MRS. MARY SHELTON

Last Friday, Dec. 6, at 11:15 p. m. the death angel called to claim a pioneer mother, Mrs. Mary Shelton.

Mary Phipps was born Nov. 6, 1849, at Nashville, Tenn. Was married April 1, to J. M. Shelton, who preceded her in death. She professed faith in Christ in her early teens, joined the Baptist Church and has been affiliated with that church ever since.

They moved to Texas in 1880, and settled in Milam county, lived there until 1888 moving to Jack county near New Port, and moving to Donley county in 1892, where she lived until her death.

To this union were born five children. Two are deceased. Those at her bedside were Mrs. Mattie Killian, with whom she made her home; Dayton Shelton of Ashola, and Thomas Shelton of Ft. Worth. 12 grandchildren and 22 great grandchildren with a host of friends are left to mourn her going.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Hansard and Rev. Todd at the West Baptist Church Saturday at 2:30 under direction of Hodges Funeral Home of Memphis, with interment in Rowe cemetery.

Grandma was a charter member of the church. Her love and faith in her church is a sweet memory she has left for us to cherish. To know her was to love her; she had a word of encouragement for all she met. Her pastor's spoke of her life of faithfulness as an inspiration to all who knew her.

The angel called mother away, From her suffering today. She was faithful and true all the way;

He has called her home to stay. We can not call mother back, But a life of service to her Christ,

If we leave all sin and vice, Will gain a pass port to that land, Where we'll clasp mother by the hand.

SMILE AND ENJOY LONG LIFE SPAN; WORRY: DIE YOUNG

Smile and whether or not the world smiles with you, you may live to be 165 years old. In an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association, it is said cultivation of the proper mental attitudes may prolong the life span five years into the second century, not only for the extremely rare specimen of humanity but for many others. The claim is based on the fact, or the assumption, as the case may be, that the average life of an animal is five times the number of years needed to attain its full skeletal development. In the case of a human being twenty-one years are required. Five times twenty-one are 105.

At present, we are told, only thirty-three of every 100,000 persons will attain the age of 100 years, but with proper qualities of equanimity, contentment and optimism man might be on an equal footing with his dog when it came to living out his allotted span of life. There are, of course, those who say that men dig their graves with their teeth, but perhaps proper mental attitudes are relied upon to prevent that and other follies tending to shorten life.

A proper mental attitude, presumably, banishes worry. That should be a factor in economics. Without worry how could there be depressions described as psychological? There would be new meaning when life was likened to a glad sweet song. "Eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die" might be revised and shortened to read: Be merry and live to 105. It would be a new case of "smilin' thought"—through one century into another. The prospect is pleasant, or would be if proper attitudes were not the hardest of growths to cultivate in the midst of the attitudes of the other kind, which are the fast growing weeds in the garden of mentality.—Boston Transcript.

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains... and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

METEORITES

Thursday of last week Mr.
Richards from Denver, Colo. visited the high school and gave the student body a very interesting talk on meteorites. He explained what meteorites were like, what they are not like, how to recognize them etc. He says it is quite possible that you have meteorites on your own farm.

The following tells how to recognize them

What meteorites are like

1 Meteorites are much heavier than ordinary rocks

2 They are generally irregular in form. The corners and edges are dulled or rounded.

3 Meteorites are usually covered with a thin fusion crust.
This crust is nearly or quite black at the time of fall, later it becomes brown if exposed to the weather.

What meteorites are not

1. They are not round like a ball.

2 They are not hollow

3 They burn while high in the air but generally cease burning about 5 to 20 miles above the soil

Meteorites are important for research purposes and good prices are paid for them. Any specimen which conforms to the above description and meets the emery wheel test should be sub-

Had anyone looked in the win-

HOW ARE YOU TODAY

DR. JAMES W. BARTON
Talks About

Weight and Your Shape

IN THE office of many physicians there is a height and weight table for children and adults which states, in a general way, the amount one should weigh for a certain height.

However, not only in children but in adults also the physician has learned that the table is only a guide for the normal or average individual and yet the physician has learned that there is no normal or average individual. Each and every one of us is of a certain type of build. I have spoken before of the three "usual" types of build (a) where the body or trunk is narrow and short but the legs are very long; (b) where the trunk is quite wide and long and the legs are short; (c) where the body and legs seem to be more nearly equal in length.

Naturally, the short narrow body on the long legs is not going to weigh as much for its complete height as the wide long body on the short legs, and where there is the nearly equal length of body and legs the weight will be more for the height than the first, and less than the second.

Three Basic Types.

Now these three types are called the fundamental or basic types but there are many variations from these where the individual gets his particular "shape" because of the overactivity or underactivity of certain glands of the body. Not only is the "shape" or body build affected by the over or under supply of the juices of these glands but hair, eyes, ears, skin, intelligence, disposition and other parts or characteristics of the body are also affected.

When the thyroid gland in the neck is over-active the individual is slender and built like a racehorse or greyhound, whereas when the thyroid gland is under-active the individual is heavy and fat and built more like the very heavy draft horse or bulldog.

When the little gland at the base of the skull, no larger than a pea, is over-active everything seems to be on the "long" side—long arms and legs—giving a slender appearance—long fingers, long front teeth; whereas with this gland under-active the individual is of the short, thick or stubby type.

When the adrenal glands (one above each kidney) are overactive we find the strong short built neck, the broad wide abdomen (often protruding), hands and arms short and thick and fingers and toes short and plump. He is a strong vigorous individual, half way between the racehorse and the very heavy draft horse, thus likened to a "farm" horse.

Abnormal Gland Conditions.

When the adrenal glands are under-active there may be the "average" build of body, with a tendency to fatness but there is weakness, early tiredness, sensitiveness to cold and poor resistance to various ailments.

There are also other gland types when the parathyroid glands in the neck, or the reproduction glands are or are not active.

You can thus see that with the three fundamental types or shapes of the human body, and also the types where certain glands are over or under-active it can often be quite difficult for the physician to tell the patient what he considers the proper weight for his height.

Research workers have been able to show that about one-half of the population come under the fundamental or first three types (a) short body, long legs, (b) long body, short legs, (c) body and legs of nearly equal length. This means then that the other half of the population can be considered as of the different gland types and so will show the various differences in shape outlined above.

If then you think you are underweight or overweight according to the tables furnished by insurance companies or others, it would be worth your while before you endeavor to increase or decrease your weight to just "take a look at yourself," and try to place yourself in one of the first three classes.

Is Cancer Increasing?

The progress of hygiene which has greatly reduced the number of cases of smallpox, typhoid and cholera, and lessened the death rate in tuberculosis and children's diseases, has brought about an increase in the number of people who live up to and past middle age. These hygienic methods have increased the life span by 15 years during the period of 1800 to 1935.

In 1800 there were 125 persons more than fifty years old per thousand of the population; by 1930 the number had increased to 205. This means then that there are now 80 more individuals in each one thousand who are at the cancer age than there were 30 or more years ago.

The cancer age is middle age, 40 to 60, and the figures show that in 1991 to 1905 the number of deaths from cancer at the age of 40 to 50 was about 15 to the thousand of population and in 1928-1929 the number was about 11. In 1901 to 1905 the number of deaths at the age of 50 to 60 was about 43 and in 1928-1929 the number was about 40.

Designers in a Mood for Pleating

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

PLEATS, pleats and nothing but pleats, is the message of many of the smartest fashions this season. Turn where one will in the realm of costume design, there's an orgy of intriguing pleated effects "carrying on." So let's keep up with the mode while we talk about pleats, pleated and being pleated.

An effective treatment of wider pleats in a black silk crepe dress for the young girl, is pictured to the left. The pleats are stitched with tailored precision about the hipline and released half way down the skirt so as to slenderize at the same time that it provides a fared neckline. The bodice is a modified shirtwaist with tiny metal buttons in front.

Speaking of the new materials adapting themselves so readily to the pleated mode, the new silk lame weaves, many of which are sheer and tissue-like in texture, enter into the scheme of things with infinite grace. If you are wanting a lovely gown for prom gayety, here it is at the right in the group pictured. Shirrings and pleats go fifty-fifty in the instance of this ultra chic and adorable evening dress made of silver silk lame. The shirred top is held by narrow double straps, and the décolletage is outlined by a tiny band of pleats. The pleated theme continues in the skirt, held well in place by the crispness of the silk lame. The only trimming is the metal and jeweler buckle of the belt.

Among the pleated triumphs in evening fashions are the perfectly charming airy-fairy floating visions of silk chiffon, most lovely, perhaps, in white but which set your heart throbbing at faster pace in any of the new jewel colors or pastel shades. Sometimes only the skirt is pleated, but when it is, it's done so artfully it flutters out like a floating cloud or a mist enveloping the figure.

Bob Davis Reveals

Something About "Banned Books," and Red Indian Oratory.

CALEDONIAN CANAL, SCOTLAND.

FOLLOWING my unsuccessful attempt to clap eyes on the Loch Ness monster in these local waters I turned again to the study of human beings, not at all difficult in this section of the world where geniality among travelers is the order of the day. Among many excellent and companionable tourists it was my good fortune to swap conversation with Mr. Arthur J. Simons, of his Majesty's Customs and Excise, headed for the Isle of Skye on a holiday.

After a time we got around to the regulations affecting the recent flood of questionable books, that is to say I did, having heard that the percentage of banned books was on the increase.

"That may be true," said Simons, "but also the objection to them is on the wane. I can tell you that much from experience, as all the books regarded as undesirable are obliged to pass through my department of the customs, or through my hands if there is a decision to be made. In England there is no duty on a legitimate book. If it reaches us properly wrapped and sufficiently stamped it goes through without a hitch. I have no doubt that a great many volumes inappropriate for so-called family reading are constantly passing through the mails."

PROTECTING THE HUMAN EAR

By JOHN LARDNER

IF YOU read the newspapers you may have followed the campaign of Dr. H. Fulkin Snev against functional cauliflower ear, also known in medical circles as listers disease or paralysis of the pretest gland or just plain silent suffering.

Doctor Snev has done great work in this field. He was the first to discover that the germ of the disease is carried about and inflicted on innocent victims by certain well defined carrier types—flight managers, barbers, evangelists, traveling salesmen, authors, actors, congressmen, etiquette experts, etc. Once he managed to isolate the germ, but when he got it isolated he had to keep it around the house, where it talked all his family into a state of coma and refused to eat anything but grade A milk and imported caviar.

So Doctor Snev gave up the isolation idea and began to take down case histories of the various victims. The following history is typical of one phase of the disease (inability to hang up the telephone receiver):

"Patient complained of splitting pains in the occipital region, trembling of the hands, nervousness at the sound of bells. Slight fever, normal pulse, blue eyes, blond hair, 32 waist (clinical note—quite a dish). Patient reported telephone conversation with aggressive carrier type (welfare worker) as follows:

Patient: Hello?
Carrier: Is that you, Mrs. Z? This is Mrs. van Gans-Otway speaking, how are you, dear, I want to ask a favor of you, which I know you can't refuse, because you've done so much already, so very much, I can't tell you how grateful we were for your little donation to the Fund for Homeless Stouts. I wish you could see the work we've done with that fund you'd be so proud of having helped, why one little fellow, a ferret, he was, really, but he comes under the jurisdiction of our work with stouts, we found him the loveliest home with Mr. Squameyer, you know they're so happy to have him they say that he's bitten off the heads of fifteen rats already and the toe of one of the little Squameyers, yes, so cute, and we wondered if you—

P: I'm afraid—
C: I know you'll love to do this, you have so much talent, it's for the pageant; you know the pageant we're running for the relief of Persecuted Opossums we have a part in mind for you, a lovely part with a costume, well, just something you could make yourself, you know, but you'd look so lovely in anything, it's a historical pageant, you know the history of the village, we want you to be the spirit, yes the spirit of the Other Side of the Railroad Tracks. You see the idea, it's just—

P: Really, Mrs. van Ans-Gotway, I mean Mrs. Otway van Gotway, could we talk about it some other time? I'm expecting—
C: We have a part for Mr. Z. too I know he won't refuse, it's an Indian eye for the battle, the Indians are all killed by the ancestors of Mr. Schless and Mr. Fulton, I really don't believe Mr. Schless's people were in this country at the time but we must make the best of it although Mr. Fulton says he won't consider it if Mr. Schless—
"At this point," according to Doctor Snev, "patient reported severe trembling fit and suspension of consciousness. Revived five or six minutes later to find receiver still in hand and opponents talking strongly. Apologized for remissness and listened four minutes more. Symptoms—bruises and contusions about ear, paralysis of will."

In a case like this, Doctor Snev recommends that the patient say, three times, at intervals of fifteen seconds: "I am now going to hang up the receiver." If the third warning is disregarded, the patient should proceed to make good his boast as advertised. Extreme cases require extreme remedies. That's what Doctor Snev says, and no one has a better right to talk than this gifted scientist and horse player.

Many people regard face-to-face conversations as harder to interrupt than phone conversations. It's painful to insult anyone to his face. But Doctor Snev laughs and calls this a weakness. He has listed half a dozen so-called "ramblits" for cutting the enthusiastic word-slinger dead in his tracks.

One of these is the "impartial gambit," which should be thrown into the conversation every half minute to confuse the speaker. It goes like this:
Speaker: So Edith was on horseback that morning, you know she can ride anything on four legs, and she was riding past the reservoir, the south end, when we met her. Well, you know how it is. When you haven't seen a girl for—
Victim: Some say one, some say the other.
Speaker: I beg pardon?
Victim: Some say one, some say the other.
Speaker: Well, Edith was on horseback—
Victim: Some say one, some say the other.

You will find that this device breaks up the monologue in a nice way and leaves no feeling in the speaker's mind except a suspicion that you would be better off in a sanitarium, which is probably correct.

According to Doctor Snev, this system always leaves bad feelings, which may be all for the best.

Then there is the case of a tot of my acquaintance, who has perfected the water-works system of interrupting conversation. When his elders and betters begin to weary him with their talk he bursts into tears. This requires a strong set of lungs and ready control of the tear ducts, but it shows that a child of tender years can be as smart as a fox, if not smarter.

Other methods include yawning eight times to the minute, studying your watch, and emptying a bottle of scotch or rye on the floor between you and the speaker. This latter device is bound to fascinate him and check his flow of thought through sheer horror.

The President of the United States, of course, has a very easy time with talkers. Etiquette requires everyone to shut up and go away when the President rises to his feet. This sounds perfect, but it happened in the case of President Harding that the gag missed fire. The President didn't know about it. He remained seated for hours at a stretch while two earnest parties bit a hole in his ear and poured words into it. The late Ike Hoover finally tipped him off about his privilege, after which Mr. Harding was in a vertical position practically all the time.

But these little anecdotes, though they brighten up the story, have nothing to do with the average man. The average man must fight his own battle against listeners' disease and cauliflower ear. In this battle he has no greater friend than Dr. H. Fulkin Snev. Doctor Snev admits it.

"Though I say so myself," he told your correspondent the other day, "I have done more to break off monologues than any man living. It's a gift, a natural talent. Let me tell you how it happened. As a child I was highly sensitive to sound. I was a beautiful child, they say, with large blue eyes, blond curls, and a warm, trusting expression that must have been irresistible. People used to stop me on the street just to pat my head. I won six contests for beauty and charm, and I can show you the trophies. I—"

"Where were you on the night of February 7, 1912?" I asked suddenly, realizing the horror of my predicament. But the doctor's tip did no good. He is still talking to me as if I write this.

FUR CAPES RICHER; OF MANY VARIETIES

Fur capes are richer than they have been in years. Full-length evening models are made of strips of silver fox running from shoulder to hem—one very elegant one boasting twenty full-sized animal skins. Knee-length day capes are fashioned of mink, silver fox, dyed red fox or moleskin, while any number of shorter capes appear in astrakhan, nutria or broadtail.

Occasionally the fur capes for day wear are cut with broad shoulders and little fullness below so that they hang straight, though more often they have some flare.

New Soft Wool Weaves Are Proving Popular Just Now

With wool increasing in fashion importance, and women's insistence on being comfortable indoors as well as out, something pretty definite has been done in this year's weaves for the interests of all concerned.

This year's domestic weaves are as soft as chiffon, warm enough for all normal purposes, and have taken on an additional silky finish, adding to wearing enjoyment.

Colors have never been more flattering. That day has gone when winter means somber tones, and the "little wool frock" to wear underneath the tweed coat or the fur sport coat may be as gay and colorful as one's temperament demands.

Whiter Blouses

White silk blouses should never be hung out to dry as it will yellow them. Wrap them in towels until ironing. If they become yellowed in spite of your precaution, use a little whitening in the rinse water.

Sharp Contrast

Paris is wearing black afternoon frocks with billowy white sleeves—a style becoming to many women.

SYNOPSIS

Antoinette Taft, twenty-three, attractive and ambitious but unable to hold a job, lives in a drab San Francisco flat with her sister Brenda and brother Cliff, who are older, her seventeen-year-old brother Bruce, and their Aunt Meg. In her job hunting rounds she interviews Lawrence Bellamy, editor of the Journal of Commerce, but finds he has no place for a woman writer. She likes him very much, as she tells Brenda later. Diffident Barney Kerr drops in. Barney has his eye on Tony, but she despises him. Tony gets a telephone call from Mr. Greenwood, city editor of the Call, offering her a job as society reporter. Cliff, returning just then, accompanies Tony to the newspaper office. The first night she goes with Cliff and Joe Burke of the sports department to a restaurant and sees Bellamy at another table. She thrills when he nods to her. She is thoroughly happy in the bustle and bustle of the newspaper office. She solves the problem of getting photos. The only other woman on the staff is Bess Cutter, who does a column and is very friendly with Fitch, general manager. Bess comes to depend on Tony. Bess invites Tony to dine with her at her apartment with Fitch and then go to the theater. Barney proposes to Tony and is rejected. Tony attends the Cutter affair and is displeased. She is assigned to cover the mid-winter carnival at Piedmont.

CHAPTER VIII

A delightful home, the Pattersons', surrounded by a fine garden, with gray-shingled walls and dormers picked out with Quakerish white, and trimmed bare vines climbing up to the very roofline. Inside were the usual evidences of taste and wealth: floors carpeted to the baseboards, with handsome rugs here and there; books and flowers and Colonial fiddle-back chairs; fires snapping in the cool afternoon, a great Belgian police dog walking out to greet her with dignity. Mrs. Patterson was old, stout, in a gray silk dress that matched her curled short gray hair. She was in a sort of library, beside a wood fire; her only companion was a woman of perhaps forty, also gray, with a sick, patient face.

"Come in, come in," Mrs. Patterson said, as the maid ushered Tony to the door of the room. "It's Miss Taft of the Call, Ruth," she said to the younger woman. The sick, troubled face flashed a smile that was almost as cheerless in effect as the anxious frown had been. "This is my daughter, Mrs. Bellamy," said Mrs. Patterson. "We're all going to the party tonight, so we thought we'd rest a little now."

"How is it at the club?" the daughter asked, in a strained, ready voice. "Exciting!" Tony said, smiling. "What are they doing now, Miss Taft?" "Well, some of the men are playing golf, and they're still playing tennis. But, of course, no more swimming; they had the diving and the races; the very first, while the sun was out. And now a lot of them are playing bridge in the clubhouse, and they're having tea and cocktails."

"And a fancy dress tonight?" Ruth Bellamy said, shaking her head. "It's ridiculous! It's too much." "Some of them are going back to San Francisco to dress and come back," Tony told her. "Oh, how can they! That dreadful trip!" "I go back tonight." "Isn't the work of a newspaper office rather hard for a young girl like you?" "It's wonderful," Tony laughed. Ruth Bellamy looked at her with a wistful smile. "I can imagine it must be, if you felt well," she said.

"You don't look very sick," Tony said, with her kindly, disarming smile. "I'm not sick, exactly—" Ruth began. "No, she's not sick," her mother put in forcibly. "It's just that—we've been rather sad lately." Her eyes filled with tears; and Mrs. Bellamy, looking at Tony, said steadily, "I lost my little boy seven months ago yesterday."

"Oh, no!" Tony ejaculated. "We feel," Mrs. Patterson began gallantly, "that we must only thank God that we had seven wonderful years of him. He was nothing but happiness and sweetness, and his memory is only that. We're not going to let little Peter's name stand for anything but joy."

and figure and handsome face set off by the dashing costume and the ribboned peruke of the Revolutionary period. He wore a magnificent skirted coat of black brocade heavily embroidered in silver and steel, a waistcoat gay in flowers, plum-colored breeches and silk stockings, buckled high-heeled shoes. At his throat and wrists were frills of fine lace; in his hand he carried a plumed cocked hat. She knew him; it was Lawrence Bellamy. "Larry, you are marvelous!" said his wife. "Oh, bravo!" said Mrs. Patterson. "Come over here and meet Miss Taft, dear."

"Oh, Lord, I didn't know anyone was with you!" Benedict Arnold ejaculated. "Oh, say—" he stammered, Tony's hand in his. "Well, hello—I didn't place you! You and I—where have you and I talked to each other before?" "In your office. Months ago."

"Oh, sure, sure!" His face was brightening. "You were coming back; you didn't come back?" "No. I got a job on the Call—that very day, I think. Society editor. "Good work!" he said heartily. "Of course, I see it all, now. You've come over to do the High Jinks at the club. I knew we were putting up somebody, didn't ask who."

"And I've just placed you," Tony said smiling. "I've been talking to your wife and Mrs. Patterson here without ever thinking that the name was the same."

"Well—this is pleasant. No, no tea. I'm going upstairs and get out of this stuff; I just tried it on to see if it would fit and you all wouldn't think I looked like a perfect fool," said Lawrence Bellamy, as he stooped to kiss his wife's pale face, "and then I'll get myself something in the pantry, and then I'll join you ladies. What do you think of it, Ruth?" "It's simply stunning."

"This is one of the costumes from Arliss's 'Alexander Hamilton,'" the editor explained to Tony. "I was down there in Hollywood, a few weeks ago, and I borrowed this for me and a dandy for Ruth."

"And what do you go as, Mrs. Patterson?" Tony smiled at the elderly woman. "For many years now," Mrs. Patterson said firmly. "I've worn a lace dress and put a mantilla on my head and a rose in my hair. No trouble, and thank God I can wear my own shoes and stays!"

"And you're going tonight, Ruth?" Lawrence asked, from the door. "For a while, Larry—for the dinner, anyway."

"Ah, you're a sport!" he said. When he came back they talked for fifteen animated minutes before Tony rushed upstairs to get to her belated work, and she felt then, in the freelight, with their appreciative eyes upon her, that she was at her best; what she said sounded original and amusing, even to her, and when she got upstairs to the guest room and looked at herself in the mirror, she thought she looked her prettiest, too.

"The guest room was as beautifully appointed as was the rest of the house. There was a small flat typewriter awaiting her on the gray-and-blue desk, and Tony settled down at once to work. When that was done she could study at her leisure the gray-and-blue carpet, the gray-and-blue curtains with a touch of pale apple blossom pink for relief here and there; the apple blossom bed, with a satin comforter of powder-blue faced with gray. There were hangers padded in gray and blue in the closet, and fat bath towels heavily monogrammed in gray and blue crowded one another on the glass rods over the speckless tub. Violet soap—Tony adored violet soap—and nothing to do from quarter-past six until it was time to dress for a nine o'clock dinner. Oh, fun—fun—fun—

She took a luxurious bath, creamed her skin and brushed her hair, finally put on her wrapper and lay down, pulling the satin quilt up over her. Tony was half asleep when there was a tap at her door.

"Come in!" she said, rousing. It was Ruth Bellamy who came in, hesitatingly, with a somewhat doubtful smile on her face. "It's after half-past seven, and you asked to be reminded?" "Oh, yes. Oh, come in, Mrs. Bellamy! I believe I was dozing."

Ruth came in and sat on the bed. "I had the most delicious bath, and then all these books, and I think I was nearly asleep. Oh, how wonderful your hair is!" "My wig?" Mrs. Bellamy's face had been artfully rouged and painted; with the silver curls above it, and the earrings of brilliants quivering when she moved her head, she looked ten years they can do! she smiled deprecatingly. A dimple showed near the patch on her peachy cheek, and Tony thought that she saw for the first time what the handsome Mr. Bellamy might have seen in the much older Miss Patterson at the time of their marriage ten years ago.

"It's very becoming!" "It's too becoming. I don't look this way any more," the older woman said, shaking her head. "But this is what I came in about," she went on: "Mother and I were saying—that since you're young, and this is a dance, would you like us to hunt you up a costume?"

Tony pointed, and Ruth turned her head to see the gay full skirt of the Portuguese costume, the embroidered blouse and bright headdress dangling on hangers at the dressing table. "It's the real thing; my brother had a friend who had to go to Rio," Tony explained, as the other woman admired it. "And he brought it home for Brenda. But it was always miles too big for Brenda, so I wear it."

Tony put her feet on the floor, went to the dressing table, and picked up a brush. She looked at her hostess in the mirror. "You're not going to have much fun, are you?" she asked soberly, in sudden understanding. Mrs. Bellamy, lingering, seated herself beside the almost dead fire. "No," she answered, smiling nervously, and yet, Tony saw, glad to talk too.

"You're a good sport!" Tony smilingly repeated the husband's phrase. "I try to be."

"Was the little boy—was Peter—sick very long?" Tony was standing opposite her hostess, brushing her thick dark hair. "He was killed." "Ah-h-h!" "He was at a friend's house, playing with little Dick Sykes. They were at the garage—"

"Terrible for you!" "It was terrible for my husband, too. We never talk of Peter."

"Perhaps," Tony said timidly, "it would be better if you did."

"Peter was the only one. You see, I was thirty-three and Larry only twenty-one when we married," Mrs. Bellamy said suddenly. "You look twenty-one tonight," Tony commented readily.

"The older woman got to her feet, laid a hand on Tony's shoulder. "Come and see me again," she said wistfully, shyly. "When you are over on this side of the bay, or any time, I'd be so glad of it. I've been living very quietly—to quietly. It isn't good for Mother and for me, and it isn't good for Larry. I'd be so glad if you would."

"I will!" Tony promised, touched. But as she got herself into the becoming stripes and colors, she wondered if she would. Life was brimful without the Bellamys!

Two weeks later the Bellamys came over to the city for a few weeks to stay at the Fairmont Hotel, and Tony was almost immediately asked by her new friend to come up and have tea with her. She had a thoroughly pleasant hour with the mother and daughter, enjoying the luxury of the big corner suite, and the hot tea, and the sense that she was liked and admired. After that she went in two or three times a week.

brilliant man, and not all his kindly matter-of-fact affection, and not all her mother's anxious spolling and loving, could seem to save her. "Happiness is absolutely relative, Benny," the more thoughtful Tony once said to her sister. "I see it more and more every day. There's no use trying to estimate whether persons are happy or not; you can't tell until you know what they're comparing it to. Ruth has so much less than she used to have that she's almost in melancholia. We have so much more than we ever thought we'd have that we can hardly keep our feet on the ground. And yet even now we haven't one tenth—I mean in actual income and position and possessions—of what the Bellamys have."

"Poor thing! It's the little boy's death, I suppose. She can't forget it."

"And feeling so much older than he. If she were thirty-two instead of forty-two I suppose there might be another child; as it is I don't think there's any hope of it."

"About thirty-one or two, I think."

"Ten years. You three run in neat decades," said Brenda. "That's true. Good gracious, she's twenty years older than I am!" Tony murmured, under her breath. "You really like her, don't you?" Brenda questioned, in the tone of one thinking aloud.

"I like her liking me," Tony answered, after a moment's thought, in honesty that surprised even herself. "I don't mean that!" she said laughing. "I do like her—you have to like Ruth, she's so generous and kind and all that. But of course she's not the personality that Larry is."

"Oh, Tony, you're so beautiful, so firm and young and glowing and happy—have mercy on her!" Brenda thought. But aloud she dared say nothing. She could only console herself with the prayer that it was purely her imagination that of late Tony was quoting Larry Bellamy with a new significance; that Larry was managing to be at home when Tony was there. "If only they'd move back to Piedmont, where they belong," Brenda thought nervously.

But far from returning to Piedmont, the Bellamys rented an apartment in the smartest of the California street places; a roof apartment with a wonderful view of the city, and determined to remain in San Francisco. On a certain rainy March afternoon, with the freedom of a favored friend, she went up there unannounced, gave Chevalier her wet mackintosh and dripping umbrella, and entered the living room to find a fire blazing and Lawrence reading galley proofs in a deep chair beside it.

More Humble About Our Opinions in New Kinship

At the moment, many people are deploring "a lack of leadership" in religion, says Lloyd C. Douglas in Cosmopolitan. "In my opinion, the confessed bewilderment of the churches is a sign of health and progress. The recent use of the soft pedal has made the prophet of more value to the people. They sense an intellectual kinship with the honest man who admits he is a bit at a loss to know exactly where we are.

NO UPSETS

The proper treatment for a bilious child

TO RELIEVING CONSTIPATION

A cleansing dose today; a smaller quantity tomorrow; less each time, until bowels need no help at all.

ANY mother knows the reason when her child stops playing, gets little, is hard to manage, Constipation. But what a pity so few know the sensible way to set things right! The ordinary laxatives, of even ordinary strength, must be carefully regulated as to dosage. A liquid laxative is the answer, mothers. The answer to all your worries over constipation. A liquid can be measured. The dose can be exactly suited to any age or need. Just reduce the dose each time, until the bowels are moving of their own accord and need no help.

This treatment will succeed with any child and with any adult. The doctors use liquid laxatives. Hospitals use the liquid form. If it is best for their use, it is best for home use. The liquid laxative most families use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Any druggist has it.

Ringworm on Head. Child Cried All the Time

Cuticura Relieved

"Ringworm started with a white crust on my little boy's head. Then it turned into eruptions and his head was in a terrible way. These eruptions itched and when he scratched them they would burn, and more broke out. He could not rest, but cried all the time. I tried different remedies, but the eruption lasted one year. Then I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and now my boy's head is relieved. I will never be without Cuticura Soap and Ointment."
