For comforts in time of need;
For every kindly word and deed;

For guidance in our daily walk;
For beauty in this world of ours;
For verdant grass and lovely flowers;

For the kind friends and neighbors that have made it possible for us to rejoice that we are permitted to live in this little town where there are so many kind hearted people, always abundant in doing kind deeds to everyone that needs kindness in sickness and distress. May our Heavenly Father bless all who do kind deeds, especially at this Thanksgiving season.

Bermuda, Modern British Naval Station, Enforces Its 'Horse and Buggy' Laws

Motor Cars Forbidden the Use of Public Roads

HAMILTON, Bermuda.—This English colony, which has been a vacation haven for thousands of American tourists and principal Atlantic station for the British navy, has a law which forbids the use of motorcars on public roads. A new governor approved a budget item of $3,600 for an official coach and horses.

The preceding governor while in office petitioned the colonial assembly by several times to give a car, but the petition was as a denied.

MOTO shows an aerial view of Bermuda, an island colony in the Atlantic ocean, about 1,000 miles east of New York. Motor cars are allowed on the roads of these islands and AT RIGHT shows Swainson, Bermuda's first woman, getting her first automobile in New York, while the United States last year.

In Tangier, the streets are so narrow that motor cars are not permitted to pass. In Bermuda, motor cars have disappeared for centuries past.

Symbol of Sheila's Bathing Cap

By BARBARA ANN BENEDICT

She looked at the bathing cap she had bought. It was so easy to slip on. And only the bathing cap made her feel like Lee. Why, she could even go to the beach in it. She was strolling along Coral Street, looking at the shops and eating popcorn. Very gay and happy. They had passed a shop and its show window displayed two bathing caps. They were in color and design and newness. The only two of their kind.

"Wait a minute," Lee had said, and disappeared inside. He returned in a minute, bearing both caps. "One for you, and one for me. We'll each wear one this afternoon on the beach."

Love—I wasn't a man she would. Her parents' engagement. Would it Ray ever or his delayed vacation.

Ray she picked up the cap and tossed it on to Lee. "Wear it," he said two hours ago. "Wear it this afternoon, sweet, then I'll know what that she loved him! Ridiculous! Of course she wouldn't wear his old cap. Lee shouldn't have said that. It spoiled everything: their beautiful friendship, their good times together, their rayety, their happiness—or at least her happiness."

She experienced a dreadful sensation, and sat down on the ground. It was tragedy to feel that she was loyal to the man you were going to marry would mean unhappiness. Perhaps—well, perhaps she was making a mistake. The girl brought her to her feet, and she was gone.

Lee! Ray would arrive in a few hours to see her. She would be all right. She would become nothing but a memory, albeit a happy one.

At her bathing suit. She was dressing. First, she slipped on the cap. She was coming down the street. Her gesture of disapproval was more important than any other. Her engagement and a fortune's vacation in the middle of the summer with the girl you were going to marry?

Unconsciously Sheila projected her mind into the future. Was it always going to be like that? Was she always going to come second? Always thought of and remembered and considered after everything else was taken care of? Involuntarily she shuddered. It wasn't a very promising outlook.

Thoughts of Lee crowded into her mind. She tried to drive them away but they persisted. Lee was a business man too. Perhaps not a very successful one, but a business man. He'd admitted quite frankly that he didn't believe in working himself to death. Perhaps, he'd told her, he was lazy. He didn't know. But he enjoyed life, enjoyed living and being happy and gay; books and music and sports and travel. The business that he owned had been inherited from his father. It didn't need his attention particularly.

Of course Sheila had thought that if he gave it his attention, or more of it, the business might benefit, might even prosper. But if he did then it would mean devoting his life to the very thing that Sheila objected to in Ray. It would mean sacrificing his cherished ambition—to write a book, and when the book was published, to sell the business, and devote his time to further writing.

Lee would never be rich. Or not as rich as Ray. No, he wouldn't be able to even offer security. And she hadn't been warned against. It wasn't like a blind date. She knew what she was doing, and felt equal to the task.

Below stairs the door bell rang and Sheila heard her mother go to answer it. She sat down to wait. There was a pause, and presently footsteps sounded on the stairs. Her mother appeared in the doorway. Sheila took the telegram and opened it. Her hands were trembling. She felt excited, oddly hopeful.

"Darling," she read. "Please forgive me. Absolutely impossible for me to get down this week-end. See you next Saturday, sure. (Signed) Ray."

Sheila stood up, the telegram falling unnoticed from her fingers. She looked at her mother and smiled. She felt, actually, even younger than her 21 years. A vast, uplifting relief swept through her.

"Darling," she said to the astonished older woman, "Ray has delayed his arrival for another week, and I'm the happiest girl alive. It's the excuse I wanted."

"Excuse?" Sheila's mother looked bewildered. "For what?" "To wear this!" And Sheila picked up the bathing cap, pulled it over her curls, kissed her mother happily and went out.

Lee would be the same then as now. He couldn't help it, because that was his nature. He'd try to make her happy with thoughtfulness and subtle flattery and little things—the things that counted.

Life with Lee would be happy and gay, but with a shadow hovering overhead: the shadow of uncertainty. Life with Ray would be glittering and safe, with the bright light of security warming her at all times.

Sheila slipped into her bathing suit and stood for a moment surveying herself in the full-length mirror. Tomorrow, she thought, Ray would be here, and being here he'd clear up all the doubt. Next week her folks would announce their engagement, and then there'd be a fashionable wedding, followed by a wedding trip abroad (if Ray could leave his precious business), days at all the expensive hotels, smart company, gay times, Paris gowns—everything she had ever wanted.

After it was over they'd return home and begin life in the fashionable Riverside drive apartment. A life that she could either make gay and exciting or dull and drab. It was, after all, up to her. Ray wouldn't help. He'd be too occupied. Very well. She could cope with it and with him. It wasn't as if she were stepping into something

CCC Lads Rescue Lost Fur Trapper

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—Out of the Far North comes a story of a lost trapper who was rescued by CCC enrollees in Mt. McKinley National park after three days wandering in the wilds of Alaska.

Reports reaching here tell how Donald Harper, clad only in two flour sacks and old discarded boots, narrowly cheated death in attempting to reach civilization for supplies.

Harper and two partners left their trapper's cabin, some distance outside the national park at Minchumina lake, for Fairbanks. When the party came to glacier fed 50-foot wide McKinley river, Harper was the first to try the crossing by swimming. He tied his clothing to a pack-board, but while struggling against the icy, treacherous current, he momentarily lost consciousness. However, he reached a sand bar on the other side minus the pack. His partners did not try to follow him.

Harper Pushes On. Harper, sans clothing, left the river bank to resume his way. He found an unoccupied cabin at the end of the first day walking, which cut his feet in a score of places, while branches and mosquitoes attacked his body. In the abandoned cabin he found the flour sacks and old boots. Without a map or compass, the next two days were filled with many hardships, with emphasis on hunger. He slept on the cold damp tundra only when so exhausted that he could not walk. He was almost at the end of his endurance when he wandered into the Wonder lake CCC side camp in an isolated section of the national park. He was given first aid, food and clothing. His only statement: "I almost didn't make it."

Aerial Photography Aids Farmer In Scientific Utilization of Land

AERIAL MAPS provide a quick and accurate check on the compliance of individual farmers with the crop adjustment program of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Here the county farm reporter and the farmer consult on the enlarged aerial map of the region before going into the field to record crop acreages. The exact boundary of each field is marked on the map.

Government Also Uses Photos for Checking Crop Compliance.

WASHINGTON.—Air photographing of most of the farms of the country by the Agricultural Adjustment administration and other government agencies gives the individual farmer a chance to get an accurately scaled bird's-eye view of his property at moderate cost. Aerial photographs are used as a more accurate means of checking performance under the triple-A program than the old methods of ground measurement.

Most of the original aerial photographs are taken at an altitude of about three miles and are made to a scale of approximately 1 inch to 1,667 feet. But agricultural engineers suggest photographic enlargement to a scale of 660 feet to the inch as a practical size to order. On an enlargement of this size, 1 square inch equals 10 acres. From such a photograph it is easy to construct outline maps two or three times as large for detailed record keeping.

Gives Farm Picture. The 1 inch to 660 scale is particularly adapted to helping a farmer picture "in his mind's eye" just what would make the ideal layout for his farm, say the agricultural engineers, who are experienced in helping farmers to replan their farms for more efficient production. From a picture on this scale it is easy to trace a sketch that includes all the immovable parts of the farm—outer boundaries, streams, the margins between different soils, springs, bogs that cannot be drained, and rock out crops. They omit from such a drawing fences, temporary drainage ditches, roads and paths, and temporary buildings that may be moved or rebuilt elsewhere.

Actually 'See' Layout. Sketching in lightly the possible lines for new fences and improved field arrangements helps a farmer to "see" his farm as it might be. Several possible rearrangements may be sketched on different sheets for balancing one against another to determine which is nearest the ideal. A series of these traced pictures will illustrate stages in rearrangement covering several years and will visualize both physical changes and planned crop rotations.

An enlarged outline of aerial photographs, one for each year, is convenient for keeping records of crop rotations, yields, cultural methods, and dates of planting in a form for quick reference.

Aerial photography has been completed or is under way in all states. Pictures are available or soon will be for about 80 per cent of the farms in the United States, and may be ordered through the local agricultural conservation committee.

Basketball

For their fifth game the boys journeyed to Carey Tuesday night Nov 21. The Owl's second string was the first to be defeated by Carey's second stringers with a score of 22 to 18. Next on the line of the widely renowned Cardinals was the first string of Owls. The Owls were ahead three times in the first half, but fate didn't have victory in store for them. They were finally by a score of 52 to 16.

The Goodiest Bulldogs returned their game here Friday, Nov. 24. There were three games on the schedule. Our neighbors of Giles defeated Martin with a score of 18 to 10. The Owl's second string went with a win clinched (so they thought), but after a hard fought battle they were defeated with a score of 24 to 16. The Owl's first stringers after a good warm up period went out and held the Bulldogs to a 18 to 13 tie at the half, but the Bulldogs rallied in the second half and won the game with a score of 24 to 15.

Fish Fun

Although the Freshman boys were defeated in ability to sell votes for Fish Queen, they were quite successful in entertaining the Fish girls with a bob for and avenger hunt. Needless to say the girls were thrilled and honored by their prize, the Fish boys.

The group combed the town for small articles such as horse hairs, sardine cans, bottle lids, and buttons. On the baseball lots the group enjoyed winners with all the trimmings, cookies, and apples.

Maybe the yelling sounded like Indians but we were just having the time of our lives. The following group were bobos for the evening: Teddy Joe Myers, Travis Bailey, Maryle Bardine, Lois Cowan, Flora Bell Morgan, Jo Ann Shaw, Dorothy Riebersen, Beatrice Allee, Paul Dishman, Verrel Dean Leeper, Billy Jack and Zabbie Land, Foy Langford, Albert Martin, Rev. and Mrs. Biggs, Miss Cleek and Miss Bergner. "Thanks, boys, for a very evening." was the echo of every girl.

On Thursday morning, Nov. 25, the Senior class elected designs for their 1940 picture. The two designs they considered had been sketched by them. They were the "Coat of Arms" and "The Anchor". The class selected the "Coat of Arms".

For our motto we selected "For Deeds Await Us". From three suggestions the American flag, the V. P. L. white rose, and the colors, green.

Bermuda Has Been Teuton-Slav Battlefield for 700 Years

... of these busy GIRLS. The Polish nation is organized to do AT RIGHT pan... and last woman. Witness these mem- women, getting her first Russian. When the going gets toughest the side in New York beside the men. Here you see a squad of the United States.

... Poland growth from that time until the World war of 1914. When that conflict broke out Russia and Germany came to grips on Polish soil. Really on a spot, the Poles wondered which way to turn. Having fought against each country the populace was naturally divided in opinion. True to tradition, though they fought on both sides.

New Government Organized.

After the armistice in 1918, Polish leaders thought they glimpsed what looked like another chance for independence. They organized a new government and the republic was formed. Then the diplomats convinced the victorious allies to guarantee Polish independence in the Treaty of Versailles. Independence did not bring peace, however. For two years the Poles fought the Russians on the eastern front, finally settling the boundary dispute with the treaty of Riga in 1920.

International problems settled for the time being, Poland set about putting her domestic house in order. With loans and protection from the Allies she began to re-build the nation.

Came Pilsudski. In 1926 he became dictator and ruled Poland until his death in 1935. While his dictatorship was in force he kept the parliamentary forms of government intact. But his word was law. After his death a new constitution was adopted, but another strong man, Marshal Edward Smigly-Rydz, took over. With him came another powerful figure, Josef Beck, the virtual dictator of Poland's foreign policy.

Through these years the country developed its industry, resources and army. Growing bold, and backed by pledges of support from France and England, Poland, when threatened by partitioning by Germany, decided to fight once more for her independence and unity.

JOSEF BECK, pictured above is the virtual dictator of Poland's foreign policy. Last May in a historic speech he rejected German claims on the Polish Corridor.

STRONG MAN. Marshal Edward Smigly-Rydz has been the most powerful figure in Polish history since the death of the famed Pilsudski in 1935.

Scientists Estimate Cost Of Using 'Atomic Power'

Now that scientists have succeeded in releasing some of the vast stores of energy locked in the atom, there is considerable speculation concerning the use of atomic energy as a source of commercial power.

People have been led astray by such statements as "the energy locked in the atoms of a bucket of water could drive an ocean liner across the Atlantic." That is correct—but only theoretically so.

Splitting uranium atoms produces a "free gain" of 200,000,000 volts—which is a lot of power. In fact, four grams of uranium are equal in energy to a ton of coal!

Then why isn't it practical as a fuel?

Coal is $10 a ton. Uranium, to compete, would have to sell for $2.50 a gram. And the cost of producing a single gram is no less than $25,000!

EDITH BARBER SAYS Bring Your Kitchen Up-to-Date

In the last few years, landlords have found that one of the best assets for renting is a good kitchen. No matter how wonderful the view is, nor how large the living and bedrooms, if the kitchen is not well arranged or equipped, women turn thumbs down. No matter how much tile and metal there may be in the kitchen itself, if sink and work space are not the proper height, there will be criticisms. And there must be plenty of cupboard space. I have been doing over my kitchen to make it even more convenient. Every bit of my wall space is now put to use and, although it takes a ladder to reach the highest shelves, I am able to put there those things which are seldom used.

I have not used the same material for every piece of equipment. My sink, for instance, is all metal. My work table is covered with heat-proof glass. My new automatic refrigerator is, of course, white. There is indirect lighting over my work unit. Everything is new except my stove, which is the table-top model and which after 10 years still works perfectly, even to the oven regulator.

- Banana-Apple Mousse.
- 1 cup banana pulp (2 bananas)
 - 3/4 cup apricot pulp
 - 3 tablespoons lemon juice (1/2 lemon)
 - 1/2 cup apricot juice
 - 1/2 cup powdered sugar
 - 1 cup cream
- Mash bananas with a silver fork. Press canned apricots through a sieve and stir in banana pulp. Add lemon juice, apricot juice, sugar and salt. Whip cream and fold into the first mixture. Freeze in automatic refrigerator (or pack in salt and ice) until set.
- Seven-Minute Frosting.
- 2 egg whites, unbeaten
 - 1 1/2 cups sugar
 - 5 tablespoons water

1 1/2 teaspoons corn sirup
1 teaspoon vanilla

Put unbeaten egg whites, sugar, water and corn sirup in the upper part of a double boiler. Beat with a rotary egg beater until sugar is dissolved. Place over boiling water, beating constantly with egg beater and cook seven minutes or until frosting will stand in peaks. Remove from fire. Add vanilla and beat until thick enough to spread.

'No Future' Was Forecast for Auto Industry in Early 20's

Economists Believed Saturation Point Was Rapidly Approaching.

NEW YORK.—America's 25,000,000 motorists might be walking today if long-range control of the automobile industry had been in the hands of a planning board composed of the nation's best economic brains some 15 or 20 years ago.

For the rapid march of events in the automobile industry has shattered the predictions of these forecasters who, on sound appraisal of known facts a few years ago, attempted to determine the future trend of the motor vehicle market. If the number of people willing to buy cars had been as few as these analysts believed, many of the ventures undertaken by motor manufacturers to expand plants and lower prices might never have been risked. Nor would their expenditure of millions of dollars in research have been justified.

Tractors, Trucks Finished.

In 1921 an investment counsel, ranked with the best, came through with this information: "We are not bullish on tractors and trucks. With farm horses selling at about $25 to $50 we see no reason for a much greater sale for tractors and trucks."

Yet figures of the federal government show that the number of horses and mules on the United States farms at the present time has declined to the lowest point in the past 30 years. And what is more, within three years after the tractor and truck sales were doomed by the investment counsel's edict—a million new trucks had been sold and three new trucks were being produced for every one manufactured in 1921. In 1921 also one of the country's most respected economists, with a deserved reputation for predicting business trends, went "off the deep end" by estimating the saturation point at 20,000,000 cars and trucks.

In 1903, Gilbert Waters, southern machinist, built this gas buggy, attempted selling auto factory stock. Skeptics wouldn't buy. Reason: "No future." Waters' machine still runs and the above scene near a modern factory typifies—"No future."

Present Production Far Exceeds Wildest Dreams of 20 Years Ago.

service politely chided a motor manufacturer for undue conservatism when he predicted a total output of 25,330,000 passenger cars and trucks between the years 1930-34.

Twenty-six million was rock-bottom, thought the statisticians, or an average of 5,200,000 a year. Both estimates were left hanging in the sky, as depression cut the annual average to 2,453,600 and the total for the period to 12,268,000.

Economic analysis of trends does have a very important place in the operations of all automobile producers for they must inevitably make commitments in advance, as to purchase of materials, renewal of plants and equipment, redesign of cars, etc.

Planning Limited.

But as employing in the industry, economic planning is limited within each company, and is subjected to quick correction by the competitive drive of all the other concerns in the field. Bad planning might cause one company to lose its place in the race, or even to close its doors, but as far as the country at large is concerned the errors would be canceled out quickly by other concerns' readiness to take advantage of a turn in events.

Most of the forecasting errors in past years have been based on relating sales to a count of the people who might be considered to be in a financial position to buy a car. Undreamed of was the wide-open used car market which makes it possible for virtually anybody to become a car owner, progressing later to a new model stage.

World Climate Getting Warmer; May Be Start of Major Change

NEW YORK.—World-wide evidence that climate is getting warmer has been presented to the American Institute of Physics' temperature symposium.

The change may be the start of the major changes in climate which the earth has not known since geological time, long before any recorded history.

"Climatologists," says J. B. Kincaid, United States weather bureau, Washington, "have considered historic climate as a rather stable thing, with short period variations of considerable magnitude, but without especially significant trends covering long periods."

Started About 1900.

"However, since the turn of the century there has been such a persistent trend to higher temperatures, world-wide in scope, as to suggest that the orthodox conception of stability of climate needs some revision at least."

He cited weather records. In Portland, Ore., in the last two decades 17 of the 20 years have been warmer than normal. The warmest was 1921. Every year since 1922 has been above average.

In Washington, D. C., 17 years have been warmer than normal and every year since 1926 has brought above normal heat in the city. Washington's warmest year was 1921.

Even Africa Warmer.

Capetown, South Africa, recorded 19 years warmer than normal, with the hottest in 1927.

Although not a part of the climate change evidence, the world's coldest and hottest figures may be involved in the change. The coldest on record was 90.4 below zero in Siberia. This happened in February, 1922.

The hottest recorded, however, came in September, 1922, with 136.4

degrees in Tripolitania, a north African possession of Italy.

The geological changes of the past are recorded in rock and sediment deposits showing several ice ages, scattered through millions of years. Between each ice age there was a warm period. All of these changes took apparently thousands of years to swing either up or down the temperature scale.

Chinese Celebrate Legendary Rituals Of Buddhist Origin

LOS ANGELES.—On the fifteenth night of the eighth moon, according to Chinese legends, the beautiful goddess of the moon weds the strong and wonderful man of the sun.

To celebrate the festive occasion, which falls on September 27 by American calendars, Los Angeles Chinese each year don their finest embroideries and engage in mock battles and strange festive dances, including the ritual dance to the moon executed by the Buddhist devotee and his novices.

Chinese women, believing the night auspicious for romance, offer incense to the goddess of love, and Chinese fathers dress their daughters in fine raiment, lighting a lantern at the doorway as an omen of "smiles within."

The happy festival, during which more than a hundred merchants of the Los Angeles China city hold open house, serving sweetmeats, nuts and tea to all who enter their doors, also perpetuates the celebration of the Chinese expulsion of the Mongol invaders, more than 600 years ago.

Origin of Custom.

Oppressed by the Tartars, who had established a soldier to rule each Chinese household, the Chinese used their friendly custom of passing moon cakes on the night of the moon festival, to outfit the unwelcome soldiers. A Buddhist priest, knowing that the moon cakes contained an ingredient never touched by Mongols, advised the Chinese to bake a message inside the festive sweetmeats, which would set the date for the Mongol expulsion. The plan was successful and the Buddhist priest who started the fateful chain of hidden letters became the first Ming emperor and founder of the Ming dynasty under which Chinese culture progressed to great heights.

Los Angeles China city, gay with rickshaws, pagoda buildings, a Chinese farmer's home equipped with imported props used in the motion picture, "Good Earth," draws thousands of visitors annually.

EDITH BARBER SAYS 'Water Is Not Fattening'

MAN can live without food, although uncomfortably, for some time. Deprivation from water, however, affects him seriously after a short time. While this colorless liquid has no value which can be measured in calories, all the body's tissues contain it and it is an essential part of the blood and the digestive juices.

Food must be liquefied before it can be absorbed. Some foods, of course, contain enough natural water to take care of this. We must, however, add each day a goodly quantity of liquid to replace what is lost.

It is hardly possible for a person in normal health to drink too much water and at this point I should mention the fact that the body naturally regulates the amount that is stored in the tissues. You may drink just as much water as you like and are not obliged to worry about its being a factor in producing extra weight. It is a common fallacy to believe that water is fattening! Actually it plays a part in weight only when salt is eaten in overly large quantities. Both salt and water are necessary for body efficiency.

- 1 cup sugar
- 3 cups water

- 1 cup chopped pineapple
- Juice of two lemons
- 1 teaspoon mint extract
- Green coloring
- 2 egg whites

Boil sugar and water together three minutes. Cool, add pineapple, lemon juice, extract and coloring to make a light green. Pour into freezer, pack with salt and ice, or place in refrigerator trays. Freeze until almost solid. Add well-beaten egg whites to mixture in freezer, stir well. Pack and let stand a few hours, or remove sherbet from trays and stir in beaten whites and return to trays until frozen. Serve garnished with sprigs of mint.
