-respecting citizen, able and eager to pull his own weight in the boat.

It seeks to convince us that opportunity in America has vanished, that individual courage and initiative are futile, that we should look to government or other agencies, rather than to ourselves, for guidance and support.

That's what's behind most of the queer social and economic panaceas being urged on us today. That's the emotion—Fear—that the men and women who foster such foreign-brewed nostrums are trying to arouse in the American people. It's a preliminary step—as Europe has proved—toward Communism and Dictatorship and other paternalistic forms of government inimical to our American tradition of individual liberty in thought and in action.

But the effort is doomed to failure. Americans, as a people, are hard to scare. Their history proves it.

Timid men could not have conquered a continent. Timid men could not have built a great nation out of tangled forests and wind-swept prairies and desert wastes. Timid men could not have created our vast agricultural and industrial empire.

It took men of courage, with faith in themselves and in their country, to achieve those things. It took the typical American worker and citizen. And just as it was this typical American—not the demagogue or the theorist—who made our country great, it will be the typical American worker and citizen who continues her progress.

America, as I have said elsewhere, is still full of such Americans. And anyone who thinks he can scare them into getting like the frightened peasants of Eastern Europe simply doesn't get the meaning of our national history.

On Monday night of last week the Senior class, together with their sponsor, Mrs. Owen, journeyed over to Memphis for a delightful evening of enjoyment. After the show refreshments were served to them at the drug store, and Tuesday morning all who reported on the show received one-half point in recreational reading. The Seniors say three cheers for Mrs. Owen.

The Juniors were eager for some kind of entertainment last Monday night. Well, Mr. Payne says, "no" not during the week but thanks to Mrs. Owen for mentioning a show that would help in recreational reading, and so we had a theater party. Mrs. Brown tells the Truth

By Theresa Bain

The evening sun was setting as Mrs. Brown, and Mrs. Jones, her next door neighbor, hung over the back yard fence talking. They talked about everything. Sally Lincoln's new calico dress, old Pete's wooden leg, and the neat even rows in Grandma Hardy's little garden.

That night as Mrs. Brown and Michael, her husband sat before the old-fashioned fire place where the pine knots were burning brightly, Mrs. Brown remarked meaningfully, "Michael, I don't believe it's right to tell falsehoods or to gossip, do you?" Michael didn't answer because he was afraid to trespass on her privileges, gossiping and talking. He knew what the consequences would be if he did. After a few seconds of silence she continued with determination, "I have made up my mind that I am not going to gossip tomorrow, and I'm not going to tell any falsehoods like that old Mrs. Jones. I never saw anyone who could stretch things to their limit as she does. I'm positively not going to tell any falsehoods tomorrow!" Mr. Brown attentively listened to what she said, but he knew well enough that it was impossible for his wife to keep such a resolution.

"Oh, come right in Mrs. Jones. I am so glad that you come over this afternoon, I was so lonesome and I didn't have a soul to talk to. Mrs. Jones squealed excitedly "Vera, I came over to tell you that my jelly won first place at the county fair. I got a letter with a blue ribbon in it this morning."

"Oh, it did! did it? well that's nothing, do you remember them chickens I entered at the state fair the year that Michael broke his leg? I hadn't even fed those chickens and do you know what? they won first place at the state and the officials sent them off somewhere and them was the best chickens in nine states. If you don't believe it, I'll show you the banner I got for entering them. Let's see, oh yes! I believe to my soul that Geraldine cut it up when she was a little tot. I don't know where it could be if she didn't."

"Well, responded Mrs. Jones a little disgruntled, I can tell a bigger one than that, she thought secretly. You remember the time I entered in the shirt ironing contest? I was the best ironer in the whole United States, and I didn't even half try then. Why I'm hard to beat in ironing shirts."

"You may can beat me ironing but I'll bet your kids weren't as smart as mine when they were little." Mrs. Jones sank into a chair and began to listen to the favorite discussion of her neighbor, her children when they were little. She had heard the tale so many times that she could tell exactly how many teeth each child had at the age of six months. Mrs. Brown related these incidents one more time, declaring each one to be absolutely the truth.

"Michael, Mrs. Brown exclaimed at the supper table that night, I haven't gossiped one word today, and I haven't told one falsehood either."

Great Stone Blocks Are Island of Guam Mystery

The great blocks of stone which, by some unknown process, were hoisted in place to build the Egyptian pyramids have caused many to marvel, yet on the island of Guam there are stones larger than those used in the pyramids, evidently marking the burial place of an ancient native chief.

The huge stone blocks weigh approximately 2,500 pounds each, and when found one rested on the other. Both are of coral formation. The finding of many such burial places on Guam indicates that this island once had a big population. Little is known about its early inhabitants.

Find Out

From Your Doctor if the "Pain" Remedy You Take Is Safe.

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

Lady's Painful Trouble Helped By Cardui

Why do so many women take Cardui for the relief of functional pains as monthly times? The answer is that they want rest! As Mrs. Herbert W. Hunt, of Hillsville, Texas, describes. She writes: "My health wasn't good. I suffered from cramping. My pain would be so intense it would nauseate me. I would just drag around, so sluggish and slow. My mother decided to give me Cardui. I began to mend. That tired, sluggish feeling was gone and the pains disappeared. I can't praise Cardui too highly because I know it helped me." If Cardui does not help, YOU, consult a physician.

HOW ARE YOU TODAY

DR. JAMES W. BARTON Talks About

Reducing Weight

AS YOU know, there are two main classes of overweight. The first is made up of those who have always been heavy; were big babies or put on a great amount of weight at puberty—14 to 16 years of age. The second is made up of those who have simply eaten more than their bodies required and because they are overweight take little or no exercise.

The first type is spoken of as endogenous obesity (overweight) because the cause is within themselves—glands that are not active enough—and the second is called exogenous obesity because it comes from outside the body—eating too much food.

However, whether the obesity is due to the glands or to eating too much, the reduction in weight to a very large extent should be accomplished by cutting down on the amount of food eaten.

Dr. Arany, Berlin, stresses three points for those whose overweight is due to overeating. (1) Cutting down on the amount of food eaten; (2) increasing the amount of exercise taken which calls for more oxygen to burn or use up the body tissues, and (3) regulating the water exchange by increasing the amount of urine manufactured by the kidneys.

Doctor Arany suggests that the individual be examined, weighed, the metabolic rate measured (rate at which the body processes work) and when the food intake be reduced by as much as 20 to 30 per cent below the food intake that these measurements require. He suggests that bulky foods such as cabbage, lettuce, celery, spinach, fruits, vegetables (except potato), graham bread, breakfast foods from whole grains (oatmeal, shredded wheat) be eaten in large quantities because there is so much roughage (fiber) remaining after digestion. These foods have less fuel value or calories than more concentrated foods and also help to prevent constipation.

The foods that are rich or concentrated and do not have much roughage are sugar, white bread, highly milled breakfast foods, meat, potato, fats, and milk. These foods should be reduced in amount.

The second point, muscular exercise, is very important, as exercise increases heart and lung action and the increased oxygen coming into the lungs burns up the fat tissue in and on the body. He warns those who are overweight to begin with light exercise and gradually increase it; the strength of the heart, lungs, and circulation or blood pressure being carefully watched.

The third point—the water balance—is very important as overweighters carry an excess of water in proportion to the excess in fat. As mentioned before, one pound of fat carries three and one-half pounds of water with it, simply because fat tissue holds so much more water than an active tissue like muscle.

Water is removed from the body (and water means weight) by simply cutting down on the amount of fluid taken—water, tea, coffee, soft or hard drinks—by inducing sweating by steam or Turkish baths, and sometimes by taking drugs to drive out fluids by way of the kidneys.

It is amusing to see an overweight individual weigh himself, take a fairly long Turkish bath and lose three to five pounds and when he is ready to leave, weigh himself again only to find that he is as heavy as before he took the Turkish bath. This is due, of course, to the fact that after emerging from the bath, he drank a number of glasses of water which replaced the water removed from his body by the Turkish bath. The removal of the water and its replacement was good for him, but it prevented the loss of weight.

Boxers, jockeys, and others who must "make" a certain weight by a certain time often have the weight removed by the Turkish bath, but drink little or no water, and so are able to make the desired weight.

Doctor Arany's suggestions to reduce weight are in accord with those in general use—less food, more exercise, less water or other fluid.

Danger of Overweight

Dr. L. G. Graves in his book "Foods in Health and Disease" says, "An excess of fat is detrimental to health and is a predisposing factor in degenerative diseases of the heart, blood vessels and kidneys. An accumulation of fat around the heart handicaps its action while the increased body weight adds to the work demanded of it and a large percentage of overweight persons have high blood pressure."

Dr. E. P. Joslin, Boston, the outstanding authority on diabetes, warns those who have a family history of diabetes against the danger of becoming fat. He believes that those with a family history of diabetes may escape diabetes by avoiding overweight. He believes also that overweight is the most common cause of diabetes.

It's a Season of Glamor and Glitter

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

STYLE prophets predict a season of dazzling effects and sumptuous dress. According to the signs of the times women will sparkle from morning to night this fall and winter.

Their silk velvets will be embroidered with strass. Their wool-like silks will be elaborated with gilt braid. Sleeve ends and collars worked in a solid mass of huge sequins will challenge the supremacy of fur on evening coats. Silk chiffons will be beaded and silk crepes palmetted for formal wear either in allover patterning or confining their glitter to belts and angel sleeves or scarfs. Gorgeous silk lame lapels will adorn evening tailcoats with which matching lame turbans and blouses, bags and belts will be worn.

Jeweled ornaments will hold the drapes of harem skirts and clasp shirred and bloused bodices. Seed pearls will make chokers (new high collar fashion) and form passermenterie embroidery—thus the story of glitter and glamor might run on ad infinitum.

Fabrics weighted down with beading, embroideries, sequins and jeweled ornamentation must hold and not pull out of shape. Women want their cloying surfaced silks to stay in, their crinkles to remain crinkled. They want to be assured that their taffetas will stay crisp, their chiffons and crepes not to grow sleazy and sloppy and so they are coming to realize more and more that care and discrimination must be exercised in choosing quality-kind fabrics. Which explains the reason why the demand for silks that are pure silk (the inherent elasticity of silk is important) is more insistent this season than it has been in many a previous year. So much for the practical side of the question and now let us turn to the models pictured with a view to studying each individually since they are so charmingly illustrative of the current trend to glitter, glamor and to dazzling effects in the silk parade of fall and winter fashions.

The beautiful model to the left is fashioned of rich silk lame in a delectable tone of blue, shot with silver. The square décolletage is set off by jeweled clips the like of which also form the buckle for the belt. The short sleeves are interestingly cut on kimono lines, giving fullness to sleeves and shoulder.

Eastern influence in evening fashions is most pronounced. Note the sari shawl of gold sequins which envelopes head and shoulders, adding brilliance to the stately black gown pictured to the right, which is made of a handsome silk velvety sheer. A tunic effect is simulated via an adroitly positioned ruffle on the skirt whose princess lines are slenderizing in a subtly sophisticated way. This ruffle ties at the back in a clever pose. The smartest dressed women regard black with the glittering note as first in fashion this season.

Greatest enthusiasm is shown for the cocktail dress or suit that adopts street length, it being a new entrant in the formal realm. The girl seated is wearing such a suit, its formality attested in the silk metal cloying tunic jacket with the now-so-fashionable frog fastening at the waistline. The afternoon dress is of a grainy silk crepe in the same aqua blue shade as the metal cloying which fashions the jacket. A jeweled clip accents the draped neck. The peaked берет with its ornamental veil is high-style in its every detail.

TAILORED JERSEY

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Wool Jersey comes into its own, in that leading style creators are using it for their practical daytime dresses. The vogue for gray is increasingly apparent. There is a new beige-gray tone which is especially good style. Color accents on gray is fashion's latest message. The gray-beige Jersey two-piece frock here shown is contrasted with a gay green and multicolor scarf with belt in matching green tone. The one-piece tulleur buttons down the front. It is fashioned of fine jersey in natural beige tone with trim accents in deep wine.

Goldfish Used as Buttons
Tiny metal goldfish, with black-tipped fins and tails in approved goldfish style are used to button a knee-length tunic of a tea gown.

Narrow Braid Used
Narrow embroidered braid is set together with gold metal threads to form a colorful and unusual collar and cuff set worn on a black crepe frock.

Composition Feathers
Feathers of composition, in very vivid shades for velour hats, are among novelties seen in the shops.

HIGH HAT THE WORD IN FALL MILLINERY

It's a high-hat season. One of the newest high hats in the fall parade is the domino crown turban, which has a rolled edge and little square topknot that sticks straight up in the air exactly like an enlarged domino.

It's shown in velours and suede, with a small fly-away bow in front, and is a pretty trick with some of the new fur coats.

Another top-knot idea is developed in a bonnet cap of black felt, with a big frou-frou bunch of black satin ribbon rising impudently from the top-front of the crown. Small scalloped loops of black satin edge the bonnet.

The Tyrolean urge is still with us, in casual brimmed sports hats of velours or felt, with high, peaked crowns and perky quills.

Wool Dress Can Be Worn for Almost Any Occasion

Jean Patou has created one of those all-time dresses which can be worn for almost any occasion.

This dress is in brown wool with the back of the bodice and the sleeves of the taffeta in brown, green and red plaid. The accompanying jacket of brown wool has wide revers of brown carnal and turn-back cuffs of the same fur. The costume is completed by the Patou thimble hat in brown felt. The narrow brim turns way up in back and far down in front and a bright red quill is its only trimming.

Nature's Ice Box O. K.; Keeps Food 33 Years

Nature's ice box has even the best of mechanical refrigerators skinned when it comes to food preservation. Keeping food in good condition for years is no trick at all for natural cold storage plants such as the Antarctic wastes. According to Dr. Dana Coman, physician and dietician for the Lincoln Ellsworth-Sir Hubert Wilkins expedition, food left in a shack in the South Polar region 33 years ago was found to be still edible when discovered. The long-preserved food supplies were left by a Norwegian explorer, Otto Nordenskjold, in 1902.—Washington Post.

Sentinel's Inquiry

According to army regulations the correct inquiry of a sentinel on guard is, "Halt! Who is there?"

EATS OATMEAL TO HELP KEEP FIT

It may be one of Nature's lowest cost foods, but lucky is the boy or girl who gets it for breakfast every morning.

Many are nervous, poor in appetite, system out of order, because their daily diets lack enough of the precious Vitamin B for keeping fit.

Few things keep them back like a lack of this protective food element.

So give everyone Quaker Oats every morning. Because in addition to its generous supply of Vitamin B for keeping fit, it furnishes food-energy, muscle and body-building ingredients. For about 1/2c per dish.

Start serving it tomorrow for a 2-weeks test. Quaker Oats has a wholesome, nutlike, luscious appeal to the appetite. Flavor, surpassingly good. All grocers supply it.

DOCTORS KNOW

Mothers read this:

A cleansing dose today; a smaller quantity tomorrow; less each time, until bowels need no help at all.

Why do people come home from a hospital with bowels working like a well-regulated watch?

The answer is simple, and it's the answer to all your bowel worries if you will only realize it: many doctors and hospitals use liquid laxatives.

If you knew what a doctor knows, you would use only the liquid form. A liquid can always be taken in gradually reduced doses. Reduced dosage is the secret of any real relief from constipation.

Ask a doctor about this. Ask your druggist how very popular liquid laxatives have become. They give the right kind of help, and right amount of help. The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara—both natural laxatives that can form no habit, even in children. So, try Syrup Pepsin. You just take regulated doses till Nature restores regularity.

Sanctions—What They Are and Do

Intent in discussion of the case of Italy and Ethiopia is the Council of the League of Nations, shown in meeting at Geneva. Crosses mark the empty seats of the Italian delegation. In the inset is pictured Baron Pompeo Aloisi, head of the Italian delegation, who walked out.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

FIFTY-TWO nations, all members of the League of Nations, have solemnly agreed to employ economic sanctions, within limits, upon Italy, one of the major powers of the league's membership, because of her aggression in invading Ethiopia, a lesser member whose rights are none the less inviolate before the covenant.

It can hardly be said that the league has plunged in haste into such action; whether it will repent at leisure remains to be seen. For weeks—months—the big news has carried Geneva date lines, and discussions of "sanctions"—economic sanctions, followed, if necessary, by military sanctions—have been the subject of the reporting.

To the lay reader, sanctions is an unfortunate word, in that it is not graphic and in itself means nothing to him, although by this time, if he has waded through a sufficient amount of the cabled accounts, he has a pretty fair understanding of its meaning in the present case.

Sanctions in force are merely penalties upon an aggressor nation agreed to by other nations who are interested in maintaining or redeeming peace. Economic sanctions are trade "boycotts," in which the protesting nations refuse to buy from or sell to the aggressor. In their less severe form, economic sanctions may exist only with respect to certain materials which are essential to a nation engaged in a war, such as transport animals, metals, certain chemicals and munitions. The purpose, of course, is to effect in the aggressor nation such a shortage of war materials that it is no longer equipped to engage in war. Admittedly one of the important materials of war is fresh money; by refusing to buy from the aggressor, the nations enforcing sanctions can, if that aggressor has an important export trade, cripple it financially until continued war threatens bankruptcy.

Military Sanctions Are War.

Carried to the ultimate degree, economic sanctions would deny to the aggressor nation all imports of any kind whatever. Unless a nation were practically self-sufficient, these measures would eventually starve it into submission or provoke it into attack which, made against overwhelming odds, would certainly result in its downfall.

Military sanctions are really acts of war, since they are the armed enforcement of economic sanctions. In the beginning they would consist of naval and military blockades to keep carriers bearing imports or exports from entering or leaving the aggressor nation. The Allies bottled up Germany in this manner during the World War.

The declaration of sanctions is delegated to the league through those articles of the covenant which are designed to prevent war. They are Articles X to XVII. Since the prevention of war is the primary purpose of the league itself, these articles are the life blood of the great experiment with Woodrow Wilson's idea.

Article X won't work. The league was founded to assure the peace of the world, but it was shaped by the nations which came out on the winning side in the World War, who thought, none too altruistically, that peace could be maintained by maintaining the status quo of 1919. Article X guarantees "the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league." But active enforcement of the rule depends upon the unanimous vote of the council, a body smaller than the assembly, and comprising only the more important powers of the league. Therefore, if the aggressor in a case in point happens to be a member of the council, as Italy is, that nation's vote can stymie any action under Article X.

Should "any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any members of the league or not" appear imminent, any member may request a council meeting or bring the case before the council or assembly for action, under the provisions of Article XI of the league's covenant.

Article XII is the one which requires that any dispute among league members be submitted to arbitration, judicial settlement or an inquiry by the council. It forbids the members directly involved from declaring war or engaging in acts of war until three months after the verdict of the league has been announced. Articles XIII and XIV elaborate upon the administration of arbitration, with XIV establishing the permanent court of international justice.

Pointed Part of Covenant.

Articles XV and XVI are more directly concerned with the Italo-Ethiopian dispute than are any of the others, for they provide for cases which have not been submitted to arbitration. In cases like this, members are required to submit such disputes to the council, which will try to bring the fractious nations to some sort of peaceable settlement. If none is forthcoming, the members can take whatever steps they consider necessary, including war against the aggressor. Since sanctions require a vote of all member nations of the league, with the implicated nations not voting, the council must refer the case to assembly. This is what happened in the case of Italy and Ethiopia.

Should "any member of the league resort to war in disregard of its covenants," (as Italy has) Article XVI comes into play, for it provides for economic sanctions. It also binds the council in duty to recommend to the members what military, naval or air forces each shall contribute to the armed force which is organized to uphold the covenant of the league.

It is obvious that in the employment of sanctions against an aggressor nation, some members (notably those which do a considerable export business with the aggressor) will be more seriously affected than others. Provisions are made for these members to apply sanctions in a manner as convenient as possible.

In a formal resolution of the assembly, in 1921, put the following interpretation upon Article XVI:

"The council may, in the case of particular members, postpone the coming into force of any of these measures for a specified period, where it is satisfied that it is necessary in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience which will be caused to such members."

Degrees of Sanctions.

In considering the weight of the sanctions which the league has voted to employ against Italy, it is well to recall the note of Britain's Sir Samuel Hoare to the French ambassador, which said: "It is clear that there may be degrees of culpability and degrees of aggression, and consequently, in cases where Article XVI applies, the nature of the action appropriate to be taken under it may vary according to the circumstance of each particular case."

Perhaps the most important phase of the sanctions voted against Italy by the league is that which binds the 52 nations which agreed to them to prohibit importation of "all goods consigned from and grown, produced or manufactured in Italy or in Italian possessions from whatever place they arrive." This would cut off approximately two-thirds of Mussolini's export trade, chief articles of which are manufactured cotton and silk, citrus fruits, artificial silk, thrown silk machinery and apparatus, cheese and wines—exports which amounted to about $800,000,000 annually at the peak, but which have fallen off almost half during the depression.

Listed among Italy's chief imports in peace times are raw cotton, coal, coke, wheat, machinery and parts, raw wool and timber. The league sanctions would raise an embargo on horses, mules, donkeys, camels, rubber, bauxite, aluminum, aluminum oxide, iron ore, scrap iron, tin and tin ore, chromium, manganese, nickel, titanium, tungsten, vanadium, other ores and alloys and all "true forms of minerals and metals mentioned in their ores and alloys."

Member nations have agreed to measures which will help all nations employing sanctions to come to one another's assistance in compensating for trade losses through mutual increased trade facilities, credits, and cash and loans if possible. They have also agreed to discriminate against members like Hungary and Austria who, friendly to Mussolini, have refused to cut off trade with him.

Supervising Application.

The league's committee of 18 has been given a permanent mandate to supervise the sanctions measures in their execution and to submit for consideration any new measures which seem advisable.

This, then, is as far as the league has gone against Italy as this is written, and it is little likely that further steps will be taken before you read this. Actually, any member of the league could send warships and planes to the Mediterranean and begin blowing Italy right off the map with perfect legality in the eyes of international law. For Italy has been named an aggressor, and any aggressor nation becomes automatically "at war" with all member nations, and any acts of war by any member or members other than the aggressor would be strictly "in self defense."

The difficulty in employing sanctions, especially without military and naval blockade, against Italy is readily apparent when the observer remembers that the United States, Japan and Germany are not members of the league and are not bound by any agreements enumerated in the Geneva headquarters by member nations alone.

Where "Balance" Rests.

Any trade restrictions which league members imposed upon Italy might work distinctly to the advantage of these three outside nations, for the imports that Italy received from member nations would simply be replaced with imports from the United States, Japan and Germany. Under the recently passed neutrality law, the United States has declared an embargo on all war materials to belligerents. League powers have lifted their embargo on war materials to Ethiopia. Italy might obtain such materials from the other outside powers, however.

It is little likely that Germany would sell munitions or raw materials with which to manufacture munitions to Italy, but it is not impossible. Hitler, to be sure, has been on none too friendly terms with his fellow dictator since the Austrian incident. He has shown that he is not much worried about France; but he would think more than twice about incurring the displeasure of Great Britain.

There is nothing to prevent Japan from buying what Italy needs in South America and reselling it to Duce. Nothing except Mussolini's inability to pay. He has only about $379,000,000 in gold reserve.

If Germany, however, were inclined to buy what she wished abroad, acting as liaison between Italy and foreign markets, the incoming material could be shipped on Austrian railways, (since the Austrian government has shown an inclination to work hand in glove with Mussolini) to Rome, Milan and Naples. The only effective way to enforce sanctions then would be to blockade Germany. This is generally agreed, would surely precipitate another general war on the continent.

It is becoming more and more apparent that the real balance of power, so far as sanctions are concerned, rests with the United States. Only the United States of the three great powers outside the league has within its own borders the vast supply of raw materials Italy would need if cut off from trade with league powers.

Not Nine, but 50,000 Planets, Says Scientist

The solar system, of which the earth is a part, probably contains not 9 but 50,000 planets, it has been estimated by Prof. Armin O. Leuschner, of the University of California. In addition to the well-known ones, Mercury, Venus, Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune, and Pluto, a swarm of lesser objects have orbits around the sun, most of them in the region between Mars and Jupiter. Nearly 1,300 of the small bodies, or asteroids, have been located since the beginning of the last century, on the first night of which the Italian astronomer Giuseppe Piazzi sighted the first, Ceres.—Literary Digest.

CHAPTER I

While she waited, Antoinette remained standing; she was nervous and excited, and it seemed easier to stand. Except for herself, there was nobody in the place.

There had been an inky, shabby, cold-looking boy in a suit too small for him idling at the battered and inky desk, spearing vainly at flies with an old pen. But he had disappeared through the glass-topped splintered door marked "Editor, Private," to tell Mr. Lawrence Bellamy, editor of the San Francisco Journal of Commerce and Business, that Miss Antoinette Taft was waiting to see him.

Rain was falling in gray sheets. Traffic crashed and honked on Montgomery Street.

The boy returned; Mr. Bellamy would be free in a minute. Antoinette sat down, her heart beating fast, and peered looked about the waiting room of the Journal.

Antoinette was seeking for a job. "You kin go in now," the boy said, not moving any muscle of his entire person except those involved in the toneless speech. Antoinette rose gracefully. In her heart she said, "Mr. Bellamy told him to keep me waiting exactly five minutes. Ha! Just to make himself important!"

But when she stepped into the editor's office she revised her opinion.

"And You Think You'd Like a Job on a Newspaper?"

There was a fat young man in a cafe-au-lait raincoat in the revolving chair opposite that of Mr. Lawrence Bellamy.

"I wish you'd let me send you our figures?" said this individual engagingly, rising as Antoinette came in.

"I won't!" said Mr. Bellamy.

"May I leave you my card?" asked the visitor.

"Sure!" the editor agreed. The young man took out his fountain pen and wrote on the card, and Antoinette took the vacated chair. She saw the older man, lolling in his seat, glance at her card. "Miss Taft?" he asked.

"Funny thing—my mother's brother was Taft Baldwin," he said.

"They're both good New England names," Antoinette said, with a slight effort to seem friendly and at ease.

"Your people from Boston?"

"My father's family was. But his father came round the Horn in 'Forty-nine." Antoinette went through the usual little story smilingly. She was still terrified of the editor—any editor—but he was rather less frightening than most of them.

His was large, his brown face thin; his aquiline nose gave a sort of autocratic significance to his face. His hands were big and lean, his mouth large, his dark thick hair was in an untidy tumble, and he wore glasses.

"Job, eh?" he began. Antoinette only smiled deprecatingly. "What experience have you had?"

"Not much—on newspapers. I did the social column for the Bulletin for two weeks. Then Margaret Russell—my friend, who had got me into it—came back from her vacation."

"That was the only work you ever did?"

"Oh, no." Antoinette smiled ruefully. "I've done lots of other things," she confessed. "I was in the Mercantile library for a year, and then in Younger's bookstore, helping my older sister."

"I know Paul Younger well," Mr. Bellamy said, with what appeared to be characteristic musing irrelevance. "Nice feller—dreamer, but that's all right. Your sister work there?"

"You'd identify her because she's tall and dark, and she wears her hair—" Antoinette made a gesture. One always made this gesture in describing Brenda's crown of braids.

"I know; young girl, rather pretty, wears turned-down collars; 'bout twenty-four or -five?"

"That's Brenda. She's really—a little older than that."

"Just the two of you?"

"Two brothers, Cliff and Bruce."

"Mother and father?"

"No, we lost them years ago. But my aunt, Miss Bruce, lives with us."

"And you think you'd like a job on a newspaper? No social stuff on this paper, you know."

"I know. I know it's a commercial paper." Now was her time to show that she was an up-to-date business girl, full of bright ideas.

"This is what I was thinking, Mr. Bellamy, why shouldn't the Journal have one page of society news and of things interesting to women, recipes and fashions and a puzzle or two?" Her voice was dying into a suffocated silence under the effect of his narrowed smiling look and slowly shaking head. She struggled on: "It might mean that men would take it home to their wives—"

"I don't think we want to go into that line," Lawrence Bellamy told her. "You don't?" Life was bitter in her mouth, but she could seem interested, could manage to smile.

"No!" But we've got to put on more advertising before we— Let me explain the whole thing to you," the editor said. He proceeded to explain it, illustrating figures with a pencil. Antoinette listened respectfully, because she had no choice.

"Now, I'll tell you what I'll do, Miss Taft," Lawrence Bellamy said finally. "I've put a new man on here to rustle me up ads—only had him two weeks, and I don't know how he's going to turn out. I'll give him another week, and then why don't you get in on this? I'll let him keep whatever he's got, and I'll let him take you're going after the department stores and the milliners and the tea rooms, how's that? You get forty per cent of what you bring in. The fellow that did have it, Hansen, used to clean up about fifty a week on it."

"And meanwhile—" they were standing now—"meanwhile I'll ask Mrs. Bellamy what she thinks of any women's stuff in the Journal," the editor said, guiding her toward the door. "She gives me pretty good steers sometimes."

Antoinette bowed a smiling farewell, went out into the dark, woody, inky hall, and walked down two flights to the street. The whole morning had been an utter waste of time.

Rain was still falling heavily; there was no use going home; nobody was there. Aunt Meggy would be at the sewing society meeting, Bruce was in school, Cliff at the office, Brenda at the store.

Antoinette wandered past the Hall of Justice and the little park whose green leaves were tossing in the warm sticky rain, and went idly along the narrow streets of Chinatown. Somehow she was still smarting over the recent interview with the handsome, aristocratic editor of the Journal.

While they had been talking, he had told her something of his own history. He had graduated very young from Harvard, and after some experience on college periodicals had become associated with a financial journal in New York, had married almost immediately, had continued in newspaper work ever since. The present venture in San Francisco was new but already was marked with success. He was only thirty-one or -two, Antoinette judged, probably less than ten years older than herself, he was pleased with life, sure of himself and his job! It was "his idea" to do this, and "his innovation" to do that; he could smile down, he could deprecatingly shake away her poor little suggestions; he was full of suggestions and ideas himself.

After all she would go home to lunch. She climbed into a car on Market street. Presently she entered the doorway of a dilapidated building that contained eight five-room flats on four floor levels. Steep wooden steps, peeling and paintless, led up from the street that ran for blocks between the shabbiest and least interesting of the city's dwellings. Almost all the windows had little signs on them, little confessions of poverty and failure. "Modes." "Violin Studio." "Rooms." "Home Board," said the signs, patient and fly-specked, year after year.

There were no signs on the Taft windows; they were top-floor windows, anyway, above the eyes of the crowd. On the right of the narrow entrance hall there was the doorway of a dark bedroom, Antoinette's and Brenda's room, where one must always snap on a light. Lighted, however, it was a pleasant room enough, with a great window that was always open, on an airshaft, and an oblique upward view of the sky.

Next to this bedroom was the bathroom, dark and dank, with a smell of ammonia and yellow soap on Fridays when Asterbell came to clean, and an unpleasant odor of plumbing, rotting wood, damp rags, and plaster at other times. Then came Aunt Meg's room; the best bedroom in the house, small but bright, for it looked out across the southern city and Twin Peaks, and shared with the sitting room next to it the only exposed side of the apartment.

No one ever entered Aunt Meg's room except when she was ill, so that it reduced the apartment, strictly speaking, to four rooms. Of these one, on the left side of the hall, was a small black hole originally intended for an occasional servant, and now occupied contentedly enough by seventeen-year-old Bruce, who had a very treasure house of broken cameras, nails, tools, radio equipment, guns and cartridges on table, window ledge, bureau, mingling in casually with his shirts and collars. The other was a fair-sized kitchen with a skylight upon whose dusty face the rain was hammering and dancing again, as Antoinette came in.

The kitchen clock said twenty minutes past two. Antoinette made herself a luxurious meal of brown toast and tea. There was a saucer of stewed tomatoes in the icebox; one sardine. She grilled the sardine, scrambled an egg in the tomato sauce, and presently carried an epicurean tray in to the sitting-room window; found her book. The Father Brown Stories, and settled down for an hour of sheer pleasure.

The rain, the discouraging editors, the depressing downtown streets, the condition of the family budget were all forgotten; Antoinette was in London streets, in London clubs and studios, following a shabby caskoon through strange and dramatic adventures.

After a while the food was gone, and the rain had disappeared, too. Antoinette put her head down on her arms and sat motionless for some fifteen minutes. Then suddenly she sprang up, her book coasting to the floor, and snatching up the tray fled rather than walked with it to the kitchen. Cup, spoons, plate into the dishpan, hot water, tray tipped up on the dresser again, teapot rinsed and turned upside down—

Antoinette worked as if whips were driving her. She went into the bedroom and came out with two waists and several pairs of stockings, took a basin from the damp, vegetable-scented back porch, rinsed and soaped busily. Her electric iron was plugged in, and a board brought from the same back porch, which was fortunately spacious, and served as a store-room.

Meanwhile, with characteristic fatal determination to be thorough, Antoinette was starting several other things and planning in her busy brain to do more. She hung the waists daintly on hangers in the sitting room, put the dish towels on to boil, took out the stove tray and slid it into the sink to give it a thorough cleaning, brought her sewing materials into the kitchen to catch up a run in one stocking and the split heel of another, and poured a bag of peas into a pan.

"I really ought to find an old sheet and re-cover that ironing board—we'll only burn the blanket right through at this rate—I wonder if there's an old sheet in Aunt Meggy's room?"

She went into her aunt's room and gave a dramatic shriek.

The window had been left open, and Jingle had performed his favorite trick of coming along the back porch and over the roof and down the fire escape, and so making a leap into his favorite spot, in the center of Aunt Meggy's bed. His paws had, of course, been thick with soot and mud, and more than that, he had knocked to the floor the little flower vase that Aunt Meggy always kept before Grandma's picture; violets and water were everywhere.

"Yes, and you know you're a bad cat!" Antoinette said grimly, as he leaped gayly past her to the kitchen. She repaired the damage gingerly; her own hands were far from clean. Presently she went into the bathroom to wash them and was in there when Brenda came home a moment later.

"Hell—oo!"

"Brenda, my darling, you're early!" Antoinette kissed her sister affectionately. "Darling, what time is it?" she asked, going on with the wiping of her hands.

"It isn't five yet. But it was so dark, and going to rain again, and appraisers or accountants were there, or something. Anyway, Paul," said Brenda, who usually spoke of her employer thus familiarly, "told us we all could go home!"

She was as tall as Antoinette, but more slender, with a certain fastidious delicacy of build and expression.

"Oh, it's good to get home!" she exclaimed. Presently she followed Antoinette to the kitchen, to find her in a whirl of activities.

"What on earth are you up to?"

"I did the stockings—oh, and both waists, too—and then I got into the vegetable box."

"And you're cleaning the stove too," "Silt down, Betsy, and rest. Here, do the pens. I'll get out of all this!" Antoinette brought to the confusion her own swift energy and concentration, and was wringing out the hot clean dish towels when her aunt came in.

Little Miss Bruce was cramped with the cold; her gloves and boots and shoulders were damp; she fairly shuddered with pleasure as she came into the comfortable warm kitchen.

"You got caught in it, Aunt Meggy!" "Caught in it, I should say I did!" scolded Miss Bruce, with a pretty little petulant manner that had remained with her since long-ago days of popularity and youth and prettiness. "I do believe we could have a fire in the sitting room tonight. Oh, later, later. There's Jingle—Jingle, you had cat, where were you all morning?"

"Bad cat is right!" said Antoinette. "He was out on the roof again, and he leaped in your window and knocked your violets over. And I wish you could see your quilt!"

Miss Bruce, small, gray, fuzzy-headed in her mackintosh and tied small hat, stood rooted with horror to the spot, both small clawlike hands at her breast.

"He didn't! I left—slackaday! I left that window open at the bottom; I'm always forgetting that!" lamented the older woman. "Yes, rub yourself against my legs now," she reproached the cat. "You villain, you! Here, you might as well come along with me if you've done all the mischief you could do for once," she added, trailing from the room with the cat pushing affectionately against her. "Cliffy home tonight, darling?"

"Nope. Gone to Sacramento."

"That looks as if Barney Kerr was half as important as Cliff!" Miss Bruce said triumphantly, scornfully.

"Maybe they need Barney here," Antoinette, who for reasons of her own did not quite like to have Barney depreciated, even for the aggrandizement of Cliff, offered mildly.

"Boo-boo home?"

"He went to the water polo."

"I don't think, after his pneumonia, that he ought to play water polo."

"I don't believe he's playing, but of course he had to go yell for his team."

Brenda sat at the kitchen table in a contented dream of pea shelling; Antoinette finished up the other odds and ends of work with the familiarity of long practice. Miss Bruce, returning in a practical alpaca gown of many seasons' wear and a large checked apron, inspected the kitchen alertly. Presently Antoinette spoke musically:

"I wonder if queens—or let's say movie queens, there are so few of the other sort left—I wonder if movie queens ever do anything as pleasant as to come out to a nice warm kitchen and have the sort of dinner they like to cook!"

This affected Miss Bruce emotionally. Her back was to the kitchen, as she filled the kettle at the sink, but her voice was thick with sudden tears.

"I declare, Tony, you have a wonderful nature!" she said.

"Hasn't she?" Brenda asked. "You flatter and charm me, ladies," said Tony, kneeling at the oven door and turning to look over her shoulder. "What have I done that merits this—this unsolicited testimonial? I have contented moods," said Tony, "and then I have moments of frenzy!"

Tony said that she would set the table and drifted into the sitting room.

A long, lean, tousie-headed boy was stretched upon the sitting-room couch now; his heavy lesson book slid to the ground as he turned to face Tony.

"Boo," she said. "I didn't hear you come in. How was the meet?"

"Five and five; we tied 'em in the last three seconds," the boy said, with a stretch and a yawn. "Dinner nearly ready?"

CHAPTER II

Presently they were at dinner. Tony, smiling at them all, said suddenly: "Isn't anyone going to ask me about the job on the Journal?"

"I knew the minute I saw you that there was nothing doing," Brenda said. "Nope," Tony said heroically, "nothing doing!"

"Ah, my dear, I'm so sorry!"

"That means," Tony said, staring into space, playing with her knife, "that I've been to every city editor and every Sunday editor in this city. I've been to the Catholic weekly and the Christian Science weekly and the Argonaut and the News Letter and Sunset. And I am not destined to enjoy a newspaper career!"

"Aw, gee! Break you up?" asked Bruce's hoarse young voice, all sympathy.

"Kind of," Tony blinked and laughed.

"What'd he say, the Journal man, Tony?"

"Oh, he was nice enough. But he wasn't interested."

"Snuffy old miser!" Brenda said, helping herself to more strawberries.

"Oh, no, he's not, Betsy. He's a stunning young thing, as tall as Cliff—not much more than thirty. I should think, and very much the gent!"

"What did he say?"

"He wanted me to get advertisements, of course. I wonder," Tony said musingly, her elbow on the table, her square chin in one hand, "I wonder if it's horribly hard to get advertisements. Someone must do it; there are millions of them on all sides. Maybe I ought to try it. It might get me in, anyway."

"It doesn't seem to me the thing for a girl to do," Miss Bruce said with a decision that sat oddly upon her smallness and frailness.

"I'll get something," Tony said again; "but it seems so useless to get started in anything I really don't want to do."

As Tony and Brenda washed the dishes there was a stir at the hall door; a man's voice.

"Hello, everyone. Cliff here?"

"He's really shy—Barney; he's been standing there hating to make the break," Tony thought, as she called back cordially, "Come in, Barney. No, he's not. He went to Sacramento."

Barney's big bulk slid into the chair that Aunt Meggy, flutteringly departing, left empty.

"I can't stay," Barney said half-heartedly.

"You didn't come to dinner, Barney," Brenda observed.

"No—I couldn't very well." He was frowning. Tony's grin had a slightly malicious tinge in the dark. There was a silence.

Cormorants Trained to Fish for Their Masters

Cormorants are able to retain four or five river trout—about six inches in length—in their elastic, poultice necks at the same time. To keep the birds from swallowing their catch a tight-fitting collar is attached to the base of their necks. The cormorants keep on diving for food to appease their voracious hunger, and because they are practically brainless, apparently do not mind having their catch taken away from them as soon as their throats are filled with trout.

In China and Japan, notes a writer in the Chicago Tribune, cormorants have been trained to fish for their masters from time immemorial, and early in the Seventeenth century this practice was introduced into Europe as a sport. In the East the cormorants are taught to fish either from the bank or from a raft or boat. Invariably they wear a tight-fitting collar, to which a cord is attached, to prevent them swallowing their prey.

As the birds come to the surface after a long dive, their throats filled with river trout, the fishermen pull them into their boats or to the shore and force them to disgorge their catch. This is very simple, for all the fisherman has to do is to grasp the base of the bird's neck and squeeze its catch out.

Advancement

To advance in any line of life's endeavors, it is necessary both to study and to think. Achievement is possible to those who have the initiative and determination to equip themselves with knowledge. Real joy and satisfaction are to be found in the realization that one is accomplishing something worth while and in the knowledge that its value is the direct result of one's personal efforts."
