The Hedley Informer

DR. J. D. TUMLINSON

The many Hedley friends of the family were grieved to learn of the death of Dr. J. D. Tumlinson of Spearman, who passed away at his home there on Friday, Dec 20 from heart failure. Dr. Tumlinson was a former resident of Hedley, having lived here a number of years. He was at one time prescription drugist for the Hedley Drug Co., and later filled a similar position at the Wilson Drug Co. He was a member of the Methodist Church and had a large circle of friends in the county.

He is survived by his wife and two children, Miss Louise and J. D. Jr.

The Informer joins their many friends in extending sympathy to the bereaved ones.

TINSLEY-CURINGTON

Miss Naomi Curington of Charlie, Texas, and Douglas Tinsley of this city were united in marriage Dec 24 at Walters, Okla., Rev. Floyd J. Stivey, pastor of the Church of Christ there, reading the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr and Mrs G C Curington of Charlie, and is a graduate of Byers high school. She is at present teaching a class in expression at Charlie.

The groom is a member of one of Hedley's prominent families, being the son of Mr and Mrs O H Tinsley. He attended Hedley high school.

Their many Hedley friends extend congratulations and best wishes.

NO HUNTING

Any kind of hunting on my place is positively forbidden. All violators will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

R. H. Jones.

We will sell for cash only in 1936 and give you the best for your money. Please don't ask us to make a ticket. We thank you for the nice business given us the past year and wish you the best ever for 1936. B. & B.

Rent Free—100 acres of good sandy soil free of rent. For particulars see Winfred Doherty

NOTICE

Positively no hunting allowed on Noel and Kinard property. All violators will be prosecuted, as the said property is posted according to law.

XMAS ACTIVITIES

The Christmas week was quietly celebrated in Hedley. There were trees at the Methodist and Baptist Churches, with programs at each. Union services were held on Christmas Day at the Methodist Church. Appropriate songs, and talks, and prayers were offered by Rev. A. V. Hendricks, Rev. M. E. Wells and Rev. H. E. McClain, Nazarene pastor.

In spite of short crops, and other hardships that our people have been going through, the Christmas spirit has been met in an optimistic manner, and our people are facing the future and the new year with a fortitude and determination to carry on in spite of what the future holds. One of the things to be commended is the fine Christian spirit, and cooperation among the different churches, and the pastors of our town.

WATSON-HOGGARD

Miss Helen Hoggard and R. E. Watson were married Saturday, Dec 21, at 8:30 at the Church of Christ parsonage at Memphis. Rev. Dewain Jones performed the ceremony. Miss Wanna Mae Carathers and the bride's sister, Miss Ruby Hoggard attended the ceremony.

Mrs. Watson is well known here as she has spent all of her life in and around Hedley.

Mr. Watson has been making his home here the past year. He formerly lived at Lakeview.

The young couple will be at home to their many friends after the first of the year west of Hedley, where the groom will be engaged in farming.

CHURCH NIGHT

Church night was observed at the Methodist Church Tuesday night. Refreshments were served and an appropriate program of songs and talks were rendered. A good crowd was present and an enjoyable time was spent by all attending.

Earn While You Learn

2 young men and 3 young women may now earn attractive part of tuition by working in College office. Excellent opportunity to prepare for business career at moderate cost. More positions than we can fill. First come, first served. Write for full information today. Draughon's College, Lubbock, Texas

Modes for Mother Versus Daughter

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

BETTER look to your laurels, daughter, for mother is about to outmode you in the matter of chic and swank in dress. At least it can be truly said that fashion is seeing to it that older women keep in perfect step with those younger in the style parade.

The current modes all go to show that the same fashion influences are important for both mother and daughter, their difference being only in their interpretation which tunes to a nicety to type and to years or less years.

With all the world wearing metallics this season, mother follows suit in afternoon or dinner gowns which have discreet touches of metal for trimming. Sometimes insets of metallic silks are set down the middle of full sleeves.

Then again bands of gold or silver silk lame border necklines and accent deep graceful armholes or are draped to soften the bustline. Notice this treatment in the handsome gown worn by the smart and attractive matron centered in the illustration. Here is a restrained, at the same time most effective, use of gold silk lame on a gown of black velvety silk sheer, with a group of tucks molding the gown at the hipline.

As a rule mother does well to avoid entire gowns of metallic silk, leaving the joy to gleam from head to toes in glamorous silver or gold to the young girl. The debutant age wears dinner gowns of scintillating silver silk lames, with shirtwaist bodices softened by bishop sleeves slit underneath, as you see in the model pictured to the right in the group. Crinkled silver silk lame is used for this dinner gown, the bishop sleeves of which are split from shoulder to wrist.

Youthful, too, are the cocktail suits fashioned of heavy silk lames. These have contrasting blouses of silk satin or silk velvet. Lame jackets are also worn over harmonizing silk crepe frocks. Formal evening gowns are made of soft silk lames which seem like liquid gold, silver or bronze— often with finely pleated skirts in the Grecian manner. Stiff silk metallic brocades or moires are also quite the "last word" for gowns with slim lines that gradually flare into billowy skirts.

The draped mode interpreted in soft, supple silks in a variety of interesting weaves, is a favorite theme for both mother and daughter. The more mature woman usually prefers modified draped treatments.

Soft fullness in the bodice is also favored for the older woman, and is much in vogue, achieved through shirring, soft folds and unpressed pleats. Cowl treatments, shoulders with softly draped armholes, inverted tucks at the waistline which release their fullness gracefully in the bodice section, as illustrated in the model to the left in the picture, are all modern treatments which are flattering to older women.

In the softly draped gown referred to, which, by the way, is of a handsome American beauty silk sheer, unpressed pleats give the front fullness to the skirt, also developing into a flattering soft neckline that achieves a conservative décolletage for the older woman.

The silks which are especially favored by the more mature woman for dresses draped and shirred are heavy silk sheers and soft velvety silk sheers. Larger women particularly appreciate the advantage of pure silk fabrics because they need the dependability of silk's natural elasticity at points of strain such as across the back of the shoulders, around the armholes and through the bust and hips.

STURDY SUEDE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

By all means if you are interested in voguish leather fashions you must have a sturdy suede jacket. These jackets, in rich stunning colors, are leading the field for winter sports. The model at the top has gridiron checks patterned via embossing, on the mosaic rust suede leather. Virginia Reid wears this new vogue which originated in Hollywood. The jacket below, also checked in gridiron fashion, has triangular shaped pocket flaps which button with an all-around belt and a trick collar that can be worn up or down.

BEAUTY IS HELPED BY STYLE OF HAIR

The girl what wants to make the most of her best features and to draw attention away from not-so-good ones should study her face carefully and experiment with hair styles and cosmetics.

The right coiffure can make a too-long nose seem shorter, or an extremely thin face appear plumper.

If your nose is long, and pointed, never part your hair in the middle. If it is short, by all means do wear your hair with the part in the center.

If you have a long thin face, a coiffure that fluffs out slightly at the sides will be most flattering. Girls with short plump faces can very well go in for sleeked-back hair styles, perhaps even the types that show both ears.

Pert curls that fly across the forehead and in front of ears generally are best for youthful, rather small, piquant faces.

Treat Furs Roughly

If you are lucky enough to get a silver fox wrap, for goodness sake learn to care for it correctly. The fur never should be stroked with the hands or touched with a brush. Instead, when you want to fluff it up and remove dust, shake it vigorously. Don't treat furs gently. On fox ranches where the little creatures are bred and reared to enhance feminine beauty and in large fur houses, fox pelts are beaten with a stick to make them fluffier and more luxurious looking. Strong men shake them as hard as they can.

Ingenious Scarf

"Personality" scarfs that can be tied seven different ways are a challenge to your ingenuity. Perhaps you can find another way to drape them. They're made of splicing prints in the form of a V. The point of the V forms a triangle and the long ends may be tied in a bow, knotted or draped in many ways. You can wear the V in front with a cowl neckline, tying the ends in a bow in back, or bringing them around to the front in a smaller bow.

NEW DEAL BRIDGE CLUB

The New Deal Bridge club entertained their husbands with a dinner and Christmas party Friday evening, Dec 20 at the home of Mr and Mrs Alva Simmons.
Attractive Christmas decorations were arranged throughout the entertaining room. The Yule tide spirit was further suggested by a gaily lighted tree and table appointments.

After a dinner, perfect everybody had a game of bridge. Sid Thomas and Mrs Roy Ketch won the traveling prizes. With Lake Dishman and Harrison Hall very capably acting as Santa Claus and his assistant, clever and humorous gifts were distributed to all present.

Musical numbers rendered by Clarence Davis, Sid Thomas, W.
C. Payne, Leon Reeves and Roy Ketch, on their newly acquired instruments, were enjoyed. The party then moved to the front porch and yard where much merriment was derived from all sorts of fireworks.

Those present were: Messrs and Mesdames Leon Reeves, W.
C. Payne, Sid Thomas, George

My Pet Abomination

By Carmen Adamsen
I loathe mice. They are as horrid to me as anything I can think of. If they did not look as they do I think I would not hate them so badly, but with their sleek bodies and small beady eyes and long silky ears, I surely detest them. They almost scare me out of my wits whenever they come in sight, and especially when they start running. I always jump on a chair or anything in sight. For example, when we were cleaning house one day a mouse ran out of the closet and then right straight to me; but before he caught me I was on a bed screaming. I have heard it was natural for women to be afraid of mice. This must be true for I have not seen a woman yet that is not afraid of one.

My Pet Abomination

By Lyman Davenport
My pet abomination is flies.
In summer time my whole life is infested with flies. Unless I just keep swatting them all time, they will get in through the screen and bother me while I am eating. I am afraid of these flies because they carry dangerous diseases. I had ten times rather be bothered by gnats because they will not come into the house after me.

All Around the House

A little olive oil rubbed over paper that has stuck to a polished surface softens paper and makes it easier to remove.

Rings of canned pineapple browned and sprinkled with chopped green peppers and pimientos make an attractive garnish for steak, chops or roasts.

When potatoes are baked in their skins the moisture in potato supplies the steam that makes the texture of the vegetable soft and meaty, at the same time preserving the flavor.

House palms should not be exposed to the direct rays of the sun nor should they be placed near a radiator.

Always iron ecreu linens on the wrong side. Ironing on the right side robs them of their luster.

Varnished dark woodwork will have a fine gloss if washed with warm water and kerosene. Add a cup of kerosene to a large pail of warm water.

Fill ugly cracks in furniture with beeswax and then varnish over.

Gravy will not soak through the lower crust of a meat pie if the white of an egg is brushed over lower crust of pie.

WHY MILLIONS CARRY TUMS!

MILLIONS now know the smart thing is to carry a roll of Tums, always. Heartburn, gas, and other symptoms of acid indigestion have a habit of occurring at unexpected times. You don't want to dread your stomach with harsh alkalies which physicians have long warned may make the tendency toward acid indigestion worse. Tums, a real scientific advancement, contains no soda or other alkalies. Instead a wonderful antacid that simply neutralizes stomach acidity, the balance passing out of the body inert. Pleasant to eat as candy. Only like a roll. Put a roll in your pocket now.

Raw Materials, Key to Peace or War

How are we to remove the causes of war? These are some pertinent incidents since the close of the war to end all wars. Center: Italian tanks advancing to the interior of Ethiopia. Lower right: Some of Haile Selassie's snipers waiting to "pick off" Italian aircraft. Lower left: Chinese prisoners taken in Japan's capture of Mukden. Upper right: The peaceful town of Memel, in Lithuania, another hot spot of potential international strife.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY At the close of the World War, it was the determination of all the participating nations, and thereafter all of the powerful nations of the earth, to establish a peace that would last for all time to come.

It was for this purpose that the League of Nations idea was brought forth, an idea which would have all disputing nations bring their controversies before a world court, to arbitration or to the attention of the council of the league before resorting to warfare. To punish nations which went to war without first attempting to have their difficulties straightened out in this manner, the member nations were agreed to take sanctions against them.

As a further assurance against war, the Kellogg pact, definitely renouncing wars as an instrument of national policy and recognizing the settlement of disputes only through peaceful means, was universally signed.

The league was an instrument of international peace, had two strikes on it before it began to operate, and those two strikes were the United States and Russia. With these two great powers outside the league, the operation of sanctions was always to be a difficult matter; the fact that other nations later withdrew from the league only served to make matters worse.

The Kellogg pact, which was more fortunate in that it gained universal acceptance, was a cripple because it provided no real means of enforcing its provisions.

It was not long before it became apparent that the league, devised and formed as it was by the victorious nations, was an instrument for maintaining peace in the sense that it was intended to maintain the status quo at the end of the war.

For about ten years this was more or less satisfactory, principally because the nations were physically and financially exhausted by the war. But by 1931 it became apparent that all of the nations were not satisfied with the status quo—especially those nations whose population was ever-expanding and whose industrial products it was becoming more and more necessary to find a new market.

Since that time there have been four outstanding incidents which have indicated that, to be successful, the league needs some sort of bolstering up, some power of maintaining a peace other than merely the status quo of 1919, and further means of enforcing its decisions.

to halting an aggressor nation. Also, it is doubtful whether sanctions, with four of the world's greatest powers outside the league, can be made effective, especially since only 36 of the 52 members which agreed to sanctions have applied them in their entirety.

To remedy this situation, one school of thought, notably typified by the League of Nations Union movement in Great Britain, recommends an international police force, under the administration of the league, to take the place of all existing military bodies. It is alleged that such an organization could be vastly less in number than the combined total of all the individual national armed forces. Because of the development of the airplane in the last few years it could be highly concentrated.

The movement has quite a following, despite the discouraging fact that for the establishment of such a police force, all nations would be required to turn over all of their submarines, airplanes, battleships and other engines of militaristic use to the international authority. It has been suggested that the scheme be given a trial over a period of 25 years. If at the end of that time it shall not have been judged a success the international "coppers" will all be sent home, and each nation will be given back its military equipment, unless, of course they can all be persuaded that they would all be much better off if they dumped the whole lot out in the Sargasso sea at some place very deep.

All of the soldiers in the international force would owe allegiance only to the international authority. At first they would be recruited from existing armies and navies, but as the force grew they would be recruited directly, attracted by a remuneration and dignified position greater than that of the ordinary army. They would be divided into two departments, administrative and operative, just as armies and navies of today are. The administration would be under a group of officers elected by the national bodies at first, but later these officers would come from the international authority itself.

Establishing Bases. It has been pointed out that such a force would have a territory of its own for bases, but this, it is suggested, could be worked out along the lines that America pursued in creating the District of Columbia. These bases would have to be chosen for strategic position, ability to accommodate equipment and proximity to sources of supply.

As to finance, it is pointed out that an international police force would cost less—perhaps ten times less—than the combined cost of all the armies of contributing nations. To make the force a success, a sufficient number would have to subscribe to it to make its strength greater than that of any non-subscribing nation or of any probable combination of non-subscribing nations.

Supposing that enough nations actually could be persuaded to turn over their arms, there is still the danger of concentrating under one control a force great enough to defeat any other force on earth. In that case, what happens if a group of officers of the force are suddenly possessed of a not unprecedented delusion of world conquest?

There is another school which believes that the centralization of all the world's air force under an international authority is all that would be necessary to endow the league with a power great enough to defend and enforce its policies against all comers. At least the combination of all air forces, both military and civil in Europe, would eliminate war on that continent, and would tend toward the improvement of European air service generally, is the contention. The air arm is capable of such swift action and is so ideally suited to the policing job, it is felt that nations could be left to build other arms individually, if the airplane were left to the international authority.

These suggestions for increasing the power of the league are of course only of use in helping the league to maintain its present status and to make member nations abide by the covenant—that is, by the status quo. They are of little assistance in eliminating the causes of war. And if war is ever to become a thing of the past, if civilization is ever to survive, the causes of war must be removed.

Accordingly, a suggestion of far deeper effect, and of far greater courage and thought is that of Sir Samuel Hoare, the British foreign secretary, that an inquiry be conducted into the distribution of raw materials, "so that all fear of exclusion or monopoly may be removed for all time."

"Expanding Population." The desire so often expressed for room for expanding populations is largely a pose, for history has shown that very little of the population of the colonizing country ever moves into the colony. There are today only about 300,000 Europeans in the entire African continent, outside the Union of South Africa and some of the colonies bordering the Mediterranean sea. The problem is an economic one which can be removed, Sir Samuel feels, by the institution of equitable trading rights in many of the mandated areas. During the war, raw materials were controlled by governments, and were bought and sold to other governments, at fixed prices. Since the war this buying and selling has returned to private hands and it is not a question of governmental allocation at all.

There are certain abuses which must be avoided or corrected if the free trade principle can be started with respect to colonial mandates. There must be no monopolies which will result in prices that are excessive to the disadvantage of importers, and there must be assurance that prices do not show too much of an advantage to the countries possessing the colonies. Then, too, it must be assured that there will be no deprivation in case of war.

In such a conference about raw materials, it would be necessary to put some sort of international control over arrangements to restrict production and raise prices. It must be done without regard for nationality. Prohibitions of materials to any country or countries for special reasons should not be done without international agreement.

The British Trades Union Congress, with 3,000,000 members, as well as other organizations, has advocated what amounts to a general pooling of all the raw material resources of the world's colonies (except those which are self-governing). Ernest Bivin, leader of the Trades Union Congress, has said: "If raw materials were socially owned, internationally controlled and produced according to the world's requirements, and could be obtained by every industrial nation by purchase and not by conquest, 90 per cent of the causes of war would be removed."

Sir Samuel Hoare's suggestion is to "summon a world economic conference and to place upon its agenda the international control of the sources of supply of raw materials, with the application of the principle of economic equality of opportunity to all nations in the undeveloped regions of the earth." The next move seems to be up to the league.

Uncommon Sense by John Blake

Business consists of building. The successful merchant is the merchant who steadily, if gradually, builds up his trade by convincing his patrons Builders that he knows how to do his job, and can be depended upon to do it. Just now a painter and two assistants are painting my house.

Through the window beside which I am writing I can see them work. They work not hastily, but steadily. This is the third time they have done this work for me.

The first time I observed them they were at work on a house across the street from mine.

I watched them for a while, chiefly out of idle curiosity. I thought they were slothful, so slowly did they ply their brushes.

Down the street a little further another set of painters were engaged. They worked more rapidly, and I made up my mind that when the house needed painting I would send for them.

But at the end of six months the paint on the house up the street was beginning to peel.

In a hot spell that followed a large part of it had curled up and chipped off.

I decided that I wouldn't hire them and gave the work to the crew that had worked so slowly.

And I presently found that I had been wise.

Life consists of building, and it is fatal to make a rush job out of it.

Since I have lived in the town where I am, I have seen half a dozen enterprising fall simply because the men who did them wanted to save time by rushing them.

These men deservedly lost their customers, and presently went into bankruptcy and moved away.

Their competitors who remained behind got their business and as the years passed by got more and more.

The hurry-up fellows could have done as well, if they had really built. But they didn't.

Every activity must be directed by real builders if it is to succeed.

This nation was built up slowly and wisely by groups of great devoted and honest men.

It will continue to grow as long as such men are in control of it.

If it becomes a "rush job" it will fall. I do not think it will fall.

The indications are that when wise and careful men are needed for its councils they will be found.

It may be that some of the work already done will have to be torn out and replaced.

But I am certain that in the main the building will be done as it should be.

As long as you can stand and see, don't step out of any competition in which you have entered.

Never Give Up If you didn't win the one you happened to be in, you at least have had experience, and without experience there can be no success.

Keep thinking about your job. Leave distractions behind. Cultivate the work habit.

You doubtless read about men who wear themselves out in the fruitless efforts for success.

But they are more likely to wear themselves out by bad habits than by over-exertion.

Drop the idea that one of the roads to success is by learning to play a crack game of golf.

I know a dozen young fellows who have told me confidently that the best way to get into business is to be a coming young golfer—because all the "big men" in the club will look up to you, and perhaps give you a job.

But if big business men were anxious to distribute jobs among crack golfers, they would go out behind the caddy house and distribute employment among the little Irish and Italian boys who carry clubs around.

Most of these caddies can out-pace any member of the club, but that doesn't lead big business men to put them to work in their offices.

The competition you need to enter is a competition of brains, not a competition for golf scores or success on a tennis court, nor the knack of pulling a powerful oar in an eight oared shell.

Stardom in these things will get you a lot of acclaim, but will not help you bring home the bread and butter.

The one thing you are after, I take it, is success in your business or your profession.

All right. Go after that. Make it your chief occupation.

Never mind "showing off." You can do that later.

You want to be important by and by. That is a laudable ambition, and I trust that you will attain it. But you never will attain it by learning to do things with your hands and muscles.

What will get you into the limelight that you crave will be your brains, if you have any, and use them in the way they were intended to use when they were given you by the Creator.

And bear in mind that if you don't go after the worth while prizes in life, somebody will beat you to them.

And that somebody will be a chap who under no circumstances will admit that he is licked.

CHAPTER XII—Continued

"If I'd only gone home, Larry. But I was sort of hanging around Greeny's desk, and suddenly—without thinking it out at all—I said to him, 'Oh, by the way, did you hear about the Journal?' If I'd only thought—"

"It happens all the time," Larry said philosophically. "As for Greeny and the talk with Danielson," he presently added, "that's all newspaper policy. 'Catch 'em young and keep 'em terrified' is the idea. You never feel sure of a newspaper job." He swept some papers on his desk together and looked up.

"Have you had dinner?"

"No." Tony suddenly realized that she was starving, and happier, in her excitement and relief, than she had ever been in her life.

"All right. Let's walk around the corner to Pierre's and have Spanish oysters."

"And fruits Marie Jardin."

"You know Pierre's?"

"No, but you and Ruth were talking about it one night. But where's Ruth?" Tony demanded.

"She and her mother went over to the Piedmont house this afternoon; the tenants go in next week. Well,

The Very First Occasion Upon Which They Two Had Been Alone Together.

Tony, this is kind of nice!" Larry said, going with her down the dark stairs.

As she sat opposite him at the little white table, with the smoking oysters between them, and the cheerful simple atmosphere about them scented with Pierre's marvelous salads, Pierre's clear chocolate-flavored coffee, Pierre's toasted French bread, her blue eyes shone upon her companion with a liquid sapphire light. They talked of everything, eagerly, joyously, and Tony presently reminded him innocently that this was the very first occasion upon which they two had been alone together.

Afterward they walked to his parked car, and he drove her uptown to the clubhouse, and walked with her to the doorway.

Just at parting she turned to face him. "Larry, you do forgive me? I am bitterly ashamed and very sorry."

"Seriously, if anyone was to blame—and the whole thing will straighten itself, and no harm will be done—it was I."

"Well, you've made me very happy!" Tony went up in the elevator, her heart was singing.

CHAPTER XIII

There came an interval of weeks when life went on smoothly and joyfully; there was less criticism at the office; Tony began again to feel sure of herself and her work. It was glorious to awaken in the summer mornings to a general vague consciousness that all was right, and to lie comfortably abed reflecting upon all the details that made it so. Tony dawdled through a bath at ten o'clock, idled through a late breakfast gossiping with her always interested little aunt, glanced at her own paper and the rival papers, pulled her white hat to the right angle, slipped into her loose white coat, ascertained that the yellow scratch paper and the pencil were where they belonged, and went out into the dreamy warm fog of the hilly streets ready for anything that the day might bring.

Sometimes it was a debutantes' affair down the Peninsula; sometimes a wedding. Tony went to the women's clubs for presidents' breakfasts, and ate the chicken patties and hot rolls, listened to the charming speeches and the clapping, and smelled the good scents of roses and delicate perfumes and crisp new silks. She went up and down the steps of the city's hand-somest homes; sat in dim great drawing rooms scribbling down names and dates and engagements. Then in July Greenwood sent her down to the Hotel Del Monte to cover the social side of the big golf tournament at Pebble Beach. Tony took Brenda with her for the enchanted week-end, and the sisters wandered through three perfect days of sunshine and gaiety and excitement, and went up at night to their high little dormer-windowed bedroom exulting in their particular share of the general festivity.

And it was there that Brenda told Tony very simply that she was going to be married to Alvin Atwater, a doctor in Monterey. "Isn't it a darling name?" Brenda said, lingering on it fondly. No, he had no money and no practice; he had just graduated from medical college, and he wasn't—no, he wasn't handsome.

Tony, even before meeting him, was extraordinarily elated at the news. She had seen the change in her sister; seen Brenda's quicker flushes and heard her softer laughter; she had teased her about some sultry unknown ever since the holidays at Carmel in May. If Brenda liked the long, lean, pale young doctor with the enormous hands and fan ears, then Tony would like him too.

Brenda and Alvin would live in Monterey on nothing. "Except that his father said he would send us five hundred dollars to start in on," said Brenda modestly.

Tony, at Larry's suggestion, had gone to see Ruth shortly after the Journal incident and had frankly confessed to her own stupidity and carelessness in the matter. And Ruth, adamant until the full acknowledgment was made, had instantly softened, as Larry had predicted she would, and had forgiven Tony fully and gladly. So that it was natural for Tony presently, in her own glowing and animated way, to tell the Bellamys of her sister's plans.

"He's one of those tall, limp, asparagus-colored men," she said of her prospective brother-in-law. "He sticks way out of his collar, and he sort of curves himself around Betsy like an anaconda. He adores her so it makes him perspire when he looks at her!"

"They're to be married—?" Larry asked.

"In September."

"Tony," Ruth said, on one of these August days, "why don't you come to Santa Barbara with me?"

"Come—?" The mere thought left Tony's cheeks paler for excitement.

"Why not? You're going to have a week's vacation."

"But I thought you were staying for a month?"

"I am. But you could come back when you liked."

"You're no cripple," Larry contributed.

"Anyway," he said in an odd indifferent tone that impressed Tony as puzzling at the moment, "anyway, I come back and forth with the car every week-end. If you and I started at—say, five o'clock on Monday, I'd have you in your office at noon. We'd get some breakfast in San Luis or Paso Robles. I've done it lots of times."

"Oh, Ruth, Santa Barbara!" Tony said, on a long sigh of bliss.

Generously, enthusiastically, Brenda shared with Tony a week later the fun of packing the bag for Santa Barbara. Tony, in a state of indescribable excitement, set the alarm for four o'clock and was dressed and ready when Larry's motor horn gave the signal below. The empty, dirty, shabby street was transformed with the dawn; the air was chill; there was mystical silence, mystical light abroad. Larry got out of the car to see that she and her suitcase were comfortably bestowed in the back seat. Tony leaned over Ruth's shoulder to give her a kiss; they were away.

The way ran smoothly across quiet, deserted Market street, out past the big hospital whose elevator halls still showed red squares of light, down to the big open highway that was bounded on one side by flat fields hardly touched by real estate signs and small ventures in suburban homes, and on the other by the languid lower waters of the bay. Birds were flapping lazily over the marshes; a train puffed majestically along the embankment, throwing short staccato puffs of steam into the wet morning air.

There was little talk among the three as they rolled contentedly along; it was enough to be alive in the glorious summer dawn and see the sun rise over the great shoulders of the eastern mountains, and send long streamers of warm early gold across the orchards. San Jose, Morgan Hill, Gilroy, all the little valley towns were sound asleep, but when they presently reached Salinas chimneys were smoking and early housewives were astir, and quite suddenly Tony was conscious of a sharp stab of hunger.

"Breakfast here or further down? It's not quite eight," Larry presently said.

"Oh, breakfast here!" the women exclaimed together.

They got out, a little stiff after the more than a hundred chilly miles, followed their man into the clean little bright breakfast room, fell upon sliced figs, smoking hot coffee, brown toast, and fried eggs with the appetites of wolves.

Tony and Ruth took off their coats and stowed them in shipshape fashion before getting back into the car. The sunshine had strengthened into a threat of real heat, now, and the fields and hill ridges between which the road wound were scented with dried tarweed and the rich smell of apples and prunes. Wheat dazzled gold in the light, and the mountains off to the southeast gave off little dazzling spirals of oily hot air.

Presently they turned west and were out on the cliffs above the ocean; for a hundred magic miles the road followed the lip of the sea. Ruth, on the front seat, went to sleep; Larry yawned, smoking one cigarette after another. But Tony watched alertly in insatiable interest and fascination, and was still wide-awake and cheerful when they reached their journey's end, a comfortable hotel cottage in a garden, at four o'clock on a burning afternoon. Ruth preferred a tub bath and a nap, but at five Tony and Larry were in the cool salt breakers, the girl almost mad with delight.

"I tell you that the ocean does something to me!"

"I see it does," Larry shouted back, as a great wave caught them.

Tony found her room small and warm in the last heat of the day, but she herself was made anew, and could unpack and find a book and stretch herself for an hour's idling before dinner with a sense of complete luxury and comfort. Ruth was evidently asleep, for there was no sound from the room next door. From the street came the purr of passing motors, and of the voices of other swimmers coming up cool and rested from the sea. There was a strip of garden just outside her opened French window; roses were glowing there, and the tall spikes of plox; there were eucalyptus trees; a sprinkler was sending a refreshing wet sound through the warm air.

Dressed in the orange cross-barred organdy, Tony reflected that she might be wearing the least expensive clothes in Santa Barbara tonight, but that that did not mean that she was the least attractive girl. Evidence to the contrary gratified her on all sides, as she walked at Ruth's side across a stretch of blazing garden to the hotel for dinner. And presently there was a young man at their table to make their quartette complete and add to this enchanted night the further enchantment of a new affair. For he liked her instantly, did Mr. Duncan O'Connor, demanding of her pathetically where she had been all his life, when the music began, rising automatically to dance with her.

"Antoinette—it's a name to dream on," said Duncan O'Connor, dancing. "It's my favorite name. Taft is too long for me to remember; my brain isn't very good. This is my favorite music in the whole world; I mean it. You're what? Larry's niece?"

"No, just a friend. He and I and Ruth have been friends for ever so long. No; I'm the society reporter on the Call."

"I'm on a newspaper here. I half own it."

"Why, how old are you?" Tony looked up at her companion curiously, as they walked back to the table.

"Nineteen, poppet."

"Have you reached ages already?" Larry asked, pulling out Tony's chair. "I haven't reached Antoinette's," Duncan said modestly.

"He's got a certain line," Larry warned her. "But don't believe one word he says."

The music recommenced, and this time it was Larry who rose and held open his arms for Tony. Tony rose obediently, but for some reason she found it oddly exciting, thrilling, even frightening to move to the throbbing of the music over the wide floor with him, his arms about her, and her heart beating so close to his own heart.

"Ruth wouldn't dance?"

"I asked her. She never does."

She was quite breathless when she went back to her salad; afterward she danced with Duncan again, and with a boy that Duncan knew. Then Larry and Ruth said that they were going back to the cottage, and Tony said she would go too; they were all tired. On the way back she said that she meant to get up and swim before breakfast.

"It's a date," said Larry. "I'm playing golf at ten, but I'd love it at eight. And we can breakfast afterward."

"I'm playing bridge," Ruth said. "Alice telephoned about it. I don't believe I'll get up early and swim. Tomorrow's going to be a scorcher."

"You can amuse yourself somehow tomorrow, Tony?"

"Amuse myself! I could amuse myself here for a thousand years!"

"You make this dull old place seem fun!" Larry said.

CHAPTER XIV

The week flew by; it was unlike any other time Tony had ever known. The hours seemed dreamlike, unreal, shot with unearthly sunshine, perfumed with flowers that were sweeter than other flowers, set to the deep organ-toned voice of the tireless green ocean into which she flung herself shouting with joy every morning and every afternoon. Cool and sweet in fresh linen, she went with Ruth to afternoon readings, to one or two teas; she became a familiar figure at the Beach club; her blue bathing suit drying on the line, her blue eyes dancing over the lunch room with their appetite for joy and adventure never quenched.

Larry came down on Friday night; Saturday, Sunday flashed by, the holiday was over. Again the linens and organdies were packed, and again the alarm was set.

Duncan O'Connor had come up to the cottage to say good-bye a few hours earlier, in the twilight, and she had walked with him in the garden for a few minutes, and let him kiss her. Somehow it didn't seem important, but it all fitted into the dream of youth and joy and beauty and autumn beside the sea. She was not in love with noisy handsome Duncan, but she liked having him think himself in love with her.

Ruth was not awake when she and Larry crept from the house the following morning in the soft dawn; dew was heavy on the garden, and a blanket of fog shut off the sea. Tony felt strangely sad; the dripping awnings and beaded spears of grass seemed melancholy to her. Almost in silence she established herself in the front seat beside Larry; he threw her a rug to wrap about her knees, and she was glad of its warmth.

"Next stop for breakfast?" Larry announced, turning up his coat collar, pulling on his driving gloves.

"And my party is over!" the girl mourned. The burned brown hills, the veiled ocean, slipped by; reluctantly the sun pierced the land fog and drove it away, and Tony saw the flashing light of the new day reflected blazingly in the windows of the sleeping little houses along the road.

Breakfast at Santa Maria, and more miles and miles and miles clicked off on the meter. She and Larry talked; presently he told her that it seemed to him the shortest run he had ever made from Santa Barbara.

Then, only a few miles out of the city, suddenly on the left there was the looming shadow of a truck thundering out of a crossroad, and the veering of the big car that was coming swiftly toward them. Their own car, reeling dizzily, was driven off into the soft shoulder of the highway, slipping, slipping, wrenched desperately by Larry's hands back toward the line—slipping in spite of it—and the steep hill and the bay just below—

Tony gasped; heard him say sharply, "Keep quiet, we're all right!" before there was a second of sickening horror, and the alteration of flying white sky and brown grass past the window, and the rending and smashing of wood. Then an awful silence, and a gentle little tinkle of glass.

She was struggling with a door above her head; she was out on the grass, her hand to help him. Larry was beside her. Tony looked up a steep hillside at a fringe of cars and spectators against the sky above; looked down at the crawling gray level of water. She felt physically sick; tottered dizzily on her feet; was suddenly safe and tight against Larry's heart.

There Was a Second of Sickening Horror.

"Tony, my darling, my darling—you're all right!"

She shut her eyes, rested her head weakly against Larry's shoulder. Immediately two or three officers were beside them, were talking, were helping her up the hill. From somewhere a taxi appeared, and Tony was bundled into it and found herself alone with Larry again, speeding toward the city.

He kept his arm tightly about her, and she rested her head against him; they did not speak for a long while. "Home, huh, Tony?"

"I—I think so."

"You were a brick; a perfect brick. I never saw him at all! What did you do, open the door?"

"I don't remember; I must have. I saw you—all tumbled over the wheel." She shut her eyes. "I had the feeling of death—death close, and—and inevitable!"

"You were a brick," he said again. When they reached the dingy Fulton street doorway he went up with her to the shabby little apartment on the top floor; it was the first time he had seen it. Aunt Meggy and Aunt Sally were there; Tony shakily introduced Larry and gave them an idea of what had occurred.

It was one o'clock. Tony washed her pale dirty face and treated the little cut on her forehead. Before they went away she showed Larry her father's photograph and her mother's, and the view that lay below the sitting-room windows. Then he took her downtown, and they had delicious soup and a thick steak and coffee.

She was still pale; too much excited to eat very much. But the hot drink brought back her color, and when Larry left her at the office door she looked more like herself.

"I'm not going to say anything about this to Ruth, Tony."

"The car will probably be in shape by the end of the week, and if it isn't, I'll just wire her that I'm coming down by train; I often do. Tony," said Larry, looking down at her from his great height, in parting, and smiling his kindly smile, "it was kind of nice to see you home."

"You're going to have a black-and-blue mark on your cheek."

"I suppose so. It feels sore. You may be more shaken up yourself than you realize," Larry said. "I'll telephone tonight and see how you feel. What time do you get home tonight?"

"Monday? Oh, for dinner. Around six somewhere. Betsy and Cliff are dining with her young man's father at the Palace, and Bruce's away; he's been on a ranch all summer, you know."

"I've got a business dinner, worse luck," Larry said, "or I'd invite myself up."

She smiled in sheer surprise and pleasure.

"Oh, wouldn't that be fun! I never—I was going to say I never thought of asking you," Tony said artlessly. "But we'd love it, some night, if you'd come!"

"I will come. And I'll never try to kill you again."

"Good-by, Tony."

"Good-by."

Tony turned into the Call building; went upstairs. She reported duly to Greenwood's desk; he was not there. Telephone, typewriter, telephone again; Tony compiled her daily social column in the usual way. Mollie Mackay came in and observed, in a stream of odd gossip, that the Journal and the Examiner dealt might go through, after all; she had heard that four big offices on the floor above the Examiner's regular rooms were to be turned over to Lawrence Bellamy.

Tony had told some of the men of the office of the morning's close escape from death; she felt languidly unwilling to reopen the whole story with Mollie. Somehow it suffocated her to talk, today.

Mae Ethyl Muzzy was being pathetic and feminine and helpless under the gallant tutelage of Arch Slosser. Mae was the most recent addition to the staff; Tony fancied that she would not last long. She had appeared a week or two earlier, the blondest blonde ever seen outside of a doll shop. She was to do "feature" stories. Her only interest was in the men with whom she found herself surrounded. Some of them capitulated to her at once; the others ignored her; there seemed to be no middle course with Mae.

History of Taxation

Taxation has had a long history and the meaning of taxation has undergone shifts as taxation itself has changed. Tribute in Greece and Rome was an exaction laid by the conqueror upon the defeated and was one of the chief sources of supporting both Greece and Rome. Cicero in one of his writings spoke of taxation with horror as something that might take place in Rome if things kept on going from bad to worse. But tribute in one form or another lingered on until in the modern state it gradually made way for taxation of free people imposed upon themselves to carry on public activities. Careful study of taxation shows gradual evolution through the centuries from the idea of tribute into the idea of taxation.

Armies That Crossed the Alps

The Alpine system covers nearly the whole of Switzerland, a great part of Northern Italy, several departments of France and a large part of Austria. The historical passages of the Alps have been those by Alexander the Great, Julius Caesar, to attack the Helvetians; Hannibal, Napoleon, who crossed the Alps into Russia, only to find that the retreating Russians had left Moscow in ruins. The greater part of the French army died in recrossing the Alps into France.

Dressy Frock Fitting Budget

PATTERN 9545

"As easy as pie" to fit between the graceful raglan sleeves, a wedge-shaped yoke is a distinguishing feature of this rather dressy, yet inexpensive afternoon frock. You'll find it hard to decide which sleeve treatment is the more charming, the one that tapers to a snugly buttoned cuff or the one which stops just short of the wrist. Don't forget to note the new, gored skirt with its subtle flare. If it's a dressy dress you want, black satin is ideal; but if you're out for color, choose a richly hued novelty synthetic.

Pattern 9545 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 3 1/2 yards 39 inch fabric and 3/4 yard contrasting. Complete diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle, Pattern Dept., 232 West Eighteenth St., New York, N. Y.

World Camera

The world aerial camera, which will operate in one operation a ground area of 700 square miles, more than twice the area of New York city, at an altitude of 23,000 feet, has recently been built.

IN MEMORY

How our hearts were saddened when dear Grandma Shelton passed away. Although she had lived her allotted days and was here on borrowed time, it was a loss to give her up. She was one of our oldest pioneers and a sweet lovable old lady who will be missed. Her lovable disposition, her beautiful white hair and lovely face made her attractive and loved. Now we will see no more her tottering steps going to the place she loved, her church. She was loyal as long as she could walk, to the church, and when she no longer could go I am sure she prayed for its members and longed to be there. Her life was an inspiration and her faithfulness will linger in the minds of many and especially her family.

Many things transpire that are soon forgotten, but a life like Grandma Shelton's we can never get away from. Although her name was not seen in big headlines in the newspapers, in her humble little home, in the community and church she was quietly making a record that will live on throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. Yes, we say Will Rogers was a great man because of his humor and good deeds, but Grandma Shelton was great because of her religion, her love and loyalty to her God, her home and church. What is greater or more noble and more meritorious than a life like hers? I loved Grandmother Shelton because of her life, because she was a friend of my mother and a sister in her church; I loved her sweet face and gentleness; because she was a friend to the ministers and had encouraging words for those of God's servants and many others. Her little home looks lonely as we pass by. She was a companion and mother to be praised by her family; a true pioneer of the old type. Why not call her great?

She gave to the world 5 children, but God had need of 2 and carried one home in infancy and one, Mrs. Minnie Killian, was called to her reward a few years ago. Three have been spared for a purpose, to live and work for Him while they dwell here on His feet stool. What an opportunity we have, and what a privilege to work for the Master as Grandmother Shelton did. She has gone now and we will have to get along without her but we have a hope of meeting her some day in that city of gold where we will not have to say goodbye any more and separate, but can dwell in peace and love for all time. She left 13 grandchildren and 22 great grandchildren to call her blessed.

Grandmother, while you are "walking," not "tottering" as you did here, on the pavement of gold, viewing the beautiful sights of Heaven, we are here being tempted of the wicked one and tried, sometimes beyond what we can hardly endure.

Oh what a day that will be, When our Savior's face we'll see

And then meet grandmother face to face

At the end of our earthly race. A friend Mrs. O. R. Calwell

'M'S SYSTEM

TELLS OF THINGS TO DO FOR HENS

"Sound judgment counts for a whole lot in poultry raising," says C. S. Johnson, Manager of the Poultry Department of the Gruen Mills. "Any way you look at it," he says, "the business of raising chickens calls for a lot of good, common sense. Some make a go of it with Leghorns, others with Plymouth Rocks, and others with Rhode Island Reds. There are successes in New England as well as in the South and West. There are failures, too. No matter what the breed or the section of the country, the difference is usually in the common sense of the man behind the hens."

Outlines 8-Point Plan.

In getting the most from hens through the winter, Johnson calls attention to what he terms the 8-point common sense plan of making hens pay. Every flock owner will do well to question himself on each of Johnson's eight points to see if his flock is getting a chance to lay winter eggs. Poultry raisers need not go to any great expense in making the necessary changes that will bring about the desired conditions for health in the flock and extra eggs in the nest all through the winter. Sometimes just a little remodeling or just a change of ration is all that's required:

- (1) Give hens a warm, dry, comfortable, well-ventilated place to live.
- (2) Don't overcrowd—allow 3 1/2 to 4 square feet of floor space per bird.
- (3) See that birds have plenty of hopper and water fountain space.
- (4) Provide 12 to 15 nests for each 100 hens—gather eggs 3 times daily.
- (5) Keep things clean.
- (6) Cull out diseased, weak, or poorly developed birds; also birds that persist in laying eggs of inferior quality.
- (7) Use artificial lights to lengthen the feeding period in winter.
- (8) Be sure that the laying mash contain puratene (Pro-vitamin A) so that the layers in winter will get enough Vitamin A for springtime health and springtime production.
