Cultivate Quietness.
Quiet contemplation is something that needs cultivation among sane minds; a demand for constant excitement characterizes a nervous wreck.

It requires a good deal of sporting blood merely to carry on in a world of doubt and fear.

Cardui Helped Three Times

"I used Cardui, when a girl, for cramps, and it helped then," writes Mrs. Ike Wright, of Sealy, Texas. Next, after marriage, she reports having taken Cardui when she felt weak, nervous and restless before her children were born. And during middle life, it helped her again.
"I was miserable," she explains. "I did not have an appetite. I was very blue and upset. I remembered Cardui had helped me, so I took it again and soon began to pick up. I ate and had more strength. I kept up the Cardui and did not have any more trouble. Is it any wonder that I recommend Cardui to all my friends?"
Thousands of women testify Cardui benefited them. If it does not benefit YOU, consult a physician.

Talks About

Treating Hemorrhoids

SOME idea of how the injection method of treating hemorrhoids or piles has taken the place of the old method of removing them by a surgical operation can be gathered from the report in New England Journal of Medicine of Doctor Balch of the Rectal Clinic, Massachusetts General hospital, Boston.

Since the clinic was organized in 1928 the number of operations for removal of hemorrhoids done in the hospital has steadily decreased. In 1929 there were 42 cases; in 1930, 28; and in 1931, 8; and in 1932 only 5. These figures show pretty well how successful is the injection treatment of the average case of hemorrhoids. During that time, 359 cases were treated by the injection method and Doctor Balch concludes that the injection treatment of internal hemorrhoids (not the kind that hang outside the body) can be satisfactorily carried out in about 85 to 90 per cent of cases seen, with from 5 to 15 per cent having to return for further treatment within three to five years.

The treatment is almost painless and practically free from serious consequences. The patients are satisfied with the result.

After having treated more than 5,000 cases of hemorrhoids by the injection method Doctor Fansler of Minneapolis in the Journal of the Iowa State Medical Society, re-emphasizes that only internal hemorrhoids that are not fibrous are suitable for injection.

Cases Easily Cured
While it is very gratifying to know that the great majority of cases, (that is really the average case), can be cured by this simple method there are thousands of cases in which this method cannot be used; and only surgery can effect the cure.

For those whose cases are not suitable for the injection method Doctor Fansler gives most encouraging information. In former years the operation meant ten days to three weeks in hospital with considerable distress immediately following and for some days after the operation, aside from the expense and loss of time from employment.

How Surgery Works
Doctor Fansler describes an operation now performed which, followed by hot Sitz baths the next day, and the bowels moved by an oil or water enema on the second day, allows the patient to leave the hospital usually on the fifth day after the operation.

The thought then is that no one in ordinary health should suffer with hemorrhoids now that the injection method will cure most cases, and the surgical method does not mean so much pain, expense, or time lost.

Treatment of Rheumatism
Every health writer speaks of the various "causes" of rheumatism, pointing out particularly that the infection of the teeth, tonsils, gall bladder, and intestine cause most cases. He points out further that of the various cases of heart disease, rheumatism stands first on the list.

However, after a patient is afflicted with rheumatism, which means that the trouble has likely been in the system for months or years, what he wants to know is the best way of treating rheumatism while the cause is being sought and removed.

There are a number of forms of treatment—use of vaccines, cutting down on starch foods—but one wants something to allay the pain and prevent the joints from becoming permanently stiff.

Patients Restored
What is known as "physical" treatment is considered the most effective method to prevent stiff joints and restore the patient to an active life.

Dr. L. C. R. L'Estrange Orme in Medical Press outlines this physical treatment as follows:
1. Maintaining and increasing the amount of movement of joints and preventing them from becoming stiff or fixed by massage.
2. Improving the circulation around the joint by some form of heat—cabinet baths, hot towels, various forms of electric heat.
3. Improving the general circulation of the body and improving the skin action by stimulant baths.
4. Correcting any deformity and giving support, if necessary, by mechanical means—belts, braces, splints.
5. Improving the general health by a suitable diet and by encouraging as much exercise as is possible.

The most important forms of physical treatment of rheumatism then are heat in some form, massage and exercise.
Dr. R. Kovacs, New York, in Medical Journal and Record, states that physical measures are an invaluable aid in the constitutional treatment of chronic arthritis (rheumatism) and are the mainstay of treatment for relief of pain and stiffness. There is rarely a patient in whom properly selected and applied measures would not bring some immediate relief enabling him to carry on much easier.

ITALY REALIZES DREAM OF EMPIRE

But From Where Will the Capital Come to Develop Ethiopia's Unexploited Resources? And Will Italians Colonize Country?

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WITH the annexation of Ethiopia by Italy, the Dark Continent of Africa now consists entirely of "colonies" of the European nations, with the single exception of Liberia, a tiny negro republic on the Atlantic coast near the equator and just south of the Sahara desert.

Africa covers 12,000,000 square miles and is the home of 150,000,000 people. For four hundred years the continent has been a colonial pie sliced up by the swords of half a dozen nations. Much of the territorial holdings in it are in the hands of three minor nations which are hardly in a position to defend their holdings against the countries which in the past few decades have asserted their power more substantially.

These three powers are Spain, Portugal and Belgium. They rule over 1,850,000 square miles of Africa and among their colonial subjects are 17,500,000 people.

With her new colony, which Mussolini says will be developed to its fullest extent immediately, Italy now has possession of Libya, a vast stretch of country directly across the Mediterranean in a southerly direction from the mother country; Eritrea, along the southern end of the Red sea; Ethiopia, which includes the headwaters of the Nile, and Italian Somaliland, which lies along the Indian ocean and borders Ethiopia on the south.

Flanks Britain's "Life-Line."

This means that Italy has become an empire, that Victor Emmanuel is no longer merely a king, but an emperor. The only barrier that separates the two major sections of this vast colonial estate is the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. Italy is now firmly entrenched along both sides of the Mediterranean and at the southern mouth of the Red sea, becoming what is probably the dom-

Spain's Share Sparsely Settled.

Even more sparse is the population of Portugal's several African colonies, chief among which are Angola, bordering the Atlantic coast to the south of the Belgian Congo, and Mozambique along the Indian ocean on the mainland opposite Madagascar. The Portuguese territory embraces a little less inating factor along the life-line of Britain's empire.

Britain, with her prestige falling apart because of the total ineffectuality of her campaign in the League of Nations to stop the Italian course of empire, and the utter failure of her fleet to bluff Il Duce into backing down, now finds herself in a most embarrassing position.

Not only has she suffered great loss of respect in the eyes of the world, but she has ceased to dominate the route to India through the Suez canal. Her line of colonies which stretch from Cairo to the Cape of Good Hope are no longer flanked by a nation without sufficient power to worry anybody, but by the colonies of a nation which is not only powerful in Africa but in Europe itself. And the source of much of the all-important irrigation of Egyptian lands is now in the hands of a power which is at present hostile.

Of the African colonies, Britain's are, however, undoubtedly the best. More than one-fourth of the continent is covered by the Sahara desert, and there is another large desert, the Kalahari, in the South. The average density of the population in Africa is about twelve to a square mile, as compared with about forty to a square mile in the United States. The density of population of the British colonies is everywhere above the average for the continent, while the possessions of every other power have an average density below the continental average.

France Is Biggest Holder.

France and Great Britain now share equally about two-thirds of Africa. The remainder is divided up between Italy, Belgium, Spain and Portugal.

It is France who is the largest holder of territory in Africa. She has the Island of Madagascar in the Indian ocean off the southeast African coast, Morocco, Algiers and Tunis. But since so much of her holdings include desert land—she virtually owns the Sahara—her 4,232,000 square miles of territory have an average population of only nine souls to the square mile. Her African colonial subjects number about 38,500,000 in all.

Britain's colonies are the home of approximately 65,000,000 persons. Including Egypt, these colonies cover 3,925,000 square miles, making the population about 16 to the square mile. The British colonies, which stretch the full length of Africa on the eastern side of the continent, are the most inhabitable sections.

In annexing Ethiopia, Italy will have added about 350,000 square miles to war, and the people are largely nomadic in nature.

Colonization Is Difficult.

Mussolini claimed a double purpose in his conquest of the ancient kingdom of Abyssinia—room for his overcrowded people to expand, and the obtain-ment of raw materials for Italian industries. But Italian people are apparently not so willing to become colonists in an unpleasant and uncomfortable land. In Eritrea, which has been Italian now for 50 years, there are only about 100 colonists.

Recent picture of the defeated Emperor Haile Selassie.

The entire Ogaden area, with the provinces of Boran and Bale, so completely conquered by the forces of General Graziani, are of little or no value, being principally desert. He has not yet moved into the rich agricultural regions of the Arussi plateau, although that is scheduled to be his next step.

Cotton and other forms of agriculture are considered possible in Ogaden, but only if extensive and expensive irrigation is provided. That is true of most of the regions which Italy has conquered in Ethiopia—they must, if they are to be of much value, be developed by tremendous outlays of capital, and fresh capital is a commodity in which Italy is lacking to a disturbing degree, especially since her trade has been pinched by the sanctions placed upon her by members of the League of Nations.

There has been some romantic gossip of vast oil deposits in Ethiopia, especially in the Ogaden district, but these have been largely denied by the facts. What mineral resources are present will be found for the larger part in the Danakil country to the northeast, but even these are uncertain. There is some salt, which Italy mined during the war—at a cost all out of proportion to its value in peace times.

Italy Must Aid Colonists.

The important part of Ethiopia is the central plateau, whose population is the traditional enemy of the tribes on the outskirts below. Here it is that Mussolini plans to put most of his colonists. The country is agriculturally rich and the climate, while it is not pleasant to white people by any means, is at least livable. While the plateau may be said to be conquered, it is not yet entirely occupied by Italian armies, the Golljam and Shoa being still unoccupied.

If the colonization of the plateau is to be successful, the colonists must be given a great deal of aid by the mother country. The fact that the colonists will start from scratch will be a boon to Italian industry, for the demand for heavy goods for the building of a new nation should give millions more work. It is believed that the colonists will be able to raise cereals and live stock, finding a market for them in Italy and selling them for prices which will be higher than the world market for the same goods.

One of the principal problems facing the new Ethiopian emperor and his viceroy, General Badoglio, is what to do with the natives. It is hardly possible that they can be driven from the land; they certainly will not be allowed to compete with the colonists on equal terms, for they will be able to work for far smaller compensation, the Italians being unable to compete with their low standard of living. The situation will be much the same as that which the Japanese peasants found in attempting to colonize Manchuria.

With the exception of some little platinum and gold, the mineral resources of Ethiopia are largely a fable. The wealth, if any, which it will add to Italy will have to be worked out of the land in hard Italian sweat—and with the capitalization of hundreds of millions of dollars. Italy hasn't got the hundreds of millions.

As a matter of fact, the war of conquest up to the capture of Addis Ababa and the flight of Emperor Haile Selassie had cost the Italians approximately $500,000,000, or more than 100 times what the United States paid Russia for Alaska. The cost of pacifying the country will bring the war bill over the billion dollar mark.

But she has now fulfilled what Mussolini says has been the dream of Fascism for 15 years. Italy has become an empire. It sounds big. And it earns Il Duce invaluable plaudits from his people.

TALL TALES

Steel Drivin' Man

HOEL S. BISHOP, who knows the history of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad backward as well as forward, and vice versa, has often heard the old-timers tell about the difficulties they had in driving a tunnel through Cruze mountain. Among the negro laborers they hired was a young fellow named John Henry, a likely lad only seven or eight feet tall.

Right away they discovered that John Henry was a mighty good hammer man, even though he hadn't got his growth yet. He was so fast with his 12-pound hammer that he wore out its handle every nine minutes. He always had to have a boy standing by with a pail of ice water so he could keep the hammer from melting.

The result of this was that the C. and O. had to hire a gang of Tony Beaver's lumberjacks to log off the whole state of West Virginia in order to provide John Henry with enough hammer handles to keep him busy. Also they had to make the Potomac river run backwards so there'd be enough water on hand to keep his hammer cool.

Just about the time John Henry began to wear out a handle every six and three-quarter minutes, a fellow showed up with a steam-driven drill and challenged John Henry to a drilling contest. "Boss man, how many days' stah you-all want so's I won't ketch up with yu' too soon?" asked John Henry. The steam drill man said they'd start at the same time, so at it they went. And, as everybody in the South knows, John Henry beat dat steam drill down.

Rock was high, po' John was low. Well, he laid down his hammah an' he died.

Laid down his hammah an' he died. It was too bad that the contest resulted fatally for the victor. If John Henry had ever grown up to be a full-size man, he might have hung up some real records as a steel drivin' man.

The Good Ship "Wobble"

THE first stories about the good ship "Wobble" were written by Frank Ward O'Malley and printed in the New York Sun, but other newspaper men have added details to its history. It was "O'Malley of the Sun," however, who first interviewed its master, Capt. Heinle Hassenpfeffer, and discovered that he wasn't quite sane. Captain Heinle had been a second story man in New York. When he sought new fields for his talents in Africa and found that the houses there were only one story high, the disappointment unbalanced his mind.

For that matter, his ship was a bit unbalanced also. It had only one paddle-wheel and that was mounted on the starboard side. So when the "Wobble" started out on a voyage with its cargo of subways and artesian wells, it just steamed around and around in a circle and never got anywhere.

To correct this defect Captain Heinle junked the engine and paddle-wheel, installed masts and sails and set out across the Atlantic. Four and a half days out, the ship ran into what seemed to be a dense black cloud. But the captain soon found that it was a flock of mosquitoes. By the time the "Wobble" had passed through them, the insects had eaten off every scrap of sail and tarred rope from the ship.

For a month the ship drifted with the tides. Off the coast of South America it again ran into a cloud of mosquitoes. By a queer coincidence it was the very same flock that had stripped the ship. Captain Heinle knew they were the same because every mosquito wore a pair of canvas overalls, made from his sails, held up by tarred rope suspenders!

A Shout for Bellow

AROUND Horse Cave, Kentucky, the natives will tell you somewhat proudly that you'll never be able to get the best of Herman Bellow. Herman's knowledge came from a study of nature in the numerous caverns of his neighborhood.

Once an Englishman visited Horse Cave, so the story goes, and engaged in argument with Herman. The result was a bet, the loser to be the man who couldn't answer his own question.

Said Herman: "Why is it a woodchuck leaves no dirt when he digs a hole?"

"That's your question," retorted the Englishman.

"Because he starts to dig the hole at the bottom instead of at the top," replied Herman proudly.

"But how does he get to the bottom?" the Briton wanted to know.

"That's your question!" cracked Herman Bellow.

The "Bad Lands"

"Bad Lands" is the name given in the western part of the United States to certain sterile regions. They are characterized by an almost entire absence of vegetation, and by the labyrinth of fantastic forms into which the soft strata of clays, sands and gravels have been carved through the action of wind and water. The best examples are found east of the Black Hills in South Dakota, though similar formations occur in Wyoming, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake
© Bell Syndicate—WNU Service

When today we speak of a pioneer we have in mind a man with a long rifle and a coon skin cap who makes his livelihood by discovering new rivers and brings back from his wanderings the skins of beavers and badgers and muskrats.

Today the pioneers have disappeared from the backwoods. One of the reasons for this is that there aren't any more backwoods, another is that pelts are scarce south of the Canadian line, and it hardly pays to gather them.

The pioneers of today are scientists and engineers and chemists. They explore, not the woods, but fields which for many years were never opened.

It is they who build ships that fly through the air at hundreds of miles an hour, and who are building locomotives that speed almost a quarter as fast as that.

It is they who create useful fabrics which a few years ago were wholly unknown, but which now have become necessities to the practice of many of the modern arts.

Many of these pioneers are physicians and surgeons, who by their skill can save lives which a few years ago would certainly have been lost, and who can restore to strength and activity victims of injuries whose cases would in 1920 have been given up as hopeless.

Every year colleges and technical schools are turning out men who will become pioneers in industry of all kinds, and whose labors may work revolutions in many directions.

There will come a time, I am convinced, when these men will, by complete utilization of the water powers of the country, do away with coal as used as fuel—though they may continually utilize the coal for dyes and other products needed by chemistry.

Elemental gases never known before are widely employed.

Helium, long unknown, now bears dirigibles through the air, and will prove indispensable in time of war.

Here is a pioneering which need not destroy trees or sweep wild creatures out of its way, which has discovered and developed forces heretofore utterly unknown, and which rapidly, by leaps and bounds, is supplying to mankind treasures of the earth never before suspected.

What it may accomplish in the future we today have not even a guess. But certainly it will carry on its program of research and continue as the days go by to lighten the world's burdens, and to supply man with a leisure which he can employ vastly to his own advantage.

I am beginning to wonder what the people of this country do with the time that they save.

Time and Distance
Travel across the American continent, and if you keep an eye out of the car window you will constantly see gangs of men hard at work reducing curves, building tunnels and in other ways shortening the time required to move trains from one place to another.

The streamlined type of train has further decreased the time of travel from coast to coast.

Meanwhile men have become air minded, and the journey from New York to San Francisco or Los Angeles, which used to require months in the old ox cart times can be made in a few hours.

Transcontinental journeys have become a matter of a few days. But what does the man who, after leaving New York, suddenly finds himself set down across the bay in San Francisco do with the time he has saved?

As a rule, nothing important. He talks to his friends about the amazing speed with which he covered the continent; perhaps he sells a bill of goods, then goes out to see the seals, or takes a trip up to the top of Mount Tamalpais.

But has he gained anything by the rapidity of his journey? I doubt it. It seems to me that if we would eliminate all the mad rush to get to places in the least possible time, we would gain much more pleasure and instruction.

I do not think we ought to devote quite as much time to a transatlantic journey as Columbus did on his, but I do believe, that if we took time out now and then to look around, and get acquainted with the people we meet in distant sections of the country it would be better for us all.

A child can make a trip to his local Main street and back, and get all manner of interest and instruction out of it.

Men and women who travel merely for pleasure have no end of fun. But it has been my experience in cross-continental travel that most of those who engage in it are far more interested in just "getting there" than they are by what they see and hear and experience on their way.

I do not advocate the "back in your own back yard" method of spending a life time.

But even that is better than dashing madly here and there so that we afterward can brag of the brief time we consumed.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home, dozing at the fireplace, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he meets Judge Hambridge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambridge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambridge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter. Barry suggests he can help as Jack Ridder, and Mrs. Rogers agrees. Judge Hambridge delivers a decision in the condemnation suit in which Kelly had been interested. Barry cables Mrs. Ridder for $2,000. Winslow takes Rogers' case. Barry gets a job on the Globe under his true name. The editor, Ernie Harwood, assigns him to cover the Kelly murder. Barry suspects the Filipino servant of Kelly, when Barry visits the Hambridges, the judge denies the accident he witnessed occurred near the scene of the Kelly murder, where such an accident had occurred. Patricia bids him: "Watch your step, Mr. Gilbert."

CHAPTER V—Continued

Suppose the Judge had killed Kelly. What did that prove? "I'm assuming that Kelly compelled this decision," Barry reminded himself. "Well, if he did, why should it have been filed after the compulsion was removed? It was filed the next morning. That certainly indicates that the Judge knew nothing about Kelly's death."

Once more, Barry heard the hall clock strike three.

"I'm arguing in circles," he thought. "And getting nowhere. That's where I've been getting all week. Gunning things up, too. Tipping off witnesses, and making a complete nuisance of myself. I said three things were clear, and they weren't, but two are. I've landed myself in a mess, and the sooner I get out of it the better for everybody."

"If I clear out, and let things take their course, I might come back, some day, when I've really made good."

His hand still hurt the next morning, but the resolution to "clear out" remained fixed.

And he was still dreaming.

"Some day, when I've made good—"

Willetts interrupted.

He was serving breakfast, at the moment.

"I was talking to Evans, sir."

"Yes?"

"Telling him what you told me last night, sir—concerning Mrs. Rogers and the Kelly murder. Evans thinks it's very significant, what you said about Kelly expecting somebody after Rogers left."

"He does, eh?"

"Yes, sir. And he thinks he can find who it was."

Barry opened his egg.

"He'd like to tell you his scheme, sir."

"It's no use," Barry observed, curtly. "I've decided to drop the whole business."

"Yes, sir."

Willetts went on serving, but there was disapproval in his manner. Barry felt it, as he had twice before.

"Any reason why I shouldn't drop it?"

"That's for you to say, sir."

"But you think there is a reason. All right; sit down and tell me about it."

"I couldn't, sir. My position won't permit of my sitting down in the presence of my employer. It isn't done, sir. And your position won't allow of your leaving a woman in the lurch, sir. If you don't mind my saying so, that isn't done, either."

In utter amazement, Barry merely stared at him.

"You see," Willetts continued, quite forgetting himself, "a gentleman's got certain responsibilities. That's what makes him a gentleman. You said this lady's 'in trouble up to her neck.' It looks to me, sir, as if that was a pledge. It looks to me as though you were bound to make good, no matter what's happened."

He paused, and then his own impetus carried him on.

"You said, 'I've been a loafer most of my life.' A loafer might 'drop the whole business.' There's no reason he shouldn't. But it looks to me as if a gentleman ought to carry on, sir."

"You're right, Willetts. Tell Evans I'll be glad to see him in the library."

Barry, the "bum," had stepped into a gentleman's shoes, and found that they had to be kept shining.

All that Willetts had said, the former Duke had said to himself, over and over again. "That's all right for guys with an income," Barry had argued. "In luxury, and papa's office—sure, I'd run straight. Why not?"

Now he had an income, and was "in luxury and papa's office." "I won't be there long," Barry thought, "if I defy Pat. Anyway, I'm a gentleman, for the moment, and a gentleman can't abandon ladies in distress."

Pat was a lady in distress, too, he reflected. "In trouble up to her neck." "The way I went on last night," he ruminated, "anybody'd have thought that I thought the Judge killed Mike. What nonsense. That harmless old chap. If there's any chance of his being involved, why then it's up to me to find who did the trick. I've got two men to get out of difficulties."

Evans found him ready for the "scheme."

"As I get it from Willetts," Evans said, "somebody telephoned Kelly that he was coming right over. What would you do after you'd done that, sir?"

"Well, what would I do?"

"You'd hop in a taxi."

"Probably."

"So we want to round up the taxi-drivers that were in the neighborhood at that time. Luckily, there was an accident, Willetts tells me. My plan is to advertise—like as if we was the relations of the deceased lady. Fifty dollars reward for information leading to spotting the cab that deceased her."

"And they?"

"Then we third-degree everybody that answers the ad. Did you see the accident? How did you happen to be there? It might turn the trick."

Evans was full of Barry's own zest for "sleuthing." And quite as eager to "jump at conclusions." Nothing discouraged him. What if the accident had occurred two hours after the probable time of the murder? Who knew that time exactly, and anyway, the bait of reward might bring people who'd been in the vicinity long before the disaster.

It was arranged that the advertisement should instruct applicants to write to box something-or-other at the newspaper. And that gave Evans another idea. Why did Barry go to town by train? Why not drive in? He could use the car getting around, and to give Peggy—and, perhaps, the youngster—an occasional airing. Moreover—

Evans was enjoying himself thoroughly.

"Reading the newspapers, sir, I ask myself a lot of questions about this here Kelly. The Chink says he got home around eleven. Willetts says Mrs. Rogers says he left the Cocoanut

"And Why Do You Think It Might Have Been She?"

bar around nine. Where did he go then? His chauffeur would know, wouldn't he? You'd be surprised how chauffeurs loosen up to each other."

"I get you."

"Simple, ain't it? We find out where Kelly garages. Then I drive you in every Sunday, and keep the car in the same place. And I sugar up to the guy that drove Kelly. It mightn't lead to nothing, but then again, sir, it might, sir."

"It's worth trying. And I'm tremendously obliged to you."

"Don't mention it. After what you did for the missis. As a matter of fact, she put the whole thing in my mind. She's just busting to do something for you, Mrs. Evans is."

All of Evans' suggestions were followed the next afternoon.

And Monday, by appointment, Barry brought Mrs. Rogers to Winslow.

Harwood certainly had not overstated Peter's skill at cross-examination. Sitting opposite Peggy, the attorney led her gently into reminiscence, from which, again and again, he seized upon a word or a phrase as leading to possible material for the defense.

For the first time, the thing took on pattern. Winslow wasn't running about in a maze, but finding a beginning and an end. Taking care, too, that there should be no opening for his opponents of which he had been unaware. Casually, verifying every statement Jack had made to him.

"Tell the story in your own way, Mrs. Rogers. . . . Did your husband say anything about getting even when he left you? No. What time was that? What time did he return? Wasn't gone long, was he? Not really long enough for a violent quarrel?"

"I've told you," Peggy declared; "they were drinking together. And then the phone rang—"

"How do you know it rang?"

"Jack heard it. And he heard someone answer it."

"Someone."

"Jack isn't sure whether it was Kelly or the Filipino. They were both in the hall. Anyway, Kelly came back, and said he was expecting somebody."

"Did he say whom?"

"No."

"Did he say whether it was a man or a woman?"

"I don't think so," Peggy paused. "But it might've been a woman."

Peter nodded to Barry.

"Cherchez la femme."

"I got another idea," Peggy went on. "It might've been the platinum blonde."

"The what?"

"The platinum blonde, Violet Fane. She's one of the girls at the Cocoanut Bar."

"And —-hy do you think it might have been she?"

"Well," Peggy said, "she knew Kelly. She'd just left him when he accused me of picking his pocket. And Morano'd been talking to her, just before that. She might've phoned Kelly to get me off."

Winslow made a note of this.

"I'll find out," he promised.

The interview lasted nearly two hours, and gave both of the visitors fresh confidence.

"They'll indict Jack," Winslow prophesied, as his callers were going. "Probably today. But don't let that worry you. A grand jury hears only one side. We'll do our talking at the trial."

"When will that be?"

"As soon as possible. We're ready now. They have no case. Just the Filipino's evidence that Jack was there. We admit that. But we deny either a motive or a quarrel. If the Filipino says he heard one—well, I suppose Mr. Ridder's given you his answer to that."

"Yes."

"He's got brains, all right," Barry told Peggy, in the elevator.

"Yes," Peggy returned, a bit throatily. "He's got brains, and a heart."

The grand jury found a true bill against Jay Rogers that afternoon. And Barry was off on a quest of his own. "If that was a woman," he decided, "we needn't bother any more about the Judge. And if I can catch that Filipino napping—"

Winslow had warned him against "tipping our hand." "All right," Barry thought; "I'll be careful this time."

The "cagey Oriental" answered his ring.

Barry's last visit had been with Tim Laugherty, Charlie—and Mrs. Kelly, for that matter—had assumed that he was another detective. The Filipino was plainly startled.

"Nobody is home," he said, conclusively.

"You're home, aren't you? And you're the fellow I want to ask a few questions."

"I don't know nothing," the butler insisted.

"You know who telephoned Kelly the night of the murder."

Charlie's putty face turned two shades lighter.

"I thought so," Barry said. "And, if you don't want to go straight to jail, you'd better tell me about it."

"I don't know nothing."

"All right. Come along."

Charlie reconsidered.

"You mean the lady that telephoned?"

"That's who I mean. Who was she?"

"I don't know."

"Didn't she give any name? Or leave any message?"

"No, sir."

"Came around here though, afterward, didn't she?"

"No, sir."

"Somebody did," Barry persisted; "after young Rogers went?"

"I don't know."

"You didn't let anyone in?"

"No, sir."

"Did Kelly let her in?"

"I don't know."

"But he knew she was coming?"

"I don't know."

"You're lying!" Barry exclaimed.

"You told Kelly."

"No, sir," the butler replied, very positively. "When the lady phoned, Mr. Kelly—he wasn't home yet."

"What do you mean, he wasn't home—at midnight?"

"The lady didn't telephone at midnight," Charlie said, obviously bewildered. "It was eight o'clock when the lady phoned."

"But you told him that?"

"No," the Filipino answered. "I didn't tell nobody nothing."

"Who did telephone around midnight?"

"I don't know. Mr. Kelly answered that time."

"But you were in the hall?"

"Yes, sir."

"Kelly was sore at you. Why?"

The Filipino went pale. Only for an instant, however. Then he smiled.

"Mr. Kelly not sore," he said. "Him very jolly that night."

"All right," Barry observed. No "tipping our hand" this time. "All right, and thanks." His tone was that of a man completely satisfied.

Late that afternoon, Barry took Peggy and the boy driving in the park.

Peggy put a brave face on it, but fear was clutching her. "If anything went wrong," she said.

Mark It Well, for It's a Disgrace

Not to be a true man or a true woman.

Not to back up your chance in life with the best that is in you.

To disappoint your relatives and friends, especially your father and mother.

Not to make good, especially in a country where the very climate is a perpetual tonic, where the marvelous resources arouse ambition as nowhere else in the world.

To go through life using only a small per cent of your possibilities. It is everyone's duty to be a hundred-per cent efficient.

To be indolent or idle when there is work in the world that you should be doing.

Read why the SILENCE of Electrolux is Your Assurance of Long Service at Low Cost

THE SILENCE of Electrolux is a definite advantage in itself. But it is also far more than that! It is constant proof of the basically different method of Electrolux operation. Electrolux has no machinery. A tiny gas burner takes the place of all moving parts... circulates the refrigerant, which is cooled by ordinary air.

It is this utter simplicity which makes possible lasting Electrolux efficiency. It permits an unusually low operating cost. (A cost which will never be increased through the inefficiency of moving, wearing parts!) It insures perfect food protection every minute of every day. And it reduces repairs to a minimum. Already, more than half a million American homes are enjoying the comfort and economy of modern Electrolux refrigeration. Yearly more and more families are choosing this modern gas refrigeration which offers definite assurance of long service at low cost.

See the beautiful 1936 Electrolux models on display at our showroom. Inspect their many worthwhile conveniences that save time and work.

Ask us about our liberal purchase plan. You'll find—as owners the country over have found—that Electrolux actually saves enough on refrigerating cost and on food bills to pay for itself. Come in today!

ONLY WITH ELECTROLUX CAN YOU GET

all these big advantages:

- No moving parts to wear
- Permanent silence
- Lasting efficiency
- Continued low operating cost
- Fullest food protection
- Savings that pay for it
